

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE GIFT OF
Prof. F. N. Scott.

800
T&T
1887

Engraved A. W. Sharp

Dum brevis esse laboro, obscurus Ego

2 2 2

ΕΠΕΑ ΠΤΕΡΟΕΝΤΑ:

OR, THE

A 25
X

DIVERSIONS OF PURLEY.

BY

JOHN HORNE TOOKE.

WITH NUMEROUS ADDITIONS FROM THE COPY PREPARED BY THE AUTHOR FOR REPUBLICATION:

TO WHICH IS ANNEXED HIS

LETTER TO JOHN DUNNING, ESQ.

REVISED AND CORRECTED, WITH ADDITIONAL NOTES,

BY RICHARD TAYLOR, F.S.A., F.L.S.

LONDON:

WILLIAM TEGG & CO., 85, QUEEN-STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

1857.

1774

M'CORQUODALE AND CO., PRINTERS, LONDON—
WORKS, NEWTON.

803
T67
1757

*Left
Fred Hinton Scott
1-11-1928*

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
EDITOR'S Preface	v
Editor's Additional Notes	vi

PART I.

CHAP.

Introduction	1
I. Of the Division or Distribution of Language	9
II. Some Consideration of Mr. Locke's Essay	15
III. Of the Parts of Speech	22
IV. Of the Noun	26
V. Of the Article and Interjection	29
Advertisement.....	37
VI. Of the Word THAT	41
Advertisement.....	50
VII. Of Conjunctions.....	52
VIII. Etymology of the English Conjunctions	78
IX. Of Prepositions	154
X. Of Adverbs	251

PART II.

CHAP.

I. The Rights of Man	301
II. Of Abstraction	311
III. The same subject continued	326
IV. The same subject continued	365
V. The same subject continued	604
VI. Of Adjectives.....	624
VII. Of Participles	647
VIII. The same subject continued	658
Appendix—Letter to Mr. Dunning.....	685
Index	725

THE EDITOR'S PREFACE

TO THE EDITION OF 1829.

IN preparing for the press and printing this enlarged edition of Mr. Horne Tooke's Diversions of Purley, an undertaking assigned to me by the Publisher, on his becoming possessed, by assignment from the Author's representatives, of the copy containing his last corrections and additions, it has been my endeavour in the first place to remove the many inaccuracies of the former Edition, by a collation of the citations in which the work abounds with the originals, so far as they were within my reach ; and, next, to incorporate in it, as well as I was able, the new materials, in such a manner as should not interfere with the integrity of the former text. As these additions, written in the Author's interleaved copy, and which, especially in the Second Part, are very abundant, were wholly without any references connecting them with the text, and sometimes written at a distance of several pages from the passages to which they seemed to belong, I must beg the Reader's indulgence if I should at any time have failed in this part of my task ; reminding him that, all the new matter being distinguished by brackets¹ [], he may use his own judgement as to its relation to the text.

A work of such celebrity, connected with studies to which I had been much attached, having been thus intrusted to my care, I was tempted, during its progress, to hazard a few notes in my capacity of Editor: and though it may have been presumptuous in me to place any observations or conjectures of mine on the pages of Mr. Tooke, yet I must plead in excuse the interest excited by the investigations which they contain.

¹ The brackets in p. 201—212, do not, as elsewhere, denote new matter.

ADDITIONAL NOTES

BY THE EDITOR.¹

P. 38. GRIMGRIBBER.

“Mankind in general are not sufficiently aware that words without meaning, or of equivocal meaning, are the everlasting engines of fraud and injustice: and that the *grimgribber*² of Westminster Hall is a more fertile, and a much more formidable, source of imposture than the abracadabra of magicians.”—Mr. Tooke makes this remark after having stated that his first publication on language was occasioned by his having “been made the victim” in a Court of Law “of Two Prepositions and a Conjunction,” OF and CONCERNING, and THAT, “the abject instruments of his civil extinction." In a recent case the Preposition UPON seems to have played a similar part in the hands of some who "perchè non erano grammatici, eran perciò cattivi legisti."

¹ The number of these notes has been considerably increased in the present Edition.

² I know not whence Mr. Tooke got this word, which was also used by Mr. Bentham, to mean, I suppose, the jargon used as a cover for legal sophistry. It may be connected with Grimoire, respecting which Dr. Percy has the following note:—“The word Gramarye, which occurs several times in the foregoing poem (King Estmere), is probably a corruption of the French word Grimoire, which signifies a Conjuring Book in the old French romances, if not the art of necromancy itself.”—Vol. i. p. 77. Perhaps both are referable to “Grammar,” which might have been looked upon as a kind of magic. The French Grimaude is a grammar-school boy. May not also the Scotch Glamer, Glamour, a charm, have the same origin?

The point at issue was the meaning of UPON, as a preposition of Time, that is, as employed to express the relation as to time between two acts; the Declaration now required of magistrates, &c., by the Act 9th Geo. IV., being directed to be subscribed "within one calendar month next before, or UPON admission to office." If then the Declaration shall not have been subscribed within the space of one month next before admission, it is to be subscribed UPON admission. "The words 'next before,' of course," says the Attorney-General, "are clear; next before must make it antecedent to his admission."—Q. B. p. 68.¹ And let us be thankful that next before is still permitted to mean antecedent. But alas for the doubts and difficulties in which the other alternative is involved! Does UPON also mean antecedent to? or subsequent?

"That 'upon' may mean before there can be no doubt at all," says the Attorney-General.—Q. B. p. 16. "Now here it is 'upon his admission' that he is to do this. I say that that is 'before he is admitted.'" "I do not say that 'upon' is always synonymous with 'before.' It may possibly be after, it may be concurrent, but it may be prior."—ib. p. 15. "One of your Lordships mentioned," adds Sir J. Campbell, "looking to this very Rule, that it was drawn up 'UPON reading the affidavit of David Salomons.' The affidavit had been read before your Lordships granted the Rule. Now your Lordships will read 'upon' as meaning before, if in that way the intention of the legislature will best be effected."—p. 16. "Lord DENMAN.—'Upon reading the affidavits' is 'after reading the affidavits.' Then if the two are analogous, 'upon admission' is 'after admission;' so that it will be after his admission that he is to make the Declaration. ATTORNEY-GENERAL.—Suppose it were, that upon making the Declaration he is to be admitted. Mr. Justice PATTERSON.—That would be intelligible: and then I should say the Declaration would be first. Mr. Justice COLERIDGE.—But here it is, that upon admission he is to make the Declaration: You say, it means before. Read it so; then it is 'shall within one month next before, or before his admission.'"—Q. B. 17, 18.

¹ The extracts marked Q. B. are from the arguments in the Queen's Bench, 1838; and those marked Exch. are from the Proceedings in the Exchequer Chamber on a Writ of Error, 1839; both printed from the Notes of Mr. Gurney.

² Sir F. Pollock says, with perfect truth, it has "no meaning in Johnson bearing the import of before."

" Sir F. POLLOCK.—Now, my Lords, the question is, What is the meaning of the word 'UPON'? In the first place, in plain English, among a number of meanings given to 'upon'—upwards of twenty, I think. Mr. Justice LITTLEDALE.—Twenty-three, I think : and there may be a great many more enumerated from Johnson's Dictionary.¹ Mr. Justice COLERIDGE.—It could hardly mean either indefinitely before, or indefinitely after, for that would be no time ; then you must add something to the words before or after. Sir F. POLLOCK.—My Lord, there is no meaning in Johnson bearing the import of before. Mr. Justice LITTLEDALE.—There is one which means 'concurrently :'² that is, I think, the eighteenth. Sir F. POLLOCK.—There is one which is 'in consequence of ;' then if it is to be in consequence of admission, admission is to come before it. There is another, 'supposing a thing granted :' here admission was not granted, but refused. There is another, 'in consideration of,' which certainly does not import that the act done in consideration, is to go before the act in consideration of which it is done ; and there is another, which is 'at the time of, or on occasion of.' Mr. Justice LITTLEDALE.—That is the one I meant to refer to. Sir F. POLLOCK.—But there is a general observation in Johnson in connection with all these. 'It always retains an intimation, more or less obscure, of some substratum, something precedent.' Now, my Lord, let us see what are the legal instances in which the word 'upon' is used. I am quite surprised, I own, that my learned friend should refer to the expression 'on payment of costs,' and 'upon reading the affidavit,' to show that the admission is to come after, because the payment of costs comes before ; and it is the second time³ he has fallen into the error. Says my learned friend, 'upon the payment of costs' means that payment of costs is to come first, and therefore 'on admission' means that admission is to come last ; that is really my learned friend's argument. . . . 'Upon reading the affidavit' certainly imports that the rule is granted after that ; and that is one instance in which it is impossible not to perceive that 'upon' must import the precedence of the act which is so introduced."—Q. B. pp. 39, 40.

¹ Several of these are, as is usual with Johnson, meanings not of the word he explains, but of some other word in the sentence : thus, 2. 'Thrown over the body. "Thrown her night gown upon her." 3. By way of imprecation. "My blood upon your heads ;"—"Sorrow on thee." 5. Hardship or mischief. "If we would neither impose upon ourselves." In these it is clear that throw, body, imprecation, mischief, blood, or sorrow, are no meanings of upon. As well might it be said that upon means blessing. "Blessings on thee !"—or ink, "Ink upon paper."

² The example quoted is from Swift : "The king upon this news marched." The news obviously preceded the marching ; and they were not concurrent.—Ed.

³ It will be seen in the subsequent proceedings, that Sir J. Campbell does not abandon this mode of reasoning, by which it might as well be proved that after means before. "B comes after A : then A comes before B : Therefore after means before.—Q. E. D."

Notwithstanding Sir J. Campbell's suggestion that the law was to be expounded "without very nicely scanning or criticizing the language employed,"—p. 24; and "without entering into any very nice criticism of the words,"—p. 65; "the language employed" being "not very happily selected," p. 68, the Court of Queen's Bench gave the following clear and straightforward judgement:—

"We are of opinion that, as the Declaration is to be made upon admission, the Admission is the first thing to be done."—Judgement of the Court, delivered by Lord Chief Justice Denman, p. 54.

This judgement has, however, since been reversed by the other Judges in the Exchequer Chamber, and the question decided on grounds quite independent of philology. Sir J. Campbell thus objects to it, in the proceedings on the Writ of Error, 1839:—

"The effect of this decision of the Court of Queen's Bench is, that a Jew or a Mahometan may be Lord Mayor of London."—Exch. p. 12. "My Lords, can your Lordships suppose that those who framed that Act of Parliament really had it in contemplation that there might be a mayor of any corporation in England who was a Mahometan or a Pagan?"—p. 71. . . . "There certainly was the greatest anxiety that no one should be admitted until he had made a declaration in the form given; so that no one who was not a Christian—that neither Jew nor Papist nor Infidel—should be allowed to be admitted."—p. 12.

"Sir F. POLLOCK.—My learned friend seems to me to have a pious and a Christian horror of a Jew wearing the Lord Mayor's chain: yet "a Jew may be Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer." . . . —Exch. p. 37. "The Court of Queen's Bench have chosen to put their Judgement upon the broad plain ground; they say 'upon' means after; and we can give no sensible construction to the Act unless we so read it."—p. 59. "There is nothing in which the dexterity of an advocate is so conspicuous as in turning the question. In the Court below, my learned friend said the question was this:—whether corporations should be inundated with Jews, Turks, and Atheists: at any rate, my Lords, that is not the legal question."—p. 70.

"ATT. GEN.—I acknowledge that my learned friend will find no difficulty in citing instances where 'upon' means after; where 'upon' doing an act means after doing the act; but there are others where 'upon' doing the act means before the act is done. Suppose a new trial granted 'upon' payment of costs; the costs are to be paid before the new trial takes place. Sir F. POLLOCK.—The payment of costs comes first:—and here we say the admission comes first."—Exch. p. 27.

"ATT. GEN.—There are, I think, thirty meanings given in Johnson's Dictionary to the word 'upon.' Baron ALDERSON.—If one man is to do one thing upon another man's doing another, then each is to do his part.”¹—p. 30. “Sir F. POLLOCK.—My Lords, I say that the meaning of the Act is, that ‘upon’ means after; and if you are to take it that it is concurrently, and at the same time, and on the same occasion, still that that which is to be done upon something else taking place, is, in point of order, to come after it.”—p. 55. “The law says that upon conviction the party shall be hanged. Does that mean that he is to suffer the penalty before or after conviction? The word upon occurs more frequently in that way than in any other; ‘upon refusal,’ ‘upon receipt.’ Mr. Justice VAUGHAN.—A reward to be paid ‘upon conviction.’ Lord Chief Justice TINDAL.—A copyhold fine is payable upon admission; which means, and is decided to mean, after admission. There the admission is the consideration upon which the fine becomes due. You will however find it have a double meaning in many cases. Sir F. POLLOCK.—It never means before. Baron ALDERSON.—It may mean at the time ‘upon admission’ must mean before, or immediately after, or at the time.”!!—p. 57.

Lord Chief Justice TINDAL.—“The words of the Act, ‘upon his admission,’ do not, as it appears to us, mean after the admission has taken place, but upon the occasion of, or, at the time of, admission.” “We hold it to be unnecessary to refer to instances of the legal meaning of the word ‘upon,’ which in different cases may undoubtedly (!!) either mean before the act done to which it relates, or simultaneously with, or after it.”—p. 93. “We therefore think that the Judgement of the Court of Queen’s Bench ought to be reversed.”—Judgement delivered by Lord Chief Justice TINDAL.—Exch. pp. 93, 96.

Should the philologist complain that this Decision is in complete violation of the nature and use of language, let him remember that the cause was removed out of the province of grammar; the great consideration being, not the true and plain meaning of words, but how religious exclusions should best be perpetuated. And although UPON was pro hac vice tortured and sacrificed, Grammarians will nevertheless recur to the manifest truth, that, when used to mark the relation of Time between two acts not simultaneous, the act which is governed by the preposition is always that which is first in order.

P. 79.

IF.—The derivation of IF from the imperative Give, seems very plausible so long as we limit our view to the English form of the word, especially as taken in connexion with the Scotch GIN, supposed to be the participle Given. But we cannot arrive at a correct opinion without viewing the word in the forms in which it appears in the cognate dialects, and which do not seem at all referable to the verb To Give.

¹ Undoubtedly: But in what order?

Thus, in Icelandic we have ef, ei, modo, with the verb efa, ífa, du-bitare; and the substantive efi, dubium, and its derivatives. See Ihre, v. Jef, dubium. In old German it is ibu, ipu, ube, oba, jef, &c., and in modern German ob, in the sense only of an, num, all of which must surely be identified with the Gothic ÛBA, ÛBAI, and GAÛAI, which latter Grimm (Deutsche Grammatik, vol. iii. p. 284.) considers as a compound of ja and ibái, and supposes that the sense of doubt is included in the Gothic word, and that ibái may be the dative of a substantive iba, dubium, with which also he conjectures some adverbs may be connected (ib. p. 110.) In old German, he remarks, the substantive iba, dubium, whose regular dative is ibu, was preserved in the phrases, mit ibo, ane iba, p. 150, 157. Wachter gives the same account, and adds, "Hæc particula apud Francos eleganter transit in substantivum ibu, et tunc dubium significat:" as in the Athanasian Creed, ano 18U in ewidhu farunirdhit, "without if he shall perish everlastingly:"—that being considered a matter of so great certainty as not to admit of a doubt.¹ In the A.-S. ȝif, Grimm considers the ȝ prefixed as representing the Gothic G in jabaſ: and the old Frisic has ief, gef, ieſta, iof, which Wiarda considers the same with the Francic oba and ibu.

Mr. Richardson, in his lately published Dictionary, and the writers of several recent grammars, implicitly follow Mr. Tooke in this etymology of IF, adopted from Skinner; but which appears more than doubtful, and inconsistent with the Teutonic or Scandinavian forms of the word.—See Jamieson, Hermes Scythicus, p. 122.

P. 82.

The following particulars of the author of Criticisms on the Diversions of Purley, published under the assumed name of I. Cassander, are taken from a memoir in the Gentleman's and Monthly Magazines for 1804, probably written by the late Mr. William Taylor of Norwich, the authenticity of which I have no doubt may be relied on. I well remember Mr. Bruckner, who had been my Father's preceptor in the French and Dutch languages; and I believe Mr. Tooke had no other reason for coupling him with Mr. Windham, ("my Norwich critics, for I shall couple them," see pp. 123, 126 and Note, 132, &c.) than that he resided in the city for which Mr. Windham was returned to Parliament.

¹ See Dr. Hook's Letter quoted at p. 186.

“The Rev. John Bruckner, born in the island of Cadsand, 1726—educated at Franeker and Leyden, where he obtained a pastorate, and profited by the society of Hemsterhuis, Valckenaer, and the elder Schultens. In 1753 he became minister of the Walloon Church at Norwich, and afterwards of the Dutch—till his death, May 12, 1804. In 1767 was printed at Leyden his ‘Théorie du Système Animal,’ in the 7th and 10th chapters of the second part of which there is much anticipation of the sentiments lately evolved and corroborated in the writings of Mr. Malthus.

“In 1790 he published, under the name Cassander, from his birthplace, those Criticisms on the Diversions of Purley which attracted some hostile flashes from Mr. Horne Tooke in his subsequent quarto edition. This pamphlet displays a profound and extensive knowledge of the various Gothic dialects, and states (p. 16.) that the same theory of Prepositions and Conjunctions so convincingly applied in the Epea Pteroenta to the Northern languages, had also been taught concerning the Hebrew and other dead languages by Schultens.”

Mr. Bruckner can hardly be considered an opponent of Mr. Tooke, as might be inferred from the style in which he is answered by the latter. He imputes a want of care, of knowledge, or of success in some particular instances, (and, indeed, Mr. Tooke made no pretensions to much acquaintance with the northern languages, see p. 251,) but concurs with him in the main, and bestows great praise on his work assigning as his motive for publication a regret “that a performance, in other respects valuable, and well calculated to open the eyes of the learner with regard to false systems, should remain in its present state, and not be rendered as perfect as the nature of the subject will permit.”

To the same purpose he adds, in p. 5:—“You have not given your system the consistency and solidity of which it is susceptible, and which you were very able to give it, had you been willing to bestow a little more thought upon it.” At p. 22, alluding to some alleged mistakes, “I have been examining your outworks again; and, as I find them absolutely untenable, I would advise you to abandon them in case of a regular attack, and to shut yourself up in your capital work, which is of good design and workmanship, and will stand the best battering-ram in the world, provided, however, you bestow a little repairing upon it. In what follows, I shall point out to you the places where this is most wanted." And in p. 73, "I have read with pleasure, and even with some advantage, your ninth and tenth chapters, which treat of prepositions and adverbs. The light in which you place these parts of speech is new, and well calculated to turn the attention of the studious in general from idle and endless subtleties to the contemplation of truth, and acquisition of real knowledge." "Truth, as you say, has been improperly imagined at the bottom of a well: it lies much nearer the surface. Had Mr. Harris and others, instead of diving deeper than they had occasion into Aristotelian mysteries, contented themselves with observing plain facts, they would soon have perceived, that prepositions and conjunctions were nothing more than nouns and verbs in disguise; and the chapter of the distribution and division of language would have been settled and complete long ago, to the contentment and joy of every body: whereas, in the way they proceeded, their labour was immense, and the benefit equal to nothing."—p. 77.

I may with propriety add here a candid estimate of Mr. Tooke's work from the Annual Review for 1805.

"Few good books have been written on the theory of language: this is one of them. Philosophic linguists have mostly pursued the Aristotelic, the antient, method of reasoning, a priori; they have rarely recurred to the Baconian, the modern, method of reasoning, a posteriori. They have examined ideas instead of phenomena, suppositions instead of facts. The only method of ascertaining in what manner speech originates, is to inquire historically into the changes which single words undergo; and from the mass of instances, within the examination of our experience, to infer the general law of their formation. This has been the process of Mr. Horne Tooke. He first examined our prepositions, conjunctions, and adverbs, all those particles of speech foolishly called insignificant, and shewed that they were either nouns or verbs in disguise, which had lost the habit of inflection. He now examines our adjectives and abstract substantives, and shows that they too are all referable to nouns or verbs, describing sensible ideas.

“Whether this opinion is strictly new, scarcely merits inquiry ; it was never applied before on so grand a scale, and in so instructive a manner.”

After mentioning the suggestions of Schultens, Lennep, and Gregory Sharpe, the writer proceeds:—“Such scattered solitary observations may have prepared and do confirm the comprehensive generalizations of Mr. Horne Tooke ; but to him the English language owes the pristine introduction of just principles, and a most extensive, learned, and detailed application of them to the etymology of its terms. He has laid the groundwork of a good Dictionary.”

“The good sense with which all the phænomena are explained, the sagacity with which the difficulties are investigated, the force of intellect displayed in every conjecture, these constitute the essence of the treatise, and will cause it to outlast the compilations of a more laborious erudition. This work is the most valuable contribution to the philosophy of language which our literature has produced ; the writer may be characterized in those words which Lye applied to Wachter: ad ornandam, quam nactus est, Spartam, instructissimus venit: in intima artis adyta videtur penetrâsse, atque inde protulisse quodcunque potuerit illustrando ipsius proposito inservire.”—p. 675.

The following note by Mr. Price, the late editor of Warton's History of English Poetry, 1824, records the judgement, not exactly in accordance with the preceding, of one whose intimate knowledge of northern and early English philology gives a value to his observations. Having occasion to notice that Mr. Tooke had overlooked the use of the genitive absolute, Mr. Price adds: “Nor is it mentioned here with a view to disparage the great and important services of this distinguished scholar ; but as a collateral proof, if such be wanting, of his veracity in declaring, that all his conclusions were the result of reasoning a priori, and that they were formed long before he could read a line of Gothic or Anglo-Saxon. To those who will be at the trouble of examining Mr. Tooke's theory and his own peculiar illustration of it, it will soon be evident that though no objections can be offered to his general results, yet his details, more especially those contained in his first volume, may be contested nearly as often as they are admitted. The cause of this will be found in what Mr. Tooke has himself related, of the manner in which those results were obtained, combined with another circumstance which he did not think it of importance to communicate, but which, as he certainly did not feel its consequences, he could have no improper motive for concealing. The simple truth is, That Mr. Tooke, with whom, like every man of an active mind, idleness—in his case perhaps the idleness of a busy political life—ranked as an enjoyment, only investigated his system at its two extremes—the root and summit—the Anglo-Saxon, and English from the thirteenth century downwards; and having satisfied himself, on a review of its condition in these two stages, that his previous convictions were on the whole correct, he abandoned all further examination of the subject. The former I should feel disposed to believe he chiefly studied in Lye's vocabulary; of the latter he certainly had ample experience. But in passing over the intervening space, and we might say for want of a due knowledge of those numerous laws which govern the Anglo-Saxon grammar—and no language can be familiar to us without a similar knowledge—a variety of the fainter lines and minor features, all contributing to give both form and expression to our language, entirely escaped him; and hence the facilities with which his system has been made the subject of attack, though in fact it is not the system which has been vulnerable, but Mr. Tooke's occasionally loose application of it. This note might have been spared; but it has been so much the fashion of late to feed upon what Leisewitz would call 'the corse of Mr. Tooke's reputation,' that I may stand excused for seeking this opportunity of offering a counter statement to some opinions of rather general currency." Vol. ii. p. 493.

P. 100.

THOUGH is placed by Grimm in his class of pronominal adverbs, as being one of the numerous particles originating from the demonstrative pronoun that, $\Psi\Lambda\tau\Lambda$, on which, and their relation to each other and their common source, he treats fully in vol. iii. p. 165-177;—see also p. 285. Mr. Bruckner objects that ðeah, the A.-S. form, is not the imperative of ðapian; and indeed Mr. Tooke has not shown how his etymology of though is applicable to the forms of the word in the cognate languages, and which must have had the same origin. Besides those which he mentions, there are the Gothic 𐍂𐍅𐍂𐍇 and its compounds, the Icelandic þó, the old Frisic tach, thach (Wiarda), and the Francic thoh. Ihre also considers it as an oblique case of the demonstrative pronoun: v. Then, Thy (quamvis), Ty.

It is material to observe that Mr. Tooke's account of Though will only suit it in the sense of Although, licet; but not at all as veruntamen, Germ. Doch;—in which sense also, as he admits in the note, p. 100, it is constantly used. This is a sense which it has always borne; as for example:

Peah hƿa nan nē cƿæð, Ðƿæt recƿt þu.

Yet [though] none of them saith, What seekest thou?—John, 4. 27.

And cƿæð, Ðlaƿopð, ic ga, ƿ ne eode ƿpa peah.

And said, I go, sir, and went not, though.—Matt. 21. 30.

Peah hƿæðeƿe, na ƿpa ƿpa ic pille.

Thoh-widaru, nalles thaz ih willi.—Tatian, clxxxi. 2.

Doch, niet gelijck ick wil. Het Nieuwe Test. Dordrecht, 1641.

Though, not as I will.—Matt. 26. 39.

Here I cannot help being led by the literal correspondence of the Francic with the A.-Saxon, to suspect that the conjunction peah-hƿæðeƿe is a remarkable substitution for peah-ƿiðer, verum è contra, or veruntamen, as it is in the Francic: and as it is now in the German, doch dawider, sed ex adverso. See Schilter v. Widar. A curious instance of the confluence of like-sounding words. Perhaps in the instance which Wachter gives of Weder used as quàm, it has been confounded with Wider.

Ten Kate, v. ii. 618, conjectures though to be the imperative of ðicgean, accipere; thus, ðeah, licet, q. d. 'Take it so.' Jamieson considers it as the past part. of To think. Richardson gives only Mr. Tooke's etymology; as if this were an established truth, and not merely an ingenious conjecture. Grimm's account appears to be that which is founded on the most comprehensive survey, and an extensive knowledge of the shades of meaning produced by inflexion.

With regard to ðapian, Wiarda gives Thavigan and Toven, expectare, as its old Frisic representatives; and Bruckner quotes Doogen and Gedooogen as having the same meaning in Dutch.

P. 179. 275.

Verbs compounded with FOR.—The particle for prefixed to Verbs seems to have various significations, which can only be studied with advantage by bringing together all the Verbs and Participles in the Teutonic languages compounded with it. See Lamb. ten Kate's Aneiding, ii. 53; Jamieson's Hermes Scythicus, ch. vii. and viii.; and Grimm's Deutsche Grammatik, ii. 850, where a large collection and able comparison is given.

"VER; Gothis far et fra, A. S. fra et for, Francis et Alam. far, fer, fir, fora, furi, per omnes vocales, et sæpe etiam cum Vau. Particula inseparabilis, vario et multiplici significato pollens, in compositis, extra composita nullo."—Wachter, Proleg. § v.¹

The following are some of those which occur in English writers: Forbarred, forbear, forbid, forbrake, forbrenne,² for-

¹ Mr. Richardson refers to the passage which I had quoted from Wachter, but its import, "particula vario et multiplici significato," seems to have been lost upon him, and his explanations of these compounds are made to suit the hypothesis that for means forth, and not the context of his examples. Thus Forbear, he says, is forth-bear, i. e. to bear forth or away from: Forbid, to bid forth or away from: Fordry, forth or utterly dry: Forbreak, "forbrake [abrupi] the intention of her," &c. Chauc. B. et. iv.; for, i. e. forth, utterly brake: but, if for were forth, forbrake would be "brake forth" [erupi]. Forget, to get forth or out, (sc.) of the mind;—whereas it is the mind that forgets; the thing that goes out of the mind does not forget; otherwise, instead of "the boy forgets his lesson," we should have to say "the lesson forgets the boy." Forlay, to lay forth; "the thief forlays the traveller"—way-lays him, not lays him forth. Forgo, to go forth or away from. But forth neither means "away from," nor "utterly," and is out of the question here, having compounds of its own. Mr. Richardson is right in his orthography of forgo, to give up; but he wholly omits the other word forego, to precede, which Johnson confounds with the former, yet gives for it the authority of Raleigh and Shakspeare. They are just as distinct as abire and præire. In subservience to this same unfounded hypothesis respecting forth, we find Forsooth, "utterly sooth, entirely true," thus strangely made into an adjective.

Robert of Gloucester has vergas, vergon, vergyte, verlore, &c. Also vorbed, vorlay, vorsoke, vorlore.

² "—her shall forbrenne." P. Pl. 44;—vorbarnde. Rob. Glouc.

bruised [intensitive], forclose?, fordarked, fordewed, fordo,¹ fordreden, fordrive, fordronken, fordry, fordulled, fordwined, forefeebled, forfaite,² forfare, forfend, forfered, forfreteth, forget, forgive, forgo, forgrowen,³ forhent, forholn, forjudge,⁴ forkerve, forladen [overburthened, Golding's Ovid, in Warton, iv. 237], forlast, forlent, forlese, forlete, forlie, forlore,⁵ forpyned, forsake, forsay, forset, forshame, forshapen [monstrous], forshent, forslack, forsleuthede, forsongen, *forspeak*⁶ [as a witch does], forstow, forstraught, forswat, forswear, forswonk, forthink,⁷ fortorne, fortread, forwaked, forwandred, forwasted,

¹ "———this is the night

That either makes me, or foredoes me quite."—Othello, act v. sc. 1. Mr. Tooke's account of foredone, p. 275, "turned out of doors," cannot be brought to suit this passage, or the others in which it occurs, by the explanation, that "he that is forth-done, turned out of house and home, is, consequently, undone."

² Perhaps forfeit does not belong to this class.—See Note, p. 179.

³ "Two forgrowen fathers resemblyng Enocke and Hely."—Fabyan, 383.

⁴ Coke Litt. sec. 142, foris judicatus!—Abjudicare, Fleta. "Those pleas are insufficient in the law to forejudge [forjudge] or exclude the mayor, commonalty, and citizens from being a corporation."—Pleadings in the Quo Warranto.

⁵ "——— forlorn of thee,

Whither shall I betake me, where subsist?"—Par. Lost, b. x.

⁶ Under Fore-speak, Dutch Veur-spreken, to predict, Mr. Richardson erroneously places the following:

"That my bad tongue

Forespeaks their cattle, doth bewitch their corn."

Ford's Witch of Edmonton.

Notwithstanding the orthography, the word is doubtless Forspeak, to set a spell upon, to curse, like fraquithan, forcpæðan, maledicere, increpare. Perhaps verspreken may have had that sense, Ten Kate, vol. ii. p. 408. Fürsprechen, to intercede, is different from either.

⁷ "———shall move your Ladyshypp forthynk your curtesye in thys behalfe"—Cavendysshe's Letter, in Hunter's Hallamshire, p. 81. "Then did his father by and by forethink [forthink] him of his oth."—Golding's Ovid, B. ii. "He shall aby or forthink it or I drink."—Palsgrave. And, under the word Repent, "I repent me, I forthink me." "I have forethought it sith." Rob. Glouc. has ofpougte, from orðencan, pœnitere, and Layamon apincheþ.

"Neither I shall repent me, for that I haue giuen you counsaill, nor yet you shall forethinke yourselfe that you have obeyed."—Wilson, Art of Rhetorique. This Mr. Richardson places among the compounds of fore, confounding it with forethink, præmeditari, an entirely distinct word. The substantive forethought he does not give.

forwoy, forewearied,¹ forwelked, forsept, forwoon, forwondred, forwounded, forwrapped, foryelde, &c. &c.

The compounds of for and fore have evidently been confounded, as in the cases of forego, to precede, and forgo (as it should be written),² to give up: so, poppeon, Flem. versien, to overlook, to despise; ponereon, Flem. veursien, to foresee: forethought, præmeditation, and forthought, repented. When the particle has a privative signification, it probably represents the Gothic fra: also in popgipan, Flem. vergeeven, To forgive;³ which are the collaterals of FRATIFAN.

The explanation given by Mr. Tooke will not apply to the generality of cases.

P. 220.—SUBSTANTIVE PREPOSITIONS.

Prepositions are thus classed by Grimm, vol. iii. 251.

I. Simple Prepositions; (as to several of which Mr. Tooke states that he had not been able to satisfy himself.—p. 251.)

With one consonant:—as In, on, out, of, at, up, by, to.

With more than one:—as For, from, till, nigh, with.

II. Derivative Prepositions.—After, over, under, hinder.

III. Compounded, of two Prepositions.—Upon, out of, within, behind, before, about, above, beneath: on innan, on ufan, on uppan, be-ufan, on-bufan. v. p. 250.

Substantive Prepositions.—Against, among.

[To this class belongs of bune, adown.]

IV. Noun { Adjective Prepositions.—Between, amid, an heh, on high, below, toward.

AMONG, is not Iemanz, as Somner has it, but On gemanz, this being a substantive (cœtus) and not the participle, which is gemengeb. See p. 227.—AGAINST, which Mr. Tooke would refer to a supposed participle, Grimm derives from a substantive gagen, gegen, apparently governed by the different prefixes:—thus ingagen, entgegen, zugegen, begagene, ongegen, to-gegne, and, in Layamon, to-gen, to-geines.

¹ "Ropose is best tasted by bodies forewearied." Byrd's Psalms, 1583.

² Forewearied in affayres of great importance." Byrd's Songs, 1589, Ded.

³ See the Errata to Lord Holland's Life of Lope de Vega, 1806.

⁴ Mr. Forby's East Anglian Vocabulary has "Forgive, To begin to thaw;" "Forhinder, To prevent," as still in use: and my Norfolk nurse used "I little forthought" simply in the sense of "I little thought." So popgipan is used simply for To give. Burns uses forgather, to meet. Forewear is both to abjure and to perjure.

P. 234.

To LONG or BELONG. Lelang. ALONG on: LONG of: ALONG with. The distinction between the two senses of the word ALONG, (or rather of the two words,) as shown in the passage from Gower,

“ I tary forth the night ALONGE,
For it is nought on me ALONGE
To slepe,”

is attributed by Mr. Tooke wholly to the difference of their prefixes, as being respectively the representatives of Anðlang and Lelang. He refers the LANG or LONG in the latter as well as in the former to Lenzian, To make long, lengthen. It seems to me however that in these words, thus written alike, the second syllable in each is as entirely distinct in meaning and origin as the prefix. “To slepe is nought on me alonge.” We shall in vain, I think, attempt to make out any relation to the notion of length, here, any more than in the word BELONG, which word also, it is remarkable that Junius does not notice, and Skinner merely says of it, “a Teut. Belangen, Anlangen.” I conclude therefore that the root to which Lelang is to be referred is not Lenzian, To lengthen, but LANGEN, pertinere, for which see Wachter. From this we have also, in Kilian, “Belangh, Verlangh, necessitas, res necessaria, res momentosa—Een saecke van groot verlangh;” and “Belanghen, pertinere:”—in Schilter, “Gilengido, affinitates; Gilanger, propinquus;” and, in Ten Kate, vol. ii. p. 84 and 261, “Belang, Gelang, quod alicui quid refert:—Belangen, spectare ad aliquid;” to which he refers the termination LING; the idea conveyed in all of which is that of close and intimate connection, and not at all of longitudinal dimension. Of the termination LING Somner says, “adjuncti cui additur notat subjectum,” as in Foundling, Hireling, Duckling, Nestling, Firstling, Groundling, Fatling, Sapling, Worldling, indicating that the quality or circumstance closely belongs to the subject.¹ That Cling and Clench may be con-ned with this root as intensitives, I would only submit as a hasty conjecture; and Fling and Sling in a contrary sense. Our early writers frequently use Long as a verb, without the prefix Be, in the sense of pertain. So Chaucer:

¹ “LING oritur a langen, spectare, pertinere, et hinc, substantivis annexum, ex substantivo suppositum facit personale, et quodvis subjectum denominationis, quatenus subjectum, illud ad substantivum, sub aliqua ratione pertinere creditur.” And, “Ex adjectivo facit substantivum, ea qualitate præditum cui annectitur.” Wachter, Prolegom. Sect. vi. e. g. Youngling, Darling. See also Grimm, ii. 352, and 356 for adverbs in lings:—Scotch, Blindlins, Scantlins; and Darkling, Milton.

“That appertaineth and longeth all onely to the judges.”

Tale of Melibeus.

Along, in the sense of length, was formerly written Alonsgt. And it is to be remarked that Along, when the representative of Lelang, is always followed by on, upon, at, of, or the Noun in the genitive case, as in “on ppeorte zelang :”—“æt þe is ure lif zelang.” Our life is along at Thee.—“hit is æt Godeþ dome zelang.”—“Which was upon the kyng alonge.”—Gower. “re ðrinca his zelang.”—Cros. 5. 8. Along with should seem also to be from Langen, pertinere, as well as Along of, and to have no relation to Length. Latimer and Ridley were sentenced along with Cranmer. “And he to England shall along with you.”—Hamlet, iii. 3. Johnson, explaining the expression in Pope, “Come along,” by onward, absurdly derives it from the French Allons. Richardson gives Along and Belong as verbs, in the sense of To lengthen; but with no instances of either in that sense: none, I should think, exist. He also gives the following senses of Belong: To reach, To attain, To appertain: the last being the only real one—the others imagined, merely to make out a supposed etymology. The other senses of Langen mentioned by Wachter, are trahere, expetere, prolongare, porrigere, tangere, and, metaphorically as he supposes, pervenire, from which he would derive the sense, pertinere: but the connection seems very remote and doubtful, and a confusion of the agent with the object.

P. 243.

ABOUT.—Mr. Tooke seems to have gone astray in his account of this word; and very strangely, as its history seems tolerably clear. He appears to have been put on a wrong scent by Spelman, who derives it from the French Bout and Aboutter; and overlooking Skinner’s derivation of it, which he quotes, and Junius’s, which he omits, he says, in p. 243, “Spelman, Junius, Skinner, and Menage, all resort to Franco-Gall for their etymology.” This is certainly not true with regard to Junius and Skinner, however some of the passages as quoted by him from them may have this appearance. What is given from Junius relates to a different word, 'BUT, Scopus,' and has no reference to ABOUT; his account of which, being omitted by Mr. Tooke, I here insert:

"ABOUT, circum, circa. A.-Saxones abutan vel abuton dicebant; quæ videri possunt facta ex illo embe utan quod occurrit Marc. 14. 47; Æn of ðam þe þap embe utan ꝛodon, Unus ex circumstantibus. Vide tamen Spelmanni Glossarium in Abuttare."

Skinner, as will be seen in the first quotation from him, (p. 242.) which is the whole of what he says upon the word ABOUT, derives it unhesitatingly from A.-S. abutan, ymbutan. The other passages which Mr. Tooke quotes from Skinner treat of ABUTT and BUT, which he derives from the Franco-Gall. BOUT, and have no reference whatever to ABOUT.

Skinner errs in compounding Abutan of the Latin preposition Ab and the Saxon utan; for analogy obviously leads us to consider the A as a contraction of the Saxon On (as Again, onzean; Away, on peg; Aback, on bæc, &c.) and it is sometimes written with On, which requires butan, and not utan.

The word is found in the following forms: onbutan, onbuton, abutan, abuton; embe utan, embutan, ymbeutan, ymbutan, ymbuton; all orthographical variations of two, onbutan and ymbutan; and these, though really distinct words, as being compounds of butan and utan with the distinct prepositions On and Ym or Ymbe, yet seem to have coalesced¹ in the course of time, not greatly differing in sense or sound, to form our present word ABOUT, which is the representative of both. Of this I think no one will doubt who attends to the idiomatic features in which it exactly resembles its progenitors, as the following phrases of King Alfred and the

¹ The tendency of similar words to coalesce in the course of time, and from being confounded in popular use, is one of the phenomena of language to be noticed: For example mystery (μυστήριον), and mistere, ministerium, maisterie, mestiero, métier, an art or craft:—the French Isle, Ital. Isola, Lat. Insula, confounded with Island, (properly Iland) A.-S. Calond, Eitland. So Unter, and Inter, Beorn and Bearn. Thus has Weremuth been transformed into Wormwood, Σταφίς ἀγρία into Stavesacre; Febrifugium into Featherfew; Frithborg into Friborg, out of which mistake grew the word Frankpledge; Knave converted into Nativus, &c.

Saxon Chronicle will show : ƿeoppan ymbutan, far about; ƿæp ymbutan, thereabouts; norð ymbutan, north about: ƿuð ymbutan, south about.

With regard to Onboda, I cannot imagine where Mr. Tooke got it, or how it could be connected with ABOUT. [Having thus called in question the reality of this word in the edition of 1829, I had supposed that it would not again be cited without some proof that it had an existence; but Mr. Richardson, in his lately published Dictionary, under the words About and Abut, still refers us to "Abuta, Onbuta, Onboda; Boda, the first outward extremity or boundary of any thing;" all of which are, so far as I can find, mere creatures of the imagination, or of some mistake. Mr. M'Culloch, also, in his Grammar, 1835, refers to this fictitious Saxon "Abuta, the verge or extremity of a thing." It is to be regretted that those who claim credit for founding new grammars and dictionaries on the principles of Mr. Tooke, should make them the means of diffusing and perpetuating all his errors in detail.

I find that the subject is sometimes interposed between the two prepositions, as in King Alfred's Orosius, b. 1. ch. 1. p. 22. "Of ƿæm lande ƿe ymb h̄y utan ƿæpan." Of the lands that round them about were. ymb liðan utan, circumnavigare. And so the Icelandic description of the annular eclipse of August 5, 1263, in Haco's Expedition, ed. Johnstone, p. 44: "Sva at lítill bringr var biartur um sólina utan." So that a little ring was bright about the sun: or, round the sun about.—"Ymb ƿa runnan utan." Bed. 645, 22.—Utan-ymb sometimes occurs for ymb-utan.—I confess I do not understand the ground of Mr. Grimm's question (Grammat. iii. 265,) as to the import of the a in about, considering the analogy of similar words compounded with on.

P. 247.

DOWN, ADOWN.—Mr. Tooke shows clearly that his predecessors had entirely failed in their endeavours to investigate the origin of this Preposition; and gives a new and ingenious conjecture, in the absence of any thing satisfactory.

I have given in the Note to p. 247 what occurred to me, whilst employed upon that part of the work, as the true explanation of this preposition which has so much puzzled our etymologists. The most perplexing questions sometimes admit of a very simple solution. We must return for its origin to our substantive Down, A.-S. Dune, a hill. Those indeed who looked to this source had been so much at a loss how to connect a preposition signifying depression with a substantive which denoted elevation, that the question must have seemed to Mr. Tooke quite open for fresh conjecture.¹ When, however, I met with Of ðune in Anglo-Saxon, no doubt remained that the mystery was solved, and that all the obscurity had been occasioned by the disappearance of the particle prefixed. There is no need therefore any longer to torture Dune or Down, and to make it appear to signify the reverse of that which it really means, a hill; for as Of ðune means Off or From Hill,² it must imply Descent; and Down is only put for Adown or Of-ðune by an elision of the prefix. As aduna, adune, with their compounds, are also found, we can have no doubt that the A in this case has arisen from the Of rapidly pronounced; and instead of Adown being from a and the preposition down, as Dr. Johnson tells us, the fact is just the reverse—Down is contracted from Adown or Adune, and Adune is from Of ðune.⁴

As the instances which I have as yet found of the use of Of ðune are but six, of which Lye gives references only to five, and those dispersed under different heads, and, unlike his general practice, without the context, I have thought it might be satisfactory if I furnished the reader with the following:

Under Of ðune, Deorsum, Lye only refers us to Of and Dun. "Of. Of. De."—"Of þam munte." "Of heofonum. De cœlo." "Of ðune. Deorsum; Oros. 3. 5. Boet. 25."

¹ "Conjecture cannot supersede historical fact; and it ought never to be adopted in etymology, unless to explain those words of which the existence precedes record. Mr. Tooke, who had more intellect than northern lore, frequently advances a rash though always an ingenious conjecture: but Mr. Richardson pursues the same untracked course with still less caution, and often connects (like Mr. Whiter in his Etymologicon) words as obviously distinct in pedigree as a negro and a white."—Monthly Review, for Jan. 1817, N. S. vol. lxxxii. p. 86.

² So in the case of "De chez," p. 162, where chez is the substantive CASA.

³ Thus Ashamed from ofrceamob; Athirst from ofðýppte; apincheþ from ofþincheþ, Layam.

⁴ So Declivis, from de and clivus.

"Dun. bune. A down. Mons; Ælf. Gl. 18. gr. 5. Math. 24. 3. Ps. 67. 16.—of bune. Downward, down. Deorsum; Oros. 3. 5. R. Luc. 4. 9. Boet. c. 33. §. 4. 1. 86."

"Abun. abuna. abune. Deorsum; Bed. 1. 12. C. Luc. 4. 9."

"Abunaject. Depositus; Bed. 4. 6."

Abunearcizan. abunearcizan. Descendere; C. Luc. 19. 5. Ps. 71. 6. 87. 4."

"Abunearcib. Deorsum; C. Sax. 1083."

To which I subjoin so much of the context of the passages referred to as will be sufficient for the satisfaction of the reader.

King Alfred's Orosius, 3. 5. p. 94.—And hi leton heopa hpægl of bune to fotum. And they let their garments down to their feet.

King Alfred's Boethius, 25.—Sya bið eac þam tpeopum ðe him gecyñbe biþ up heah to stanbanne. þeah ðu teo hþelene boh of bune to þæpe eoppan. fþelce þu bezan mæge. fpa þu hine alæcrt. fpa fppuncþ he up. 7 ppzað pþ þu gecynber.¹ So it is also with the trees, to which it is natural to stand erect. Though thou tug each bough down to the earth with all thy might; when thou lettest it go, then springeth it up, and stretcheth according to its nature.

And my hipe ðonne eppe to feallanne of-bune ðonne up.—33. §. 4. 1. 86. And it is not to them easier to fall downwards than upwards."

To these should be added another, given under the word Healb, which Lye thus explains; "Propensus, proclivis, devexus, incurvatus. ðiden healb. Istuc proclivis, (thereto in-

¹ "Validis quondam viribus acta,
Pronum flectit virga cacumen;
Hanc si curvans dextra remisit,
Recto spectat vertice cælum."—De Consol. lib. 3. metr. 2.

"The yerde of a tre that is haled adowne by mightie strength boweth redily the crophe adown: but if that the hande that is bente let it gone againe, anon the crophe lokethe vpright to the heuen."—Chaucer's transl.

² "Aut mersas deducant pondera terras."—De Consol. lib. 3. metr. 9.

"—ne flye nat over his, ne that the heuiness ne draw nat adowne overlowe the yerthes that be plunged in the waters."—Chaucer's transl. where observe that he uses Adoun.

In the King of Tars we have,

"His robe he rente adoun." Warton, ii. 25. 8vo.

"The table adoun riht he smot." Ibid.

"Al that he hitte he smot down riht." Ibid.

"He hem a-dun leide." Layamon, l. 551.

"And descended a down to the derk helle." P. Ploughman's Crede.

"That hongon adoun to the grounde."

Davie's Alisaundre, Warton, ii. 54.

"Theo duyk feol down to the grounde." Ibid. 59.

clined); Boet. 24. 4. of ðune healbe. De monte devexus; 41. 6." It will be seen that he has here fallen into a singular mistake in rendering the phrase literally "de monte," which he never could have done if the context had not escaped his attention :

Alfred's Boethius, 41. 6. ¹—And sume biþ twiofete, sume fowerfete; sume fleogenðe. 7 ealle þeah biþ of ðune healbe wiþ þære eorþan. And some be two-footed, some four-footed; some flying: and yet all be downwards inclined towards the earth. ²

Matt. 24. 3.—þa he sæt uppan Oluetýr ðune. As he sate uppon a mount of Olives.—Fox's Gospels.

Psal. 67. 15—17. Spelman.—Dune Godeþ, munt sæt. Munt gepunnon, ðune sæt. to hpy þene ge muntar gepunnene. Dune on þam gelicoð is God punian on hine.

Mons Dei, mons pinguis. Mons coagulatus, mons pinguis, ut quid suspicamini montes coagulatos? Mons in quo beneplacitum est Deo habitare in eo.

R. Luc. 4. 9. of ðune. C. Luc. 4. 9. abune. In these two versions of Luke 4. 9. (If thou be the son of God, cast thyself down from hence) we see abune in the Cambridge MS. (Wanley's Cat. p. 152. Lye's C.) supplying the place of of ðune in his R., which is the Rushworth MS. in the Bodleian Library, Wanl. p. 82. In Mareschal's edition the passage is thus rendered, Eýþ þu gý Godeþ runu, arend þe heonun nýþer. ³ Gothic, 𐌶𐌵𐌹𐌺𐌹𐌸 𐌸𐌹𐌸 𐌸𐌹𐌸 𐌸𐌹𐌸 𐌸𐌹𐌸 𐌸𐌹𐌸.

¹ "Sunt quibus alarum levitas vaga, verberetque ventos,
Et liquido longi spatia ætheris enatet volatu.
Hæc pressisse solo vestigia gressibusque gaudent,
Vel virideis campos transmittere vel subire sylvas.
Quæ variis videas licet omnia discrepare formis;
Prona tamen facies hebetes valet ingravare sensus.
Unica gens hominum celsum levat altius cacumen," &c.

De Consol. lib. 5. met. 5.

² The following is the passage answering to this in Alfred's metrical paraphrase, p. 197 :

Sume fotum twam	Some with two feet
folðan peððap.	tread the ground :
sume fierfete.	some fourfooted.
Sume fleogenðe	Some flying
winðeþ under polcnum.	wind under the welkin.
Biþ þeah puhta gehwile	Yet is each creature
onhnizen to lpuþan.	inclined to the ground,
hnipap of ðune.	boweth adown ,
on weoruld wileþ.	on the world looketh,
winap to eorþan.	tendeth to the earth.

³ The representatives of which still remain in the Dutch neder, down, daalen, to descend; Germ. thalwärts, downhill. Mr. Gwilt, in his Saxon Rudiments, cannot be right in giving to niðer and abune the signification of backwards.

Bede 1. 12.—Tuxan hi eapmlice abun of ðam pealle. Miserrimis de muris tracti, solo allidebantur.

Bede 4. 6.—Ðæt abune agetton of ðam biſcop rice ƿinſſiſe. Ut deposito Winfrido, &c.

C. Luc. 19. 5.—Abuneartgan (Cambridge MS.) And in the Durham Book Cot. Nero, I find—And cused to him Zache oeserta (z oesertlice) abune ƿiz, ƿopðon to bæge in huƿ ðin gebæfneð iƿ me to ƿunian.] oesirtube offtaz abune. Et dixit ad eum, Zachee, festinans descende, quia hodie in domo tua oportet me manere. Et festinans descendit.

Psaln 71. 6.—De abuneartah ƿpa ƿpa ƿen on ƿlȳr. Descendet sicut pluvia in vellus.

Psaln 87. 4.—Lepeneb ic eom mið abunertigenbum on ƿeaƿe.—Æstimatus sum cum descendentibus in lacum.

Psaln 73. 3.—Mount Sion is called ƿæpe bune.

Math. 4. 8.—Junius says that the Rushworth MS. has ðune instead of bune.—On ðune heh ƿurðe : where Mareschal has On ƿriðe heahne munt.

Chron. Sax. an. 1083.—And ƿeotebun abunƿeaƿð mið aƿeƿan. And shot downwards with arrows.—And ƿa oðre ƿa ðupa ðƿæcon ƿæƿ abune. And the others broke down the doors.

I believe it will be found that the adverb and preposition Down exists in none of the other Teutonic dialects, but solely in the English language. With regard to the substantive, Wachter derives it from Dunen, turgere.

[Since the publication of the Edition of 1829, I have met with one more instance, in the poem of Judith :

Ði ða hƿeoƿiz-moba ƿuppon hƿpa ƿæƿen of bune.—Thronites, Hept. p. 25.

Also, in the third volume of Grimm's Grammatik, 1831, I find of bune classed in his division of Prepositional Adverbs formed of Substantives, p. 151. seq. with others exactly analogous : e. g. aba berge, aba himile, deorsum ; and the converse, formed in the same manner, ze tale, deorsum, ze berge, sursum ; Old French and Italian, amont, aval, a monte, a valle, up, down ;—and Ger. bergauf und bergab gehen, To walk up and down hill.

The matter seems now so perfectly plain, that I wonder Mr. D. Booth, in the Introduction to his Analytical Dictionary, 1830, p. cxxviii. should have kept in the path of difficulty.]

P. 265.

GENITIVAL ADVERBS. The adverbs formed from the oblique cases of substantives and adjectives are collected by Grimm in great number from the Teutonic languages in all the periods of their history, and classed according to their origin from the genitive, dative, or accusative case.—Grammatik, vol. iii. p. 88 et seq. Such as the following are evidently to be referred to the genitive: “aner bæger je abbode eode.” One day the abbot went.—Sax. Chron. an 1083. Therwith the nightspel said he anon rihtes.—Chauc. Miller’s Tale, 3480. By rights. Unawares. Athwart-ships. Amid-ships. His thanks. Now adayes, (P. Pl. 186. Whit.) Now on dayis, (G. Dougl. b 5, 140.) Besides. Betimes. Straightways. (This Richardson omits; and Webster, I know not why, says it is obsolete.) Ways occurs as the genitive singular, “any ways afflicted,” Com. Prayer. (Always, however, Grimm says is from the plural. Else, he considers as the genitive eller, p. 61. 89.) Go thy ways. “Lepænde þær pæger þe he ær com.” He turned the way that he before came.—Apollonius, ed. Thorpe, p. 13. Of late; of old? “Niper oppe ealder.”—Conybeare, p. 246.

Among those which are to be referred to the Dative plural, Grimm, iii. p. 136, mentions þpulum, aliquando. So that our WHILOM has come down to us with its datival inflexion entire, like some fossil among the debris and alluvium of our language, with all its original characters unobliterated:—and the substantive While supplies us with two adverbs—

Whiles, from the genitive singular, and Whilom, from the dative plural.

Yet Lennie, among the conceited absurdities of his grammar, twentieth edition, Edinb., 1839, gravely tells us that “while should not be used as a noun!” Alas for the poor children who are doomed to be tormented out of their mother tongue by these Grammar-makers!

P. 266. 678. 680.

FUTURE INFINITIVE. Such expressions as the following evidently have their origin from the ancient Derivative or Future Infinitive. The house is to build. There are many things to do, trees to plant, fences to make, &c. Hard to bear. Fair to look on. Easy to learn. Good to eat. Difficult to handle. Sad to tell. So, “Hit is geame to tellanne, ac hit ne þuhte him nan geame to donne.”—Chr. Sax. an. 1085. “ƿiþe gedpolum to pædenne.”—Thwaites, Hept. 4. “began to bodienne; pæger on to locianne.”—Oros. II.

iv. 68. A house to let: (for which some folks, thinking to show their grammar, write A house to be let.) Ages to come. He is to blame. What is to be. "ƿe dede ƿar is to drede."—Langtoft, 399. "ƿe day is for to witen."—Ib. 2. 341.

"That is the robe I mean, iwis,"

Through which the ground to praisen is."—Rom. of the Rose, l. 69.

"That is a frute full wel to like."—Ib. l. 1357.

"Nought wist he what this Latin was to say."—Prioresses T. 134. 53.

"Thynges that been to flien, and thynges that been to desiren."—Boet. 5. 2. "And is hereafter to commen."—P. Ploughm. Creed. "Wherefore it is to presuppose that it was for a more grevous cause."—Fabyan, 389, A.D. 1285. "And this is not to seek, it is absolutely ready."

"I do not think my sister so to seek."—Comus.

It seems to have been first altered by accenting the vowel, instead of using the nne, as to punián, and then to have been written like the simple infinitive, but with to prefixed: "ƿuopen ƿe ƿar to halben."—Chron. Sax. an. 1140. Originally the simple infinitive was not preceded by to: thus we still say, I bade him rise. I saw him fall. You may let him go. They heard him sing. See Grimm, iv., 91 and 104; Pure Infinitive and Prepositional Infinitive.

With regard to Lye's statement (referred to in the note, p. 192.) that to was sometimes prefixed, though redundantly, to the simple infinitive, it will be found that he is not borne out by the passages to which he refers, and which, as he has not given them, I insert. "And sætte ƿap munecar Lobe to ƿepian."—Chron. Sax. 118. 10;—ad inserviendum Deo;—evidently not the simple but the future infinitive. "ƿa reonde he ƿ man ƿceolbe ƿa ƿcipu to heapan."—Ibid. 134. 10.—ut naves confringerent. Here the to is not the prefix to the infinitive; which is clearly governed by ƿceolbe; but the verb is a compound, toheapan. "Eobon heom to heopa ƿappan ƿeopme," egressi sunt ad quærendum sibi

¹ Iwis, ywis, ƿepiƿ, certainly, indeed; (not as Somner supposes, I wis, scio). The verb ƿiran, therefore, gives us these two adverbs:

From the past participle, ƿepiƿ, Fr. Th. kewisso,—IWIS;

From the future infinitive, to ƿitaune,—TO WIT:

The near relation of ƿiran to videre, visere, siðw, siðquas, has been pointed out by Junius, Wachter, and others.

victim: the sense is here mistaken; it should be "they went to their ready retreat;" and the passage is not to the purpose. "He onðreð þyðen to fapanne,"—Matt. 2. 22. ("to fapende,"—Fox.) and "To fapenne 7 bebypizean minne fæðen,"—Ib. 8. 22. are obviously future. Thus, in German, zu is prefixt to a verb governed by another verb that precedes it, except in the case of auxiliaries and some others.

Some writers of the present day have a disagreeable affectation of putting an adverb between to and the infinitive.

Grimm considers the Infinitive as declinable, and makes the Future Infinitive a Dative Case, vol. ii. p. 1022. iv. 61. 105.

The form which occurs in Wiclif, "Thou that art to comynge,"—Matt. 11. 3., would seem to be a corruption of the future infinitive, as it answers to þu þe to cumenne eapt, &c. Yet we find to makiende in Hickes, ii. 171. xxiii.; and, in the Saxon Chronicle, an. 654, instead of "Botulf ongon þæt mýnrten tymbrian," MS., Cot. reads, "agan to makiende þ mýnrten: "a form which often occurs in old Platdeutsche: "Wultu uns uthdryven, so vorlöve uns inn de herde swyne tho varende,"—Matt. 8. "Crist Ihesu that is to demynge the quyke and deed."—2 Tim. 4 1. "Ihesu Christo, de dar thokamende ys, tho richtende de levendigen und de doden."—Platdeutsche Bible, Magdeburg, 1545. "Do began he to bevende,"—Bruns Gedichte, 360: From which it would seem to have been confounded with the present participle; unless there should have been a form in which the particle to was used with the Present Participle, in the same manner as with the Past and with the Future Infinitive:—as to-bpecend, to-bpocen, to-bpecanne. See Grimm, iv. 113.

P. 292. 559. 609.

ENGLISH IMPERSONALS. METHINKS.

Mr. Richardson in his Dictionary thus explains Methinks: "It causes me to think," which is as little to the purpose as to explain Me seemeth, It causes me to seem, instead of, It seems to me.¹

¹ Other instances may be noted where the pronoun follows the verb in the Objective case; as "Woe is me."—

"Oh, wel is him that hath his quiver

Furnisht with such artillery."—Sternhold and Hopkins, Psalm 127.

Thus Shakspeare :

" Prince. Where shall we sojourn till our coronation ?

Glo. Where it thinks best unto your royal selfe."

Richard the Third, act 3. sc. 1.

as it stands in the first copies, though since altered to seems. Thinks, in this case, is the representative of Dunken, To appear, and not of Denken, To think. We have therefore in German mich dunkt, as in English methinks, i. e. It appears to me. Several Impersonals of a similar kind may be enumerated.

" Me seemeth good that with some little traine

Forthwith from Ludlow the young prince be fetcht."

Richard the Third, act 2. sc. 2.

" Let him do what seemeth him good."—1 Sam. iii. 18.

" Her thought it all a vilanie."—Chauc. R. Rose, l. 1231.

" Him oughtin now to have the lesé paine."—Leg. Good Wom. 429.

" Him ought not be a tiraunt."—Ib. l. 377.

" The gardin that so likid me."—Chauc. R. Rose, l. 1312.

" So *it liked*¹ the emperor to know which of his daughters loved him best."—Gesta Rom. ed. Swan, i. lxxii. ch. 20.

" He should ask of the emperor what him list."—Ib. lxxxv. ch. 41.

" Me mette,"—(I dreamt ;) Chaucer, Miller's T. 3684: Nonne's Pr. l. 14904 ; Piers Plowm. p. 1. &c. If this be from Metan, To paint, To image, it would seem from its impersonal form to be q. d. " It imaged to me." In some instances, however, "mette" occurs governed by the pronoun in the nominative case.

" Well me quemeth," (pleaseth) Chauc. Conf. Am. 68. Also our common expression " If you please ;" where you is evidently not the nominative to the verb, but is governed by it, q. d. " If you it please : " yet, by a singular perversion of the phrase, we say " I do not please," " If she should please," for " It does not please me," " If it should please her."

" Stanley. Please it your majestie to give me leave,

Ile muster up my friends and meete your grace,

Where and what time your majestie shall please."

Richard the Third, act 4. sc. 4.

" Me oꝥðincþ," pœnitet me.—Somner. " And hit þuhte him feapa daga."—Gen. 29. 20. And it seemed unto him but a few days. " Ða Finnar, him þuhte, 7 þa Beoꝥmar ƿppæcon neah an geðeode."—Oros. p. 22. It seemed to him that the Finnas and the Beormas spoke nearly one language. ƿundeplic ƿincan. Boet. 16. 2. To seem wonderful.

¹ " In thir gilicheta mir."—Schiller. Goth. " Thatei leikaith imma."—John 8. 29.

ΘΛΪΖΥΙΣ ΦΗΓΚΕΙΦ. Quid vobis videtur?—Mark 14. 64. Þpæt þincð eop be Lpυte? Tī iυd̃ d̃axi? ari rōi Χριστ̃u; Matth. 22. 42.; where the pronoun is eop, iυd̃, in the dative; not ge, iυeð;—þincð exactly corresponding to d̃axi, to which word, indeed, Wachter supposes Dunken, videri, to be related; whilst Denken, cogitare, he derives from ding, sermo, “sensu a sermone externo ad internum translato. Quid enim est cogitare, nisi intus et in mente sermocinari?”¹ See Ihre, v. Ting, Tinga, colloquium. It is clear, notwithstanding the occasional writing of þmcan for þencan, that, from the earliest existing records of all the Teutonic dialects, these have come down to us as two entirely distinct words;—they are always kept distinct in the præterite;—and no mere conjecture of a common origin can warrant us in confounding them.²

Goth. ΦΑΓΚΩΑΝ To think.	ΦΗΓΓΚΩΑΝ, To seem.
præt. ΦΑΗΤΑ. Luc. i. 29.	præt, ΦΗΗΤΑ. Luc. 19. 11.
A.-S. þencean, þencan, þmcan,	þmcan,
præt. þohce.	præt. þuhce.
Franc. Thenken, præt. thahta.	Thunken.
Germ. Denken, præt. dachte.	Dunken, præt. dünkt.
Icel. at þeckia, præt. þeckti.	at þykia, præt. þótti.
Suio-G. Tienka.	Tycka.
	All these when impersonal govern the person in the dat. or acc.

¹ The quotation which he adds, may be interesting, in reference to the observations on Mr. Locke's Essay in Chap. II. p. 19, 20, &c.

“Eleganter Tertullianus, cap. v. con. Prax.—Vide quum tacitus ipse tecum congregederis, ratione hoc ipsum agi intra te, occurrente ea tibi cum sermone ad omnem cogitatus tui motum, et ad omnem sensus tui pulsum. Quodcumque cogitaveris sermo est, quodcumque senseris ratio est. Loquaris illud in animo necesse est: Et dum loqueris, conlocutorem pateris sermonem, in quo inest hæc ipsa ratio, qua cum ea cogitans loquaris, per quam loquens cogitas. Ita secundus quodammodo in te est sermo, per quem loqueris cogitando, et per quem cogitas loquendo.”

² Junius (Gloss. to Goth. Gospels) and Lye confound them. But they are clearly distinguished by Wachter; and by Ihre, v. Tienka, and Tycka, as to which he says, “eo cum discrimine, quod hoc mentis sit cognitio, illud sententia,” the one signifying perception, the other deliberation and all the operations of the mind, as relating to the past and future as well as the present. Mig tyckes, impera. mihi videtur.” Mer thickir, Gloss. to Edda, part ii. 1818, v. Þickia, þótti, þókti: and v. Þatti pro þeckti, and Þeckia. Also Biörn Haldorsen, v. þyki and þenki.

P. 338. 346. 431.

WHINID.—"Tis a common expression in the western counties to call an ill-natured, sour person, vinnid. For vinnewed, vinowed, vinny, or vinew (the word is variously written) signifies mouldy. In Troilus and Cressida, act 2nd, Ajax speaks to Thersites, 'Thou vinnewed'st leaven,' i. e. thou most mouldy sour dough. Let this phrase be transplanted from the west into Kent, and they will pronounce it whined'st leaven."—"Mr. Theobald reads, you unwinnow'd'st leaven; others, you unsalted leaven. But vinnewed'st is the true reading, ab Anglo-Sax. fynig, mucidus. Wachterus, 'finnen, sordes, finnig, mucidus, putridus, finniger speck, lardum foetidum. Idem Anglo-Saxonibus fynig apud Somner et Benson, et inde fynigeon, mucescere.' This word I met with in Horman's Vulgaria, printed in 1519, folio 162. 'This bredde is olde and venyed: hic panis cariosa est vetustate attactus,' which not a little confirms my correction and explication."—Upton's Critical Observations on Shakespear, p. 213.

P. 339. 487.

BOND, BOUND.—That the different senses of Bond, Bound, &c., are to be traced to distinct roots, and are not all of them connected with the word To bind, will appear, for instance, from Bond, which now forms a part of the word Husband, Husbond, but which was formerly used instead of it.

In Somner we have "Bonba, Paterfamilias, Maritus. The good man of the house: a husband. Vox (forte) origine Danica, hoc enim sensu occurrit apud Olavum Wormium, Monum. Danic. l. 3. p. 233." Somner cites no authority; but we find the following in the Laws of Canute, Wilkins, 144 (on Intestates, Heriots, &c.).

70. Conjux incolat eandem sedem quam Maritus.

And þær fe Bonba sæt uncrýð 7 unbecpæob, fette þ þær 7 ða cild on ðam ylcan unbecacen. And xif fe Bonba ær he beap pære, &c. And where the Husband resided undisputed and unquestioned, let the wife remain, and the child in the same spot, without dispute. And if the Husband, ere he were dead, &c. (So in Laws, Hen. I. c. 14. p. 245. "Et ubi Bunda manserit sine calumpnia, sint uxor et pueri in eodem sine querelâ.") Also, p. 74. Conjux quæ furata recepit furti non tenetur. Ne mæg nan wif he Bonban fopbeoban þ he ne more into his cotan gelaðian þ þ he wille. Nor may no wife her husband forbid that he might not into his cot bring what he will.

Spelman and Skinner have recourse in their etymology to the verb Bindan, to bind; considering Husband as domus vinculum: and Mr. Bosworth, as "one bound by rules." Skinner, however, also gives hur and bonda, Paterfamilias, after Somner. But Junius,¹ who has been followed by Jamieson, Webster, and Richardson, rightly refers it to the Saxon and Danish Buend or Bonde, an inhabitant or occupier; being the present² participle of Bya, Byan or Bugian, habitare, incolere; and rendered by manens, as Sir Francis Palgrave informs us, in the Latin charters. So Wilkins, p. 134, Spa ðam Bunnan rý jeloft. As may be best for the inhabitants.

The similarity of the Pres. Participle of this Verb to the Past Part. of To Bind, to which it can have no relation, may have occasioned ambiguity and perhaps led to mistakes as to another use of the word BOND. In Ducange, 8vo edit., we have

"Bondus, servus obnoxie conditionis, qui alias natus ex Saxon. bond, ligatus, obligatus." He cites among others Walsingham: "Rustici namque quos Nativos vel Bondos vocamus." "Servitia bondorum." Monast. Angl. "Bondi regis" in Legibus Forestarum Scotticarum. Bundones in Danish and Swedish historians. In the same work we have also "Bondagium, conditio servilis, vel colonica:" for which also Walsingham is quoted: "manumissimus universos ligeos, &c., comitatus Herefordie, et ab omni bondagio exuimus, et quietos facimus." "Rustici fuistis et estis, et in bondagio permanebitis."—So also Spelman, v. Nativus. "Servos enim, alios bondos dicimus, alios nativos, alios villanos."—Bondi sunt qui pactionis vinculo se astrinxerint in servitutem (bond, vinculum.)—Nativus, qui natus est servus. Villani glebe ascripti."

These passages certainly suggest the verb To Bind as the origin of the words Bond and Bondage: however the author does not neglect to remind us, on the authority of Pontanus, that with the Danes "Bonde est rusticus, colonus, unde fribunder, liberi coloni:" where its union with the adjective free seems to render the derivation from To Bind inadmissible, and leads us to conclude that Bondage is sometimes merely used to express a kind of tenure or occupation. So it is said "Tenere in Bondagio idem valet quod tenere in Villenagio." It is not at all unlikely, however, that an equivocal etymology may have modified³ the signification of the word in subsequent use; as there are curious instances in the history of words of such changes having been effected; and it may have been used in two different senses, each of them to be referred to a distinct origin.

¹ Junius refers to Danish Bonde, herus, dominus, which he erroneously considers as distinct.

² Richardson says past participle, but it is obviously the present.

³ Bond, cultivator: 1. generally; 2. under villenage; and hence naturally enough confounded with To Bind.

This resemblance to the preterite of Bind has misled Ruddiman and puzzled Jamieson, in the explanation of the word Boun, another of the derivatives of the same word Buan, in its sense of colere or parare; but which Ruddiman refers to Bindan, ligare: I am bound for such a place, "metaphora a militibus sumpta, qui, cum ad iter parati sunt, sarcinas omnes habent colligatas, unde Lat. accingi ad iter."

"Do dight and mak þow bona."—Hearne's Robert of Brunne, p. 170.

Ruddiman, in deriving Boun from Abunden, (expeditus, Somner,) adds "hoc vero a verbo bindan, ligare:"—and Jamieson remarks that the A.-Sax. abunden, "if rightly translated expeditus, appears as an insulated term, not allied to any other words in that language." Its allies are no doubt, however, to be found in gebunb, gebun, gebon, derivatives of Buan, colere, parare, as we find in King Alfred's account of Ohthere's voyage: Oros. p. 22. *þæt land þær eall gebon on oðre healpe þære ear. ne mette he ær nan gebunb land.*¹ The land was all cultivated [or inhabited] on the other side of the water. He had met before with no cultivated land. Ða Beopmar hæfdon rīðe pell gebun hýna land. The Beopmas had exceedingly well cultivated their land.

The verb Bo, Bua, Bauan, Byan, signifying to prepare, to cultivate, to occupy, to build, and the substantive connected with which, is Bu, (Scotch boo, bow,) a farm, or dwelling, has supplied us with several words, which may be thus arranged:

Present participle:—A.-S. Bonda, Buend, an inhabitant, master of the house, husband, farmer:

Participial adjective:—A.-S. lebun, Abunden. Icel. Buinn. Scotch and O. Engl. Bowne; tilled, prepared, ready:

Substantive (the agent):—A.-S. lebun. Germ. Bauer. Engl. Boor; neighbour [Norf. Bor]:

¹ What was the nature of the x. bondc-land that abbot Beonne let to alderman Cuthbriht at Swineshead, anno 775? Sax. Chron. p. 61. Was it cultivated land; or land held on conditions which the tenant was bound to perform?

Substantive:—Bȳn, Bup, Bower; a habitation:—and, with the adjectival termination, Bȳniz, or Bupiz: which would then be referred to Goth. 𐌲𐌹𐌺𐌹𐌸, Francic burg, a city; and not to 𐌲𐌹𐌺𐌹, a hill, the representatives of which latter are A.-S. beorȝ; Francic, berg, pereg. See p. 437.—The distinction has always been preserved in all the cognate languages:

Nih mah burg uuerdan giborgun

Ubar berg gisezzita.—Tatian Harm. cap. 25.

Nor may a city be hidden, set upon a hill.

Thus king Alfred in his Orosius has Alexandria þære bȳniz, Romebuph, Tȳm þa bupȝ, binuan þære bupiz: but Caucarj re beoph,¹ æt þæm beorȝum Caucarj, Æthlanj þæm beorȝe. Bergen, beorȝan, to hide, keep, defend, always agrees in its characteristic vowels with bairȝ, beorȝ, berg, a hill; hence kornberg, heuberg, and our Barn.

The origin of BOUND in the sense of limit does not seem clear.

P. 492.

LOOSE and LOSE, however nearly they resemble each other in the present English orthography, have come down to us as representatives of two quite distinct families; and I see no evidence of their common parentage. The hasty assumption, that words which are similar in appearance or sound are always to be referred to the same source, will frequently mislead. Truth is to be obtained, not by such conclusions à priori, but by an accurate examination of the facts which appear in the history of any words under examination. It is only in the absence of historical facts that conjecture and hypothesis are to be admitted. There are indeed several instances which seem to countenance the paradoxical opinion of a very profound philologist, the late Mr. William Taylor, that languages are confluent; for some words bearing a near resemblance to each other, instead of having diverged from a common root, appear on the contrary to have converged towards a similarity of orthography and a certain adaptation or confusion even of meaning. Instances are to be found of the tendency of popular usage to confound words having a resemblance to the ear, by changes in orthography or modifications of their original sense; and though it would be unreasonable to make the exceptions the rule, yet this tendency should be borne in mind, as sometimes giving the right clue to the truth.

¹ Mr. Daines Barrington translates beophȝe, "parched by the sun:" p. 4. I have no doubt it means "mountainous," from beoph. See the context.

The distinct families to which Loose and Lose respectively belong are to be traced from the earliest records of the Teutonic languages, each having throughout its appropriate and clearly distinct signification. To begin with Ulphilas:

M. Goth.	ΛΛANSCAN , liber, rare, solvere : Lau , liber, frakausjan, &c.	ΛINSAN , perdere, destruere : Frailusan, &c.
A. Sax.	Leran, Lȳran, On-leran.	Leoran, Lorian, fopleoran, foplopen.
Suio. G.	Lösa, Lossa.	Lisa, perdere (Ihre).
Alam.	Losan, Verloosan . . .	Forliosan, Firlinsan.
Belg.	Lossen, Loozen . . .	Liezen, Verliezen, Verlieren: [rforse, Adj. Los. as in was, were; freeze, froze.]
German.	Lösen, löste, gelöst, Auflösen, Adj. Los. .	Verlieren, Verlor, Verloren: Subst. Verliessen, (dungeon, oubliette.) Formerly Verleusen and Verliesen for Verlieren; whence still in N. Germany Verlesen for Verloren.
Engl.	Loose, Loosen.	Lose, lese. Forlorn: Subst. Loss, Lorel, Losel.

Mr. Richardson, following his theory of the identity of words that resemble each other, gives Loose and Lose as "the same word, somewhat differently applied," and this he supports by the following novel and extraordinary explanation of To Lose: "To dismiss, to separate, part or depart from; to give up, to quit, to resign, relinquish, or abandon the hold, property, or possession of; to dispossess, deprive, to diminish, to waste, to ruin, to destroy;" which are evidently very wide of the real meaning of the word, and serve only to favour a fancied and erroneous etymology, which derives Loose from linsan, To lose, To destroy; whereas, on the contrary, the root from which it really comes signifies, To free, redeem, regain, and gives the German appellation for our Saviour. A dictionary formed on such principles can only bewilder and mislead.

P. 594. MANY.—"Mýcel menígu."—Mark 5, 24.

P. 607. 610. TRUTH.—"Many a fals treuthe."—P. Pl. ed. Whit. 398.

P. 624.

"We apprehend that Horne Tooke was mistaken in assigning a verbal origin (as being derived from 3rd pers. sing. indic.) to our abstract substantives in th; and that they are mostly formed from adjectives. Thus from long, length, &c. —Now this terminative th is as likely to be a coalescence of the article with the adjective, as to be the person of a verb. The long, &c. is a natural expression for length, &c.; but in order to support Tooke's derivation, we must suppose a verb To long, &c. and define length, that which longeth; which would be absurd. Though H. T. was not learned in the northern tongues, his sagacity is still admirable when he is pursuing a wrong scent. Another argument against his opinion is, that those substantives in th, which appear to have a verbal origin, assert a passive rather than an active sense. Thus math means the thing mown, not that which moweth; so broth, ruth, stealth, and in all these cases the infinitive in coalescence with the article forms a natural equivalent expression: the mow of hay, &c. We infer that the formative th is a transposed article."—Monthly Review, for Jan. 1817, N. S. vol. lxxxii. p. 83.

In Suio-Gothic the definite article is a suffix. Stealth, however, is the act of stealing, not the thing stolen: birth is either the act of bearing, or the thing borne. For a very full examination of substantives terminating in τ, δ, and τη, in all the Teutonic languages, see Grimm, ii. pp. 193, 224, 241.

P. 639. CHURCH. KIRK.

Mr. Tooke adopts without hesitation the common opinion with regard to the Greek origin of the word CHURCH. A friend has suggested, that in order to make this probable, it ought first to be shown that the word κυριακη was in use in that signification among the Greek and Latin ecclesiastical writers, so as that the Teutonic tribes could have borrowed it from them. Walafrid Strabo alleges Athanasius, Vita S. Antonii, as using κυριακον to signify a temple. Ulphilas merely adopts the Greek word ecclesia. Ephes. 5. 25. &c. ΛΙΚΚΛΕΣΣΑ. Kirch, therefore, had not been introduced in his time.

In the Glossary to Schilter's Thesaurus, v. Chirie, some very ancient forms are given, as, Chirihh, Kirihh, from the prefix chi, or ge, and rihhe, regnum, sc. Christi, as is well suggested by Diecmann in his dissertation on the word;—others, favouring the doctrine of election, refer it to kir, and kiren, eligere; Lipsius to cirk, circua.—Wachter gives instances of kirch for church, which he conjectures may be derived from kelik, used for a Tower, and for the chamber where Christ ate the last supper with his disciples. He also refers to Horg, Hearh, fanum, delubrum, common to all the Teutonic tribes in the times of idolatry, and which he says differs very little from kirch, but thinks it improbable (perhaps without sufficient reason) that the first christian missionaries among them should have borrowed it. See the Glossary to the Edda, Part II., 1818, v. HAVRGE, Hearn, ἱερός. There is a much stronger objection to this etymology, inasmuch as temple is but a subordinate sense of the word.

P. 651. 654.

THE PRESENT PARTICIPLE.—[“It was formerly known in our language by the termination -and. It is now known by the termination -ing.”]

The substitution of the Present Participle in ing for the ancient one in ande or ende has not, I believe, been satisfactorily accounted for. Mr. Tyrwhitt, speaking of the language of Chaucer, says; “the participle of the present time began to be generally terminated in ing, as loving; though the old form which terminated in ende or ande was still in use, as lovende or lovande.” Mr. Grant, in his excellent Grammar, p. 141, conjectures that this change may have arisen from the nasal sound given by the Normans to and or ant having led to their being written with a g. But this necessarily supposes the termination ing not to have existed before the Conquest;¹ whereas it had always been employed in Anglo-Saxon and in other Gothic dialects to form a large class of Verbal Substantives, such as A-S punung, mansio, wooning, Chaucer;² Germ. die wohnung; Dutch, wooning; a dwelling. Instead, therefore, of ende being changed into ing, both these terminations coexisted in Anglo-Saxon and Old English, as they still do in Dutch and German, the one being used for forming the Present Participle and the other the Verbal Substantive.

¹ Ande should also have disappeared when ing was established. We shall however find both in use together down to the 16th century.

² “His woonyng was ful fayr upon an beth.”—Prologue, l. 608.

It follows then that what we are often told by grammarians of the Present Participle being used to form Verbal Substantives cannot be true:¹ for substantives in ing had been common in our language for ages before ever the participle had had this termination: and the correspondent verbals in ing or ung in German and Dutch cannot possibly have any relation to the Present Participle, which in those languages has no such ending. Yet Greenwood and others² tell us that "this participle is often used as a substantive," p. 142; and that the participle "is turned into a substantive."

But let us see whether exactly the reverse may not be the true account of the matter, and try whether, instead of the Participle being used as a Substantive, it be not the fact that the Substantive is used as a Present Participle; and that our antient Participle in ende has been displaced³ and superseded by the Verbal Substantives in ing.

Greenwood adds: "This Participle is used in a peculiar manner with the Verb To Be, &c., as I was writing, &c., and in this case a is often set before the participle (participle he must have it); as, He was a dying, She came here a crying, &c. Dr. Wallis makes this a to be put for at,⁴ denoting as

¹ Mr. Tooke's conjecture, at p. 394, that the Verbal Substantive originated from the Past Participle, as Buildings, q. Buildens, is quite unfounded.

² "From to begin comes the participle beginning, as I am beginning the work; which is turned into a substantive, as, In the beginning," p. 145.

"Participles sometimes perform the office of substantives, and are used as such: as, The beginning, Excellent writing:" Lindley Murray's Grammar, p. 77. "The present participle, with the definite article the before it, becomes a substantive:" Ibid. p. 183. "Terminations of the substantive of the thing, from the Saxon:—ing is obviously the termination of the imperfect participle."—Baldwin's very useful New Guide, [by the late Mr. Godwin,] p. xliii. Dr. Lumsden considers it as a great defect in our language, "that most of the nouns ending in ing are at once participles and substantive nouns."—Per. Gram. Pref. xxv.

³ "Replaced" would be the term, in the current jargon of the day, introduced by clumsy translators from the French, who confound remplacer and remplacer, and use Replace as an ugly hybrid to signify indiscriminately either supersede or reinstate.—"Wellington, ayant remplacé [succeeded] Melbourne, remplaçait Peel."

⁴ Here Greenwood is inaccurate; for Wallis says, "valet at, seu in;" and that it would be a participle if the a were away.

"A-twisting, in torquendo, inter torquendum, torquendo jam occupatus. A non est hic loci articulus numeralis, sed particula præpositiva, seu Præpositio quæ in connexionem valet at, seu in; præfigitur verbi much as while ; e. g. a-dying, &c., i. e. while any one is dying. Perhaps a is here redundant," p. 143.

Supposing his writing, and crying, and dying to be indeed participles, he might well consider the a redundant. But they are substantives, and to this the a bears witness. This a, he rightly states, "is undoubtedly the remains of the preposition on rapidly pronounced," and gives as instances, a fiasching, B. Glouc. 186. An huntyng, 199 ; on jlep, an jlep, asleep, Sax. Chron. Is not dying then the verbal substantive? He was a-dying. Ille fuit in obitu—a mode of expression, which being in many cases capable of representing the Present Participle in ende, was used for it, and at length, by a subaudition of the on or a, gradually supplanted it.

The following instances, taken from among a number which were collected in an attempt to investigate the subject, may throw some light on the progress of this change : and it will be seen that I have not met with any case of verbals in ing being employed strictly as Present Participles before the 14th century ;¹ though in the writers of that period, this use is exceedingly prevalent, almost to the exclusion of the participle in ande, which, however, kept its ground in the Scottish and Northern writers to a much later period.

1. PRESENT PARTICIPLE IN ANDE, ENDE.²

Matt. 8. 32.—Gothic, īþ eis 𐌺𐌵𐌹𐌸𐌰𐌿𐌸𐌰𐌿𐌸𐌰 𐌹𐌸 twisting a verbo twist, addita terminatione formativa ing. Si abesset præfixum a, foret Participium Activum, Agentem innuens, contorquens. Sed, propter præfixam præpositionem, est hic loci nomen verbale innuens Actionem ; quod et Gerundiorum vices supplet ; adeoque exponendum erit in torsione existens, seu in torquendo, aut inter torquendum ; innuitque Agentem jam in ipso opere occupatum."—Gram. Angl. p. 243.

¹ Layamon, however, has since the above was written supplied me with instances in the 13th century.

² "D. est litera participialis, et nota originis ex participio. Solent enim Prisci ex participiis formare substantiva, et terminationem participialem derivatis relinquere, tanquam custodem originis. Hæc una litera nos quasi manu ducit ad permulta vocabulorum secreta intelligenda, quæ certe suam significandi vim non aliunde habent quam a presentis temporis participio a quo oriuntur. Hujusmodi sunt, abend vespere, ab aben deficere ; heiland servator, ab heilen servare ; freund amicus, a freyen amare ; feind inimicus, a fien odisse ; wind ventus, a wehen flare ; mond luna, a manen monere."—Wachter, Proleg. § vi. See also Lamb. ten Kate, ii. 77 : and Grimm, vol. iv. p. 64.

ΛΙΦΝΝ ĪN HΛΙΚΑΛ SVĒINE—A. Sax. And hīz ða utgāngende ferdon on ða fīrn.—Franco-Th. Sie tho uzgāngante fuorun in thiū swin.—Flemish, Antw. 1542. En wten menscen gaende, zy in de cudde der verckenēn gegaen. And they going out, went into the swine.

Matt. 9. 2.—ΛΝΑ ΛΙΓΚΑ ΛΙΓΑΝΔΑΝ. On bedde licgende. Liccende in bepe.—Durham B. Liggyngē in a bed.—Wicl.

Bȳpnenðe fȳp. Cædm. 83. burning fire. Tpa men. . . coman pīdenð. Chr. Sax. an. 1137. Two men came riding.—iiii willis in the abbei ever ernend. Hickes, p. 11. Four wells in the abbey ever running.

Versions of the Gospels (14th century):—"And he prechyde sayande, a stalworther thane I schal come estar me, of whom I am not worthi downfallande, or knelande, to louse the thwonge of his chaucers."—Mark 1. 7. Baber's Wiclif, Pref.

"—— ruschynt amang thaim sa rudly,
Stekand thaim so dispitously,
And in sik fusoun berand down,
And slayand thaim forowtyn ransoun."—Barb. Bruce, b. 9. l. 250.

2. VERBAL SUBSTANTIVE in ING.¹

A. S. Pineð heom untellenðlice pīningz. Chron. Sax. an. 1137. Tormented them with unutterable tortures. Bpennunz, combustio; hale-

¹ "UNG.—Omnibus veterum dialectis, si Gothicam excipias, usitatum. Quid significet non liquet. Sed non ideo meram et arbitrariam vocis desinentis flexionem esse existimem, cum quia vetustas et longus sæculorum ordo multa delevit quæ hodie ignorantur, tum quia jam sæpe vidimus multis particulis quosdam inesse secretos significatus, quos neque nostra neque superior ætas animadvertit. Præcipuus ejus usus est in formandis substantivis, non omnibus promiscue, sed iis quæ actionem aut passionem rei significant. Ita Anglosaxonibus thancung est gratiarum actio, Francis et Alamannis auchung augmentatio, Germanis samlung collectio, et alia innumera, a verbis oriunda. Sæpe etiam uni composito duplicem sensum, activum et passivum communicat. Inde verachtung contemptus, tam is quem quis contemnit, quam quo contemnitur."—Wachter. Prol. § vi.

"Onder de allergeemeenzaemsten onzer uitgangen behoort ons ING (bij inkort. ING) dat, agter het worteldeel der Verba gevoegt zijnde, een Substant. Fæmininum uitmaekt, om de dadelijke werking te verbeelden; als DOENINGE, DOENING Actio, van DOEN agere. Zoo mede in 't F-Th. Ilung, bij ons Ylinge, festinatio, van 't F-Th. Ilan festinare; en F-Th. Heilizung salutatio, van 't F-Th. Heilizan, salutare, enz: en in 't A-Saxisch heeft men Unge & Ung & Ing; als A.-S. Wīlnunge desiderium, van 't A.-S. Wīlnian desiderare; A.-S. Ceaping & Ceapung emptio, van 't A.-S. Ceapan emere; A.-S. For-gæging transgressio, van 't A.-S. For-gægean præterire; A.-S. Inwununge inhabitatio, van 't A.-S. Inwunian inhabitare, enz. En, in 't Hoogd. komt de UNG zoo gemeen als bij ons de ING; dus in 't H.-D., Belohnung Mercēs, bij ons Beloning; enz.

"Van ouder tijd dan 't A-Saksisch en F-Thuitsch ken ik geene voorzing, consecratio; timbping, ædificatio, ædificium; Germa. die zimmerung; Dutch. timmering, a building. Fr. Th. rehtung, puhtung, regulæ; dolungono, polung, passionibus; zemanungu, manung, admonitionem; samanungu, zeronnung, ecclesiis.—Gley, Litt. des Franca.

Temptation, in the Lord's Prayer is expressed by the following, in various dialects: Goth. ƿƿAISTUNGA,¹ Icel. freisting. Pr. Theot. khorunka, chorunga, inchorunka, costunga. Dano-Sax. cortnung, cortung, curtnung. Germa. bechorunge, versuchung. Swiss. fersuochung. Augsb. versuachong, fersechung. Fries. versieking. Molkw. voarsiekyng. Hindlop. bekoorieng. Netherland. becoringhe, versoeckinge. Nether-Sachs. versuchung, bekoringe, bedoeringe, betherung. Ober-Sachs. versuchung, anfechtung, &c.

Hampole (14th century):—"In the expowning I felogh holi doctors."
—Prologue to Psalter.

beelden of medegetuigen van dezen uitgang. Bij 't M-Gottisch en 't Oude Kimbrisch, nogte ook in de Grammatica van het tegenwoordige Yslandsch laet hij zig niet zien. In het Engelsch gaet het Participium Præsens Adjectiv. op ING in steê van ENDE, dat bij ons en anderen van Duitsche en Kimbrische afkomst zig vertoont; als Eng. Loving bij ons Lievende, in 't H-D. Liebende. Dog voor 't Eng. Love amare, heeft men in 't Zweedsch, Deensch, en Ysl. Elska amare, welks Particip. Præs. Activ. is in 't Zweedsch Elskande, in 't Deensch Elskendis, en in 't Ysl. Elskende, amans, enz. Uit welken hoek nu, of uit wat voor een eigen stam, ons INGE gesproten zij, heb ik nog niet tot mijn genoegen kunnen opsporen. Zo men 't van ons Innige intimum, zou willen afleiden, zo blijft de zin nog te gewrongen; behalven dit, zo ken ik geene oudheid daer dit innig in steê van ons ING zig vertoont, niet tegenstaende de volledigheid onder 't Oude minst gekreukt is. De M-Gottische terminatie AINS of EINS of ONS, als M-G. Libains (Leving), Fodeins (Voeding), en Salbons (Zalving), enz. zijnde van gelijk geslagt gebruik en zin, zou wel met IN, of un, of on, of an, beantwoord schijnen, dog de agterste G ontbreekt 'er dan nog; en zou 'er sedert in steê van IG moeten bij gekomen zijn; maer met deze onderstelling' zag ik dit op ons voorgemelde INNIG wederom uitdraeijen; 't gene om de bij gebragte rede niet aennemelijk is. Ik staek dan liever het verder gissen, zo lang ik nog niets bedenken kan, dat op een' goeden schijn rust, ofte proeve van overweging' mag uitstaen."—Lamb. ten Kate, ii. 81. See also Grimm's Grammatik, ii. 349. 359.

Verbal substantives were formed with each of these terminations; but those in end denoted the agent, as je Dælend, the Saviour; and those in ing the action, or its effect, as building, the act or what is produced by it; chepyng, traffic, or the place appropriated for it. Wachter says, "actionem aut passionem rei." Thus we have Cloathing, Coating, Firing, Grating, Paling, Schooling, Sheeting, Stabling, Shavings, Savings.

¹ "Die endung ubnja scheint unser ung zu seyn."—Adelung's Mithridates, ii. 188. See Grimm, ii. 366; Gothic termination in en.

“His apparell is souldier-lyke, better knowen by hys fearce doynge then by hys gay goyng.”—R. Ascham, p. 26.

“For avoiding of the playhouse :”—a noun, governing that which follows in the genitive.—“Will by the pulling down of the said [Gresham] College be put an end to.”—Act, 8th Geo. III.

3. In the following passages both the terminations occur, but each is employed appropriately—ENDE for the Present Participle, and ING for the Verbal Substantive.

Alfred's Bede :—De ne pær onþredenbe ða beotunge pær ealþo-manner. lib. l. c. 7. Nequaquam minas principis metuit.

Gospels, Harl. MSS. 5085. Translation in a Northern Dialect (14th century) :—“This is the testimonge of Ion.” “I am a uoice of a criand in desert.”

“Ther ne is no waspe in this world that wil folloke styngen
For stappynge on a too of a styncand frere.”—P. Ploughman's Crede.

“... such thyngis that are likand
Tyll mannys heryng ar plesand.”—Barb. Bruce, (1357.) b. 1. l. 9.

“Hors, or hund, or othir thing
That war plesand to thar liking.” 1. 207.

“Full low inclinand to their queen full clear, Whom for their noble nourishing they thank.”

Dunbar: Ellis's Spec. i. 389.

Lord Herries (1568) :—“Our sovereign havand her majesty's promise be writing of luff, friendship,” &c.—Robertson's Scoll. App. xxvii.

Bishop of St. Andrews (1572) :—“pat ge kennand the faultis and how thai suld be amendit, for pair is na buke sa perfitley prentit, bot sum faultis dois eschaip in the printing thairof.” “He plainly forbiddis al scismes and discord in teaching, sayand, Let na scismes be amang zow.”—Catechisme, Pref. p. 2.

4. The following are instances of the indiscriminate use of ENDE and ING as terminations of the Present Participle.

“—— herdis of oxin and of fee,
Fat and tydy, rakand over all quhare,
In the rank gers pasturing on raw.” Gawin Douglas, b. 8. p. 75.

“—— the tender flouris I saw
Under dame Naturis mantill lurkyng law.
The small fowlis in flokkis saw I fle,
To Nature makand greit lamentatioun.”

Sir D. Lyndsay, (1528.) i. 191.

“Changyng in sorrow our sang melodious,
Quhilk we had wont to sing, with gude intent,
Resoundand to the heviunis firmament.”

Ibid. i. 192.

Lord Herries (1568):—"Or, failing hereof, . . . that she would permit her to return in her awin countrie, . . . seeand that she was comed in her realm upon her writings and promises of friendship."—Ubi sup.

5. The following are passages from the earliest authors, so far as I have been able¹ to find, in whose writings the Present Participles are formed by ing:

Hampole (middle of the 14th century):—"Thou fattide myn heued in oyle: and my chalys drunkenyng what is cleer."²—Ps. 23. I suppose this to be the participle. The version is from the Vulgate: "Et calyx meus inebrians quam præclarus est!" and comes remarkably near the Saxon: Ænð calic min ðpuncneð hu beapht 17.—Spelman's Psalt.

Piers Plouhman (about 1362):—Each of the three of which Dr. Whitaker gives specimens has present participles in ing: but he says that in some MSS. both of that poem and of Wiclif's Bible the English has been somewhat modernized:

"Theune a waked Wrathe, whit to white eyen, Whit a nyvylyng nose, uypppyng hus lyppes."

MS. A.

"Suevelyng wip his nose, and his nekke hangyng."

MS. B.

"And nyvelyngs wip þe nose, and his nekke hangyngs." MS. Oriel.

"—— al the foure ordres

Prechyngs the peple, for profit of the wombe,

And glosyngs the godspel, as hem good lykede."

* Chaucer:—"Alas, I wepyng am constrained to begin verse of sorrowful matter, that whilom in florishyng studie made delitable ditees. For lo, rendyng muses of the poetes enditen to me thinges, &c." Boet. b. i. 1.—"Talkyng on the way," "Lyggyn on the strond." Mur-

¹ Further search should be made in the writers of the 12th and 13th centuries. Should I ever have leisure for a little work which I might call Semi-Saxonica, the results of future inquiries may find a place there. The numerous additions made to our sources of information by the printing of the writings of the period referred to will greatly assist such inquiries. The publication of the two texts of Layamon, at the expense of the Society of Antiquaries, under the able superintendence of Sir Frederic Madden, may be looked forward to as a most important contribution to the materials for studying English philology. This is a task requiring no small labour and skill, as "MS. Otho C. XIII. is now only a bundle of fragments, having suffered severely in the fire of 1731."—Thorpe's Analecta, Pref. viii. Mr. Thorpe's valuable labours are still employed upon the writings of an earlier period; and it is to be hoped that in due time we shall have an edition of the Ormulum. Mr. Kemble has also done much for the elucidation of the earlier and more difficult Saxon remains.

² See Mr. Baber's Wiclif, lxvii. Bib. Reg. 18. D. 1.

chant's 2nd Tale. And so passim. I believe it requires a long search in Chaucer's works to find a participle in ande.¹

Wiclif.—In the text printed by Mr. Baber, ing, ynge, ynge, are used both for the verbal and the participle: as “Stondynge ydel in the chepyng.”—Matt. 20. “John bar witnessing and seide, that I seigh the spirit comynge down as a culvar.”—John 1. And in numerous instances the use of the present participle is avoided by employing the relative and verb: as “to men that saten at the mete,” instead of “to the sit-tande at mete,” in the older version—Mark 6. 22. But among the specimens of the MSS. of the version attributed to Wiclif, which Mr. Baber has given, p. lxx, we find the following variation; MS. Bib. Reg. I. c. VIII. “precyouse stoonys hangynge in the forheed, and chaungynge clothis :” Mr. Douce's MS. “jemmes in the frount hangende and chaunging cloths.”—Is. 3. 22. Gemmas in fronte pendentes, et mutatoria. Where I take changing to be a substantive,—clothes for a change, not clothes that change.

From all which, it appears that though the use of ing for the present participle was fully established in the 14th century, the age of Langland, Chaucer, and Wiclif, yet the ancient ande was still occasionally used, both being found in the same writers, and sometimes in the very same sentence; and in the North, to the end of the 16th century. This seems to me a convincing proof that the change was not effected by an alteration in the sound or orthography of an inflection; but by the rivalry and increasing prevalence of a phrase in some cases equivalent to, and which has come at length to be wholly substituted for, our former participle: as if, for instance, instead of tu recubans sub tegmine—thou lying (licgend) under the shade—we should say, tu in recubitu, &c., thou a-lying, &c.

6. I shall now add some instances which may help to explain this change or substitution. It may be superfluous to

¹ The following may be added to the instances given in the former edition:—Layamon (about 1215):—where the two texts Otho and Calig. furnish abundant opportunities of comparing various forms:

Calig. Ne ganuinde ne ridinde. Otho. Ne goinde ne ridigge. l. 1582.

Calig. Heo riden singinge. Otho. singende. l. 26946.

Calig. pæs tidende hī weren læðe. Otho. pæs tidinge him werelope. l. 1038.

Plowman's Tale (if that be Chaucer's):—“In glitterande golde.” l. 2074. and 2102. It is to be regretted that there exists no critical edition of Chaucer which can be relied on in philological inquiries.

give instances of verbals with a or *an*¹ prefix; but as they may perhaps help to throw light on this inquiry,* I shall add a few.

"—pat bep ago to day auysyng." Rob. Glouc. p. 265.
(that are gone to day a-fishing.)

"— we have
A wyndow a worcheng." P. Pl. in Warton, ii. 506.

"To morrow ye shall ya huntyng fare."
Squire of Low Degree, Warton, 8vo. 2. 9.

"thus shall ye ryde
On haukyng by the ryvers syde." Ibid. p. 11.

"And ride an hawkyng by the rivers."—R. of Sir Thop. v. 3245.

"On huntyng beu they ridden." Knight's Tale, (1689).

¹ That the a prefix to many words is the representative of the ancient on, sometimes equivalent to in, and not of at as Johnson asserts, appears clearly from the following, written indifferently with on, an, or a:

alive:—"The Erle of Salisburie was taken on lyce."—Fabyan, 383.

aside:—"for hope of life was set on side."—Hall, Hen. VI. fol. 103.

aboard: on board: asunder: in sunder.—Ps. 46. 9.

asleep:—"With that he fell on slepe."—Holinshed, death of Edw. IV.

"Fell on sleep."—Acts 13. 36; in our present bibles. So in Barker's 1585; and in Cranmer's 1553. The Dutch Translation has "is ontslapen," A.-S. onþslapan, obdormiscere.

awake, awoaks, A.-S. onþoc, apoc.—Chr. Sax. MS. Laud.

In Weber's Romances, iii. 49, we find an-honge; in Trevisa's Chronicle, "This geer kyng Henry ordeynede that theeves scholde be an hanged." And in Layamon, l. 1023, "pat he sculde beon anhongen, oþer mid horsen to-drawen."

"Al that lyveth other looketh, a londe and a water."

P. Plouhman, pass. 4. l. 29.

anon, a two:—"It kerueth a two and breaketh a two hem that were made of one fleshe."—Chaucer, Person's Tale, fol. 115. Anon is A.-S. on an, in one; while alone is at one.

Also, on fixobe, John 21. 3. auisseth, R. Glouc. 264. (a fishing). an houteth. ib. 283, &c. on heþgop, Chr. Sax.

Sometimes a represents of, as in ashamed for offreamob; thus, athirst, anhungred, Matt. 4. In Piers Plouhman, these are written a fynghred and a fyrste, which Whitaker absurdly explains in his Glossary, "frost-bitten and with aching fingers;"

... "Meny other men, that mucche wo suffren

Both a fynghrede and a furst:"—pass. 10, p. 151, he paraphrases—"both galled in their fingers with frost!" But Andrew Borde says of the Cornish man "Fynger [hunger] iche do abyð;" and they agree with A.-S. of-hunghuan, of-þunne; yet the form anhungred had led me in the last edition to refer them to on. In the phrase "At a Lady," on Lady day, the a is no doubt 'our.'

*Hickes mentions a Dano-Saxon substitute for the Present Participle, Thes. t. i. p. 133.

"Thy cryes, O baby, set my head on aking."—Sydn. Arcad. p. 521.

"He was the wretchedst thing when he was yong;
So long a growing." Richard III., act 2, sc. 4.

"The bysshop hadde a faire tour a makyng."—Glossary to Robert of Gloucester, p. 704. "A knight that had been on hunting."—Prince Arthur, ch. 38. "When I am called from him I fall on weeping."—Ascham's Schole-Master, fol. 11. b. 1. "And going on huntynge."—Stow's Summary, p. 10. "Whilest he is in the anointing."—Frynne's Signel Loyalty, p. 252. "While these sentences are in reading."—Communion Service, in the Offertory. "Whiles that is in singing."—Coronation of Henry VII. in Ives's Select Papers, p. 115. "Whiles the Offertorie was in playing at organs."—Ibid. p. 136. "While the flesh was in seething."—1 Sam. 2. 13. "While the ark was a preparing."—1 Pet. 3. 20.

Compare the following lines from the description of the procession of Olympias, by Davie, with the corresponding ones by Gower :

"There was knyghtis turnyng
There was maidenes carolyng
There was champions skyrnyng,
Of heom and of other wrastlyng,
Of lions chas, of beore baityng." Warton, ii. 55. 8vo.

The words in ynge here are substantives, those which precede them being genitives, [tourneying of knights, caroling of maidens,] as is seen in the last two lines. Gower turns the phrase by employing the participle :

"When as she passed by the strete
There was ful many a tymbre beate,
And many a maide carolende.
And thus throughout the town plaiende
This queene unto the plaiene rode." Warton, ii. 56.

Here we have a writer of a later period substituting the Present Participle for the Verbal Substantive, but retaining the old termination of the former.

A greater collection of instances would probably throw fresh light on this change in our language : but enow have been given to prove at least that all speculations founded on the supposed derivation of verbals in ing from the Present Participle resemble historical disquisitions in which, facts and dates not being considered of any particular importance, it should be ingeniously argued a priori that Hengist and Horsa were sons of Queen Anne and William the Conqueror.

It is evident, moreover, that if the Present Participle were employed as a substantive, it must signify the agent and not the act. We find in Anglo-Saxon and the kindred dialects Dælenb, Saviour; Scyppenb, Creator: Sæ-hðenb, sailor; Riðbenb, knight; Demenb, judge, &c.—and we have even now Friend and Fiend, which are present participles of the Gothic words for To love and To hate. These signify the doer; but how can the active participle possibly signify the thing done? Make the trial in other languages:

“ — quis fallere possit amantem ? ”

“ Quel ennuy la va consumant

D'estre si loing de son amant . ”

After having told us that “ the present participle with the definite article the before it becomes a substantive, and must have the preposition of after it, as, by the observing of which,” Lindley Murray gravely adds, “ the article an or a has the same effect.”—p. 183. The example he gives of the participle, as participating “ not only of the properties of a verb, but also of those of an adjective,” is singular enough; “ I am desirous of knowing him.” I think it will be difficult to find any property of an adjective here in the word knowing.

In the much-vaunted History of European Languages by Dr. Alexander Murray, there is the following account of the Participle:

“ The participle of the present tense, which was compounded of the verb and two significatives, NA, work; and DA, do, make; may be exemplified in WAGANADA, by contraction, WAGANDA and WAGAND, shaking. In some dialects, GA, go, was used instead of DA: Thus, WAGANGA, shaking, wagging; which is the participial form adopted in modern English.”—vol. i. p. 61.

Here the student might suppose he would find the means of tracing up the participle in ing to an earlier date, and in various dialects: but Dr. Murray does not condescend to tell us what these dialects are.¹ All with him is oracular: he seldom gives us the means of satisfying ourselves of the truth of his marvellous assertions, while he relates all the particulars of the mode in which languages were formed in the first ages of the world, as if they had been revealed to him super-naturally. He gives abundance of elements and radicals, indeed; but so great a proportion of them are of his own coinage, or moulded to suit his purpose, that the student has no means of distinguishing what is real from what is fabricated. The burthen of the work is, that the following NINE WORDS are the foundations of language: 1. Ag, Wag, Hwag. 2. Bag, Bwag, Fag, Pag. 3. Dwag, Thwag, Twag. 4. Gwag, Cwag. 5. Lag, Hlag. 6. Mag. 7. Nag, Hnag. 8. Rag, Hrag. 9. Swag!—On which (foundation) he says, “an edifice has been erected of a more useful and wonderful kind than any which have exercised human ingenuity. They were uttered at first, and probably for several generations, in an insulated manner. The circumstances of the actions were communicated by gestures, and the variable tunes of the voice; but the actions themselves were expressed by their suitable monosyllable.”—p. 32. All which is further elucidated in Note P, p. 182, where we learn, that in the primitive universal language, BAG WAG meant, Bring water; BAG, BAG, BAG! They fought very much:—and that such he considers “as a just, and not imaginary specimen of the earliest articulated speech.”

¹ Could he have meant that WAGANGA is Mosso-Gothic? Without better evidence, we ought not to believe that the word ever existed. Speculations go on very smoothly with those who, like some of our newspaper philosophers, have the manufacturing of their own facts.

On the subject of verbals in ing he has another extravagant and ridiculous speculation (vol. i. p. 85.), in which he thus deduces from them our verbals in on, derived from the Latin and French:

“Under this title also must be noticed all words terminating in N, except derivatives from the participles in ND, NT, or NG, which by corruption have lost their final letters. Derivatives from the Latin or French, which terminate in ON, with a few exceptions, ended in ANG, ING, or ONG, the sign of a present participle.¹ Indeed there is reason to suspect that they originally stood as follows: REG, to direct, govern: REGIGONGA, a governing, a region; RELATIGONG or RELATIGING, a relating. These harsh but significative terminations were softened into ON. [Where or when did they exist?] Such formations are common in the Teutonic dialects, and perfectly agreeable to the established analogies of the language, being similar to the English verbal nouns which end in ing.”

But I will not tire the reader with more of these absurdities. Considerable learning is indeed brought forward in the work, to which may be applied a maxim for which I have been accustomed to feel an hereditary respect: “The more learning any man hath, the more need he hath of a correct and cautious judgment to use it well, otherwise his learning will only render him the more capable of deceiving himself and others."¹

¹ In vol. ii. p. 10, he derives the A.-Sax. adverbs in unza, inza, from the present participle! when no participle in ng existed.

I shall conclude this note by presenting the reader with one more empty speculation on the subject of it.² This is from a work which the ingenious author, Mr. Fearn, has named ¹ Preface to Taylor's Hebrew Concordance, vol. ii.—Dr. Jortin relates the following:—"Somebody said to a learned simpleton, 'Thou double your learning, and then—you will be twice the fool that you are now.'"—Tracts, ii. 533.

Dr. Murray's wonderful discoveries are received with great faith by Mr. Fearn. His system, moreover, is transcribed into Cyclopædias, and a Grammar founded upon it has been published in Scotland, where proposals were circulated for erecting a monument in honour of him.

² In the present edition, I have to add to these vague speculations of Dr. Murray and Mr. Fearn, some which have appeared in Mr. Richardson's new Dictionary, and which I cannot consider as of any greater value. After informing us, in p. 431 of his Preliminary Essay, that our Present Participle was formerly written ande, ende, &c., and that an is the infinitive termination, as lup-an, Lov-an; he asserts, but without offering any proof, that "Ed adjoined constitutes our simple verb adjective, Lovan-ed, lov-ande. Loving, as it has long been written," he adds, "is composed of the same infinitive Lov-an, ig, of equivalent meaning, having been affixed instead of ed;" [Lov-en-ig]; and the e having, as in the former case, been "transposed and finally dropt, en-ig has become in-ge, ing." And, at p. 64, he designates Ing "a compound termination, in-ig, having the meaning of en (which, at p. 65, he tells us is "one") augmented by y" [18.] It forms, he says, "the present participle of verbs; we have also abundance of nouns in this termination." Now all this, which is not proposed as a conjecture, but laid down absolutely, is not only entirely unsupported by evidence, but requires us to shut our eyes to the indisputable fact that ing is found coexisting with enle, though serving a different purpose, for at least six centuries before it began gradually, and only in the English language, to supplant it. "Ling," he says elsewhere, "may be the same syllable with l prefixed, l being itself corrupted from dle, a deal or division!"

The zeal which has carried Mr. Richardson through so considerable an undertaking as his Dictionary is much to be commended; and the large collection of examples which his industry has brought together, although most injudiciously arranged (Quarterly Review, vol. li. p. 172), must be serviceable to philologists and to future lexicographers; but it is to be regretted that he has been very unsuccessful in making use of the store of materials which he has amassed. This may in part be attributed to the erroneous view which he appears to have taken of the proper object of a Dictionary, which should be, to give faithfully the actual meanings of the words of our language, or the senses in which they are or have been in use, and not such as may suit a preconceived hypothesis or fancied etymology, thus leading those who may Anti-Tooke; and which, as coming from a declared opponent, should receive some notice here.

"I am a coming,—means, I exist in space—I on-ing (one-ing) COM-ING: In which instance, as in every other, the pronoun, (or noun,) have to consult it into difficulty and error. Of Johnson's Dictionary Mr. Richardson says, "It is needless, and it would be invidious, to accumulate especial instances of failure;—the whole is a failure:" and he describes it as "a collection of usages from English authors, explained to suit the quotations." It would have been well if Mr. Richardson had given such "explanations as suited the quotations," and were in accordance with usage; his sweeping censure would not then have been more applicable to his own work than to Johnson's, the design of which is to give actual and not imputed meanings. After this utter condemnation of his celebrated predecessor, Mr. Richardson adds, that "no author is known to have undertaken the composition of a new work, nor even to have engaged in the less honourable, but still arduous and even praiseworthy enterprise of remoulding and reforming the old." His contempt for Mr. Todd's labours he had long ago expressed in his Illustrations: and does he consider as beneath his notice, or can he have been ignorant of the existence of Dr. Webster's Dictionary, a work unquestionably much superior to his own, and indeed to every English Dictionary that has yet appeared? in which, whilst abundance of valuable etymological information is supplied, fidelity and accuracy in recording the meanings according to actual usage is not sacrificed in order to accommodate them to a preconceived system or to etymological conjecture.

As the basis of the theory which it seems to be the object of Mr. Richardson's Dictionary to uphold, and which is to be found in his Preliminary Essay, he announces "with no assumption of unfelt diffidence" the following axioms. That all men, in all ages having had the same organs of speech and sense of hearing, every distinct articulate sound had a distinct meaning; that among all people having written language, each sound has a corresponding literal sign; and that "each letter was the sign of a separate distinct meaning,—of a word previously familiar in speech," p. 5. His principles must, he indeed informs us, p. 36, "be considered as exoteric doctrines intended only for the scholar ('esoteric' he must be supposed to mean; but in the Dictionary exoteric is mixed up with exotic). Whether the philological student will be aided or misled by viewing the subject through such a medium I shall not discuss; but with regard to those who have to consult a dictionary for the real meaning of words, foreigners for instance, strange indeed will be the perplexities into which some of Mr. Richardson's explanations must lead them.—The safe application of "the great first principle" upon which he states that he has proceeded in the explanation of words, "that a word has one meaning, and one only, from which all usages must spring and be derived,—and that in the etymology of each word must be found this single intrinsic meaning,"—involves in each case previous questions not only as to which is this single intrinsic meaning, but as to the unity of the word under con-which is the sign of the grammatical agent of the adjective action, is, or ought to be, repeated to form the nominative or agent of that action.

"In the small variety of names for beginning actions which thus appears, there is perhaps not one that is more logical, although at the same time none more vulgar, or debased, than the phrases, 'I am a COMING,' 'I am a GOING.' Thus, when children or servants or other dilatory persons, are called upon to do any thing which they must commence forthwith, but which they have not yet begun, and proceed to do with hesitation or reluctance, the ordinary reply is, 'I am a COMING;'—'I am a GOING to do it.' Now it is agreed among etymologists that a means ON, and ON means ONE.¹ Hence the real import of the phrase I am a COMING is—I am on—(onning)—(one-ing)—the ACT OF COMING,—that is (figuratively, and feignedly also,) I am MAKING Myself One WITH THE ACT OF COMING,—which amounts to feigning, 'I am COMING This Moment.'

"It is equally usual, likewise, to say, He is a FISHING. He is a RIDING,—He is a FIGHTING; even during the continuation of either of these actions: in which case, it is plain, the expression is less figurative, or feigned; because the agent is actually at the moment DOING the action, although he cannot be LITERALLY ONE with it."—P. 345.

Whatever the reader may make of all this, I confess that, of the various ways of treating the subject, I must prefer the Baconian mode pursued by Mr. Tooke.² As in Physics, so in Philology, we shall attain truth by an accurate investigation of facts and phænomena, and not by ingenious and too often absurd conjectures which are independent of, or opposed to, them. Reasonings on language not deduced from the real consideration; lest what is taken for "a word" should really be two or more distinct words lurking under the appearance of one. And the individuality or identity of a word consists neither in the sound, the spelling, nor the sense—paradoxical though this may seem, for these all undergo modifications—but in its historical continuity, with regard to which facts must be our guide.—According to Mr. Richardson, Tell and Till are "the same word,"—to raise, the ground, or the voice: so, also, Love and Lift, to pick up: Fear and Fare, to run away. Pref. p. 49.

¹ Mr. Fearn here travels too fast for me to keep pace with him.

² We are told, however, by Dr. Murray, that if Mr. Tooke "had not been misled by some erroneous parts of Locke's philosophy, and the weaker materialism of some unintelligible modern opinions, he would have made a valuable accession to moral as well as grammatical inquiries."—Vol. ii. p. 342. For such a writer to bring a charge of "unintelligible opinions" is ludicrous enough. If Locke's philosophy, and what is here called Materialism, kept Mr. Tooke clear of such airy conceits as Dr. Murray's, that at least is something in their favour. See this subject very ably treated in "A Letter on the Immateriality of the Soul, in reply to Mr. Rennel," (Hunter, 1821,) ascribed to a clergyman of the Irish church; also in Wallace's "Observations on Lord Brougham's Natural Theology," (Ridgway, 1835.)

history of words are of about the same value as speculations in astronomy or chemistry unsupported by an acquaintance with the phænomena of nature.¹

With facts, then, for our guides, we find that we need not have recourse to the remotest ages and to nondescript fictitious dialects in the investigation of the change of termination in our Present Participle and its relation to Verbals in ing; nor to subtile speculations and extravagant assumptions: but that the field of inquiry may be limited to our own language, and nearly to the period of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries:—and I recommend those who have opportunity to note any instances prior to the age of Chaucer where a verbal in ing is used strictly and unequivocally as a Present Participle.

I trust that these notes, and the few that are scattered through the work, will not be thought foreign to its design, whether they coincide with Mr. Tooke, or propose explanations differing from those which he has given. It is one of his great excellencies that he always places honestly and fully before the reader all the data from which his deductions are made; so that even where he may be thought to err he is sure to be instructive.

I have now only to acknowledge with thanks the advice and assistance which I have received in the preparation of this edition from my friends Sutton Sharpe, Esq., and Richard Price, Esq., the able editor of Warton's History of English Poetry; and shall conclude with expressing a wish that the work in its present form may prove acceptable to such as are fond of the studies which it was designed to promote.

Red Lion Court, Fleet Street,
Sept. 29, 1829.

RICHARD TAYLOR.

¹ The wit and mind of man, if it work upon matter, which is the contemplation of the creatures of God, worketh according to the stuff, and is limited thereby: but if it work upon itself, as the spider worketh his web, then it is endless, and brings forth indeed cobwebs of learning, admirable for the fineness of thread and work, but of no substance or profit."—Bacon's Adv. of Learning.

ΕΠΕΑ ΠΤΕΡΟΕΝΤΑ,

PART I.

TO THE

UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE

ONE of her grateful Sons—who always consider acts of voluntary justice towards himself as Favours,¹—dedicates this humble offering. And particularly to her chief ornament for virtue and talent, the Reverend DOCTOR BEADON, Master of Jesus College.

¹ Notwithstanding the additional authority of Plato's despicable saying—*Cum omnibus solvam quod cum omnibus debeo*²—the assertion of Machiavel, that—*Nissuno confessera mai haver obligo con uno chi non l'offenda*³—and the repetition of it by Father Paul, that—*Mai alcuno si pretende obligato a chi l'habbi fatto giustizia; stimandolo tenuto per se stesso di farla*⁴—are not true. They are not true either with respect to nations or to individuals: for the experience of much injustice will cause the forbearance of injury to appear like kindness.

² Senec. de Benefic. lib. vi.

³ Discor. lib. i. cap. xvi.

⁴ Opinione del Padre Fra Paolo, in qual modo debba governarsi la Republica Veneta per haver perpetuo dominio.

Non ut laudemur, sed ut proximis.

Equidem sic prope ab adolescentia animatus fui, ut inania fausta contemnam, veraque consector bona. In qua cogitatione sæpius defixus, facilius ab animo meo potui impetrare, ut (quamvis scirem sordescere magis et magis studia Literarum, maximeque ea quæ propriè artem Grammaticam spectant) nihilominus paulisper, non quidem sponerem, sed remissius tamen tractarem studia graviora; iterumque in manus sumerem veteres adolescentiæ labores, laboreque novo inter tot Curas divulgarem.—G. J. VOSSIIUS.

Le grand objet de l'art étymologique n'est pas de rendre raison de l'origine de tous les mots sans exception, et j'ose dire que ce seroit un but assez frivole. Cet art est principalement recommandable en ce qu'il fournit à la philosophie des matériaux et des observations pour élever le grand édifice de la théorie générale des Langues.—M. Le Président de BROSSA.

ΕΠΕΑ ΠΤΕΡΟΕΝΤΑ:

OR,

THE DIVERSIONS OF PURLEY.

INTRODUCTION.

B.—THE mystery is at last unravelled. I shall no more wonder now that you engross his company at Purley,¹ whilst his other friends can scarce get a sight of him. This, you say, was President Bradshaw's seat. That is the secret of his attachment to the place. You hold him by the best security, his political prejudices and enthusiasm. But do not let his veneration for the memory of the ancient possessor pass upon you for affection to the present.

H.—Should you be altogether so severe upon my politics; when you reflect that, merely for attempting to prevent the effusion of brother's blood and the final dismemberment of the empire, I stand the single legal victim during the contest, and the single instance of proscription after it? But I am well contented that my principles, which have made so many of your way of thinking angry, should only make you laugh. Such however as they are, they need not now to be defended by me: for they have stood the test of ages; and they will keep their ground in the general commendation of the world, till men forget to love themselves; though, till then perhaps, they are not likely to be seen (nor credited if seen) in the practice of many individuals.

¹ The seat of William Tooke, Esq., near Croydon, Surrey. [The persons of the dialogue are, B. Dr. Beadon, afterwards Bishop of Gloucester; H. the author; and T. William Tooke, Esq.—EDIT.]

But are you really forced to go above a hundred years back to account for my attachment to Purley? Without considering the many strong public and private ties by which I am bound to its present possessor, can you find nothing in the beautiful prospect from these windows? nothing in the entertainment every one receives in this house? nothing in the delightful rides and walks we have taken round it? nothing in the cheerful disposition and easy kindness of its owner, to make a rational man partial to this habitation?

T.—Sir, you are making him transgress our only standing rules. Politics and compliments are strangers here. We always put them off when we put on our boots; and leave them behind us in their proper atmosphere, the smoke of London.

B.—Is it possible! Can either of you—Englishmen and patriots!—abstain for four-and-twenty hours together from politics? You cannot be always on horseback, or at piquet. What, in the name of wonder, your favourite topic excluded, can be the subject of your so frequent conversations?

T.—You have a strange notion of us. But I assure you we find more difficulty to finish than to begin our conversations. As for our subjects, their variety cannot be remembered; but I will tell you on what we were discoursing yesterday when you came in; and I believe you are the fittest person in the world to decide between us. He insists, contrary to my opinion, that all sorts of wisdom and useful knowledge may be obtained by a plain man of sense without what is commonly called Learning. And when I took the easiest instance, as I thought, and the foundation of all other knowledge, (because it is the beginning of education, and that in which children are first employed,) he declined the proof of his assertion in this instance, and maintained that I had chosen the most difficult: for he says that, though Grammar be usually amongst the first things taught, it is always one of the last understood.

B.—I must confess I differ from Mr. H. concerning the difficulty of Grammar; if indeed what you have reported be really his opinion. But might he not possibly give you that answer to escape the discussion of a disagreeable dry subject, remote from the course of his studies and the objects of his inquiry and pursuit? By his general expression of—what is commonly called Learning—and his declared opinion of that, I can pretty well guess what he thinks of grammatical learning in particular. I dare swear (though he will not perhaps pay me so indifferent a compliment) he does not in his mind allow us even the poor consolation which we find in Athenæus—οὐ μὴ ἰατροὶ ᾔσων—but concludes, without a single exception, οὐδὲν τῶν Γραμματικῶν μωροτέρων.¹

I must however entreat him to recollect, (and at the same time whose authority it bears,) that—"Qui sapientiæ et literarum divortium faciunt, nunquam ad solidam sapientiam pertingent. Qui vero alios etiam a literarum linguarumque studio absterrent, non antiquæ sapientiæ sed novæ stultitiæ doctores sunt habendi."

H.—Indeed I spoke my real sentiments. I think Grammar difficult, but I am very far from looking upon it as foolish: indeed so far, that I consider it as absolutely necessary in the search after philosophical truth; which, if not the most useful, perhaps, is at least the most pleasing employment of the human mind. And I think it no less necessary in the most important questions concerning religion and civil society. But since you say it is easy, tell me where it may be learned.

B.—If your look and the tone of your voice were less serious, the extravagance of your compliment to grammar would incline me to suspect that you were taking your revenge, and bantering me in your turn by an ironical encomium on my favourite study. But, if I am to suppose you in earnest, I answer, that our English grammar may be sufficiently and easily learned from the excellent Introduction of Doctor Lowth: or from the first (as well as the best) English grammar, given by Ben Jonson.

H.—True, Sir. And that was my first slight answer to our friend's instance. But his inquiry is of a much larger compass than you at present seem to imagine. He asks after the causes or reasons of Grammar:² and for satisfaction in them I know

¹ Οὐ γὰρ κακῶς τινι τῶν ἰατρῶν ἡμῶν ἐλεγχθῆ το, οὐ μὴ ἰατροὶ ᾔσων, οὐδὲν αὖτε τῶν γραμματικῶν μωροτέρων.—Deipnosoph. lib. 15.

² "Duplex Grammatica; alia civilis, alia philosophica.

"Civilis, peritia est, non scientia: constat enim ex auctoritate usuque clarorum scriptorum.

"Philosophica, vero, ratione constat; et hæc scientiam olet.

"Grammatica civilis habet ætatem in qua viget, et illam amplectunnot where to send him ; for, I assure you, he has a troublesome, inquisitive, scrupulous mind of his own, that will not take mere words in current payment.

B.—I should think that difficulty easily removed. Dr. Lowth, in his Preface, has done it ready to your hands. “Those,” he says, “who would enter more deeply into this subject, will find it fully and accurately handled, with the greatest acuteness of investigation, perspicuity of explication, and elegance of method, in a treatise entitled Hermes, by James Harris, Esq., the most beautiful and perfect example of Analysis that has been exhibited since the days of Aristotle.”

T.—The recommendation no doubt is full, and the authority great ; but I cannot say that I have found the performance to correspond : nor can I boast of any acquisition from its perusal, except indeed of hard words and frivolous or unintelligible distinctions. And I have learned from a most excellent authority, that “tout ce qui varie, tout ce qui se charge de termes douteux et envelopés, a toujours paru suspect ; et non seulement frauduleux, mais encore absolument faux : parcequ’il marque un embarras que la vérité ne connoit point.”¹

B.—And you, Sir ?

H.—I am really in the same situation.

B.—Have you tried any other of our English authors on the subject ?

H.—I believe all of them, for they are not numerous ;² but none with satisfaction.

tur Grammatici, dicunt enim sub Cicerone et Cæsare adultam linguam, &c. At philosophica non agnoscit ætatem linguæ, sed rationalitatem ; amplectiturque vocabula bona omnium temporum.”—Campanella.

¹ Bossuet des Variations des Eglises Protestantes.

² The authors who have written professedly on this subject, in any language, are not numerous. Caramuel, in the beginning of his Grammatica Audax, says,—“Solus, ut puto, Scotus, et post eum Scaliger et Campanella (alios enim non vidi) Grammaticam speculativam evulgarunt ; vias tamen omnino diversas ingressi. Multa mihi in Scaligero, et plura in Campanella displicuerunt ; et pauciora in Scoto, qui vix alibi subtilius scripsit quam cum de Grammaticis Modis Significandi.”

The reader of Caramuel (who, together with Campanella, may be found in the Bodleian Library) will not be disappointed in him ; but most egregiously by him, if the smallest expectations of information are excited by the character which is here given of Scotus—whose De Modis Significandi should be entitled, not Grammatica Speculativa, but—an

B.—You must then give up one at least of your positions. For if, as you make it out, Grammar is so difficult that a knowledge of it cannot be obtained by a man of sense from any authors in his own language, you must send him to what is commonly called Learning, to the Greek and Latin authors, for the attainment of it. So true, in this science at least, if not in all others, is that saying of Roger Ascham, that—"Even as a hawke fleeth not hie with one wing, even so a man reacheth not to excellency with one tongue."

H.—On the contrary, I am rather confirmed by this instance in my first position. I acknowledge philosophical Grammar

Exemplar of the subtle art of saving appearances, and of discoursing deeply and learnedly on a subject with which we are totally unacquainted. Quid enim subtilius vel magis tenue, quam quod nihil est?

Wilkins, part 3. chap. 1. of his Essay towards a Real Character, says, after Caramuel,—“The first of these (i. e., philosophical, rational, universal Grammar) hath been treated of but by few; which makes our learned Verulain put it among his Desiderata. I do not know any more that have purposely written of it, but Scotus in his Grammatica Speculativa, and Caramuel in his Grammatica Audax, and Campanella in his Grammatica Philosophica. (As for Scioppius his Grammar of this title, that doth wholly concern the Latin tongue.) Besides which, something hath been occasionally spoken of it by Scaliger in his book De Causis Linguae Latinae, and by Vossius in his Aristarchus.” So far Wilkins: who, for what reason I know not, has omitted the Minerva of Sanctius; though well deserving his notice, and the declared foundation of Scioppia. But he who should confine himself to these authors, and to those who, with Wilkins, have since that time written professedly on this subject, would fall very short of the assistance he might have, and the leading hints and foundations of reasoning which he might obtain, by reading even all the authors who have confined themselves to particular languages.

The great Bacon put this subject amongst his Desiderata, not, as Wilkins says, because “few had treated of it;” but because none had given a satisfactory account of it. At the same time, Bacon, though evidently wide of the mark himself, yet conjectured best how this knowledge might most probably be attained; and pointed out the most proper materials for reflection to work upon. “Illa demum (says he), ut arbitramur, foret nobilissima Grammaticæ species, si quis in linguis plurimis, tam eruditis quam vulgaribus, eximie doctus, de variis linguarum proprietatibus tractaret; in quibus queque excellat, in quibus deficiat ostendens. Ita enim et linguæ mutuo commercio locupletari possint; et fiet ex iis quæ in singulis linguis pulchra sunt (tanquam Venuæ Apellis) orationis ipsius quædam formosissima imago, et exemplar quoddam insigne, ad sensus animi rite exprimendos.”—De Augment. Scient. lib. 6. cap. 1.

(to which only my suspected compliment was intended) to be a most necessary step towards wisdom and true knowledge. From the innumerable and inveterate mistakes which have been made concerning it by the wisest philosophers and most diligent inquirers of all ages, and from the thick darkness in which they have hitherto left it, I imagine it to be one of the most difficult speculations. Yet, I suppose, a man of plain common sense may obtain it, if he will dig for it; but I cannot think that what is commonly called Learning, is the mine in which it will be found. Truth, in my opinion, has been improperly imagined at the bottom of a well: it lies much nearer to the surface: though buried indeed at present under mountains of learned rubbish; in which there is nothing to admire but the amazing strength of those vast giants of literature who have been able thus to heap Pelion upon Ossa. This at present is only my opinion, which perhaps I have entertained too lightly. Since therefore the question has been started, I am pleased at this occasion of being confirmed or corrected by you; whose application, opportunities, extensive reading, acknowledged abilities, and universal learning, enable you to inform us of all that the ancients have left or the moderns have written on the subject.

B.—Oh! Sir, your humble servant! compliments, I perceive, are banished from Purley. But I shall not be at all enticed by them to take upon my shoulders a burthen which you seem desirous to shift off upon me. Besides, Sir, with all your caution, you have said too much now to expect it from me. It is too late to recall what has passed your lips: and if Mr. T. is of my sentiments, you shall not be permitted to explain yourself away. The satisfaction which he seeks after, you say is to be had; and you tell us the mine where you think it is not to be found. Now I shall not easily be persuaded that you are so rash, and take up your opinions so lightly, as to advance or even to imagine this; unless you had first searched that mine yourself, and formed a conjecture at least concerning the place where you suppose this knowledge is to be found. Instead therefore of making me display to Mr. T. my reading, which you have already declared insufficient for the purpose, is it not much more reasonable that you should communicate to us the result of your reflection?

H. With all my heart, if you chuse it should be so, and think you shall have patience to hear me through. I own I prefer instruction to correction, and had rather have been informed without the hazard of exposing myself; but if you make the one a condition of the other, I think it still worth my acceptance; and will not lose this opportunity of your judgment for a little shame. I acknowledge, then, that the subject is not entirely new to my thoughts: for, though languages themselves may be and usually are acquired without any regard to their principles, I very early found it, or thought I found it, impossible to make many steps in the search after truth and the nature of human understanding, of good and evil, of right and wrong, without well considering the nature of language, which appeared to me to be inseparably connected with them. I own therefore I long since formed to myself a kind of system, which seemed to me of singular use in the very small extent of my younger studies, to keep my mind from confusion and the imposition of words. After too long an interval of idleness and pleasure, it was my chance to have occasion to apply to some of the modern languages; and, not being acquainted with any other more satisfactory, I tried my system with these, and tried it with success. I afterwards found it equally useful to me with some of the dead languages. Whilst I was thus amusing myself, the political struggle commenced; for my share in which you so far justly banter me, as I do acknowledge that, both in the outset and the progress of it, I was guilty of two most egregious blunders; by attributing a much greater portion of virtue to individuals, and of understanding to the generality, than any experience of mankind can justify. After another interval therefore (not of idleness and pleasure), I was again called by the questions of our friend Mr. T. (for yesterday is not the first time by many that he has mentioned it) to the consideration of this subject. I have hitherto declined attempting to give him the satisfaction he required: for, though the notion I had of language had satisfied my own mind and answered my own purposes, I could not venture to detail to him my crude conceptions without having ever made the least inquiry into the opinions of others. Besides, I did not at all suspect that my notions, if just, could be peculiar to myself: and I hoped to find some author who might give him a clearer, fuller, and more methodical account than I could, free from those errors and omissions to which I must be liable. Having therefore some small intervals of leisure, and a great desire to give him the best information ; I confess I have employed some part of that leisure in reading every thing I could easily and readily procure that has been suggested by others.

—— I am afraid I have already spoken with too much presumption : But when I tell you that I differ from all those who with such infinite labour and erudition have gone before me on this subject ; what apology——

B.—Oh ! make none. When men think modestly, they may be allowed to speak freely. Come—Where will you begin ?—

Alpha—Go on.

H.—Not with the organical part of language, I assure you. For, though in many respects it has been and is to this moment grossly mistaken, (and the mistakes might, with the help of some of the first principles of natural philosophy and anatomy, be easily corrected,) yet it is an inquiry more of curiosity than immediate usefulness.

B.—You will begin then either with things or ideas : for it is impossible we should ever thoroughly understand the nature of the signs, unless we first properly consider and arrange the things signified. Whose system of philosophy will you build upon ?

H.—What you say is true. And yet I shall not begin there. Hermes, you know, put out the eyes of Argus : and I suspect that he has likewise blinded philosophy : and if I had not imagined so, I should never have cast away a thought upon this subject. If therefore Philosophy herself has been misled by Language, how shall she teach us to detect his tricks ?

B.—Begin then as you please. Only begin.

ΕΠΕΑ ΠΤΕΡΟΕΝΤΑ, &c.

PART I.

CHAPTER I.

OF THE DIVISION OR DISTRIBUTION OF LANGUAGE.

H.—THE purpose of Language is to communicate our thoughts——

B.—You do not mention this, I hope, as something new, or wherein you differ from others?

H.—You are too hasty with me. No. But I mention it as that principle, which, being kept singly in contemplation, has misled all those who have reasoned on this subject.

B.—Is it not true, then?

H.—I think it is. And that on which the whole matter rests.

B.—And yet the confining themselves to this true principle, upon which the whole matter rests, has misled them!

H.—Indeed I think so.

B.—This is curious!

H.—Yet I hope to convince you of it. For thus they reasoned——Words are the signs of things. There must therefore be as many sorts of words, or parts of speech, as there are sorts of things.¹ The earliest inquirers into language proceeded then to settle how many sorts there were of things; and from thence how many sorts of words, or parts of speech. Whilst this method of search strictly prevailed, the parts of speech were very few in number: but two. At most three, or four.

¹ “Dictio rerum nota : pro rerum speciebus partes quotque suas sortitur.”—J. C. Scaliger de Causis L. L.

All things, said they, must have names.¹ But there are two sorts of things:

1. Res quæ permanent.

2. Res quæ fluunt.

There must therefore be two sorts of words or parts of speech: viz.—

1. Notæ rerum quæ permanent.

2. Notæ rerum quæ fluunt.

Well; but surely there are words which are neither notæ rerum permanentium, nor yet notæ rerum fluentium. What will you do with them?—We cannot tell: we can find but these two sorts in rerum natura: call therefore those other words, if you will, for the present, particles,² or inferior parts of speech, till we can find out what they are. Or, as we see they are constantly interspersed between nouns and verbs, and seem therefore in a manner to hold our speech together, suppose you call them conjunctions or connectives.³

This seems to have been the utmost progress that philosophical Grammar had made till about the time of Aristotle, when a fourth part of speech was added,—the definitive, or article.

¹ From this moment Grammar quits the daylight; and plunges into an abyss of utter darkness.

² A good convenient name for all the words which we do not understand; for, as the denomination means nothing in particular, and contains no description, it will equally suit any short word we may please to refer thither. There has latterly been much dispute amongst Grammarians concerning the use of this word, particle, in the division and distribution of speech: particularly by Girard, Dangeau, the authors of the Encyclopédie, &c. In which it is singular that they should all be right in their arguments against the use made of it by others; and all wrong in the use which each of them would make of it himself. Dr. S. Johnson adopts N. Bailey's definition of a particle—"a word unvaried by inflection." And Locke defines particles to be—"the words whereby the mind signifies what connection it gives to the several affirmations and negations that it unites in one continued reasoning or narration."

³ The Latin Grammarians amuse themselves with debating whether Συνδεσμος should be translated Convinctio or Conjunctio. The Danes and the Dutch seem to have taken different sides of the question: for the Danish language terms it Bindeord, and the Dutch Koppelwoord.

Here concluded the search after the different sorts of words, or parts of speech, from the difference of things; for none other apparently rational, acknowledged, or accepted difference has been suggested.

According to this system, it was necessary that all sorts of words should belong to one of these four classes. For words being the signs of things, their sorts must necessarily follow the sorts of the things signified. And there being no more than four differences of things, there could be but four parts of speech. The difficulty and controversy now was, to determine to which of these four classes each word belonged. In the attempting of which, succeeding Grammarians could neither satisfy themselves nor others: for they soon discovered some words so stubborn, that no sophistry nor violence could by any means reduce them to any one of these classes. However, by this attempt and dispute they became better acquainted with the differences of words, though they could not account for them; and they found the old system deficient, though they knew not how to supply its defects. They seem therefore to have reversed the method of proceeding from things to signs, pursued by the philosophers; and, still allowing the principle, (viz., that there must be as many sorts of words as of things,) they travelled backwards, and sought for the things from the signs: adopting the converse of the principle; namely, that there must be as many differences of things as of signs. Misled therefore by the useful contrivances of language, they supposed many imaginary differences of things: and thus added greatly to the number of parts of speech, and in consequence to the errors of philosophy.

Add to this, that the greater and more laborious part of Grammarians (to whose genius it is always more obvious to remark a multitude of effects than to trace out one cause) confined themselves merely to notice the differences observable in words, without any regard to the things signified.

From this time the number of parts of speech has been variously reckoned: you will find different Grammarians contending for more than thirty. But most of those who admitted the fewest, acknowledged eight. This was long a favourite number; and has been kept to by many who yet did not include the same parts to make up that number. For those who rejected the article reckoned eight: and those who did not allow the interjection still reckoned eight. But what sort of difference in words should entitle them to hold a separate rank by themselves, has not to this moment been settled.

B.—You seem to forget, that it is some time since words have been no longer allowed to be the signs of things. Modern Grammarians acknowledge them to be (as indeed Aristotle called them, συμβολα παθηματων) the signs of ideas: at the same time denying the other assertion of Aristotle, that ideas are the likenesses of things.¹ And this has made a great alteration in the manner of accounting for the differences of words.

H.—That has not much mended the matter. No doubt this alteration approached so far nearer to the truth; but the nature of Language has not been much better understood by it. For Grammarians have since pursued just the same method with mind, as had before been done with things. The different operations of the mind are to account now for what the different things were to account before: and when they are not found sufficiently numerous for the purpose, it is only supposing an imaginary operation or two, and the difficulties are for the time shuffled over. So that the very same game has been played over again with ideas, which was before played with things. No satisfaction, no agreement has been obtained. But all has been dispute, diversity, and darkness. Insomuch that many of the most learned and judicious Grammarians, disgusted with absurdity and contradictions, have prudently contented themselves with remarking the differences of words, and have left the causes of language to shift for themselves.

B.—That the methods of accounting for Language remain to this day various, uncertain, and unsatisfactory, cannot be denied. But you have said nothing yet to clear up the paradox you set out with; nor a single word to unfold to us by what means you suppose Hermes has blinded Philosophy.

H.—I imagine that it is, in some measure, with the vehicle of our thoughts as with the vehicles for our bodies. Necessity produced both. The first carriage for men was no doubt invented to transport the bodies of those who from infirmity, or otherwise, could not move themselves: But should any one, desirous of understanding the purpose and meaning of all the parts of our modern elegant carriages, attempt to explain them upon this one principle alone, viz.—That they were necessary for conveyance —; he would find himself woefully puzzled to account for the wheels, the seats, the springs, the blinds, the glasses, the lining, &c. Not to mention the mere ornamental parts of gilding, varnish, &c.

¹ Εστι μιν ουν τα εν τη φωνη των εν τη ψυχη παθηματων συμβολα—και ων ταυτα ομοιωματα, πραγματα.—Aristot. de Interpretat.

Abbreviations are the wheels of language, the wings of Mercury. And, though we might be dragged along without them, it would be with much difficulty, very heavily and tediously.

There is nothing more admirable nor more useful than the invention of signs: at the same time there is nothing more productive of error when we neglect to observe their complication. Into what blunders, and consequently into what disputes and difficulties, might not the excellent art of Short-hand writing¹ (practised almost exclusively by the English) lead foreign philosophers; who, not knowing that we had any other alphabet, should suppose each mark to be the sign of a single sound! If they were very laborious and very learned indeed, it is likely they would write as many volumes on the subject, and with as much bitterness against each other, as Grammarians have done from the same sort of mistake concerning Language: until perhaps it should be suggested to them, that there may be not only ¹ "The art of Short-hand is, in its kind, an ingenious device, and of considerable usefulness, applicable to any language, much wondered at by travellers that have seen the experience of it in England: and yet, though it be above threescore years since it was first invented, it is not to this day (for aught I can learn) brought into common practice in any other nation."—Wilkins, Epist. Dedicatory. Essay towards a Real Character.

"Short-hand, an art, as I have been told, known only in England."—Locke on Education.

In the Courier de l'Europe, No. 41. November 20, 1787, is the following article:

"Le Sieur Coulon de Thevenot a eu l'honneur de présenter au roi sa méthode d'écrire aussi vite que l'on parle, approuvée par l'Académie Royale des Sciences, et dont Sa Majesté a daigné accepter la dédicace. On sait que les Anglois sont depuis très-long temps en possession d'une pareille méthode adaptée à leur langage, et qu'elle leur est devenue extrêmement commode et utile pour recueillir avec beaucoup de précision les discours publics: la méthode du Sieur Coulon doit donc être très-avantageux à la langue Française."

signs of sounds; but again, for the sake of abbreviation, signs of those signs, one under another in a continued progression.

B.—I think I begin to comprehend you. You mean to say that the errors of Grammarians have arisen from supposing all words to be immediately either the signs of things or the signs of ideas; whereas in fact many words are merely abbreviations employed for despatch, and are the signs of other words. And that these are the artificial wings of Mercury, by means of which the Argus eyes of philosophy have been cheated.

H.—It is my meaning.

B.—Well. We can only judge of your opinion after we have heard how you maintain it. Proceed, and strip him of his wings. They seem easy enough to be taken off: for it strikes me now, after what you have said, that they are indeed put on in a peculiar manner, and do not, like those of other winged deities, make a part of his body. You have only to loose the strings from his feet, and take off his cap. Come—Let us see what sort of figure he will make without them.

H.—The first aim of Language was to communicate our thoughts; the second to do it with despatch. (I mean entirely to disregard whatever additions or alterations have been made for the sake of beauty, or ornament, ease, gracefulness, or pleasure.) The difficulties and disputes concerning Language have arisen almost entirely from neglecting the consideration of the latter purpose of speech: which, though subordinate to the former, is almost as necessary in the commerce of mankind, and has a much greater share in accounting for the different sorts of words.¹ Words have been called winged; and they well deserve that name, when their abbreviations are compared with the progress which speech could make without these inventions; but, compared with the rapidity of thought, they have not the smallest claim to that title. Philosophers have calculated the difference of velocity between sound and light: but who will attempt to calculate the difference between speech and thought! What wonder, then, that the invention of all ages should have been upon the stretch to add such wings to their conversation as might enable it, if possible, to keep pace in some measure with their minds.—Hence chiefly the variety of words.

¹ M. Le Président de Brosses, in his excellent treatise De la Formation mécanique des Langues, tom. 2. says—"On ne parle que pour être entendu. Le plus grand avantage d'une langue est d'être claire. Tous les procédés de Grammaire ne devroient aller qu'à ce but." And again—"Le vulgaire et les philosophes n'ont d'autre but en parlant que de s'expliquer clairement." Art. 160. Pour le vulgaire, he should have added—et promptement. And indeed he is afterwards well aware of this: for Art. 173, he says, "L'esprit humain veut aller vite dans son opération; plus empressé de s'exprimer promptement, que curieux de s'exprimer avec une justesse exacte et réfléchie. S'il n'a pas l'instrument qu'il faudroit employer, il se sert de celui qu'il a tout prêt."

Abbreviations are employed in language three ways:

1. In terms.
2. In sorts of words.
3. In construction.

Mr. Locke's Essay is the best guide to the first; and numberless are the authors who have given particular explanations of the last. The second only I take for my province at present; because I believe it has hitherto escaped the proper notice of all.

CHAPTER II.

SOME CONSIDERATION OF MR. LOCKE'S ESSAY.

B.—I CANNOT recollect one word of Mr. Locke's that corresponds at all with any thing that you have said. The third Book of his Essay is indeed expressly written—"On the Nature, Use, and Signification of Language." But there is nothing in it concerning abbreviations.

H.—I consider the whole of Mr. Locke's Essay as a philosophical account of the first sort of abbreviations in Language.

B.—Whatever you may think of it, it is certain, not only from the title, but from his own declaration, that Mr. Locke did not intend or consider it as such: for he says—"When I first began this discourse of the Understanding, and a good while after, I had not the least thought that any consideration of words was at all necessary to it."¹

¹ Perhaps it was for mankind a lucky mistake (for it was a mistake) which Mr. Locke made when he called his book, An Essay on Human Understanding. For some part of the inestimable benefit of that book

H.—True. And it is very strange he should so have imagined.¹ But what immediately follows?—"But when, having passed over the original and composition of our² ideas, I began to examine the extent and certainty of our knowledge; I found it had so near a connection with words, that unless their force and manner of signification were first well observed, there could be very little said clearly and pertinently concerning knowledge: which being conversant about truth, had constantly to do with propositions. And though it terminated in things, yet it was for the most part so much by the intervention of words, that they seemed scarce separable from our general knowledge."

And again,—“I am apt to imagine that, were the imperfections of Language, as the instrument of knowledge, more has, merely on account of its title, reached to many thousands more than, I fear, it would have done, had he called it (what it is merely) a Grammatical Essay, or a Treatise on Words, or on Language. The human mind, or the human understanding, appears to be a grand and noble theme; and all men, even the most insufficient, conceive that to be a proper object for their contemplation: whilst inquiries into the nature of Language (through which alone they can obtain any knowledge beyond the beasts) are fallen into such extreme disrepute and contempt, that even those who “neither have the accent of christian, pagan, or man,” nor can speak so many words together with as much propriety as Balaam’s ass did, do yet imagine words to be infinitely beneath the concern of their exalted understanding.

¹ “Aristotelis profecto iudicio Grammaticam non solum esse Philosophiæ partem, (id quod nemo sanus negat,) sed ne ab ejus quidem cognitione dissolvi posse intelligeremus.”—J. C. Scaliger de Causis. Præfuit.

“And lastly,” says Bacon, “let us consider the false appearances that are imposed upon us by words, which are framed and applied according to the conceit and capacities of the vulgar sort: and although we think we govern our words, and prescribe it well—loquendum ut vulgus. sentiendum ut sapientes;—yet certain it is, that words, as a Tartar’s bow, do shoot back upon the understanding of the wisest, and mightily entangle and pervert the judgment. So as it is almost necessary in all controversies and disputations to imitate the wisdom of the mathematicians, in setting down in the very beginning the definitions of our words and terms, that others may know how we accept and understand them, and whether they concur with us or no. For it cometh to pass, for want of this, that we are sure to end there where we ought to have begun, which is in questions and differences about words.”—Of the Advancement of Learning.

² It may appear presumptuous, but it is necessary here to declare my opinion, that Mr. Locke in his Essay never did advance one step beyond the origin of Ideas and the composition of Terms.

thoroughly weighed, a great many of the controversies that make such a noise in the world would of themselves cease; and the way to knowledge, and perhaps peace too, lie a great deal opener than it does."¹

So that, from these and a great many other passages throughout the Essay, you may perceive that the more he reflected and searched into the human understanding, the more he was convinced of the necessity of an attention to Language; and of the inseparable connexion between words and knowledge.

B.—Yes. And therefore he wrote the third Book of his Essay, on—"the Nature, Use, and Signification of Language." But you say, the whole of the Essay concerns Language; whereas the two first Books concern the Origin and Composition of Ideas: and he expressly declares that it was not till after he had passed over them, that he thought any consideration of words was at all necessary.

H.—If he had been aware of this sooner, that is, before he had treated of (what he calls) the origin and composition of Ideas; I think it would have made a great difference in his Essay. And therefore I said, Mr. Locke's Essay is the best Guide to the first sort of Abbreviations.

B.—Perhaps you imagine that, if he had been aware that he was only writing concerning Language, he might have avoided treating of the origin of Ideas; and so have escaped the quantity of abuse which has been unjustly poured upon him for his opinion on that subject.

H.—No. I think he would have set out just as he did,

¹ "This design (says Wilkins) will likewise contribute much to the clearing of some of our modern differences in religion;" (and he might have added, in all other disputable subjects; especially in matters of law and civil government;)—"by unmasking many wild errors, that shelter themselves under the disguise of affected phrases; which, being philosophically unfolded, and rendered according to the genuine and natural importance of words, will appear to be inconsistencies and contradictions. And several of those pretended mysterious, profound notions, expressed in great swelling words, whereby some men set up for reputation, being this way examined will appear to be either nonsense, or very flat and jejune. And though it should be of no other use but this, yet were it in these days well worth a man's pains and study; considering the common mischief that is done, and the many impostures and cheats that are put upon men, under the disguise of affected, insignificant phrases."—Epist. Dedicat.

with the origin of Ideas; the proper starting-post of a Grammarian who is to treat of their signs. Nor is he singular in referring them all to the Senses, and in beginning an account of Language in that manner.¹

B.—What difference then do you imagine it would have made in Mr. Locke's Essay, if he had sooner been aware of the inseparable connexion between words and knowledge; or, in the language of Sir Hugh, in Shakespeare, that "the lips is parcel of the mind?"²

¹ "Nihil in intellectu quod non prius in sensu," is, as well as its converse, an ancient and well known position.

"Sicut in speculo ea quæ videntur non sunt, sed eorum species; ita quæ intelligimus, ea sunt re ipsâ extra nos, eorumque species in nobis. Est enim quasi rerum speculum intellectus noster; cui nisi per sensum represententur res, nihil scit ipse."—J. C. Scaliger de Causis L. L. cap. lxvi.

"I sensi," says Buonmattei, "in un certo modo potrebbon dirsi ministri, nunzi, famigliari, o segretarij dello 'ntelletto. E acciochè lo esempio ce ne faccia più capaci,—Imaginiamci di vedere alcun principe, il qual se ne stia nella sua corte, nel suo palazzo. Non vede egli con gli occhi proprj, nè ode co' proprj orecchi quel che per lo stato si faccia: ma col tenere in diversi luoghi varj ministri che lo ragguagliano di ciò che segue, viene a sapere intender per cotal relazione ogni cosa, e bene spesso molto più minutamente e più perfettamente degli stessi ministri: Perchè quegli avendo semplicemente notizia di quel che avvenuto sia nella lor città o provincia, rimangon di tutto 'l resto ignoranti, e di facile posson fin delle cose vedute ingannarsi. Dove il principe può aver di tutto il seguito cognizione in un subito, che servendogli per riprova d' ogni particolar riferitogli, non lo lascia così facilmente ingannare. Così, dico, è l' intelletto umano; il quale essendo di tutte l' altre potenze e signore o principe, se ne sta nella sua ordinaria residenza riposto, e non vede nè ode cosa che si faccia di fuori: Ma avendo cinque ministri che lo ragguaglian di quel che succede, uno nella region della vista, un altro nella giurisdizion dell' udito, quello nella provincia del gusto, questo ne' paesi dell' odorato, e quest' altro nel distretto del tatto, viene a sapere per mezzo del discorso ogni cosa in universale, tanto più de' sensi perfettamente, quanto i sensi ciascuno intendendo nella sua pura potenza, non posson per tutte come lo 'ntelletto discorrere. E siccome il principe, senza lasciarsi vedere o sentire, fa noto altrui la sua volontà per mezzo degli stessi ministri; così ancora l' Intelletto fa intendersi per via de' medesimi sensi."—Buonmattei. Tratt. 2. cap. 2.

² "Divers philosophers hold that the lips is parcel of the mind."—Merry Wives of Windsor, act 1. scene 4.

Rowland Jones agrees with his countryman, Sir Hugh Evans. In his Origin of Language and Nations, Preface, page 17, he says (after others) —"I think that Language ought not to be considered as mere arbitrary

H.—Much. And amongst many other things, I think he would not have talked of the composition of ideas; but would have seen that it was merely a contrivance of Language: and that the only composition was in the terms; and consequently that it was as improper to speak of a complex idea, as it would be to call a constellation a complex star: And that they are not ideas, but merely terms, which are general and abstract. I think too that he would have seen the advantage of “thoroughly weighing” not only (as he says) “the imperfections of Language,” but its perfections also: For the perfections of Language, not properly understood, have been one of the chief causes of the imperfections of our philosophy. And indeed, from numberless passages throughout this Essay, Mr. Locke seems to me to have suspected something of this sort: and especially from what he hints in his last chapter; where, speaking of the doctrine of signs, he says,—“The consideration then of Ideas and Words, as the great instruments of knowledge, makes no despicable part of their contemplation who would take a view of human knowledge in the whole extent of it. And perhaps, if they were distinctly weighed and duly considered, they would afford us another sort of Logick and Critick than what we have hitherto been acquainted with.”

B.—Do not you think that what you now advance will bear a dispute; and that some better arguments than your bare assertion are necessary to make us adopt your opinion?

H.—Yes. To many persons much more would be necessary; but not to you. I only desire you to read the Essay over again with attention, and see whether all that its immortal author has justly concluded will not hold equally true and clear, if you substitute the composition, &c. of terms, wherever he has supposed a composition, &c. of ideas. And if that shall upon strict examination appear to you to be the case, you will need sounds; or any thing less than a part, at least, of that living soul which God is said to have breathed into man.” This method of referring words immediately to God as their framer, is a short cut to escape inquiry and explanation. It saves the philosopher much trouble; but leaves mankind in great ignorance, and leads to great error.—Non dignus vindice nodus.—God having furnished man with senses and with organs of articulation, as he has also with water, lime and sand; it should seem no more necessary to form the words for man, than to temper the mortar.

no other argument against the composition of Ideas: It being exactly similar to that unanswerable one which Mr. Locke himself declares to be sufficient against their being innate. For the supposition is unnecessary: Every purpose for which the composition of Ideas was imagined being more easily and naturally answered by the composition of Terms: whilst at the same time it does likewise clear up many difficulties in which the supposed composition of Ideas necessarily involves us. And, though this is the only argument I mean to use at present, (because I would not willingly digress too far, and it is not the necessary foundation for what I have undertaken,) yet I will venture to say, that it is an easy matter, upon Mr. Locke's own principles and a physical consideration of the Senses and the Mind, to prove the impossibility of the composition of Ideas.

B.—Well. Since you do not intend to build any thing upon it, we may safely for the present suppose what you have advanced; and take it for granted that the greatest part of Mr. Locke's Essay, that is, all which relates to what he calls the composition, abstraction, complexity, generalization, relation, &c. of Ideas, does indeed merely concern Language. But, pray, let me ask you, if so, what has Mr. Locke done in the Third Book of his Essay, in which he professedly treats of the nature, use, and signification of Language?

H.—He has really done little else but enlarge upon what he had said before, when he thought he was treating only of Ideas: that is, he has continued to treat of the composition of Terms. For though, in the passage I have before quoted, he says, that “unless the force and manner of signification of words are first well observed, there can be very little said clearly and pertinently concerning knowledge;”—and though this is the declared reason of writing his Third Book concerning Language, as distinct from Ideas; yet he continues to treat singly, as before, concerning the *Force*¹ of words, and has not advanced one syllable concerning their Manner of signification.

The only Division Mr. Locke has made of words, is, into—Names of Ideas, and Particles. This division is not made regularly and formally, but is reserved to his seventh Chapter. And even there it is done in a very cautious, doubting, loose, uncertain manner, very different from that incomparable author's usual method of proceeding. For, though the general title of the seventh Chapter is—Of Particles;—yet he seems to chuse to leave it uncertain whether he does or does not include Verbs in that title, and particularly what he calls “the Marks of the Mind's affirming or denying.” And indeed he himself acknowledges, in a letter to Mr. Molyneux, that—“Some parts of that Third Book concerning Words, though the thoughts were easy and clear enough, yet cost him more pains to express than all the rest of his Essay; and that therefore he should not much wonder if there were in some parts of it obscurity and doubtfulness.” Now whenever any man finds this difficulty to express himself, in a language with which he is well acquainted, let him be persuaded that his thoughts are not clear enough: for, as Swift (I think) has somewhere observed, “When the water is clear you will easily see to the bottom.”

¹ The Force of a word depends upon the number of Ideas of which that word is the sign.

The whole of this vague Chapter—Of Particles—(which should have contained an account of every thing but Nouns) is comprised in two pages and a half: and all the rest of the Third Book concerns only, as before, the Force of the names of Ideas.

B.—How is this to be accounted for? Do you suppose he was unacquainted with the opinions of Grammarians, or that he despised the subject?

H.—No: I am very sure of the contrary. For it is plain he did not despise the subject, since he repeatedly and strongly recommends it to others: and at every step throughout his Essay, I find the most evident marks of the journey he had himself taken through all their works. But it appears that he was by no means satisfied with what he found there concerning Particles: For he complains that “this part of Grammar has been as much neglected, as some others over-diligently cultivated.” And says, that “He who would shew the right use of Particles, and what significancy and force they have,” (that is, according to his own division, the right use, significancy, and force of ALL words except the names of Ideas,) “must take a little more pains, enter into his own thoughts, and observe nicely the several postures of his mind in discoursing.” For these Particles, he says—“are all marks of some action or intimation of the Mind; and therefore, to understand them rightly, the several views, postures, stands, turns, limitations and exceptions, and several other thoughts of the Mind, for which we have either none or very deficient names, are diligently to be studied. Of these there are a great variety, much exceeding the number of Particles." For himself, he declines the task, however necessary and neglected by all others: and that for no better reason than—"I intend not here a full explication of this sort of signs." And yet he was (as he professed and thought) writing on the human Understanding; and therefore should not surely have left mankind still in the same darkness in which he found them, concerning these hitherto unnamed and (but by himself) undiscovered operations of the Mind.

In short, this seventh Chapter is, to me, a full confession and proof that he had not settled his own opinion concerning the manner of signification of Words: that it still remained (though he did not chuse to have it so understood) a Desideratum with him, as it did with our great Bacon before him: and therefore that he would not decide any thing about it; but confined himself to the prosecution of his original inquiry concerning the first sort of Abbreviations, which is by far the most important to knowledge, and which he supposed to belong to Ideas.

But though he declined the subject, he evidently leaned towards the opinion of Aristotle, Scaliger, and Mess. de Port Royal: and therefore, without having sufficiently examined their position, he too hastily adopted their notion concerning the pretended Copula—"Is, and Is not." He supposed, with them, that affirming and denying were operations of the Mind; and referred all the other sorts of Words to the same source. Though, if the different sorts of Words had been (as he was willing to believe) to be accounted for by the different operations of the Mind, it was almost impossible they should have escaped the penetrating eyes of Mr. Locke.

CHAPTER III.

OF THE PARTS OF SPEECH.

B.—You said some time ago, very truly, that the number of Parts of Speech was variously reckoned: and that it has not to this moment been settled, what sort of difference in words should entitle them to hold a separate rank by themselves.

By what you have since advanced, this matter seems to be ten times more unsettled than it was before: for you have discarded the differences of Things, and the differences of Ideas, and the different operations of the Mind, as guides to a division of Language. Now I cannot for my life imagine any other principle that you have left to conduct us to the Parts of Speech.

H.—I thought I had laid down in the beginning, the principles upon which we were to proceed in our inquiry into the manner of signification of words.

B.—Which do you mean?

H.—The same which Mr. Locke employs in his inquiry into the Force of words: viz.—The two great purposes of speech.

B.—And to what distribution do they lead you?

H.—1. To words necessary for the communication of our Thoughts. And,

2. To Abbreviations, employed for the sake of despatch.

B.—How many of each do you reckon? And which are they?

H.—In what particular language do you mean? For, if you do not confine your question, you might as reasonably expect me (according to the fable) “to make a coat to fit the moon in all her changes.”

B.—Why? Are they not the same in all languages?

H.—Those necessary to the communication of our thoughts are.

B.—And are not the others also?

H.—No. Very different.

B.—I thought we were talking of Universal Grammar.

H.—I mean so too. But I cannot answer the whole of your question, unless you confine it to some particular language with which I am acquainted. However, that need not disturb you: for you will find afterwards that the principles will apply universally.

B.—Well. For the present then confine yourself to the necessary Parts: and exemplify in the English.

H.—In English, and in all Languages, there are only two sorts of words which are necessary for the communication of our thoughts.

B.—And they are ?

H.—1. Noun, and
2. Verb.

B.—These are the common names, and I suppose you use them according to the common acceptance.

H.—I should not otherwise have chosen them, but because they are commonly employed ; and it would not be easy to dispossess them of their prescriptive title : besides, without doing any mischief, it saves time in our discourse. And I use them according to their common acceptance.

B.—But you have not all this while informed me how many Parts of Speech you mean to lay down.

H.—That shall be as you please. Either Two, or Twenty, or more. In the strict sense of the term, no doubt both the necessary Words and the Abbreviations are all of them Parts of Speech ; because they are all useful in Language, and each has a different manner of signification. But I think it of great consequence both to knowledge and to Languages, to keep the words employed for the different purposes of speech as distinct as possible. And therefore I am inclined to allow that rank only to the necessary words :¹ and to include all the others (which are not necessary to speech, but merely substitutes of the first sort) under the title of Abbreviations.

B.—Merely Substitutes ! You do not mean that you can discourse as well without as with them ?

H.—Not as well. A sledge cannot be drawn along as smoothly, and easily, and swiftly as a carriage with wheels ; but it may be dragged.

B.—Do you mean then that, without using any other sort of word whatever, and merely by the means of the Noun and Verb alone, you can relate or communicate any thing that I can relate or communicate with the help of all the others ?

H.—Yes. It is the great proof of all I have advanced. And, upon trial, you will find that you may do the same. But, after the long habit and familiar use of Abbreviations, your first attempts to do without them will seem very awkward to you; and you will stumble as often as a horse, long used to be shod, that has newly cast his shoes. Though indeed (even with those who have not the habit to struggle against) without Abbreviations, Language can get on but lamely: and therefore they have been introduced, in different plenty, and more or less happily, in all Languages. And upon these two points—Abbreviation of Terms, and Abbreviation in the manner of signification of words—depends the respective excellence of every Language. All their other comparative advantages are trifling.

¹ “ Res necessarias philosophus primo loco statuit : accessorias autem et vicarias, mox.”—J. C. Scaliger de Causis L. L. cap. 110.

B.—I like your method of proof very well; and will certainly put it to the trial. But before I can do that properly, you must explain your Abbreviations; that I may know what they stand for, and what words to put in their room.

H.—Would you have me then pass over the two necessary Parts of Speech; and proceed immediately to their Abbreviations?

B.—If you will. For I suppose you agree with the common opinion, concerning the words which you have distinguished as necessary to the communication of our thoughts. Those you call necessary, I suppose you allow to be the signs of different sorts of Ideas, or of different operations of the mind.

H.—Indeed I do not. The business of the mind, as far as it concerns Language, appears to me to be very simple. It extends no further than to receive impressions, that is, to have Sensations or Feelings. What are called its operations, are merely the operations of Language. A consideration of Ideas, or of the Mind, or of Things (relative to the Parts of Speech), will lead us no further than to Nouns: i. e., the signs of those impressions, or names of ideas. The other Part of Speech, the Verb, must be accounted for from the necessary use of it in communication. It is in fact the communication itself: and therefore well denominated 'ῥημα, Dictum. For the Verb is quod loquimur;¹ the Noun, de quo.

B.—Let us proceed then regularly; and hear what you have to say on each of your two necessary Parts of Speech.

¹ "Alterum est quod loquimur; alterum de quo loquimur."—Quinctil. lib. 1. cap. 4.

CHAPTER IV.

OF THE NOUN.

H.—OF the first Part of Speech—the Noun—it being the best understood, and therefore the most spoken of by others, I shall need at present to say little more than that it is the simple or complex, the particular or general sign or name of one or more Ideas.

I shall only remind you, that at this stage of our inquiry concerning Language, comes in most properly the consideration of the force of Terms: which is the whole business of Mr. Locke's Essay; to which I refer you. And I imagine that Mr. Locke's intention of confining himself to the consideration of the Mind only, was the reason that he went no further than to the Force of Terms; and did not meddle with their Manner of signification, to which the Mind alone could never lead him.

B.—Do you say nothing of the Declension, Number, Case and Gender of Nouns?

H.—At present nothing. There is no pains-worthy difficulty nor dispute about them.

B.—Surely there is about the Gender. And Mr. Harris particularly has thought it worth his while to treat at large of what others have slightly hinted concerning it:¹ and has supported his reasoning by a long list of poetical authorities. What think you of that part of his book?

H.—That, with the rest of it, he had much better have let it alone. And as for his poetical authorities; the Muses (as I have heard Mrs. Peachum say of her own sex in cases of murder) are bitter bad judges in matters of philosophy.

¹ “Pythagorici sexum in cunctis agnoscunt, &c. Agens, Mas; Patiens, Fœmina. Quapropter Deus dicunt masculine; Terra, fœminine: et Ignis, masculine; et Aqua, fœminine: quoniam in his Actio, in istis Passio relucebat.”—Campanella.

“In rebus inveniuntur duæ proprietates generales, scilicet proprietas Agentis, et proprietas Patientis. Genus est modus significandi nominis sumptus a proprietate activa vel passiva. Genus masculinum est modus significandi rem sub proprietate agentis: Genus fœmininum est modus significandi rem sub proprietate patientis.”—Scotus Gram. Spec. cap. 16.

Besides that Reason is an arrant Despot; who, in his own dominions, admits of no authority but his own. And Mr. Harris is particularly unfortunate in the very outset of that—"subtle kind of reasoning (as he calls it) which discerns even in things without sex, a distant analogy to that great natural distinction." For his very first instances—the SUN and the MOON—destroy the whole subtilty of this kind of reasoning.¹ For Mr. Harris ought to have known, that in many Asiatic Languages, and in all the northern Languages of this part of the globe which we inhabit, and particularly in our Mother-language the Anglo-Saxon (from which SUN and MOON are immediately derived to us), SUN is Feminine, and MOON is Masculine.² So feminine is the Sun, ["that fair hot wench in flame-colour'd taffata,³"] that our northern Mythology makes her the Wife of Tuisco.

And if our English poets, Shakespeare, Milton, &c. have, by a familiar prosopopeia, made them of different genders; it

¹ It can only have been Mr. Harris's authority, and the ill-founded praises lavished on his performance, that could mislead Dr. Priestley, in his thirteenth lecture, hastily and without examination to say—

"Thus, for example, the SUN having a stronger, and the MOON a weaker influence over the world, and there being but two celestial bodies so remarkable; All nations, I believe, that use genders, have ascribed to the Sun the gender of the Male, and to the Moon that of the Female."

In the Gothic, Anglo-Saxon, German, Dutch, Danish and Swedish, SUN is feminine: In modern Russian it is neuter.

² "Apud Saxones, Luna, Mona. Mona autem Germanis superioribus Mon, alias Man; a Mon, alias Man veterrimo ipsorum rege et Deo patrio, quem Tacitus meminit, et in Luna celebrabant.—Ex hoc Lunam masculino (ut Hebræi) dicunt genere, Der Mon; Dominamque ejus et Amasiam, e cujus aspectu alias languet, alias resipiscit, Die Son; quasi hunc Lunam, hanc Solem. Hinc et idolum Lunæ viri fingeant specie; non, ut Verstegan opinatur, fæminæ."—Spelman's Gloss. MONA.

"De generibus Nominum (quæ per articulos, adjectiva, participia, et pronomina indicantur) hic nihil tradimus. Obiter tamen observet Lector, ut ut minuta res est, Solem (Sunna vel Sunne) in Anglo-Saxonica esse fæminini generis, et Lunam (Mona) esse masculini."—G. Hickes.

"Quomodo item Sol est virile, Germanicum Sunn, fæmininum. Dicunt enim Die Sunn, non Der Sunn. Unde et Solem Tuisconis uxorem fuisse fabulantur."—G. J. Vossius.

³ First part of Henry IV.

is only because, from their classical reading, they adopted the southern not the northern mythology; and followed the pattern of their Greek and Roman masters.

Figure apart, in our Language, the names of things without sex are also without gender.¹ And this, not because our Reasoning or Understanding differs from theirs who gave them gender; (which must be the case, if the Mind or Reason was concerned in it,²) but because with us the relation of words to each other is denoted by the place or by Prepositions; which denotation in their language usually

¹ "Sexus enim non nisi in Animali, aut in iis quæ Animalis naturam imitantur, ut arbores. Sed ab usu hoc factum est; qui nunc masculinum sexum, nunc fœmininum attribuisset.—Proprium autem generum esse pati mutationem satis patet ex genere incerto; ut etiam Armentas dixerit Ennius, quæ nos Armenta."—J. C. Scaliger de Causis, cap. 79.

"Nominum quoque genera mutantur, adeo ut privatim libros super hac re veteres confecerint. Alterum argumentum est ex iis quæ Dubia sive Incerta vocant. Sic enim dictum est, Hic vel Hæc Dies. Tertium testimonium est in quibusdam: nam Plautus Collum masculino dixit. Item Jubar, Palumbem, atque alia, diversis quam nos generibus esse a priscis pronunciata."—Id. cap. 103.

"Amour qui est masculin au singulier, est quelquefois féminin au pluriel: de folles amours. On dit au masculin Un Comté, Un Duché; et au féminin Une Comté pairie, Une Duché pairie. On dit encore De bonnes gens et Des gens malheureux. Par où vous voyez que le substantif Gens est féminin, lorsqu'il est précédé d'un adjectif; et qu'il est masculin, lorsqu'il en est suivi."—L'Abbé de Condillac, part 2. chap. 4.

The ingenious author of—Notes on the Grammatica Sinica of M. Fourmont—says, "According to the Grammaire Raisonnée, les genres ont été inventés pour les terminaisons. But the Mess. du Port Royal have discovered a different origin; they tell us, that—Arbor est femine, parceque comme une bonne mère elle porte du fruit.—Miratur non sua. How could Frenchmen forget that in their own la meilleure des langues possibles, Fruit-trees are masculine and their fruits feminine? Mr. Harris has adopted this idea: he might as well have left it to its legitimate parents."—P. 47.

² "Sane in sexu seu genere physico omnes nationes convenire debent; quoniam natura est eadem, nec ad placitum scriptorum mutatur. At Poetæ et pictores in coloribus non semper conveniunt. Ventos Romani non solum finxerunt esse viros, sed et Deos: at Hebræi contra eos ut Nymphas pinxerunt. Arbores Latini specie fœminea pinxerunt; virili Hispani, &c. Regiones urbesque Deas esse voluit Gentilium Latinorum Theologia; at Germani omnia hæc ad neutrum rejecerunt. Et quidem in Genere, seu sexûs distinctione grammatica, made a part of the words themselves, and was shewn by cases or terminations. This contrivance of theirs, allowing them a more varied construction, made the terminating genders of Adjectives useful, in order to avoid mistake and misapplication.

CHAPTER V.

OF THE ARTICLE AND INTERJECTION.

B.—HOWEVER connected with the Noun, and generally treated of at the same time, I suppose you forbear to mention the Articles at present, as not allowing them to be a separate Part of Speech; at least not a necessary Part; because, as Wilkins tells us, “the Latin is without them.”¹ Notwithstanding which, when you consider with him that “they are so convenient for the greater distinctness of speech; and that upon this account, the Hebrew, Greek, Slavonic, and most other languages have them;” perhaps you will not think it improper to follow the example of many other Grammarians: who, though, like you, they deny them to be any part of speech, have yet treated of them separately from those parts which they enumerate. And this you may very consistently do, even though you should consider them, as the Abbé Girard calls them, merely the avant-coureurs to announce the approach or entrance of a Noun.²

magna est inter authores differentia: non solum in diversis linguis, sed etiam in eadem. In Latina, ne ad alias recurram, aliter Oratores, et aliter Poetæ: aliter veteres, et aliter juniores sentiunt, &c. Iberes in Asia florere dicuntur, et linguam habere elegantem, et tamen nullam generum varietatem agnoscunt.”—Caramuel, lxii.

¹ Essay, part 3. chap. 3.

² J’abandonne l’art de copier des mots dits et répétés mille fois avant moi; puisqu’ils n’expliquent pas les choses essentielles que j’ai dessein de faire entendre à mes lecteurs. Une étude attentive faite d’après l’usage m’instruit bien mieux. Elle m’apprend que l’Article est un mot établi pour annoncer et particulariser simplement la chose sans la nommer: c’est à dire, qu’il est une expression indéfinie, quoique positive, dont la juste valeur n’est que de faire naître l’idée d’une espèce subsistante qu’on distingue de la totalité des êtres, pour être ensuite

H.—Of all the accounts which have been given of the Article, I must own I think that of the very ingenious Abbé Girard to be the most fantastic and absurd. The fate of this very necessary word has been most singularly hard and unfortunate. For though without it, or some equivalent invention,¹ men could not communicate their thoughts at all; yet (like many of the most useful things in this world) from its unaffected simplicity and want of brilliancy, it has been ungratefully neglected and degraded. It has been considered, after Scaliger, as otiosum loquacissimæ gentis Instrumentum; or, at best, as a mere vaunt-courier to announce the coming of his master: whilst the brutish inarticulate Interjection, which has nothing to do with speech, and is only the miserable refuge of the speechless, has been permitted, because beautiful and gaudy, to usurp a place amongst words, and to exclude the Article from its well-earned dignity. But though the Article is denied by many Grammarians to be a Part of Speech; it is yet, as you say, treated of by many, separately from those nommée. Cette définition en expose clairement la nature et le service propre, au quel on le voit constamment attaché dans quelque circonstance que ce soit. Elle m'en donne une idée nette et déterminée: me le fait reconnoître par tout: et m'empêche de le confondre avec tout autre mot d'espèce différente. Je sens parfaitement que lorsque je veux parler d'un objet qui se présente à mes yeux ou à mon imagination, le génie de ma langue ne m'en fournit pas toujours la dénomination précise dans le premier instant de l'exécution de la parole: que le plus souvent il m'offre d'abord un autre mot, comme un commencement de sujet proposé et de distinction des autres objets; en sorte que ce mot est un vrai préparatoire à la dénomination, par lequel elle est annoncée, avant que de se présenter elle-même: Et voilà l'Article tel que je l'ai défini. Si cet Avant-coureur diminue la vivacité du langage, il y met en récompense une certaine politesse et une délicatesse qui naissent de cette idée préparatoire et indéfinie d'un objet qu'on va nommer: car par ce moyen l'esprit étant rendu attentif avant que d'être instruit, il a le plaisir d'aller au devant de la dénomination, de la désirer, et de l'attendre avant que de la posséder. Plaisir qui a ici, comme ailleurs, un mérite flatteur, propre à piquer le gout.—Qu'on me passe cette métaphore; puisqu'elle a de la justesse, et fait connoître d'une manière sensible une chose très-metaphysique."—Disc. 4.

¹ For some equivalent invention, see the Persian and other Eastern languages; which supply the place of our Article by a termination to those Nouns which they would indefinitely particularize.

This circumstance of fact (if there were not other reasons) sufficiently explodes Girard's notion of Avant-coureurs.

parts which they allow. This inconsistency¹ and the cause of it are pleasantly ridiculed by Buonmattei, whose understanding had courage sufficient to restore the Article; and to launch out beyond quelle fatali colonne che gli antichi avevan segnate col—Non plus ultra. “Dodici,” says he, (Tratt. 7. cap. 22, 23.) “afferriamo esser le Parti dell’ orazione nella nostra lingua. Nè ci siam curati che gli altri quasi tutti non ne voglion conceder più d’ otto; mossi, come si vede, da una certa soprastiziosa ostinazione (sia detto con pace e riverenza loro) che gli autori più antichi hanno stabilito tal numero: Quasi che abbiano in tal modo proibito a noi il passar quelle fatali colonne che gli antichi avevan segnate col—Non plus ultra. Onde perchè i Latini dicevan tutti con una voce uniforme—Partes Orationis sunt octo:—quei che intorno a cent’ anni sono scrisson le regole di questa lingua, cominciavan con la medesima cantilena. Il che se sia da commendare o da biasimare non dirò: Basta che a me par una cosa ridicolosa, dire—Otto son le parti dell’ orazione—e subito soggiugnere—Ma innanzi che io di quelle incominci a ragionare, fa mestiero che sopra gli Articoli alcuna cosa ti dica.

“Questo è il medesimo che se dicessimo—Tre son le parti del mondo: Ma prima ch’ io ti ragioni di quelle, fa mestiero che sopra l’Europa alcuna cosa ti dica.”

B.—As far as respects the Article I think you are right. But why such bitterness against the Interjection? Why do you not rather follow Buonmattei’s example; and, instead of excluding both, admit them both to be Parts of Speech?²

¹ What Scaliger says of the Participle may very justly be applied to this manner of treating the Article. “Si non est Nota, imo vero si nonnullis ne pars quidem orationis ulla, ab aliis separata, judicata est; quo consilio ei rei, quæ nusquam extat, sedem statuunt.”—Lib. 7. cap. 140.

² “Interjectionem non esse partem orationis, sic ostendo. Quod naturale est, idem est apud omnes: sed gemitus et signa lætitiæ idem sunt apud omnes: sunt igitur naturales. Si vero naturales, non sunt partes orationis. Nam eæ partes, secundum Aristotelem, ex instituto, non natura, debent constare. Interjectionem Græci adverbii adnumerant, sed falso: nam neque Græcis literis scribantur, sed signa tristitiæ, aut lætitiæ, qualia in avibus, aut quadrupedibus, quibus tamen nec vocem nec orationem concedimus. Valla interjectionem a partibus orationis rejicit. Itaque Interjectionem a partibus orationis excludi-

H.—Because the dominion of Speech is erected upon the downfall of Interjections. Without the artful contrivances of Language, mankind would have nothing but Interjections with which to communicate, orally, any of their feelings. The neighing of a horse, the lowing of a cow, the barking of a dog, the purring of a cat, sneezing, coughing, groaning, shrieking, and every other involuntary convulsion with oral sound, have almost as good a title to be called Parts of Speech, as Interjections have. Voluntary Interjections are only employed when the suddenness or vehemence of some affection or passion returns men to their natural state; and makes them for a moment forget the use of speech:¹ or when, from some circumstance, the shortness of time will not permit them to mus: tantum abest, ut eam primam et precipuam cum Cæsare Scaligero constituamus.”—Sanctii Minerva, lib. 1. cap. 2. De partibus orationis, page 17. Edit. Amst. 1714.

¹ The industrious and exact Cinonio, who does not appear ever to have had a single glimpse of reason, speaks thus of one interjection:—

“I varj affetti cui serve questa interiezzione Ah et Ahi, sono più di venti: ma v’abbisogna d’un avvertimento; che nell’esprimerli sempre diversificano il suono, e vagliono quel tanto che, presso i Latini, Ah; Proh; Oh; Vah; Hei; Pape; &c. Ma questa è parte spettante a chi pronunzia, che sappia dar loro l’accento di quell’affetto cui servono; e sono d’ esclamazione.

 di dolersi.
 di svillaveggiare.
 di pregare.
 di gridare minacciando.
 di minacciare.
 di sospirare.
 di sgarare.
 di maravigliarsi.
 d’ incitare.
 di sdegno.
 di desiderare.
 di reprendere.
 di vendicarsi.
 di raccomandazione.
 di commovimento per allegrezza.
 di lamentarsi.
 di beffare.
 et altri varj.”

Annotazioni all’ trattato, delle Particella, di Cinonio, capitolo 11.

exercise it. And in books they are only used for embellishment, and to mark strongly the above situations. But where Speech can be employed, they are totally useless; and are always insufficient for the purpose of communicating our thoughts. And indeed where will you look for the Interjection? Will you find it amongst laws, or in books of civil institutions, in history, or in any treatise of useful arts or sciences? No. You must seek for it in rhetorick and poetry, in novels, plays, and romances.

B.—If what you say is true, I must acknowledge that the Article has had hard measure to be displaced for the Interjection. For by your declamation, and the zeal you have shewn in its defence, it is evident that you do not intend we should, with Scaliger, consider it merely as otiosum Instrumentum.

H.—Most assuredly not: though I acknowledge that it has been used otiose by many nations.¹ And I do not wonder that, keeping his eyes solely on the superfluous use (or rather abuse) of it, he should too hastily conclude against this very necessary instrument itself.

B.—Say you so! very necessary instrument! Since then you have, contrary to my expectation, allowed its necessity, I should be glad to know how the Article comes to be so necessary to Speech: and, if necessary, how can the Latin language be without it, as most authors agree that it is?² And when

¹ "Il seroit à souhaiter qu'on supprimât l'Article, toutes les fois que les noms sont suffisamment déterminés par la nature de la chose ou par les circonstances; le discours en seroit plus vif. Mais la grande habitude que nous nous en sommes faite, ne le permet pas: et ce n'est que dans des proverbes, plus anciens que cette habitude, que nous nous faisons une loi de le supprimer. On dit—Pauvreté n'est pas vice: au lieu de dire—La pauvreté n'est pas un vice."—Condillac, Gram. part 2. chap. 14.

Without any injury to the meaning of the passage, the article might have been omitted here by Condillac twelve or thirteen times.

² "ὅτι δοκεῖ μὲν σὺν Ῥωμαίων λέγειν ὅρα μὲλλον τὸν ὅμου τι πάντες ἀνέρωτοι χροῦνται. προτίσις τε γὰρ ἀφῆρηκε, πλην ὀλίγων ἀπάσας, τὴν τε καλουμένην ἀρθρον, οὐδὲν προσδίδεται το παραπαν.—Πλατωνικά Ζητήματα θ.

"Articulus nobis nullus et Græcis superfluous."

"Satis constat Græcorum Articulos non neglectos a nobis, sed eorum utrum superfluum."—J. C. Scaliger de Causis L. L. cap. 72.—131.

It is pleasant after this to have Scaliger's authority against himself, you have given me satisfaction on those points, you will permit me to ask you a few questions further.

H.—You may learn its necessity, if you please, from Mr. Locke. And that once proved, it follows of consequence that I must deny its absence from the Latin or from any other Language.¹

B.—Mr. Locke! He has not so much as even once mentioned the Article.

H.—Notwithstanding which he has sufficiently proved its necessity; and conducted us directly to its use and purpose. For in the eleventh chapter of the second book of his Essay, sect. 9, he says,—“The use of words being to stand as outward marks of our internal ideas, and those ideas being taken from particular things; if every particular idea should have a distinct name, names would be endless.” So again, book 3. chap. 3. treating of General Terms, he says,—“All things that exist being particulars, it may perhaps be thought reasonable that words, which ought to be conformed to things, should be so too; I mean in their signification. But yet we find the quite contrary. The far greatest part of words that make all languages, are General Terms. Which has not been the effect of neglect or chance, but of reason and necessity. For, first, it is impossible that every particular thing should have a distinct peculiar name. For the signification and use of words depending on that connection which the mind makes between its ideas and the sounds it uses as signs of them; it is necessary, in the application of names to things, that the mind and to hear him prove that the Latin not only has Articles; but even the very identical Article ‘O of the Greeks: for he says (and, notwithstanding the etymological dissent of Vossius, says truly) that the Latin Qui is no other than the Greek καὶ ὁ.

“Articulum, Fabio teste, Latinus sermo non desiderat: imo, me iudice, plane ignorat.”—G. J. Vossius.

“Displeased with the redundancy of Particles in the Greek, the Romans extended their displeasure to the Article, which they totally banished.”—Notes on the Grammatica Sinica of Mons. Fourmont, p. 54.

¹ “L’Article indicatif se supplée sur tout par la terminaison, dans les langues à terminaisons, comme la langue Latine. C’est ce qui avoit fait croire mal-à-propos que les Latins n’avoient aucun Article; et qui avoit fait conclure plus mal-à-propos encore que l’Article n’étoit pas une partie du discours.”—Court de Gebelin, Gram. Universelle, p. 192.

The Latin quis is evidently καὶ ὅς; and the Latin terminations us, a, um, no other than the Greek article ὅς, ή, ὅν.

should have distinct ideas of the things, and retain also the peculiar name that belongs to every one, with its peculiar appropriation to that idea. We may therefore easily find a reason why men have never attempted to give names to each sheep in their flock, or crow that flies over their heads; much less to call every leaf of plants, or grain of sand that came in their way by a peculiar name.—Secondly, If it were possible, it would be useless: because it would not serve to the chief end of Language. Men would in vain heap up names of particular things, that would not serve them to communicate their thoughts. Men learn names, and use them in talk with others, only that they may be understood; which is then only done, when, by use or consent, the sound I make by the organs of speech excites in another man's mind who hears it, the idea I apply to it in mine when I speak it. This cannot be done by names applied to particular things, whereof I alone having the ideas in my mind, the names of them could not be significant or intelligible to another who was not acquainted with all those very particular things which had fallen under my notice.”—And again, sect. 11.—“General and Universal belong not to the real existence of things: but are the inventions and creatures of the Understanding, made by it for its own use, and concern only signs. Universality belongs not to things themselves, which are all of them particular in their existence. When therefore we quit Particulars, the Generals that rest are only creatures of our own making; their general nature being nothing but the capacity they are put into of signifying or representing many Particulars.”

Now from this necessity of General Terms, follows immediately the necessity of the Article: whose business it is to reduce their generality, and upon occasion to enable us to employ general terms for Particulars.

So that the Article also, in combination with a general term, is merely a substitute. But then it differs from those substitutes which we have ranked under the general head of Abbreviations: because it is necessary for the communication of our thoughts, and supplies the place of words which are not in the language. Whereas Abbreviations are not necessary for communication; and supply the place of words which are in the language.

B.—As far then as regards the Article, Mr. Harris seems at present to be the author most likely to meet with your approbation: for he not only establishes its necessity, in order “to circumscribe the latitude of genera and species,” and therefore treats of it separately; but has raised it to a degree of importance much beyond all other modern Grammarians. And though he admits of only two Articles, “properly and strictly so called,” viz. A and THE; yet has he assigned to these two little words full one-fourth part in his distribution of language: which, you know, is into—“Substantives, Attributives, Definitives, and Connectives.”

II.—If Mr. Harris has not entirely secured my concurrence with his doctrine of Definitives, I must confess he has at least taken effectual care to place it completely beyond the reach of confutation. He says,

1. “The Articles have no meaning, but when associated to some other word.”
2. “Nothing can be more nearly related than the Greek article ‘O’ to the English article THE.”
3. “But the article A defines in an imperfect manner.”
4. “Therefore the Greeks have no article correspondent to our article A.”
5. However, “they supply its place.”
—And How, think you?
6. “By a Negation”—(observe well their method of supply)
—“by a negation of their article ‘O’;” (that is, as he well explains himself,)—“without any thing prefixed, but only the article ‘O’ withdrawn.”
7. “Even in English, we also express the force of the article A, in plurals, by the same negation of the article THE.¹”

¹ “It is perhaps owing to the imperfect manner in which the Article A defines, that the Greeks have no article correspondent to it, but supply its place by a negation of their Article ‘O’.—‘O ανθρωπος επεσεν, THE man fell; ανθρωπος επεσεν, A man fell;—without any thing prefixed, but only the article withdrawn.”

“Even in English, where the article A cannot be used, as in plurals, its force is expressed by the same negation.—Those are THE men, means, Those are individuals of which we possess some previous knowledge.—Those are men, the Article apart, means no more than they are so many vague and uncertain individuals; just as the phrase—A man, in the singular, implies one of the same number.” Book 2. chap. 1.

Now here I acknowledge myself to be completely thrown out ; and, like the philosopher of old, merely for want of a firm resting-place on which to fix my machine : for it would have been as easy for him to raise the earth with a fulcrum of ether, as for me to establish any reasoning or argument on this sort of negation. For, “ nothing being prefixed,” I cannot imagine in what manner or in what respect a negation of ‘O or of THE, differs from a negation of Harris or of Pudding. For lack however of the light of comprehension, I must do as other Grammarians do in similar situations, attempt to illustrate by a parallel.

I will suppose Mr. Harris (when one of the Lords of the Treasury) to have addressed the Minister in the same style of reasoning.—“ Salaries, Sir, produce no benefit, unless associated to some receiver : my salary at present is but an imperfect provision for myself and family : but your salary as Minister is much more complete. Oblige me therefore by withdrawing my present scanty pittance ; and supply its place to me by a negation of your salary.”—I think this request could not reasonably have been denied : and what satisfaction Mr. Harris would have felt by finding his theory thus reduced to practice, no person can better judge than myself ; because I have experienced a conduct not much dissimilar from the Rulers of the Inner Temple : who, having first inticed me to quit one profession, after many years of expectation, have very handsomely supplied its place to me by a negation of the other.

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE three following chapters (except some small alterations and additions) have already been given to the public in A Letter to Mr. DUNNING in the year 1778 : which, though published, was not written, on the spur of the occasion. The substance of that Letter, and of all that I have further to communicate on the subject of Language, has been amongst the loose papers in my closet now upwards of thirty years ; and would probably have remained there some years longer, and have been finally consigned with myself to oblivion, if I had not been made the miserable victim of—Two Prepositions and a Conjunction.

The officiating Priests indeed¹ were themselves of rank and eminence sufficient to dignify and grace my fall. But that the Conjunction THAT, and the Prepositions OF and CONCERNING (words which have hitherto been held to have NO meaning) should be made the abject instruments of my civil extinction, (for such was the intention, and such has been the consequence of my prosecution,) appeared to me to make my exit from civil life as degrading as if I had been brained by a lady's fan. For mankind in general are not sufficiently aware that words without meaning, or of equivocal meaning, are the everlasting engines of fraud and injustice: and that the grimgribber of Westminster-Hall is a more fertile, and a much more formidable, source of imposture than the abracadabra of magicians.

Upon a motion made by me in arrest of judgment in the Court of King's Bench in the year 1777, the Chief Justice adjourned the decision: and instead of arguments on the merits of my objection, (which however by a side-wind were falsely represented by him as merely literal flaws,²) desired that Precedents might be brought by the Attorney-General on a future day. None were however adduced but by the Chief Justice himself; who indeed produced two. (Thereby depriving me of the opportunity of combating the Precedents and their application, which I should have had if they had been produced by the Attorney-General.³) And on the strength of these two Precedents alone, (forgetting his own description

¹ Attorney-General Thurlow—since Chancellor and a Peer.
Solicitor-General Wedderburne—since Chancellor and a Peer.
Earl Mansfield, Chief Justice.

Mr. Buller—since a Judge.

Mr. Wallace—since Attorney-General.

Mr. Mansfield—since Solicitor-General and C. J. of the C. Pleas.

Mr. Bearcroft—since Chief Justice of Chester.

² “Lord Mansfield,

“If the Defendant has a legal advantage from a Literal flaw, God forbid that he should not have the benefit of it.”—Proceedings in K. B. The King against Horne.

³ “Lord Mansfield,

“I fancy the Attorney-General was surprised with the objection.”

and distinction of the crime to the Jury,) he decided against me.¹

I say, on the strength of these two precedents alone. For the gross perversion and misapplication of the technical term de bene esse, was merely pour éblouir, to introduce the proceedings on the trial, and to divert the attention from the only point in question—the sufficiency of the charge in the Record.—And I cannot believe that any man breathing (except Lord

¹ The Attorney-General, in his reply, said to the Jury, “Let us a little see what is the nature of the observations he makes. In the first place, that I left it exceedingly short: and the objection to my having left it short, was simply this; that I had stated no more to you but this, that of imputing to the conduct of the King’s troops the crime of murder. Now I stated it, as imputed to the troops, ORDERED as they were upon the PUBLIC SERVICE.”

Lord Mansfield to the Jury:

“Read the paper. What is it? Why it is this; that our beloved American Fellow-subjects—in REBELLION against the State—not beloved so as to be abetted in their REBELLION.” Again,—“What is the employment they (the troops) are ORDERED upon? Why then what are they who gave the ORDERS? Draw the conclusion.” Again,—“The unhappy resistance to the LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY of this kingdom by many of our Fellow-subjects in America: the LEGISLATURE of this kingdom have avowed that the Americans REBELLED; Troops are EMPLOYED upon this ground. The case is here between a just Government and REBELLIOUS subjects.”—Again,—“You will read this paper; you will judge whether it is not denying the Government and Legislative authority of England.” And again,—“If you are of opinion that they were all murdered (like the cases of undoubted murders, of Glenco, and twenty other massacres that might be named), why then you may form a different conclusion.”

And again,—“If some soldiers, Without authority, had got in a drunken fray, and murder had ensued, and that this paper could relate to that, it would be quite a different thing from the charge in the information: BECAUSE it is charged—as a seditious Libel tending to disquiet the minds of the People.” (See the Trial.)

A man must be not only well practised, but even hackneyed in our Courts of Justice to discover the above description of my crime in the Prepositions OF and CONCERNING. Be that as it may: It is evident that the Attorney-General and the Chief Justice did not expect the Jury to be so enlightened; and therefore (when I had no longer a right to open my lips) they described a crime to them in that plain language which I still contend I had a right to expect in the Information; BECAUSE—“A seditious Libel tending to disquiet the minds of the people,”—has been determined to be mere paper and packthread, and no part of the Charge.

Mansfield), either in the profession or out of it, will think it an argument against the validity of my objection—that it was brought forward only by myself, and had not been alleged before by the learned Counsel for the Printers. This, however, I can truly tell his lordship; that the most learned of them all (absit invidia), Mr. Dunning, was not aware of the objection when I first mentioned it to him; that he would not believe the information could be so defective in all its Counts till I produced to him an Office Copy: when to his astonishment he found it so, he felt no jealousy that the objection had been missed by himself; but declared it to be insuperable and fatal: and bade me rest assured, that whatever might be Lord Mansfield's wishes, and his courage on such occasions, he would not dare to overrule the objection. And when, after the close of the first day, I hinted to him my suspicions of Lord Mansfield's intentions by the "God forbid;" and by the perverted and misapplied "De bene esse," in order to mix the proceedings on the trial with the question of record; he smiled at it, as merely a method which his lordship took of letting the matter down gently, and breaking the abruptness of his fall.

Strange as it may appear! One of those precedents was merely imagined by the Chief Justice, but never really existed. And the other (through ignorance of the meaning of the Conjunction THAT) had never been truly understood; neither by the Counsel who originally took the exception, nor perhaps by the Judges who made the decision, nor by the Reporter of it, nor by the present Chief Justice, who quoted and misapplied it.

Mr. Dunning undertook to prove (and did actually prove in the House of Lords) the non-existence of the main precedent. And I undertook, in that Letter to Mr. Dunning, to shew the real merits and foundation, and consequently Lord Mansfield's misapplication of the other. And I undertook this, because it afforded a very striking instance of the importance of the meaning of words; not only (as has been too lightly supposed) to Metaphysicians and School-men, but to the rights and happiness of mankind in their dearest concerns—the decisions of Courts of Justice.

In the House of Lords these two Precedents (the foundation of the Judgment in the Court of King's Bench) were abandoned: and the description of my crime against Government was adjudged to be sufficiently set forth by the Prepositions OF and CONCERNING.

Perhaps it may make my readers smile; but I mention it as a further instance of the importance of inquiry into the meaning of words;—that in the decision of the Judges in the House of Lords, the Chief Justice De Grey (who found OF and CONCERNING so comprehensive, clear, and definite) began by declaring that—"the word Certainty [which the Law requires in the description of Crimes] is as indefinite [that is, as Uncertain] as any word that could be used." Now, though certainly is so uncertain, we must suppose the word Libel to be very definite: and yet, if I were called upon for an equivalent term, I believe I could not find in our language any word more popularly apposite than Calumny; which is defined by Cicero, in his Offices, to be—"callida et malitiosa Juris interpretatio."

If there was any Mistake (which, however, I am very far from believing) in this decision, sanctioned by the Judges and the House of Lords; I shall be justified in applying (with the substitution of the single word Grammatici for Istorici) what Giannone, who was himself an excellent lawyer, says of his countrymen of the same profession:—"Tanta ignoranza avea loro bendati gli occhi, che si pregiavano d'essere solamente Legisti, e non Grammatici; non accorgendosi, che perchè non erano Grammatici, eran perciò CATTIVI LEGISTI."—Ist. Civil. di Napoli Intro.

CHAPTER VI.

OF THE WORD THAT.

B.—BUT besides the Articles, "properly and strictly so called," I think Mr. Harris and other Grammarians say that there are some words which, according to the different manner of using them, are sometimes Articles and sometimes Pronouns: and that it is difficult to determine to which class they ought to be referred.¹

¹ "It must be confessed indeed that all these words do not always appear as Pronouns. When they stand by themselves and represent

H.—They do so. And, by so doing, sufficiently instruct us (if we will but use our common sense) what value we ought to put upon such classes and such definitions.

B.—Can you give us any general rule by which to distinguish when they are of the one sort, and when of the other?

H.—Let them give the rule who thus confound together the Manner of signification of words, and the Abbreviations in their Construction: than which no two things in Language are more distinct, or ought to be more carefully distinguished. I do not allow that Any words change their nature in this manner, so as to belong sometimes to one Part of Speech, and sometimes to another, from the different ways of using them. I never could perceive any such fluctuation in any word whatever: though I know it is a general charge brought erroneously against words of almost every denomination.¹ But it appears to me to be all, Error: arising from the false measure which has been taken of almost every sort of words. Whilst the words themselves appear to me to continue faithfully and steadily attached, each to the standard under which it was originally inlisted. But I desire to wave this matter for the present; because I think it will be cleared up by what is to follow concerning the other sorts of words: at least, if that should not convince you, I shall be able more easily to satisfy you on this head hereafter.

some Noun, (as when we say—THIS is virtue, or δεικτικως, Give me THAT,) then are they Pronouns. But when they are associated to some Noun, (as when we say—THIS habit is virtue, or δεικτικως, THAT man defrauded me,) then, as they supply not the place of a Noun, but only serve to ascertain one, they fall rather into the species of Definitives or Articles. That there is indeed a near relation between Pronouns and Articles, the old Grammarians have all acknowledged; and some words it has been doubtful to which class to refer. The best rule to distinguish them is this.—The Genuine Pronoun always stands by itself, assuming the power of a noun, and supplying its place.—The genuine Article never stands by itself, but appears at all times associated to something else, requiring a noun for its support, as much as Attributives or Adjectives.”—Hermes, book 1. chap. 5.

¹ “Certains mots sont Adverbes, Prépositions, et Conjonctions en même temps: et répondent ainsi au même temps à diverses parties d’oraison selon que la grammaire les emploie diversement.”—Buffier, art. 150.

And so say all other Grammarians.

B.—I would not willingly put you out of your own way, and am contented to wait for the explanation of many things till you shall arrive at the place which you may think proper for it. But really what you have now advanced seems to me so very extraordinary and contrary to fact, as well as to the uniform declaration of all Grammarians, that you must excuse me if, before we proceed any further, I mention to you one instance.

Mr. Harris and other Grammarians say, that the word THAT is sometimes an Article and sometimes a Pronoun. However, I do not desire an explanation of that [point]: because I see how you will easily reconcile that [difference], by a subauditor or an abbreviation of Construction: and I agree with you there. But what will you do with the Conjunction THAT?

Is not this a very considerable and manifest fluctuation and difference of signification in the same word? Has the Conjunction THAT, any the smallest correspondence or similarity of signification with THAT, the Article, or Pronoun?

H.—In my opinion the word THAT (call it as you please, either Article, or Pronoun, or Conjunction) retains always one and the same signification. Unnoticed abbreviation in construction and difference of position have caused this appearance of fluctuation; and misled the Grammarians of all languages, both ancient and modern: for in all they make the same mistake. Pray, answer me a question. Is it not strange and improper that we should, without any reason or necessity, employ in English the same word for two different meanings and purposes?

B.—I think it wrong: and I see no reason for it, but many reasons against it.

H.—Well! Then is it not more strange that this same impropriety, in this same case, should run through ALL languages? And that they should ALL use an Article, without any reason, unnecessarily, and improperly, for this same Conjunction; with which it has, as you say, no correspondence nor similarity of signification?

B.—If they do so, it is strange.

H.—They certainly do; as you will easily find by inquiry. Now, does not the uniformity and universality of this supposed mistake, and unnecessary impropriety, in languages which have no connexion with each other, naturally lead us to suspect that this usage of the Article may perhaps be neither mistaken nor improper? But that the mistake may lie only with us, who do not understand it?

B.—No doubt what you have said, if true, would afford ground for suspicion.

H.—If true! Examine any languages you please, and see whether they also, as well as the English, have not a supposed Conjunction which they employ as we do THAT; and which is also the same word as their supposed Article, or Pronoun. Does not this look as if there was some reason for employing the Article in this manner? And as if there was some connexion and similarity of signification between it and this Conjunction?

B.—The appearances, I own, are strongly in favour of your opinion. But how shall we find out what that connexion is?

H.—Suppose we examine some instances; and, still keeping the same signification of the sentences, try whether we cannot, by a resolution of their construction, discover what we want.

Example.—“I wish you to believe THAT I would not wilfully hurt a fly.”

Resolution.—“I would not wilfully hurt a fly; I wish you to believe THAT [assertion].”

Ex.—“She, knowing THAT Crooke had been indicted for forgery, did so and so.”

Resol.—“Crooke had been indicted for forgery; she, knowing THAT [fact], did so and so.”¹

Ex.—“You say THAT the same arm which, when contracted, can lift—; when extended to its utmost reach, will not be able to raise—. You mean THAT we should never forget our situation, and THAT we should be prudently contented to do good within our own sphere, where it can have an effect: and THAT we should not be misled even by a virtuous benevolence and public spirit, to waste ourselves in fruitless efforts beyond our power of influence.”

Resol.—“The same arm which, when contracted, can lift—; when extended to its utmost reach, will not be able to raise—:

¹ King v. Lawley. Strange's Reports, Easter T. 4 Geo. II.

you say THAT. We should never forget our situation ; you mean THAT : and we should be contented to do good within our own sphere where it can have an effect ; you mean THAT : and we should not be misled, even by a virtuous benevolence and public spirit to waste ourselves in fruitless efforts beyond our power of influence ; you mean THAT."

Ex.—"They who have well considered THAT kingdoms rise or fall, and THAT their inhabitants are happy or miserable, not so much from any local or accidental advantages or disadvantages ; but accordingly as they are well or ill governed ; may best determine how far a virtuous mind can be neutral in politics."

Resol.—"Kingdoms rise or fall, not so much from any local or accidental advantages or disadvantages, but accordingly as they are well or ill governed ; they who have well considered THAT [maxim], may best determine how far a virtuous mind can be neutral in politics. And the inhabitants of kingdoms are happy or miserable, not so much from any local or accidental advantages or disadvantages, but accordingly as they are well or ill governed ; they who have considered THAT, may best determine how far a virtuous mind can be neutral in politics."¹

¹ "Le despotisme écrase de son sceptre de fer le plus beau pays du monde : Il semble que les malheurs des hommes croissent en proportion des efforts que la nature fait pour les rendre heureux."—Savary.

"Dans ce paradis terrestre, au milieu de tant de richesses, qui croiroit que le Siamois est peut-être le plus misérable des peuples ? Le gouvernement de Siam est despotique : le souverain jouit seul du droit de la liberté naturelle à tous les hommes. Ses sujets sont ses esclaves ; chacun d'eux lui doit six mois de service personnel chaque année, sans aucun salaire et même sans nourriture. Il leur accorde les six autres pour se procurer de quoi vivre." [Happy, happy England, if ever thy miserable inhabitants shall, in respect of taxation, be elevated to the condition of the Siamois ; when thy Taskmasters shall be contented with half the produce of thy industry !] "Sous un tel gouvernement il n'y a point de loi qui protège les particuliers contre la violence, et qui leur assure aucune propriété. Tout dépend des fantaisies d'un prince abruti par toute sorte d'excès, et surtout par ceux du pouvoir ; qui passe ses jours enfermé dans un serrail, ignorant tout ce qui se fait hors de son palais, et sur tout les malheurs de ses peuples. Cependant ceux-ci sont livrés à la cupidité des grands, qui sont les premiers esclaves, et approchent seuls à des jours marqués, mais toujours en tremblant, de la personne du despote, qu'ils adorent comme une divinité

Ex.—"Thieves rise by night THAT they may cut men's throats."

Resol.—"Thieves may cut men's throats; (for) THAT (purpose) they rise by night."

After the same manner, I imagine, may all sentences be resolved (in all languages) where the Conjunction THAT (or its equivalent) is employed: and by such resolution it will always be discovered to have merely the same force and signification, and to be in fact nothing else but the very same word which in other places is called an Article or a Pronoun.

—*sujet*te à des caprices dangereux."—Voyages d'un Philosophe [Mons. Poivre]. Londres, 1769.

The above heart-rending reflections which Savary makes at the sight of Egypt, and Mons. Poivre at the condition of Siam, might serve as other examples for the Conjunction in question: but I give them for the sake of their matter. And I think myself at least as well justified (I do not expect to be as well rewarded) as our late Poet Laureat; who, upon the following passage of Milton's Comus,

"And sits as safe as in a Senate-house," adds this flagitious note:

"Not many years after this was written, MILTON'S FRIENDS shewed that the safety of a Senate-house was not inviolable. But when the people turn Legislators, what place is safe against the tumults of innovation, and the insults of disobedience?"

I believe our late Laureat meant not so much to cavil at Milton's expression, as to seize an impertinent opportunity of recommending himself to the powers which be, by a cowardly insult on the dead and persecuted author's memory, and on the aged, defenceless constitution of his country.

A critic who should really be displeased at Milton's expression, would rather shew its impropriety by an event which had happened before it was used, than by an event which the poet could not at that time foresee. Such a critic, adverting to the 5th of November, 1605, and to the 4th of January, 1641, might more truly say—"Not many years, both before and after this was written, WARTON'S FRIENDS shewed that the safety of a Senate-house was not inviolable."

With equal impertinence and malignity (pages 496, 538,) has he raked up the ashes of Queen Caroline and Queen Elizabeth; whose private characters and inoffensive amusements were as little connected with Milton's poems, as this animadversion on Warton is with the subject I am now treating.

Perhaps, after all, the concluding line of Milton's epitaph, is artfully made by Mr. Warton the concluding line also of his Notes; in order to account for his present virulence, and to soften the resentment of his readers at the expense of his patron.

"Rege sub augusto fas sit laudare Catonem,"

B.—For any thing that immediately occurs to me, this may perhaps be the case in English, where THAT is the only Conjunction of the same signification which we employ in this manner. But your last example makes me believe that this method of resolution will not take place in those languages which have different Conjunctions for this same purpose. And if so, I suspect that your whole reasoning on this subject may be without foundation. For how can you resolve the original of your last example; where (unfortunately for your notion) UT is employed, and not the neuter Article QUOD?

“Ut jugulent homines surgunt de nocte latrones.”

I suppose you will not say that UT is the Latin neuter Article. For even Sanctius, who struggled so hard to withdraw QUOD from amongst the Conjunctions, yet still left UT amongst them without molestation.¹

¹ It is not at all extraordinary that UT and QUOD should be indifferently used for the same conjunctive purpose: for as UT (originally written URT) is nothing but err: so is QUOD (anciently written QUODDE) merely Kas err.

“Quodde tuas laudes culpas, nil proficis hilum.”—Lucilius.

(See Note in Havercamp's and Creech's Lucretius; where QUODDE is mistakenly derived from errids.) QU, in Latin, being sounded (not as the English but as the French pronounce qu, that is) as the Greek K; Kas (by a change of the character, not of the sound) became the Latin Que (used only enclitically indeed in modern Latin.) Hence Kas err became in Latin Qu'otti—Quoddi—Quodde—Quod. Of which, if Sanctius had been aware, he would not have attempted a distinction between UT and QUOD: since the two words, though differently corrupted, are in substance and origin the same.

The perpetual change of T into D, and vice versa, is so very familiar to all who have ever paid the smallest attention to Language, that I should not think it worth while to notice it in the present instance; if all the etymological canonists, whom I have seen, had not been remarkably inattentive to the organical causes of those literal changes of which they treat.

Skinner (who was a Physician) in his Prolegomena Etymologica, speaking of the frequent transmutation of s into z, says very truly—
“Sunt sane literæ sono fere eadem.”

But in what does that fere consist? For s is not nearer in sound to z, than f is to B, or than t is to D, or than p is to v, or than x is to o, or than TH (Θ) in Thing, is to TH (Ð) in That, or than SH is to the French J.

(N.B.—TH and SH are simple consonants, and should be marked by single letters. J, as the English pronounce it, is a double consonant; and should have two characters.)

H.—You are not to expect from me that I should, in this place, account etymologically for the different words which some languages (for there are others beside the Latin) may sometimes borrow and employ in this manner instead of their own common Article. But if you should hereafter exact it, I shall not refuse the undertaking: although it is not the easiest part of Etymology: for Abbreviation and Corruption are always busiest with the words which are most frequently in use. Letters, like soldiers, being very apt to desert and drop off in a long march, and especially if their passage happens to lie near the confines of an enemy's country.¹ Yet I doubt not

For these seven couple of simple consonants, viz.

With the Compression	{	B	—	P	}	Without the Compression
		G	—	K
		D	—	T
		Z	—	S
		Ð	—	Θ
		V	—	F
		J	—	SH

differ each from its partner by no variation whatever of articulation; but singly by a certain unnoticed and almost imperceptible motion or compression of or near the Larynx; which causes what Wilkins calls "some kind of murmur." This compression the Welch never use. So that when a Welchman, instead of

"I vow, by God, Ðat Jenkin iz a Wizzard," pronounces it thus,

"I fow, py Cot, Θat Shenkin iss a Wissart;"

he articulates in every other respect exactly as we do; but omits the compression nine times in this sentence. And for failing in this one point only, changes seven of our consonants: for we owe seven additional letters (i. e., seven additional sounds in our language) solely to the addition of this one compression to seven different articulations.

¹ "Nous avons déjà dit, que l'altération du dérivé augmentoit à mesure que le temps l'éloignoit du primitif; et nous avons ajouté—toutes choses d'ailleurs égales—parceque la quantité de cette altération dépend aussi du cours que ce mot a dans le public. Il s'use, pour ainsi dire, en passant dans un plus grand nombre de bouches, sur tout dans la bouche du peuple: et la rapidité de cette circulation équivaut à une plus longue durée. Les noms des Saints et les noms de baptême les plus communs, en sont un exemple. Les mots qui reviennent le plus souvent dans les langues, tels que les verbes être, faire, vouloir, aller, et tous ceux qui servent à lier les autres mots dans le discours, sont sujets à de plus grandes altérations. Ce sont ceux qui ont le plus be-

that, with this clue, you will yourself be able, upon inquiry, to account as easily (and in the same manner) for the use of all the others, as I know you can for UT; which is merely the Greek neuter Article ὅτι,¹ adopted for this conjunctive purpose by the Latins, and by them originally written UTI: the o being changed into u, from that propensity which both the antient Romans had,² and the modern Italians still have,³ upon many occasions, to pronounce even their own o like an u. Of which I need not produce any instances.⁴

The Resolution therefore of the original will be like that of the translation:

“Latrones jagulent homines (Δι) ὅτι surgunt de nocte.”

soin d'être fixes par la langue écrite.”—Encyclopédie (Etymologie) par M. de Brosses.

¹ “UTI est mutata ὅτι.”—J. C. Scaliger de Causis L. L. cap. 173.

² So in the antient form of self-devotion.

“VTEI. EGO. AXIM. PRAL. ME. FORMIDINEM. METOM. QUE. OMNIOM. DIRAS. SIC. VTEI. VERBEIS. NONCOPASO. ITA. PRO. REPOPLICA. POPOLI. ROMANI. QUIRITION. VITAM. SALUTEM. QUE. MEAM. LEGIONES. AUXILIA. QUE. HOSTIOM. MEOM. DIVEIS. MANEBOUS. TELLOURI. QUE. DEVOVEO.”

So in the laws of Numa, and in the twelve tables, and in all antient inscriptions, o is perpetually found where the modern Latin uses u. And it is but reasonable to suppose, that the pronunciation preceded the change of the orthography.

³ “Quant à la voyelle u pour ce qu'ils (les Italiens) l'aiment fort, ainsi que nous cognoissons par ces mots Ufficio, Ubrigato, &c. je pense bien qu'ils la respectent plus que les autres.”—Henri Estienne, de la Précell. de la L. F.

⁴ “L'o a stretta amicizia coll' v, usandosi in molte voci scambievolmente.”—Menage. Cambiamenti delle Lettere, page 16.

Menage quotes Quinctilian, Festus, Velius Longus, Victorinus, Cassiodorus, Servius, Priscian, Virgil, Jul. Cass. Scaliger.

“La v par che provelesse ne' primi tempi e piu remoti, quando i Latini, memori della Eolica origine, o imitando gli Umbri o gli Etruschi, literam v pro o efferebant:* e pronunziavano Funtes, Frundes, Acherunte, Humones, e simili.† Quindi Ovidio, avendo detto che una volta il nome di Orione era Urion, soggiugne—perdidit antiquum litera prima sonum.‡ Ne' tempi posteriori si andò all' altro estremo; e all' antica lettera fu sostituita quasi sempre la o, come vedesi in Novios Plautios, e in altre voci della tavola seconda. Prisciano ne dà per ragione: quia multis Italiae populis v in usu non erat, sed e contrario utebantur o:§ dicendosi verbigratzia, Colpa, Exsoles, per Culpa, Ezules, &c.”||—Lanzi Saggio di Lingua Etrusca, tom. i. pag. 124.

* Fest. vid. Orcus.

† Quinct. l. 4.

‡ Fast. v.

§ Pag. 554.

|| Cassiod. 2284.

B.—You have extricated yourself pretty well out of this scrape with UT. And perhaps have done prudently, to decline the same sort of explanation in those other languages which, as well as the Latin, have likewise a double Conjunction for this purpose, not quite so easily accounted for, because not ready derived to your hands. But I have not yet done with the English: for though your method of resolution will answer with most sentences, yet I doubt much whether it will with all. I think there is one usage of the conjunction THAT which it will not explain.

H.—Produce an instance.

B.—The instances are common enough. But I chuse to take one from your favourite Sad Shepherd: in hopes that the difficulty it may cause you will abate something of your extreme partiality for that piece. Which though it be

————— “such wool
As from mere English flocks his Muse could pull,” you have always contended obstinately, with its author, is ————— “a Fleece

To match or those of Sicily or Greece.”

EXAMPLE.

“I wonder he can move! that he’s not fix’d!
If THAT his feelings be the same with mine.”

So again in Shakespeare,¹

——— “If THAT the king
Have any way your good deserts forgot,
He bids you name your griefs.” ———

How will you bring out the Article THAT, when two Conjunctions (for I must still call THAT a Conjunction, till all my scruples are satisfied) come in this manner together?

ADVERTISEMENT.

I PRESUME my readers to be acquainted with French, Latin, Italian and Greek; which are unfortunately the usual boundaries of an English scholar’s acquisition. On this supposition, a friend of mine lamented that, in my Letter to Mr. Dunning, I had not confined myself to the common English character for the Anglo-Saxon and Gothic derivations.

¹ First Part of Henry IV. act. 4. scene 5.

In the present publication I should undoubtedly have conformed to his wishes, if I had not imagined that, by inserting the Anglo-Saxon and Gothic characters in this place, I might possibly allure some of my readers to familiarize themselves with those characters, by an application of them to the few words of those languages which are here introduced: and thus lead the way to their better acquaintance with the parent language, which ought long ago to have made a part of the education of our youth. And I flatter myself that one of the consequences of my present inquiry will be, to facilitate and abridge the tedious and mistaken method of instruction which has too long continued in our seminaries: the time which is at present allotted to Latin and Greek, being amply sufficient for the acquirement also of French, Italian, Anglo-Saxon, Dutch, German, Danish, and Swedish. Which will not seem at all extraordinary, when it is considered that the five last mentioned (together with the English) are little more than different dialects of one and the same language. And though this was by no means the leading motive, nor is the present object of my inquiry; yet I think it of considerable importance: although I do not hold the acquisition of languages in so very great estimation as the Emperor Charles the Vth did; who, as Brantome tells us, “disoit et répétoit souvent, quand il tomboit sur la beauté des langues, (selon l’opinion des Turcs)—qu’autant de langues que l’homme sçait parler, autant de fois est-il homme.”

Anglo-Saxon.						Moso-Gothic.
Æ	a	u	N	n	n	À	a	N	n
B	b	b	O	o	o	Б	b	Q	o
L	c	k	P	p	p	*	*	Π	p
D	ð	d	■	*	*	À	d	U	cw
E	e	e	R	r	r	Г	e	K	r
F	f	f	S	s	s	Г	f	S	s
Г	g	g	T	t	t	Г	g	T	t
h	h	h	Ð	ð	þ	h	h	ϥ	th
■	*	*	U	u	u	©	hw	n	u
I	i	i	ƿ	p	w	I	i	V	w
*	*	*	X	x	x	С	j and y	X	ch
K	k	k	Y	y	y	K	k	*	*
L	l	l	Z	z	z	Λ	l	Z	z
∞	m	m				M	m

CHAPTER VII.

OF CONJUNCTIONS.

H.—I WAS afraid of some such instances as these, when I wished to postpone the whole consideration of this subject till after we had discussed the other received Parts of Speech. Because, in order to explain it, I must forestall something of what I had to say concerning Conjunctions. However, since the question is started, perhaps it may be as well to give it here.

The truth of the matter is, that IF is merely a Verb. It is merely the Imperative of the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon verb ΓΙἲΛΝ, Giþan. And in those languages, as well as in the English formerly, this supposed Conjunction was pronounced and written as the common Imperative, purely ΓΙἲ, Giþ, Gif. Thus:—

—————“ My largesse
Hath lotted her to be your brother’s mistresse
GIἲ shee can be reclaimed ; GIἲ not, his prey.”¹

And accordingly our corrupted IF has always the signification of the English Imperative Give; and no other. So that the resolution of the construction in the instances you have produced, will be as before in the others.

Resolution.—“ His feelings be the same with mine, GIVE THAT, I wonder he can move,” &c.

“ The King may have forgotten your good deserts, GIVE THAT in any way, he bids you name your griefs.”

And here, as an additional proof, we may observe, that whenever the Datum, upon which any conclusion depends, is a sentence, the Article THAT, if not expressed, is always understood, and may be inserted after IF. As in the instance I have produced above, the Poet might have said, “ Gif that she can be reclaimed,” &c.

For the resolution is—“ She can be reclaimed, Give that; my largesse hath lotted her to be your brother’s mistresse. She cannot be reclaimed, Give that; my largesse hath lotted her to be your brother’s prey.”

¹ Sad Shepherd, act 2. scene 1.

But the Article THAT is not understood, and cannot be inserted after IF, where the Datum is not a sentence, but some Noun governed by the Verb IF or GIVE. As—

Example.—"How will the weather dispose of you to-morrow? IF fair, it will send me abroad; IF foul, it will keep me at home."

Here we cannot say—" IF THAT fair it will send me abroad; IF THAT foul it will keep me at home."—Because in this case the verb IF governs the Noun; and the resolved construction is,

"GIVE fair weather, it will send me abroad; GIVE foul weather, it will keep me at home."

But make the Datum a sentence, As—" IF it is fair weather, it will send me abroad; IF it is foul weather, it will keep me at home."

And then the article THAT is understood, and may be inserted after IF; As—" IF THAT it is fair weather, it will send me abroad; IF THAT it is foul weather, it will keep me at home."

The resolution then being,

"It is fair weather, GIVE THAT; it will send me abroad; It is foul weather, GIVE THAT; it will keep me at home."

And this you will find to hold universally, not only with IF, but with many other supposed Conjunctions, such as, But that, Unless that, Though that, Lest that, &c. (which are really Verbs) put in this manner before the Article THAT.

B.—One word more to clear up a difficulty which occurs to me concerning your account of IF, and I have done.

We have in English another word which (though now rather obsolete) used frequently to supply the place of IF. As—" AN you had any eye behind you, you might see more detraction at your heels, than fortunes before you."

In this and in all similar instances, what is AN? For I can by no means agree with the account which Dr. S. Johnson gives of it in his Dictionary: and I do not know that any other person has ever attempted to explain it.

H.—How does he account for it?

B.—He says,—"AN is sometimes in old authors a contraction of And if." Of which he gives a very unlucky instance from Shakespeare ;¹ where both AN and IF are used in the same line.

¹ Twelfth Night, act 2. scene 8.

————— “He cannot flatter, He !
An honest mind and plain : he must speak Truth :
AN they will take it—So. IF not ; He’s plain.”

Where, if AN was a contraction of AND IF ; AN and IF should rather change places.

H.—I can no more agree with Dr. S. Johnson than you do. A part of one word only, employed to shew that another word is compounded with it, would indeed be a curious method of con-traction. Though even this account of it would serve my purpose. But the truth will serve it better : and therefore I thank you for your difficulty. It is a fresh proof, and a very strong one in my favour. AN is also a Verb, and may very well supply the place of IF ; it being nothing else but the Imperative of the Anglo-Saxon verb Anan, which likewise means to Give, or to Grant.

B.—It seems indeed to be so. But, if so, how can it ever be made to signify AS IF ? For which also, as well as for And if, Johnson says AN is a con-traction.²

H.—It never signifies As if : nor is ever a contraction of them.

B.—Johnson however advances Addison’s authority for it. —“My next pretty correspondent like Shakespeare’s Lion in Pyramus and Thisbe, roars AN it were any nightingale.”

H.—If Addison had so written, I should answer roundly, that he had written false English. But he never did so write. He only quoted it in mirth and ridicule, as the author wrote it. And Johnson, an editor of Shakespeare, ought to have known and observed it. And then, instead of Addison’s or even Shakespeare’s authority, from whom the expression is borrowed ; he should have quoted Bottom’s, the Weaver : whose language corresponds with the character Shakespeare has given him—

¹ Lear, act 2. scene 6.

² This arbitrary method of contraction is very useful to an idle or ignorant expositor. It will suit any thing. S. Johnson also says——“AN’T, a contraction for And it ; or rather And if it ; as—An’t please you—that is, And if it please you.” It is merely—AN it please you.

*"The shallow'st thickskull of that barren sort, viz.
A crew of Patches, rude Mechanicals,
That work for Bread upon Athenian Stalls."*¹

"I will aggravate my voice so (says Bottom) that I will roar you as gently as any sucking Dove: I will roar you AN 'twere any nightingale."²

If Johnson is satisfied with such authority as this, for the different signification and propriety of English words, he will find enough of it amongst the clowns in all our comedies; and Master Bottom in particular in this very sentence will furnish him with many new meanings. But, I believe, Johnson will not find AN used for As if, either seriously or clownishly, in any other part of Addison or Shakespeare; except in this speech of Bottom, and in another of Hostess Quickly—"He made a finer end, and went away AN it had been any Christom child."³

B.—In English then, it seems, these two words which have been called conditional Conjunctions (and whose force and manner of signification, as well as of all the others, we are directed by Mr. Locke to search after in "the several views, postures, stands, turns, limitations, and exceptions, and several other thoughts of the mind, for which we have either none or very deficient names,") are, according to you, merely the original Imperatives of the verbs to Give or to Grant.

Now, let me understand you. I do not mean to divert you into an etymological explanation of each particular word of other languages, or even of the English, and so to change our conversation from a philosophical inquiry concerning the nature of Language in general, into the particular business of a polyglot Lexicon. But, as you have said that your principles will apply universally, I desire to know whether you mean that the conditional conjunctions of all other languages are likewise to be found, like IF and AN, in the original Imperatives of some of their own or derived verbs, meaning to Give?

H.—No. If that was my opinion, I know you are ready instantly to confute it by the Conditionals of the Greek and Latin and Irish, the French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese and many other Languages. But I mean, that those words which are called conditional conjunctions, are to be accounted for in ALL languages in the same manner as I have accounted for IF and AN. Not indeed that they must all mean precisely as these two do—Give and Grant; but some word equivalent: Such as—Be it, Suppose, Allow, Permit, Put, Suffer, &c. Which meaning is to be sought for from the particular etymology of each respective language, not from some un-named and un-known “Turns, Stands, Postures, &c. of the mind.” In short, to put this matter out of doubt, I mean to discard all supposed mystery, not only about these Conditionals, but about all those words also which Mr. Harris and others distinguish from Prepositions, and call Conjunctions of Sentences. I deny them to be a separate sort of words or Part of Speech by themselves. For they have not a separate manner of signification: although they are not devoid of signification. And the particular signification of each must be sought for from amongst the other parts of Speech, by the help of the particular etymology of each respective language. By such means alone can we clear away the obscurity and errors in which Grammarians and Philosophers have been involved by the corruption of some common words, and the useful Abbreviations of Construction. And at the same time we shall get rid of that farrago of useless distinctions into *Conjunctive, Adjunctive, Disjunctive, Subdisjunctive, Copulative, Negative copulative,*¹ Continuative, Subcontinuative, Positive, Suppositive, Casual, Collective, Effective, Approbative, Discretive, Ablative, Presumptive, Abnegative, Completive, Augmentative, Alternative, Hypothetical, Extensive, Periodical, Motival, Conclusive, Explicative, Transitive, Interrogative, Comparative, Diminutive, Preventive, Adequate Preventive, Adversative, Conditional, Suspensive, Illative, Conducive, Declarative, &c. &c. &c., which explain nothing; and (as most other technical terms are abused) serve only to throw a veil over the ignorance of those who employ them.²

¹ Midsummer Night's Dream, act 3. scene 2.

² Ibid. act 1. scene 2.

³ Henry V. act 2. scene 3.

¹ “Non, Non, non minus disjungit, quam Nec, Nec. Quanquam neutrum ego Disjunctivum appello, sed copulativum potius negativum.” —Aristarchus Anti-Bentleianus. Pars secunda. Pag. 12.

² Technical terms are not invariably abused to cover the ignorance only of those who employ them. In matters of law, politicks, and Government, they are more frequently abused in attempting to impose

R.—You mean, then, by what you have said, flatly to contradict Mr. Harris's definition of a Conjunction; which he says, is—"a Part of Speech devoid of signification itself, but so formed as to help signification, by making two or more significant sentences to be one significant sentence."

H.—I have the less scruple to do that, because Mr. Harris makes no scruple to contradict himself. For he afterwards acknowledges that some of them—"have a kind of obscure signification when taken alone; and appear in Grammar, like Zoophytes¹ in nature, a kind of middle Beings of amphibious character; which, by sharing the attributes of the higher and the lower, conduce to link the whole together."

Now I suppose it is impossible to convey a Nothing in a more ingenious manner. How much superior is this to the oracular Saw of another learned author on Language (typified by Shakespeare in *Sir Topaz*²) who, amongst much other intelligence of equal importance, tells us with a very solemn face, and ascribes it to Plato, that—"Every man that opines, must opine something: the subject of opinion therefore is not nothing." But the fairest way to Lord Monboddio is to give you the whole passage.

"It was not therefore without reason that Plato said that the subject of opinion was neither the το ον, or the thing itself, nor was it the το μη ον, or nothing; but something betwixt these two. This may appear at first sight a little mysterious, upon the ignorance of others; and to cover the injustice and knavery of those who employ them.

¹ These Zoophytes have made a wonderful impression on Lord Monboddio. I believe (for I surely have not counted them) that he has used the allusion at least twenty times in his Progress of Language; and seems to be always hunting after extremes merely for the sake of introducing them. But they have been so often placed between two stools, that it is no wonder they should at last come to the ground.

² "As the old Hermit of Pragne, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a niece of king Gorboduc,—That that is, is: So I being Master Parson, am Master Parson. For what is that, but that? And is, but is?"—Twelfth Night, act 4. scene 3.

John Lily's Sir Tophas monboddiozes in the same manner—

"Sir Tophas. Dost thou not know what a poet is?

Epiton. No.

Sir Tophas. Why, foole, a poet is as much as one should say—a poet."—Endimion, act 1. scene 3.

and difficult to be understood ; but, like other things of that kind in Plato, when examined to the bottom, it has a very clear meaning, and explains the nature of opinion very well :¹ FOR, as he says, Every man that opines, must opine something ; the subject of opinion therefore is not nothing. At the same time it is not the thing itself, but something betwixt the two.² His ¹ “ Lucinde. Qu'est-ce que c'est que ce galimatias ?

Frontin. Ce galimatias ! Vous n'y comprenez donc rien ?

Lucinde. Non, en vérité.

Frontin. Ma foi, ni moi non plus : je vais pourtant vous l'expliquer si vous voulez.

Lucinde. Comment m'expliquer ce que tu ne comprends pas ?

Frontin. Oh ! Dame, j'ai fait mes études, moi.”—L'Amant de lui-même. (Rousseau,) scene 13.

² Origin and Progress of Language, vol. 1. p. 100. “ Il possède l'antiquité, comme on le peut voir par les belles remarques qu'il a faites. Sans lui nous ne saurions pas que dans la ville d'Athènes les enfans pleuroient quand on leur donnoit le fouet.—Nous devons cette découverte à sa profonde érudition.”

But his lordship's philosophical writings are full of information, explanations and observations of equal importance. Vol. 1. p. 136, he informs us, that—Porphyry, the greatest philosopher as well as best writer of his age, “ relates that crows and magpies and parrots were taught in his time not only to imitate human speech, but to attend to what was told them and to remember it ; and many of them, says he, have learned to inform against those whom they saw doing any mischief in the house. And he himself tamed a partridge that he found somewhere about Carthage to such a degree, that it not only played and fondled with him, but answered him when he spoke to it in a voice different from that in which the partridges call one another : but was so well bred, that it never made this noise but when it was spoken to. And he maintains, that all animals who have sense and memory are capable of reason : and this is not only his opinion, but that of the Pythagoreans, the greatest philosophers in my opinion that ever existed, next to the masters of their master, I mean the Egyptian priests. And besides the Pythagoreans, Plato, Aristotle, Empedocles, and Democritus, were of the same opinion. One thing cannot be denied, that their natures may be very much improved by use and instruction, by which they may be made to do things that are really wonderful and far exceeding their natural power of instinct.”—So far we are obliged to the greatest of all philosophers that ever existed. And thus far the judgment of the extract can alone be called in question. Now for the further confirmation of this doctrine by their illustrious disciple.—“ There is a man in England at present, who has practised more upon them and with greater success than any body living : ”—(I suspect his Lordship means the owner of the learned Pig)—“ and he says, as I am informed, ”—(Ay, Right, my lord, be cautious how you take an assertion so important as this upon your Lordship, you see, has explained it very clearly; and no doubt must have sweated much to get thus to the bottom.

But Mr. Harris has the advantage of a Simile over this gentleman: and though Similes appear with most beauty and propriety in works of imagination, they are frequently found most useful to the authors of philosophical treatises: and have often helped them out at many a dead lift, by giving them an appearance of saying something, when indeed they had nothing to say: For Similes are in truth the bladders upon which they float; and the Grammarian sinks at once if he attempts to swim without them.

As a proof of which, let us only examine the present instance; and, dismissing the Zoophytes, see what intelligence we can draw from Mr. Harris concerning the nature of Conjunctions.

First he defines a Word to be a "sound significant."¹ Then he defines Conjunctions to be words (i. e. sounds significant) "devoid of signification."—Afterwards he allows that they have—"a kind of signification."

But this kind of signification is—"obscure" (i. e. a signification unknown): something I suppose (as Chillingworth couples them) like a secret Tradition, or a silent Thunder: for it amounts to the same thing as a signification which does not signify: an obscure or unknown signification being no signification at all. But, not contented with these inconsistencies, which to a less learned man would seem sufficient of all consequence, Mr. Harris goes further, and adds, that they are a—own authority! Well, He says! What?—"That, if they lived long enough, and pains sufficient were taken upon them,"—(Well, what then?)"—"it is impossible to say to what lengths some of them might be carried."

Now if this, and such stuff as this, be Philosophy; and that too, of the greatest philosophers that ever existed; I do most humbly entreat your Lordship, if you still continue obstinate to discard Mr. Locke, that I may have my Tom Thumb again. For this philosophy gives to my mind as much disgust, though not so much indignation, as your friend and admirer Lord Mansfield's LAW.

[Were Mr. Tooke now living, he might have a chance of seeing a revival of Tom Thumb, if we may judge from some things that have lately been said of Mr. Locke at Cambridge and elsewhere.—ED.]

¹And (page 329) he defines a word to be "a voice articulate, significant by compact."

“kind of middle beings”—(he must mean between signification and no signification)—“sharing the Attributes of both”—(i. e. of signification and no signification) and—“conduce to link them both”—(i. e. signification and no signification) “together.”

It would have helped us a little, if Mr. Harris had here told us what that middle state is, between signification and no signification!¹ What are the attributes of no signification! And how signification and no signification can be linked together!

Now all this may, for aught I know, be “read and admired as long as there is any taste for fine writing in Britain.”² But

¹ If common reason alone was not sufficient to keep Mr. Harris and Lord Monboddo from this middle state between the το ον and the το μη ον, and between signification and no signification; they should at least have listened to what they are better acquainted with, Authority.

“Ὅσα δὲ τῶν ἐναντίων τοιαῦτα ἐστὶν, ὥστε ἐν οἷς πεφυκε γίνεσθαι, ἢ ὧν κατηγορεῖται, ἀναγκαῖον αὐτῶν θατέρον ὑπαρχειν;—τούτων οὐδὲν ἐστὶν ἀνάμεικτον.”—Aristot. Categ.

“Inter affirmationem et negationem nullum medium existit.”—J. C. Scaliger, lib. 5. cap. 114.

[“When a man is conscious that he does no good himself, the next thing is to cause others to do some. I may claim some merit this way, in hastening this testimonial from your friends above-writing: their love to you indeed wants no spur, their ink wants no pen, their pen wants no hand, their hand wants no heart, and so forth, after the manner of Rabelais; which is betwixt some meaning and no meaning; and yet it may be said, when present thought and opportunity is wanting, their pens want ink, their hands want pens, their hearts want hands, &c., till time, place, and conveniency concur to set them a-writing, as at present, a sociable meeting, a good dinner, warm fire, and an easy situation do, to the joint labour and pleasure of this epistle.—Humble servant, A. POPE.”—Parnell's Works.]

² “The truly philosophical language of my worthy and learned friend Mr. Harris, the author of Hermes, a work that will be read and admired as long as there is any taste for philosophy and fine writing in Britain.”—Orig. and Prog. of Language, vol. 1. p. 8.

“But I can hardly have the same indulgence for the philosopher, especially one who pretended, like Mr. Locke, to be so attentive an observer of what passed in his own mind, and has written a whole book upon the subject.—If Mr. Locke would have taken the trouble to study what had been discovered in this matter by the ancients, and had not resolved to have the merit of inventing himself a whole system of philosophy, he would have known that every material object is composed of matter and form.”—Id. vol. 1. p. 38.

“Mr. Locke wrote at a time when the old philosophy, I mean the scholastic philosophy, was generally run down and despised, but no other come in its place. In that situation, being naturally an acute man, with such unlearned and vulgar philosophers as Mr. Locke and his disciples, who seek not Taste and elegance, but truth and common sense in philosophical subjects, I believe it will never pass as a "perfect Example of Analysis;" nor bear away the palm for "acuteness of investigation and perspicuity of explication." For, separated from the Fine Writing, (which however I can no where find in the book) thus is the Conjunction explained by Mr. Harris.—A sound significant devoid of signification,

Having at the same time a kind of obscure signification ;

And yet having neither signification nor no signification ;

But a middle something between signification and no signification,

Sharing the attributes both of signification and no signification ;

And linking signification and no signification together.

If others, of a more elegant Taste for Fine Writing, are able to receive either pleasure or instruction from such truly philosophical language,¹ I shall neither dispute with them nor envy and not a bad writer, it was no wonder that his Essay met with great applause, and was thought to contain wonderful discoveries. And I must allow that I think it was difficult for any man, without the assistance of books, or of the conversation of men more learned than himself, to go further in the philosophy of mind than he has done. But now that Mr. Harris has opened to us the treasures of Greek philosophy, to consider Mr. Locke still as a standard book of philosophy, would be, to use an antient comparison, continuing to feed on acorns after corn was discovered."—Or. and Pr. of Lang. vol. 1. p. 53.

"It was the misfortune of us in the western parts of Europe, that after we had learned Greek, and got some taste of the Greek philosophy, we immediately set up as masters ourselves, and would needs be inventors in philosophy, instead of humble scholars of the antient masters. In this way Descartes philosophized in France, Mr. Hobbes and Mr. Locke in England, and many since their time of less note. I would fain hope, if the indolence and dissipation that prevail so generally in this age would allow me to think so well of it, that Mr. Harris would put a stop to this method of philosophizing without the assistance of the antients, and revive the genuine Greek philosophy among us."—Id. vol. 1. page 54.

¹ "Clarus ob obscuram linguam magis inter inanes
Quamde graveis inter Graios, qui vera requirunt.
Omnia enim stolidi magis admirantur amantque
Inversis quæ sub verbis latitantia cernunt :

them: But can only deplore the dullness of my own apprehension, who, notwithstanding the great authors quoted in Mr. Harris's treatise, and the great authors who recommend it, cannot help considering this "perfect example of analysis," as—An improved compilation of almost all the errors which Grammarians have been accumulating from the time of Aristotle down to our present days, of technical and learned affectation.¹

B.—I am afraid, my good friend, you still carry with you your old humour in politics, though your subject is now different. You speak too sharply for Philosophy. Come, Confess the truth. Are not you against Authority, because Authority is against you? And does not your spleen to Mr. Harris arise principally from his having taken care to fortify his opinions in a manner in which, from your singularity, you cannot?

H.—I hope you know my disposition better. And I am persuaded that I owe your long and steady friendship to me, to the conviction which an early experience in private life afforded you, that—Neminem libenter nominem, nisi ut laudem; sed nec peccata reprehenderem, nisi ut aliis prodessem.—Indeed you have borne your testimony for me in very trying situations, where few besides yourself would have ventured so much honesty. At the same time, I confess, I should disdain to handle any useful truth daintily, as if I feared lest it should sting me; and to employ a philosophical inquiry as a vehicle for interested or cowardly adulation.

I protest to you, my notions of Language were formed before I could account etymologically for any one of the words

Veraque constituunt, quæ belle tangere possunt
Aures, et lepido quæ sunt fucata sonore."

Lucretius, lib. 1. 640.

¹ I must however do Mr. Harris and Dr. Lowth the justice to acknowledge, that the Hermes of the former has been received with universal approbation both at home and abroad; and has been quoted as undeniable authority on the subject by the learned of all countries. For which however I can easily account; not by supposing that its doctrine gave any more satisfaction to their minds who quoted it than to mine; but because, as Judges shelter their knavery by precedents, so do scholars their ignorance by authority: and when they cannot reason, it is safer and less disgraceful to repeat that nonsense at second hand, which they would be ashamed to give originally as their own.

in question, and before I was in the least acquainted with the opinions of others. I addressed myself to an inquiry into their opinions with all the diffidence of conscious ignorance; and, so far from spurning authority, was disposed to admit of half an argument from a great name. So that it is not my fault, if I am forced to carry instead of following the lantern: but at all events it is better than walking in total darkness.

And yet, though I believe I differ from all the accounts which have hitherto been given of Language, I am not so much without authority as you may imagine. Mr. Harris himself and all the Grammarians whom he has, and whom (though using their words) he has not quoted, are my authorities. Their own doubts, their difficulties, their dissatisfaction, their contradictions, their obscurity on all these points are my authorities against them: for their system and their difficulties vanish together. Indeed unless, with Mr. Harris, I had been

¹ "Profecto in Grammaticorum prope omnium commentis, quas aperta immensam extollunt, pene overt byis; cum paginae singulae saepe plures contineant errores, quam Sicinius ille Dentatus vulnera toto habuit corpore."—G. J. Vossii Aristarchus, lib. 3. cap. 2.

LXXIV. "Capienda etiam sunt signa ex incrementis et progressibus philosophiarum et scientiarum. Quae enim in natura fundata sunt, crescant et augentur: quae autem in opinione, variantur; non augentur. Itaque si istae doctrinae plane, instar plantae, a stirpibus suis revulsa non essent, sed utero naturae adhererent, atque ab eadem alerentur, id minime eventurum fuisset quod per annos bis mille jam fieri videmus: nempe, ut scientiae suis haereant vestigiis, et in eodem fere statu manerant, neque augmentum aliquod memorabile sumpserint."

LXXV. "Etiam aliud signum capiendum est (si modo signi appellatio huic competat; cum potius testimonium sit, atque adeo testimoniorum omnium validissimum) hoc est, propria confessio auctorum quos homines nunc sequuntur. Nam et illi, qui tanta fiducia de rebus pronunciant, tamen per intervalla cum ad se redeunt, ad querimonias de naturae subtilitate, rerum obscuritate, humani ingenii infirmitate se convertunt. Hoc vero si simpliciter fieret, alios fortasse qui sunt timidiore ab ulteriori inquisitione detertere, alios vero qui sunt ingenio alacriori et magis fidenti ad ulteriorem progressum acere et incitare possit. Verum non satis illis est de se confiteri, sed quicquid sibi ipsis aut magistris suis incognitum aut intactum fuerit, id extra terminos possibili ponunt: et tanquam ex arte, cognitum aut factum impossibile pronunciant: Summa superbia et invidia suorum inventorum infirmitatem, in naturae ipsius calumniam et aliorum omnium desperationem vertentes. Hinc schola Academiae novae, quae Acatalepsiam ex professo tenuit, et homines ad sempiternas tenebras damnavit."—Novum Organum.

repeating what others have written, it is impossible I should quote any direct authorities for my own manner of explanation. But let us hear Wilkins, whose industry deserved to have been better employed, and his perseverance better rewarded with discovery ; let us hear what he says.

—“ According to the true philosophy of speech, I cannot conceive this kind of words” (he speaks of Adverbs and Conjunctions) “ to be properly a distinct part of speech, as they are commonly called. But until they can be distributed into their proper places, I have so far complied with the Grammars of instituted languages, as to place them here together.”— And again,

“ For the accurate effecting of this [i. e. a real character] it would be necessary that the theory itself [i. e. of language] upon which such a design were to be founded, should be exactly suited to the nature of things. But upon supposal that this theory [viz. of language] is defective, either as to the fulness or the order of it ; this must needs add much perplexity to any such attempt, and render it imperfect. And that this is the case with that common theory already received, need not much be doubted.”

It appears evidently therefore that Wilkins (to whom Mr. Locke was much indebted) was well convinced that all the accounts hitherto given of Language were erroneous. And in fact, the languages which are commonly used throughout the world, are much more simple and easy, convenient and philosophical, than Wilkins’s scheme for a real character ; or than any other scheme that has been at any other time imagined or proposed for the purpose.

Mr. Locke’s dissatisfaction with all the accounts which he had seen, is too well known to need repetition.

Sanctius rescued QUOD particularly from the number of these mysterious Conjunctions, though he left UT amongst them.

And Servius, Scioppius, G. J. Vossius, Perizonius, and others, have explained and displaced many other supposed Adverbs and Conjunctions.

Skinner (though I knew it not previously) had accounted for IF before me, and in the same manner ; which, though so palpable, Lye confirms and compliments. Even S. Johnson, though mistakenly, has attempted AND; and would find no difficulty with THEREFORE.

In short there is not such a thing as a Conjunction in Any Language, which may not, by a skilful Herald, be traced home to its own family and origin; without having recourse to contradiction and mystery with Mr. Harris: or, with Mr. Locke, cleaving open the head of man, to give it such a birth as Minerva's from the brain of Jupiter.

B.—Call you this authority in your favour—when the full stream and current sets the other way, and only some little brook or rivulet runs with you? You know very well that all the authorities which you have alleged, except Wilkins, are upon the whole against you. For though they have explained the meaning, and traced the derivation of many Adverbs and Conjunctions; yet (except Sanctius in the particular instance of quod—whose conjunctive use in Latin he too strenuously denies) they all acknowledge them still to be Adverbs or Conjunctions. It is true, they distinguish them by the title of reperita or usurpata. But they at the same time acknowledge (indeed the very distinction itself is an acknowledgment) that there are others which are real, primigenia, nativa, pura.

II.—True. Because there are some, of whose origin they were totally ignorant. But has any Philosopher or Grammarian ever yet told us what a real, original, native, pure Adverb or Conjunction is? or which of these Conjunctions of Sentences are so? Whenever that is done, in any language, I may venture to promise you that I will show those likewise to be reperitas and usurpatas, as well as the rest. And till then I shall take no more trouble about them. I shall only add, that though Abbreviation and corruption are always busiest with the words which are most frequently in use; yet the words most frequently used are least liable to be totally laid aside. And therefore they are often retained—(I mean that branch of them which is most frequently used)—when most of the other words (and even the other branches of these retained words) are, by various changes and accidents, quite lost to a Language. HENCE the difficulty of accounting for them. And HENCE (because only one branch of each of these declinable words is retained in a language) arises the notion of their being indeclinable; and a separate sort of words, or Part of Speech by themselves. But that they are not indeclinable, is sufficiently evident by what I have already said. For IF, AN, &c. certainly could not be called indeclinable, when all the other branches of those Verbs, of which they are the regular Imperatives, were likewise in use. And that the words IF, AN, &c. (which still retain their original signification, and are used in the very same manner and for the same purpose as formerly) should now be called indeclinable, proceeds merely from the ignorance of those who could not account for them; and who therefore, with Mr. Harris, were driven to say that they have neither meaning nor inflection: whilst notwithstanding they were still forced to acknowledge (either directly, or by giving them different titles of conditional, adversative, &c.) that they have a “kind of obscure meaning.”¹

How much more candid and ingenuous would it have been, to have owned fairly that they did not understand the nature of these Conjunctions; and, instead of wrapping it up in mystery, to have exhorted and encouraged others to a further search!

B.—You are not the first person who has been misled by a fanciful etymology. Take heed that your derivations be not of the same ridiculous cast with theirs who deduced Constantinople from Constantine the noble—Breeches from bear-riches—Donna from dono—Honour from hon and aurum—and King Pepin from ἰσπερ.²

¹ “Et quelle idée est excitée dans l'esprit en entendant prononcer les particules ET, AUSSI? On voit bien que ces mots signifient une espèce de connexion; mais quelque peine qu'on se donnât à décrire cette connexion, on se serviroit d'autant d'autres mots, dont la signification seroit aussi difficile à expliquer: et voulant expliquer la signification de la particule ET, je me servirois plusieurs fois de cette même particule.”—Lettres à une Princesse d'Allemagne, by Euler, letter 101.

² “Then this Constantyne removed the emperyall see unto his cytye of Constantyne the noble: and there for the more partye kepte his emperyall honoure; and other emperours in lyke wyse after hym. By reason whereof the emperours were longe after called emperours of Constantyne noble.”—Fabian's Chron. ch. 69.

“Hed. But why Breeches now?

“Pha. Breeches, quasi bear-riches; when a gallant bears all his riches in his breeches.”—B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, act 4. scene 3.

“Placano i Doni il ciel; placan l' inferno.

E pur non son le Donne

H.—If I have been misled, it most certainly is not by Etymology: of which I confess myself to have been shamefully ignorant at the time when these my notions of language were first formed. Though even that previous ignorance is now a circumstance which confirms me much in my opinion concerning these Conjunctions: For I knew not even the character of the language from which my particular proofs of the English conjunctions were to be drawn. And (notwithstanding Lord Monboddo's discouraging sneer¹) it was general reasoning a

Men avere che il cielo,
 Più crude che l' inferno.
 Il Don, credimi, il Dono
 Gran ministro d' amore, anzi tiranno
 Egli è, che a suo voler impetra e spetra.
 Non sai tu ciò ch' Elpino,
 Il saggio Elpino dicea?
 Che fin colà nella primiera etade,
 Quand' anco semplicetti
 Non sapean favellare
 Che d' un linguaggio sol la lingua e 'l core.
 Allor le amanti Donne altra canzona
 Non s' udivan cantar che—Dona, Dona.
 Quindi l' enno addoppiando Perchè non basta un Don—DONNA fu detta.”—Guidobaldo de' Bonarelli.

“On connoit le jeu de mots d'Owen, assez mauvais, mais qui renferme un grand sens :

Divitias et opes, HON lingua Hebræa vocavit :

Gallica gens, AURUM-OR ; indeque venit HONOR.”—Mirabeau,
Essai sur le Despotisme.

“Ossie—issie—issie—Diaper—Napkin—Nipkin—Pipkin—Pippin-king—King Pepin.”

I forget my merry author of this etymology ; but it is altogether as plausible as even Ménage's derivation of CHEZ from Apud.

¹ “Now as I am not able from Theory merely, and a priori, to form the idea of a perfect language, I have been obliged to seek for it in the study of the Greek.—What men of superior Genius may do in such speculations, I cannot tell ; but I know well that ordinary men, without the study of some model of the kind, would be as unable to conceive the idea of a perfect language, as to form a high taste in other arts, such as sculpture and painting, without having seen the best works of those kinds that are to be found.—It would be doing injustice to those superior minds who have in themselves the standard of perfection in all the Arts, to judge of them by myself ; but I am confident that my idea of perfection in language would have been ridiculously imperfect, priori, that led me to the particular instances ; not particular instances to the general reasoning. This Etymology, against whose fascination you would have me guard myself, did not occur to me till many years after my system was settled : and it occurred to me suddenly, in this manner :—" If my reasoning concerning these conjunctions is well founded, there must then be in the original language from which the English (and so of all other languages) is derived, literally such and such words bearing precisely such and such significations."—I was the more pleased with this suggestion, because I was entirely ignorant even of the Anglo-Saxon and Gothic characters : and the experiment presented to me a mean, either of disabusing myself from error (which I greatly feared) ; or of obtaining a confirmation sufficiently strong to encourage me to believe (what every man knowing any thing of human nature will always be very backward in believing of himself) that I had really made a discovery. For, if upon trial I should find in an unknown language precisely those very words both in sound, and signification, and application, which in my perfect ignorance I had foretold ; what must I conclude, but either that some Dæmon had maliciously inspired me with the spirit of true prophecy in order the more deeply to deceive me ; or that my reasoning on the nature of language was not fantastical ? The event was beyond my expectation : for I instantly found, if I had known no other language than the modern languages of Europe."—Origin and Progress of Language, vol. 2, p. 183.

Read this, Mr. Burgess, and then complain of illiberality to Lord Monboddo : who places himself ansatus in cathedra, and thus treats all other men in advance. Whoever, after his lordship, shall dare to reason on this subject a priori, must assume then, it seems—to have in his own superior mind the standard of perfection in All the Arts !—Do you, Mr. Burgess, acquiesce to this condition ? If it were possible (which I am very far from believing) that the same sentiments should pervade any considerable part of the very learned and respectable body to which you belong ; I should be sorrowfully compelled to join in the exclamation—O ! aurita Arcadiæ pecora ! qui, Romæ, hujus cuculi vocem veluti lusciniolæ melos, in aures admittere sustinetis ! And perhaps Mr. Burgess himself may have reason hereafter to regret, that (with all his real or pretended admiration of Lord Monboddo's writings) he neglected to avail himself of the only useful lesson to be drawn from them : viz. To be at least as well bred as Porphyry's partridge ; and to have forbore his noise, until he was himself spoken to.

upon trial, all my predictions verified. This has made me presumptuous enough to assert it universally. Besides that, I have since traced these supposed unmeaning, indeclinable Conjunctions with the same success in many other languages besides the English. And because I know that the generality of minds receive conviction more easily from a number of particular instances, than from the surer but more abstracted arguments of general proof; if a multiplicity of uncommon avocations and engagements (arising from a very peculiar situation) had not prevented me, I should long before this have found time enough from my other pursuits and from my enjoyments (amongst which idleness is not the smallest) to have shown clearly and satisfactorily the origin and precise meaning of each of these pretended unmeaning, indeclinable Conjunctions, at least in all the dead and living languages of Europe.

B.—Men talk very safely of what they may do, and what they might have done. But, though present professions usually outweigh past proofs with the people, they have never yet passed current with philosophers. If therefore you would bring me over to your opinion, and embolden me to quit the beaten path with you, you must go much beyond the example of Henry Stephens, which was considered by Mer. Casaubon as the ne plus ultra on this subject,¹ and must do what Wilkins required before he would venture to differ from the Grammars of instituted languages: that is, you must distribute all our English Conjunctions at least into their proper places. And if it should seem unreasonable in me thus to impose upon you a task which—"no man, however learned or sagacious, has yet been able to perform;"²—you must thank yourself for it, and

¹ "Henricus Stephanus (author immortalis operis, quod Thesaurus Linguae Græcæ indigitavit) ita omnes orationis particulas (quarum quanto in omni lingua difficilior, tanto utilior observatio), omnes idiotismos excussit, eruit, explicavit, similia cum similibus comparavit, ut exemplum quidem in hoc genere aliis ad imitandum reliquerit absolutissimum; sed quod pauci sint assecuturi."—Mer. Cas. de Lingua Saxonica.

² "The Particles are, among all nations, applied with so great latitude, that they are not easily reducible under any regular scheme of explication: this difficulty is not less, nor perhaps greater, in English than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with success: such at least as can be expected in a task which no the peremptory roundness of your assertion. Besides, I do really think that after you have professed so much of all the languages of Europe, I may fairly expect you to perform a little in your own.

H.—If it must be so, thus then: I say that

IF	} are the Imperatives	Lif	} of their respective Verbs	Lifan	To Give.
AN		An		Anan	To Grant.
UNLESS		Onleſ		Onlejan	To Dismiss.
EKE		Eac		Eacan	To Add.
YET		Let		Letan	To Get.
STILL		Stell		Stellan	To Put.
ELSE		Aleſ		Alejan	To Dismiss.
THO'		Đaſ		Đaſian	} To Allow.
or		or		Đaſian
THOUGH		Đaſiſ		Đaſiſan	} To Boot.
BŪT		Bot		Botan
BŪT		Be-utan		Beon-utan	To Be-out.
WITHOUT		Þýþð-utan		Þýþðan-utan	To Be-out.
AND		An-að		Anan-að	{ Dare con- geriem.

LEST is the past participle Leyed of Lejan, To Dismiss.

SINCE { Sifððan
Sýne
Seand-er
Sifððe
or
Sin-er } is the participle of Seon, To See.

THAT is the Article or Pronoun Đaſ.

These, I apprehend, are the only Conjunctions in our language which can cause any difficulty; and it would be impertinent in me to explain such as—BE SO(^a). BE IT. ALBEIT(^b).

man, however learned or sagacious, has yet been able to perform."—Pref. to S. Johnson's Dict.

(^a) "Set forth (quod she) and tell me how.

Shew me thy sekenes euery dele.

Madame, that can I do wele:

BE so my lyfe therto woll laste."

Gower, lib. 1. fol. 8. p. 2. col. 1.

ALBEIT so^(c). SET^(d). NOTWITHSTANDING. NEVERTHELESS.
 SAVE that^(e). SAVING that. EXCEPT that. EXCEPTING that.

"For these craftes (as I finde)
 A man maie do by waie of kinde:
 BE so it be to good entent."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 134. p. 2. col. 1.

"For suche men that ben vilayns
 The lawe in such a wise ordeineth,
 That what man to the lawe pleyneeth,
 BE so the judge stande upright,
 He shall be serued of his right."

Gower, lib. 7. fol. 159. p. 1. col. 1.

"The mast to-brake, the sayle to-roofe,
 Tho ship upon the waves droofe,
 Till that thei see the londes coste.
 Tho made a vowe the leste and moste
 BE so thei mighten come alonde."

Gower, lib. 8. fol. 177. p. 1. col. 2.

(^e) "Saturne anon, to stynten stryfe and drede,
 ALL BE IT that it be agayne his kinde,
 Of all this strife he can remedy fynde."

Chaucer, Knyghtes Tale, fol. 8. p. 2. col. 1.

"The quhilk Juno nowthir lang dayis nor geris,
 Nor nane diuyn sacrifice may appeis;
 Sche restis neuir, nor may sche leif at eis,
 ALBEIT the power and charge of Jupiter
 Resistis sche wat, and fatis war hir contrars."

Douglas, 5th booke, p. 154.

"Freynd serly not, na cause is to compleyne, ALBEIT thy wit grete god may not atteyne."

Douglas, Prol. to 10th booke, p. 309.

(^c) "Another remedy is that a man eschewe the companys of hem by whiche he douteth to be tempted: for ALBEIT so that the dede is wythstonde, yet is there greate temptacyon."—Chaucer, Person's Tale, fol. 115. p. 2. col. 2.

"AL BE IT so that of your pride and high presumpcion and folye, ye haue misborne you, yet for as mikell as I se and beholde your greate humilyte, it constrayneth me to do you grace and mercy."—Tale of Chaucer, fol. 83. p. 1. col. 1.

(^d) "Bot sen I am compellid the to translait,
 And not onlie of my curage, God wate,
 Durst I interprise sic outrageous folie,
 Quhare I offend, the lesse represe nerf I,
 And that ye know at quhais instance I take
 For to translate this maist excellent buke,
 I mene Virgillis volumn maist excellent,
 SET this my werk full febill be of rent."

Douglas, Pref. p. 4.

BATING that. IF CASE^(f). IN CASE^(g). PUT CASE^(h). SET CASE⁽ⁱ⁾. I POSE^(k). BECAUSE. TO WIT. FORSEEING that^(l).

“ Sic plesand wordes carpand, he has forth brocht, SETT his mynd troublit mony greuous thocht.”

Douglas, 1st booke, p. 19.

“ Betwix gude hope and drede in doute they stude,
Quhither thay war lewand, or tholit extreme dede al,
Thay ansuerit not, SET thay oft plene and cal.”

Douglas, 1st booke, p. 19.

“ And SET it be not louable nor semely thocht
To punys ane woman, but schamefull hir to sla,
Na victory, but lak following alsa, zit nethes I aucht louit to be,
Vengeaunce to take on hir deseruis to de.”

Douglas, 2d booke, p. 58.

“ Virgill is full of sentence ouer all quhare,
His hie knowlege he schawis, that euery sorte
Of his clausis comprehend sic sentence,
Thare bene thereof, SET thou think this but sporte,
Made grete ragmentis of hie intelligence.”

Douglas, Prol. to 6th booke, p. 158.

“ To name the God, that war ane manifest lee,
Is but ane God, makar of euery thing :
SET thou to Vulcane haue ful grete resembling.”

Douglas, Prol. to 6th booke, p. 161.

“ Thare suld na knicht rede but ane knichtly tale.
Quhat forcis him the bussart on the brere ?
SET wele him semes the falcone heroner.”

Douglas, Prol. to 9th booke, p. 271.

“ Turnus, behald on cais reuoluit the day,
And of his fire wyl sendis the perfay
Sic auantage and oportunitie,
And SET thou wald haif askit it, quod sche,
There was neuer ane of al the goddis ding
Quhilk durst haue the promittit sic ane thing.”

Douglas, 9th booke, p. 273.

“ SET our nature God has to him unyte,
His godhede incommixt remanis perfite.”

Douglas, Prol. to 10th booke, p. 308.

“ Angellis, scheiphardis, and kingis thy godhede kend,
SET thou in crib betwix twa beistis was laid.”

Douglas, Prol. to 10th booke, p. 310.

“ Drances, forsoith, quod he, euer has thou bene
Large and to mekil of speche, as weil is sene,
Bot not with wourdis suld the court be fyllyt,
SET thou be grete tharin, and ful euill wyllit.”

Douglas, 11th booke, p. 376.

FORESEEN that (=). PROVIDED that. BEING that, &c.
Which are evident at first sight.

"I put the cais set the Etholianis

List not to cum in our help nor supple;
zit than the bald Messapus wele wylle."

Douglas, 11th booke, p. 378.

"With stout curage agane him wend I will,
Thocht he in proues pas the grete Achill,
Or set in cais sic armour he weris as he Wrocht be the handis of God Vulcanus sle."

Douglas, 11th booke, p. 378.

"Bot Juno tho down from the hicht, I wys,
Of the mountane that Albane clepyt is Now in our dayis (set then this hillis down
Had nouthir name, honour, nor renowne)
Scho did behald amynd the feildis plane."

Douglas, 12th booke, p. 411.

"For set we preis us fast to speike out braid, Ne voce, nor wourdis followis nocht is said."

Douglas, 12th booke, p. 446.

"And set that empty be my brane and dull,
I haue translatit ane volume wonderfull."

Douglas, 13th booke, p. 483.

"Fra tyme I thareto set my pen to wryte,
It was compilyt in aughtene monethis space:
SET I feil syth sic twa monethis in fere
Wrote neur ane wound, nor nicht the volume stere."

Douglas, p. 484.

(*) "SAUF onely that I crie and bidde,

I am in tristesse all amidde."—Gower, lib. 4. fol. 82. p. 2. col. 1.

"Almoste ryght in the same wise the phisiciens answerd, SAUF that they sayden a fewe wordes more."—Tale of Chaucer, fol. 74. p. 1.
col. 2.

"Tyl she gan asken him howe Hector ferde
That was the townes wal, and Grekes yerde.
Ful wel I thanke it God, sayde Pandarus,
SAUF in his arme he hath a lytle wounde."

Chaucer, 2d booke of Troylus, fol. 164. p. 1. col. 1.

"Behynd thame for uptaking quhare it lay
Mony bricht armoure rychely dycht thay left,
SAUF that Eurialus with him tursit away
The riall trapouris, and mychty patrellis gay."

Douglas, 9th booke, p. 288.

"Bot al this time I bid na mare, I wys,
SAIF that this wensche, this vengeabil pest or traik,
Be bet down dede by my wound and scharp straik."

Douglas, 11th booke, p. 393.

B.—Well. Whether you are right or wrong in your conjectures concerning Conjunctions, I acknowledge that this is “All the air a solemn stillness holds;

 SAVE that from yonder ivy-mantled bower
 The moping owl does to the moon complain.”—Gray's Elegy.

(⁷) “I do not like these paper-squibs, good master, they may undo your store—I mean of credit, and fire your arsenall; IF CASE you do not in time make good those outer works, your pockets.”—B. Jonson, Staple of News, act 1. scene 3.

Chaucer also uses IF CASE.

(⁸) “The dignite of king John wold have distroyed al Englande, therfore moked wisdom and goodnes both, nedeth in a person, the malyce in dignite slyly to bridell, and with a good byt of arest to withdraw, IN CASE it wold prauunce otherwise than it shuld.”—Chaucer, Testament of Loue, 2d booke, fol. 317. p. 2. col. 1.

“Forsoith, IN CAIS the auenture of battal
 Had bene doutsum; wald God it war assale.”

Douglas, 4th booke, p. 121.

(⁹) “And PUT THE CAIS that I may not optene
 From Latyne land thaim to expell all clene, git at leist thare may fall stop or delay
 In sa grete materis for ane gere or tway.”

Douglas, 7th booke, p. 217.

PUT CASE, though now out of fashion, was frequently used by Chillingworth and other good authors.

“PUT THE CASE the Pope, for a reward of your service done him in writing this book, had given you the honour and means of a cardinal, would you not have professed, that you have not merited such a reward?”—Chillingworth, chap. 4. p. 211. § 36.

(¹) “He is worthy to lose his priuylege, that misuseth the might and power that is giuen hym. And I SETTE CASE ye might enioyne hem that payne by right and lawe, whiche I trowe ye may not do: I saye ye might not put it to execution.”—Tale of Chaucer, fol. 82. p. 2. col. 2.

“Yet SETTE I CASE ye haue lycence for to venge you, I saye that there ben full many thinges that shall restrayne you of vengeaunce takyng.”—Ibid. fol. 79. p. 2. col. 1.

(²) “Auauntour and a lyer, al is one,
 As thus. I POSE a woman graunt me
 Her loue, and sayth that other wol she none,
 And I am sworne to holden it secre,
 And after I tel it two or thre;
 I wys I am auauntour at the leest
 And lyer eke, for I breke my beheest.”

Chaucer, 3d boke of Troylus, fol. 174. p. 1. col. 2.

“Sone after this, she to him gan rowne,
 And asked him if Troylus were there:
 He swore her nay, for he was out of towne, coming to the point: and is fairer than shuffling them over unnoticed, as the greater part of grammarians have done; or than repeating after others, that they are not themselves any parts of language, but only such accessaries as salt is to meat, or water to bread; or that they are the mere edging or sauce of language; or that they are like the handles to cups, or plumes to helmets, or binding to books, or harness for horses; or that they are pegs and nails and nerves and joints, and ligaments and glue, and pitch and lime, and mortar, and so forth.¹ In

And sayd, Nece: I rose that he were there
You durst neuer haue the more foere."

Chaucer, 3d boke of Troilus, fol. 175. p. 2. col. l.

(¹) "It may be ordered that ii or iii of our owne shippes do see the sayde Frenche soldiers wafted to the coast of France; FORSEING that our sayd shippes entre no haven there."—Queen Elizabeth to Sir W. Cecil and Dr. Wotton, Lodge's Illustrations, vol. l. p. 339.

(²) "Whan he made any ordinary judges, advocates or proctoures, he caused them to be openly named, requyringe the people and gyvyng them courage, if there were cause to accuse them, to prove the crime by open wytnesse: FORSEXE if they dyd not sufficiently prove it, and that it semed to be maliciose detraction, the accusour shulde forthwith be beheaded."—Sir T. Elliott, Image of Governauce, chap. 17.

³ "Pour quoy est-ce que Platon dit, que l'oraison est tempérée de noms et de verbes?—Mais advisons que nous ne prenions autrement les paroles de Platon que comme il les a dites: car il a dit que l'oraison estoit tempérée De ces deux parties, non Par ces deux parties; que nous ne facions la faulte que feroit celuy qui calomnieroit un autre pour avoir dit, que un oignement seroit composé de cire et de galbanum, alléguant qu'il auroit obmis à dire le feu et le vase, sans lesquels on ne scauroit mesler lesdites drogues: aussi semblablement si nous le reprenions pour autant qu'il auroit obmis à dire les conjonctions, les prépositions, et autres telles parties. Car le parler et l'oraison n'est composé De ces parties là, mais Par icelles, et non sans elles. Car comme celuy qui prononceroit battre, ou estre battu; ou d'ailleurs Socrates et Pythagoras, encore donneroit-il aucunement à entendre et à penser quelque chose: mais celuy qui profereroit Car ou De simplement et seulement, on ne pourroit imaginer qu'il entendist aucune chose ny aucun corps, ains s'il n'y a quelques autres paroles qui soient proferées quant et quant, elles ressembleront à des sons et des bruits vains sans aucune signification; d'autant que ny à par elles ny avec d'autres semblables, elles ne peuvent rien signifier. Mais à fin que nous conjoignons on meslions et assemblions tout en un, nous y adjoustons des prépositions, conjonctions, et articles, voulans en faire un corps de tout.—Comment donc pourra dire quelqu'un, ces parties-là ne servent-elles de rien à l'oraison? Quant à moy, je tiens qu'elles y servent autant comme le Sel à la viande, et l'eau à faire le Pain. Euenus sembloit dire que le which kind of pretty similes Philosophers and Grammarians seem to have vied with one another; and have often endeavoured to amuse their readers and cover their own ignorance, by very learnedly disputing the propriety of the simile, instead of explaining the nature of the Conjunction.

But, pray, have you any authority for the derivation of these words? Are not all former etymologists against you?

H.—Except in IF, and BUT (in one of its meanings), I believe they are all against me. But I am persuaded that all future etymologists, and perhaps some philosophers, will acknowledge their obligation to me. For these troublesome conjunctions, which have hitherto caused them so much mistaken and unsatisfactory labour, shall save them many an error and many a weary step in future. They shall no more expose themselves by unnatural forced conceits to derive the English and all other languages from the Greek, or the Hebrew; or some imaginary primæval tongue. The Particles of every language shall teach them whither to direct and where to stop their inquiries: for wherever the evident meaning and origin of the Particles of any language can be found, there is the certain source of the whole.

Feu estoit la meilleure Saulse du Monde; aussi sont ces Parties l' assaisonnement de nostre langage, ne plus ne moins que le feu et le Sel des breuvages et viandes, dont nous ne nous scaurions passer; excepté que nostre parler n' en a pas toujours nécessairement à faire: comme l' on peut dire du langage des Romains, duquel aujourd' huy tout le monde presque use; car il a osté presque toutes les prépositions excepté bien peu; et quant aux articles que l' on appelle, il n' en reçoit pas un tout seul, ains use de noms sans bordure, par manière de dire; et ne s'en fault pas esmerveiller, attendu qu' Homère à peu de noms prépose des articles, comme si c' étoient anses à des vases qui en eussent besoin, ou des pennaches sur des morions.—Or que les Dialecticiens aient plus besoin de conjonctions, que nuls autres hommes de lettres, pour la liaison et tissure de leurs propositions, ou les disjonctions d' icelles, ne plus ne moins que les cochiers ont besoin d' attelages pour atteler de front leur chevaux; ou comme Ulysses avoit besoin d' ozier en la caverne de Cyclops pour lier ses moutons; cela n' argue ni ne preuve pas que la conjonction soit autrement partie d' oraison, mais bien un outil propre à conjoindre selon qu' elle en porte nom, et à contenir et assembler non pas toutes choses, ains seulement celles qui ne sont pas simplement dites: si l' on ne vouloit dire que la Chorde ou courroye dont une balle seroit liée fust partie de la balle: ou la colle d' un papier ou d' un livre qui est collé; et les données et distributions des deniers partie du gouvernement: comme Demades disoit que les deniers que l' on distribuoit manuellement par teste à chasque citoyen d' Athènes, pour veoir les jeux, estoient la colle du gouvernement de l' estat populaire. Et quelle est la conjonction qui face de plusieurs propositions une, en les cousant et liant ensemble, comme le marbre fait le fer quand on le fond avec lui par le feu; mais pour cela le marbre n' est pas pourtant, ny ne l' appelle lon pas partie de fer; combien que ces choses-là qui entrent en une composition et qui sont fondues avec les drogues que l' on mesle, ont accoustumé de faire et de souffrir ne sçay quoi de commun, composé de tous les ingrédiens.—Quant aux prépositions on les peult accompagner aux pennaches ou autres Ornemens que lon met au dessus les habillemens de Testes, ou bien aux bases et soubassement que lon met au dessous des Statues; pour ce qu' elles ne sont pas tant parties d' oraison, comme alentour des parties."—Plutarch, Plutonic Questions.—9th. Amyot.

B.—Without a moment's reflection, every one must perceive that this assertion is too general and comprehensive. The mixture which is found in all cultivated languages; the perpetual accession of new words from affectation as well as from improvement, and the introduction of new Arts and Habits, especially in learned nations; and from other circumstances; forbid the deduction of the whole of a language from any one single source.

H.—Most certainly. And therefore when I say the whole, I must beg to be understood with those exceptions. And, that I may not seem to contradict myself when we shall hereafter come to treat of them, I beg you likewise to remember, that I by no means include in my assertion, the Abbreviations of language: for they are always improvements superadded by language in its progress; and are often borrowed from some other more cultivated languages. Whereas the original Mother-tongue is always rude and tedious, without those advantages of Abbreviation. And were he once more in being, I should not at all doubt of being able to convince even Junius himself (who with many others could so far mistake the course and progress of speech, as to derive an uncultivated from a cultivated language) that, instead of referring the Anglo-Saxon to his favourite Greek as its original, he must seek out (and I suppose he would easily find) a Parent for the latter.

But, I beg pardon, this is rather digressing from my purpose. I have nothing to do with the learning of mere curiosity:¹ nor am any further concerned with Etymology, than as it may serve to get rid of the false philosophy received concerning language and the human understanding. If you please, therefore, I will return to the Conjunctions I have derived; and, if you think it worth the while, we will examine the conjectures of other persons concerning them; and see whether I have not something better than the authorities you ask after in my favour.

¹ “ Il y a un point, passé lequel les recherches ne sont plus que pour

B.—I should be glad you would do so.

CHAPTER VIII.

ETYMOLOGY OF THE ENGLISH CONJUNCTIONS.

IF.

H.—IF and AN may be used mutually and indifferently to supply each other's place.

Besides having Skinner's authority for IF, I suppose that the meaning and derivation of this principal supporter of the Tripod of Truth,¹ are so very clear, simple, and universally allowed, as to need no further discourse about them.

Skinner says—"If (in agro Linc. Gif) ab A. S. Giſ, si. Hoc a verbo Giſan, dare, q. d. Dato."

Lye, in his edition of Junius, says—"Haud inseite Skinnerus, qui deduxit ab A. S. Giſan, dare, q. d. Dato."

GIſ is to be found not only, as Skinner says, in Lincolnshire, but in all our old writers. G. Douglas almost always uses Gif: once or twice only he has used If; once he uses la curiosité. Ces vérités ingénieuses et inutiles ressemblent à des étoiles, qui, placées trop loin de nous, ne nous donnent point de clarté."

—Voltaire, Sur la Société Royale et sur les Académies.

¹ See Plutarch Περὶ τοῦ Εἰ τοῦ ἐν Δελφοῖς.

Εν δὲ Διαλεκτικῇ δὴ πού μεγίστην ἔχει δύναμιν ὁ συναπτικός οὗτος συνδεσμός, ὅτε δὴ τὸ λογικώτατον σχηματίζων ἀξιωμα.—Τὸ γὰρ τεχνικὸν καὶ λογικόν, ὥσπερ εἰρηται, γνώσις ἀκολουθίας, τὴν δὲ προσληψὶν ἢ αἰσθησις τῷ λόγῳ διδῶσιν. ὅθεν εἰ καὶ αἰσχρὸν εἶπεν, οὐκ ἀποτρεψομαι τοῦτο εἶναι τὸν τῆς ἀληθείας τριπόδα τὸν λόγον, ὃν τὴν τοῦ λεγοντος πρὸς τὸ προηγουμένον ἀκολουθίαν θεμελίως, εἰτα προσλαβὼν τὴν ὑπαρξίν, ἐπαγει τὸ συμπέρασμα τῆς ἀποδείξεως. Τὸν οὖν Πυθίον εἰ δὴ μουσικὴ τε ἡδεταί, καὶ κυκνῶν φωναὶς καὶ κιθάρᾳς ψοφοῖς, τί θαυμαστόν ἐστι Διαλεκτικῆς

GEWE, and once GIFFIS, and sometimes IN CASE and IN CAIS for GIF.

"GIF luf be vertew, than is it leful thing;
GIF it be vice, it is your undoing."

Douglas, Prol. to 4th boke, at p. 95.

"Thooht sum wald swere, that I the text haue waryit,
Or that I haue this volume quite myscaryit,
Or threpe planelie, I come neuer nere hand it,
Or that the werk is werst that euer I fand it,
Or git GEWE Virgil stude wele before,
As now war tyme to schift the werst ouer skore."

Douglas, Pref. p. 11.

"Be not ouer studyous to spy ane mote in myn e,
That in your awin ane ferrye bot can not se,
And do to me, as ze wald be done to;
Now hark schirris, thare is na mare ado:
Quha list attend, GYFFIS audience and draw nere."

Douglas, Pref. p. 12.

Chaucer commonly uses IF; but sometimes YEUE, YEF, and YF.

"Lo here the letters selid of thys thyng
That I mote beare in all the haste I may;
YEUE ye wold ought unto your sonne the kyng,
I am your seruaunt bothe nyght and day."

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale, fol. 22. p. 1. col. 2.

"And therefore he of full auisement
Nolde neuer write in non of his sermons
Of suche unkynde abhominacions,
Ne I ne wol non reherce, YEF that I may."

Chaucer, Man of Lawes, prol. fol. 18. p. 2. col. 1.

"She was so charytable and so pytous
She wolde wepe YF that she sawe a mous
Caught in a trappe, if it were deed or bledde."

Prol. to Canterbury Tales. Prioress.

And it is to be observed that in Chaucer and in other old φιλικὰ τοῦτο ἀσπαζέσθαι τοῦ λόγου τὸ μέρος καὶ ἀγαπᾶν, ὡς μαλίστα καὶ ἐλλισίᾳ προσχωμένους ἔρα τοῦ φιλοσοφικοῦ.

¹ [In this instance, however, it is plain that GIFFIS is not used conjunctively: "Give audience and draw near." For information upon the Gothic, Teutonic, and Norse representatives of If and Gif, see Additional Note.—Ed.]

writers, the verb to GIVE suffers the same variations in the manner of writing and pronouncing it, whether used conjunctively or otherwise: as does also the Noun derived from it.

“ And after on the daunce went
 Largesse, that set al her entent
 For to ben honorable and free,
 Of Alexanders kynne was she,
 Her most joye was ywis
 Whan that shre YAFE, and sayd : Haue this.
 Not Auarice the foule caytyfe
 Was halfe to grype so ententyfe
 As Largesse is to YEUE and spende,
 And God alway ynowe her sende,
 So that the more she YAVE awaye
 The more ywis she had alwaye :
 Great loos hath Largesse, and great prise,
 For both wyse folke and unwyse
 Were wholly to her bandon brought,
 So wel with YEFTES hath she wrought.”

Chaucer, Romaunt of the Rose, f. 125. p. 2. c. 1.

“ A wyfe is Goddes YEFTE verely ;
 Al other maner YEFTES hardely
 As londes, rentes, pasture, or commune,
 Or mouables, all ben YEFTES of fortune
 That passen, as a shadowe on a wall ;
 But dred nat, YF playnly speke I shall,
 A wyfe wol laste and in thyn house endure
 Wel lenger than the lyst parauenture.”

Chaucer, Marchauntes Tale, fol. 28. p. 2. col. 2.

“ FORGIFF me, Virgill, GIF I thee offend.”

Douglas, Pref. p. 11.

“ GIF us thy ansueir, quharen we sal depend.”

Douglas, 3d booke, p. 70.

“ And suffir Tyriamis, and all Liby land
 Be GIF in dowry to thy son in hand.”

Douglas, 4th booke, p. 103.

“ In the mene tyme, of the nycht wache the cure
 We GIF Messapus.”—Douglas, 9th booke, p. 280.

In Henry the VIIth's will, dated 1509, you will also find YEVE used where we now employ GIVE; and in the time of Queen Elizabeth it was written in the same manner.

"YEVOEN under our signet."—Lodge's Illustrations. The Queen to Sir W. Cecil and Dr. Wotton, vol. i. p. 843.

"YEVEN under our seale of our order, the first day of April 1566, the eight year of our reiga."—Lodge's Illustrations. Queens Elizabeth to the Erle of Sherourbury, vol. 1. p. 362.

GIN¹ is often used in our Northern counties and by the Scotch, as we use IF or AN: which they do with equal propriety and as little corruption: for GIN is no other than the participle Given, Gien, Gi'n. (As they also use Gie for Gire, and Gien for Given, when they are not used conjunctively.) And Hoc dato is of equal conjunctive value in a sentence with Da hoc.

"Then wi' his spear he turn'd hir owre,
O GIN hir face was wan!
He turn'd her owre and owre again,
O GIN hir skin was whyte."

Percy's Reliques, vol. i. Edom o' Gordon.

Even our Londoners often pronounce Give and Given in the same manner: As,

"Gi' me your hand."
"I have Gi'n it him well."

So Wycherly, Love in a Wood, act 5.

"If my daughter there should have done so, I wou'd not have gi'n her a groat."

AN.

I do not know that AN has been attempted by any one except S. Johnson: and, from the judicious distinction he has made between Junius and Skinner,² I am persuaded that he

¹ Ray says—"Gin, Gif, in the old Saxon is Gif; from whence the word If is made per aphæresin literæ G. Gif, from the verb Gifan, dare; and is as much as Dato."

² "Junius appears to have excelled in extent of learning, and Skinner in rectitude of understanding. Junius was accurately skilled in all the northern languages; Skinner probably examined the antient and remoter dialects only by occasional inspection into dictionaries: But the learning of Junius is often of no other use than to show him a track by which he may deviate from his purpose; to which Skinner always presses forward by the shortest way. Skinner is often ignorant, but will be the first person to relinquish his own conjecture:¹ especially when he notices his own self-contradiction: for after having (under the article AN) told us that “AN is a contraction of And if ;” and given the following instance,

————— “ Well I know
The clerk will ne’er wear hair on’s face that had it.
—— He will AN’ IF he live to be a man——” he very truly (under the article AND) says—“In And if, the And is redundant; and is omitted by all later writers.” As ————— “ I pray thee, Launce,

AN’ IF thou seest my boy, bid him make haste.”

The author of “Criticisms on the Diversions of Purley,”² who publishes under the feigned name of CASSANDER, (I suppose, because he was born in the island of Cadsan, in Dutch Flanders) and who is a Teacher and Preacher in the City of Norwich, thus elegantly amuses his readers. Pages 36, 37, 38.

“I have known a public speaker who would now and then take a survey of his audience, and call out (if he espied any drooping noddles or falling jaws)—Brethren, I will tell you a story.—As I think this an excellent method of rousing the attention of a reader or hearer, for ever inclined to grow drowsy when the subject is so, I shall not scruple to make use of it upon this occasion.

“It is well known that the Boors in Friesland, one of the United Provinces, have so far retained ancient customs, as to be, in dress, language, and manners, exactly the same people which they were five hundred years ago; a circumstance that induced Junius the son to pay them a visit, and to pass a few months among them. In a tour I made to that country some never ridiculous: Junius is always full of knowledge; but his variety distracts his judgment, and his learning is very frequently disgraced by his absurdities.”—Preface to Dictionary.

¹ Immediately after the publication of my letter to Mr. Dunning, I was informed by Mr. S. (an intimate friend of Dr. Johnson) that I was not mistaken in this opinion; Dr. Johnson having declared, that if he lived to give a new edition of his Dictionary, he should certainly adopt my derivations.

² [The late Rev. John Bruckner, for many years the much-esteemed minister of the Dutch church, and of the Walloon or French church in Norwich. See Additional Notes.—Ed.]

years ago, I was at a gentleman's house, from which I made frequent excursions into the inner part of the province. In one of these I was obliged to take the first sheltering place in my way, being overtaken by a violent shower. It was a farmhouse, where I saw several children: and I shall never forget the speech which one of them, an overgrown babe, made to his mother. He was standing at her breast; and after he had done with one, I heard him say to her—Trientjen, yan my t'oor—i. e. Kate, give me t'other.—I little thought at the time, I should have so good an opportunity of making use of the story as I have at present."

This story of the babe, he says, is certainly in my favour. I think it is decisively.

But the Critic proceeds—"But we should not fancy that words exist, or must have existed, because, having adopted a certain method of finding out origins, we cannot possibly do without them. I have been looking out with some anxiety for the Anglo-Saxon verb Ānan, but can get very little information about it. I find, indeed, in King Alfred's Will, the following article:—ÆEþur ic an Eadþarðe minum eldŕa ŕuna.—First I give to Edward my eldest son—And from the expression Ic an, it should seem as if there really existed such a verb in the Anglo-Saxon as Ānan. But as this is the only sign of life it has given, as one may say, for these thousand years, I am inclined to look upon that sign as being rather equivocal, and suspect that the true reading of the Will is, not Ic an, but Ic un, from Unnan, cedere, concedere; this last verb being common in the Anglo-Saxon, and nothing more easy than to mistake an u for an a, in that language, as well as in English. However, as I have not seen hitherto any manuscript, on whose authority I can ground the justness of my conjecture, I do not give it you as any thing certain; and if you persist in giving the preference to the old reading, the story of the babe is certainly in your favour; for there is as little difference between Ān and Yan, as between Un and Ān. With me it will remain a matter of doubt, whether there ever existed such a verb as Ānan, the same in signification, and yet different in origin, with Gīpan. It is by no means probable, that a people, who had hardly a conveyance for one idea in a thousand, should have procured two such noble conveyances for one single idea. This is a piece of luxury, which even the most civilized nations seldom allow themselves.”¹

To this I answer, that Anan, Annan, and Unnan, are all one and the same word differently spelled (as almost all the Anglo-Saxon and old English words are) because differently pronounced.

But “he has been looking for Anan, he says, with some anxiety, and can get very little information about it.” If he looks so carelessly when he is anxious, we may pretty well guess with how much accuracy he looks upon other occasions. I will relieve his anxiety. I know he has Lye’s collection of Anglo-Saxon words before him (for he quotes it in his 66th page); let him put on his spectacles and open the book: he will there find Anan, and Annan, with references to places where they are used. And if, after that, he should still continue anxious, I will furnish him with more.

“Nothing, he says, is more easy than to mistake an u for an a, in that language as well as in the English.”—It is not so easy to mistake the Anglo-Saxon character U for Æ, or u for a; as it is to mistake the written English character u for a.

It is not true that any people are now, or ever were, in the condition he represents the Anglo-Saxons; viz. of having “hardly a conveyance for one idea in a thousand;” unless he means to include in his expression of, one idea, each man’s particular perception. No. Cheer up, Cassander: your lot is not peculiar to yourself: for the people who have the poorest and scantiest language, have yet always many more words than ideas. And I leave the reader to judge whether to have two words for one idea, be “a piece of luxury which even the most civilized nation seldom allows itself.”

UNLESS.

Skinner says—“Unless, nisi, præter, præterquam, q. d.

¹ Reprehensor audaculus verborum—qui perpauca eademque a vulgo protrita legerat, habebatque nonnullas disciplinæ grammaticæ inauditiunculas, partim rudes inchoatasque, partim non probas; easque quasi pulverem ob oculos, quum adortus quemque fuerat, adspergebat;—neque rationem verbum hoc, inquit, neque auctoritatem habet.

One-less, i. e. uno dempto seu excepto: vel potius ab Onlejan, dimittere,¹ liberare, q. d. Hoc dimisso."

It is extraordinary, after his judicious derivation of IF, that Skinner should have been at a loss about that of UNLESS; especially as he had it in a manner before him: For Onlej, dimitte, was surely more obvious and immediate than Onlejed, dimisso.—As for One-less, i. e. uno dempto seu excepto, it is too poor to deserve notice.

So low down as in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, this conjunction was sometimes written Oneles and Onelesse. And this way of spelling it, which should rather have directed Skinner to its true etymology, might perhaps contribute to mislead him to the childish conjecture of One less, uno dempto.—But in other places it is written purely ONLES; and sometimes ONLESSE.

Thus, in the Trial of Sir John Oldcastle, An. 1413,

"It was not possible for them to make whole Christes cote without seme, ONLESSE certeyn great men were brought out of the way."

So Thomas Lupset, in the early part of Henry the VIIIth's reign;

"But alway, sister, remembre that charitie is not perfect ONLES that it be burninge."—Treatise of Charitie, p. 8.

"This petition cannot take effect ONLES man be made like an aungel."—Ibid. p. 66.

"Fayth cannot be perfect, ONLES there be good workes."—A compendious Treatise teachynge the Waye of Dyinge well, p. 160.

"The more shamfully that men for the most parte feare to die, the greater profe there is, that such extreme poyntes of feare against all shame shuld not in so many dayly appere, whan death approcheth, ONLES bi natur some just feare were of the same."—Ibid. p. 166.

In other places Lupset spells it ONELES and ONLESSE.

So in The Image of Governance by Sir T. Elliott, 1541,

"Men do feare to approche unto their soverayne Lorde, ONELES they be called."

"This noble empire is lyke to falle into extreme ruyne and perpetuall infamy, ONELESSE your moste excellent wysedomes wyll dilygently and constantly prepare yourselves to the certayne remedy."

So in—A Necessary Doctrine and Erudition for any Chris-

¹ [Mr. Bruckner says, "it is not susceptible of this sense: it is solvere."—ED.]

ten Man, set furthe by the Kynges Majestie of Englande.
1543.

“ONLES ye beleve, ye shall not understande.”

“No man shall be crowned, ONLES he lawfully fight.”

“Neyther is it possible for any man, ONELESSE this holy spirite shall first illumine his hart.”

“True honour shall be gyven to none, ONELES he be worthy.”

“Who can have true penance, ONLES he beleve stedfastly that God is?”

“Who so ever doth forsake his lawful wyfe, ONELES it be for adultery, commytteth adulterye in so doyng.”

“They be bound so to do, ONLES they se reasonable cause to the contrary.”

“The soule waxeth feble, ONLESSE the same be cherished.”

“In vayne, ONLESSE there were some facultie.”

“It cannot begynne, ONELESSE by the grace of God.”

So in the “Supplication to King Henry VIII.” by Barnes.

“I shall come to the councell when soever I bee called, ONLES I be lawfully let.”

So in the “Declaration against Joye,” by Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester.

“No man commeth to me, ONLESSE my father draweth hym.”

“Can any man further reple to this carpenter, ONLES a man wolde saye, that the carpenter was also after the thefe hymselfe?”

“For ye fondely *improve*¹ a conclusion which myght stande and be

¹ To improve (i. e. to censure, to impeach, to blame, to reprove.) A word perpetually used by the authors about Shakespeare's time, and especially in religious controversy.—“Whereas he hath spoken it by his own mouth, that it is not good for man to be alone, they have improved that doctrine and taughte the contrarye.”—The Actes of English Votaries by Ihon Bale. Dedicated to Edward the 6th. 1550.

“A wonderful thyng, that this shoulde be cryed lawful in their cathedrall church with ryngyng, syngyng, and sensyng, and in their yelde halle condemned for felony and treason. Ther did they worshyp it in their scarlet gownes with cappe in hande, and here they improved it with scornes and with mockes, grennyng upon her lyke termagauntes in a playe.”—Actes of English Votaries.

The word is taken by us from the French, who used it and still continue to use it in the same meaning.—“Elles croient que le corps et le sang sont vraiment distribués à ceux qui mangent ; et improvent ceux qui enseignent le contraire.”—Bossuet des Variat. des Eglises Prot.

“Ils sont indignes de jamais comprendre ces sortes de beautés, et true, with your fonde paradox of only fayth justifieth, ONLESSE in teaching ye wyl so handel the matter, aa, &c."

"We cannot love God, ONLES he prepareth our harte and geve us that grace; no more can we beleve God, ONLESSE he giveth us the gift of belefe."

"In every kynde the female is commonly barren, ONLESSE it conceyvethe of the male; so is concupyscence barren and voyde of synne, ONLESSE it conceyve of man the agreymente of his free wyll."

"We may not properly saye we apprehend justification by fayth, ONLESSE we wolde call the promisse of God, &c."

"Such other pevishe wordes as men be encombred to heare, ONLES they wolde make Goddes worde the matter of the Devylles strife."

"Who can wake out of synne, WITHOUT God call him; and ONLESSE God hath given eares to heare this voyce of God? How is any man beyng lame with synne, able to take up his couche and walke, ONLESSE God sayeth, &c.?"

So in the "Answere to Fekenham touchinge the Othe of the Supremacy," by Horne, Bishop of Winchester.

"I coule not choose, ONLES I woulde shawe myselfe overmuch unkinde unto my native cuntry, but take pence in hande and shape him a ful and plaine answere, without any curiositie."

"The election of the pope made by the clergie and people in those daies, was but a vaine thing, ONLES the emperour or his lieutenant had confirmed the same."

sont condamnés au malheur de les improuver, et d'être improuvés aussi des gens d'esprit."—Lettres de Bussy Rabutin, tom. 4, p. 278.

"La bourgeoisie de Genève a droit de faire des représentations dans toutes les occasions où elle croit les loix lésées, et où elle improove la conduite de ses magistrats."—Rousseau, vol. 2, p. 440.

"Je ne pouvois en effet me dissimuler qu'en improuvant les travaux qu'on venoit de faire; ceux qui les avoient ordonnés en rejetteroient le blâme sur les deux architectes."—Mémoires du Baron de Tott, tom. 2, p. 123.

"Arrêtons-nous sur les inculpations faites à Roland dans cette acte d'accusation, qui sera la honte du siècle et du peuple qui a pu, ou l'approuver, ou ne pas hautement l'improuver."—Observations par Amar.

The expression in Hamlet (act 1, sc. 1.)—"Of unimproved mettle hot and full"—ought not to have given Shakespeare's commentators any trouble: for unimproved means unimpeached; though Warburton thinks it means "unrefined;" Edwards, "unproved;" and Johnson (with the approbation of Malone) "not regulated nor guided by knowledge or experience:" and in his Dictionary he explains it to be "not taught, not meliorated by instruction."

"The pope would not consecrate the elect bishop, ONLES he had first license therto of the emperour."

"No prince, no not the emperour himselfe, should be present in the counsell with the cleargie, ONLES it were when the principall pointes of faith were treated of."

"He sweareth the Romaines that they shall never after be present at the election of any pope, ONLES they be compelled thereunto by the emperour."

"Who maketh no mencion of any priest there present, as you untruely report, ONLES ye will thinke he meant the order, whan he named the faction of the Pharisees."

"So that none should be consecrate, ONLESSE he were commended and investured bishop of the kinge."

"And further to commaunde the newe electe pope to forsake that dignitie unlawfully come by, ONLESSE they woulde make a reasonable satisfaction."

"That the pope might sende into his dominions no legate, ONLESSE the kinge shoulde sende for him."

"What man, ONLESSE he be not well in his wittes, will say that, &c."

"To exercise this kinde of jurisdiction, neither kinges nor civill magistrates may take uppon him, ONLESSE he be lawfully called."

"That from hencefoorth none shoulde be pope, ONELESSE he were created by the consent of the emperour."

"Ye cannot finde so muche as the bare title of one of them, ONELESSE it be of a bishoppe."

So in the "Whetstone of Witte," by Robert Recorde, 1557.

"I see moare menne to acknowledge the benefite of number, then I can espie willyng to studie to attaine the benefites of it. Many praise it, but fewe dooe greatly practise it; ONLESSE it bee for the vulgare practice concernyng Merchaundes trade."

"Yet is it not accepted as a like flatte, ONLES it be referred to some other square number."

I believe that William Tyndall, our immortal and matchless translator of the Bible, was one of the first who wrote this word with an u; and, by the importance and merit of his works, gave course to this corruption in the language.¹

¹ Shakespeare, in Othello, act 2, sc. 3, writes,

"What's the matter,
That you Unlace your reputation thus,
And spend your rich opinion for the name
Of a night brawler?"

"The scripture was geven, that we may applye the medicine of the scripture, every man to his own sores, UNLESSE then we entend to be idle disputers and braulers about vaine wördes, ever gnawing upon the bitter barke without, and never attayning unto the sweete pith within, &c."—Prod. before the 5 b. of Moses.

"My thoughts have no veines, and yet UNLES they be let blood I shall perish."—Endimion. By John Lilly, act 1. sc. 1.

"His frendes thought his learning theire sufficient (UNLES he should proceed Doctor and professe some one studie or science.)"—Lord Burley's Life in Peck's Desiderata Curiosa, vol. 1. pag 4.

"No man's cattell shall be questioned as the companies, UNLES such as have been entrusted with them or have disposed of them without order."—Articles signed and sealed by the Commissioners of the Councill of State for the Commonwealth of England the twelveth day of March, 1651.

I do not know that Onley is employed conjunctively by the Anglo-Saxon writers, as we use Unless; (though I have no doubt that it was so used in discourse;) but instead of it, they frequently employ nýmðe or nemðe: (which is evidently the imperative ným or nem of nýman or neman, to which is subjoined ðe, i.e. That.) And nýmðe—Take away that—may very well supply the place of—Onley (ðe expressed or understood)—Dismiss that.

LES, the imperative of Lejan (which has the same meaning as Onlejan), is likewise used sometimes by old writers instead of UNLES.

"And thus I am constreint, als nere as I may,
To hald his verse, and go nane uthir way;
Les sum historie, subtell worde, or ryme,
Causis me mak degressioun sum tyme."

G. Douglas. Preface.

In a note on this passage S. Johnson says—"Slacken or loosen. Put in danger of dropping; or, perhaps, strip of its ornaments." And in his Dictionary he says,—"To make loose; to put in danger of being lost.—Not in use." But he gives no reason whatever for this interpretation. I believe that Unlace in this passage means—"You UNLES or ONLES your reputation," from the same verb Onlejan.

¹ It is too singular to be left unnoticed, that the ancient Romans used Nemut, instead of Nisi. For which Festus cites Cato de Potestate Trib.; but the passage is lost.

————— “Gif he
Commyttis any tressoun, suld he not de ;
LES than his prince of grete humanite
Perdoun his fault for his long trew service.”

G. D. Prol. to 10th book.

“Sterff the behuffis, LES than thou war unkynd
As for to leif thy brothir desolate.”

G. D. Ænead, 10th book.

In the same manner it is used throughout Ben Jonson.

“LESS learn’d Trebatius Censure disagree.”—Poetaster.

“First hear me—Not a syllable, LESS you take.”

Alchymist, act 3. scene 5.

“There for ever to remain

LESS they could the knot unstrain.”—Masque.

“To tell you true, ’tis too good for you,

LESS you had grace to follow it.”—Barthol. Fair.

“But will not bide there, LESS yourself do bring him.”

Sad Shepherd.¹

¹ It is this same imperative LES, placed at the end of nouns and coalescing with them, which has given to our language such adjectives as hopeless, restless, deathless, motionless, &c. i. e. Dismiss hope, rest, death, motion, &c.

The two following lines of Chaucer in the Reve’s Tale, in Wylliam Thynne’s edition,

“And when the horse was lose, he gan to gon Towarde the fen, there wyldre mares rynne”— are thus printed in Mr. Tyrwhit’s edition,

“And whan the hors was laus, he gan to gon
Toward the fen, ther wilde mares renne.”

I am to suppose that Mr. Tyrwhit is justified for this reading by some manuscript ; and that it was not altered by himself merely for the sake of introducing “Laus, Island. and the Consuetud. de Beverley,” into his Glossary.

“LAUS (says Mr. Tyrwhit) adj. Sax. Loose. 4062. Laus, Island. Solutus. This is the true original of that termination of adjectives so frequent in our language, in les or less. Consuetud. de Beverley. M.S. Harl. 560.—Hujus sacrilegii emenda non erat determinata, sed dicebatur ab Anglis Botalaus, i. e. sine emenda.—So Chaucer uses Boteles, and other words of the same form ; as Detteles, Drinkeles, Gilteles, &c.”

I think, however, there will be very little doubt concerning this derivation, when it is observed that we say indifferently either sleep-less, or without-sleep, &c. i. e. Dismiss sleep or Be-out sleep, &c. And had not these words les and without been thus convertible, Shakespeare would have lost a pun.—“Thrice have I sent him (says Glendower)

“ You must no more aim at those easie accesses, LESS you can do't in air.”
Beaumont and Fletcher. Beggars Bush, act 5, sc. 2.

You will please to observe that all the languages which have a correspondent conjunction to Unless, as well as the manner in which its place is supplied in the languages which have not a conjunction correspondent to it, all strongly justify my derivation. The Greek Εἰ μὴ. The Latin Nisi. The Italian Se non. The Spanish Sino. The French Si non. All mean Be it not. And in the same manner do we sometimes supply its place in English either by But, Without, Be it not, But if, &c.

weather-beaten home, and bootless back.” “ Home without boots (replies Hotspur) and in foul weather too ! How scapes he agues in the Devil's name !” So, for those words where we have not by habit made the coalescence, as the Danish Folkelös and Halelös, &c. we say in English Without people, Without a tail, &c. But any one may, if he pleases, add the termination less to any noun : and though it should be unusual, and heard for the first time, it will be perfectly understood. Between Wimborn-minster and Cranbourn in Dorsetshire, there is a wood called Harley : and the people in that country have a saying perfectly intelligible to every English ear.—“ When Harley is hare-less, Cranbourn whore-less, and Wimborn poor-less, the world will be at an end.” And it is observable, that in all the northern languages, the termination of this adjective in each language varies just as the correspondent verb, whose imperative it is, varies in that language.

	Termination.	Infin. of the Verb.
Goth.....	ΛAns ...	ΛAnsgan
A.S.	Lear	Leoran*
Dutch	Loos*	Lossen
German	Los	Lösen
Danish	Lös	Löser
Swedish	Lös	Lösa.

I must be permitted here to say, that I sincerely lament the principle on which Mr. Tyrwhit proceeded in his edition of Chaucer's tales. Had he given invariably the text of that manuscript which he judged to be the oldest, and thrown to the bottom the variorum readings with their authority ; the obligation of his readers (at least of such as myself) would indeed have been very great to him : and his industry, care, and fidelity would then have been much more useful to inquirers, than any skill which he has shown in etymology or the northern languages, were it even much greater than it appears to me to have been.

* [Mr. Bruckner states, that Mr. Tooke changes leran for leoran ; and that the Dutch imperative is not loos, but loss.—ED.]

“ Without profane tongues thou canst never rise,
Nor be upholden, Be it not with lies.”

M. Drayton. Leg. of R. D. of Normandy.

“ That never was there garden of such pryse,
But yf it were the very paradyse.”—Frankeleyn's Tale.

“ That knight he is a foul Paynim,
And large of limb and bone ;
And But if heaven may be thy speede,
Thy life it is but gone.”—Sir Cauline. Percy's Reliques.

Though it certainly is not worth the while, I am tempted here to observe the gross mistake Mr. Harris has made in the Force of this word ; which he calls an “ Adequate Preventive.”

His example is—

“ Troy will be taken, UNLESS the Palladium be preserved.”

“ That is (says Mr. Harris), This alone is sufficient to preserve it.”—According to the oracle, so indeed it might be ; but the word UNLESS has no such force.

Let us try another instance.

“ England will be enslaved UNLESS the House of Commons continues a part of the Legislature.”

Now, I ask, is this alone sufficient to preserve it? We who live in these times, know but too well that this very house may be made the instrument of a tyranny as odious and (perhaps) more lasting than that of the Stuarts. I am afraid Mr. Harris's Adequate Preventive will not save us. For, though it is most cruel and unnatural ; yet we know by woful experience that the Kid may be seethed in the mother's milk, which Providence appointed for its nourishment ; and the liberties of this country be destroyed by that very part of the Legislature, which was most especially appointed for their security.

An instance has been already given where IF is used as a preposition. In the following passage of Dryden, UNLESS is also used as a preposition ;

The commendation of Adversaries is the greatest triumph of a writer ; because it never comes UNLESS extorted.”

EKE.

Junius says—“ EAK, etiam. Goth. Ank. A.S. Eac. Al. Auch. D. Og. B. Ook. Viderentur esse ex inverso hai ; sed rectius petas ex proxime sequenti Ληκλν (Isl. Auka.)

A.S. Ecan. Eacan. Ican. Al. Auchon. D. Oge. B. Oecken.
Eacan vero, vel Auchon, sunt ab αεζειν, vel αυζειν addere, ad-jicere, augere."

Skinner says—"EKE. ab A.S. Eac. Leac. Belg. Oock.
Teut. Auch. Fr. Th. Ouch. Dan. Oc. etiam."

Skinner then proceeds to the verb,

"To EKE, ab A.S. Eacan. Leican. lecan. augere, adjicere.
Fr. Jun. suo more, deflectit a Gr. αυζειν. Mallem ab Eac, iterum, quod vide: quod enim augetur, secundum partes suas quasi iteratur et de novo fit."

In this place Skinner does not seem to enjoy his usual superiority of judgment over Junius. And it is very strange that he should chuse here to derive the verb Eacan from the conjunction Eac (that is, from its own imperative); rather than the conjunction (that is, the imperative) from the verb. His judgment was more awake when he derived IF or GIF from Līpan, and not Līpan from Līp; which yet, according to his present method, he should have done.

Perhaps it may be worth remarking, as an additional proof of the nature of this conjunction; that in each language, where this imperative is used conjunctively, the conjunction varies just as the verb does.

In Danish the conjunction is og, and the verb øger.

In Swedish the conjunction is och, and the verb öka.

In Dutch the conjunction is ook, from the verb oecken.

In German the conjunction is auch, from the verb auchon.

• In Gothic the conjunction is Ληκ, and the verb Ληκλν.

As in English the conjunction is Eke or Eak, from the verb Eacan.

YET. STILL.

I put the conjunctions YET and STILL here together; because (like If and An) they may be used mutually for each other without any alteration in the meaning of the sentences:
a circumstance which (though not so obviously as in these instances) happens likewise to some other of the conjunctions; and which is not unworthy of consideration.

According to my derivation of them both, this mutual interchange will not seem at all extraordinary: for YET (which is nothing but the imperative Get or Lýt, of Getan or Lýtan, obtinere) and STILL (which is only the imperative Stell or Steall, of Stellan or Steallian,¹ ponere) may very well supply each other's place, and be indifferently used for the same purpose.

ALGATE and even ALGATES, when used adversatively by Chaucer, I suppose, though so spelled, to mean no other than All-get.²

"For ALBEIT tarieng be noyful, ALGATE it is not to be reproued in *yeuyng*e of iugement, ne in vengeaunce takyng."—Tale of Chaucer, fol. 74. p. 2. col. 1.

"A great waue of the see cometh somtyme with so great a vyolence, that it drowneth the shyppe: and the same harme dothe sometyme the small dropes of water that entreth through a lytell creueys, in to the tymbre and in to the botome of the shyppe, yf men be so negligente that they discharge hem not by tymes. And therefore all though there be a difference betwixt these two causes of drowning, ALGATES the shyppe is drowned."³

The verb to get is sometimes spelled by Chaucer geate.

But I will repeat to you the derivations which others have given, and leave you to chuse between us.

Mer. Casaubon says—"Est, adhuc, Yet."

Junius says—"YET, adhuc. A.S. Lýt. Cymræis etwa, etto, significat, adhuc, etiam, iterum; ex est vel auðis."

Skinner says—"YET, ab A.S. Get, Geta, adhuc, modo. Teut. Jetzt, jam, mox."

Again he says—STILL, assidue, indesinenter, incessanter. Nescio an ab A.S. Till, addito tantum sibilo; vel a nostro et, credo, etiam A.S. As, ut, sicut, (licet apud Somnerum non occurrat) et eodem Til, usque, q.d. usque, eodem modo."

¹ Though this verb is no longer current in English, except as a Conjunction, yet it keeps its ground in the collateral languages.

In German and Dutch it is.....Stellen

In the Swedish.....Stilla

And in the Danish*Stiller*.

² [Skinner says, "ALGATES, semper, omnino, nihilominus, ab All & Gate, via, q. d. omnibus viis:" which explanation seems best to accord with the sense of various passages in which the word occurs, and is no doubt to be preferred to that which Mr. Tooke supposes.—ED.]

³ [i. e. "In any way—in either case—in all ways, the ship is drowned:"—" toujours le vaisseau est abîmé."—ED.]

ELSE.

This word ELSE, formerly written Alles, Alys, Alyse, Elles, Ellus, Ellis, Ells, Els, and now Else; is, as I have said, no other than Ȑler or Ȑlyr, the imperative of Ȑlejan or Ȑlyjan, dimittere.

Mr. Warton, in his History of English Poetry, vol. 1. p. 191 (without any authority, and in spite of the context, which evidently demands Else, and will not admit of Also) has explained ALLES in the following passage by Also.

“The Soudan ther he satte in halle;
He sent his messagers faste with alle,
To hire fader the kyng.
And seyde, hou so hit ever bi falle,
That mayde he wolde clothe in palle
And spousen hire with his ryng.
And *ALLES*¹ I swere withouten fayle
I chull hire winnen in pleye¹ battayle
With mony an heih lordyng.”

The meaning of which is evidently—“Give me your daughter, ELSE I will take her by force.”

It would have been nonsense to say,—“Give me your daughter, ALSO I will take her by force.”

“To hasten loue is thyng in veine,
Whan that fortune is there ageine.
To take where a man hath leue
Good is: and ELLES he mote leue.”

Gower, lib. 2. fol. 57. p. 1. col. 1.

“Withouten noyse or clatter yng of belles
Te Deum was our songe, and nothyng ELLES.”

Chaucer, Sompners Tale, fol. 43. p. 1. col. 1.

“Eschame young virgins, and fair damycellis,
Furth of wedlok for to disteyne your kellis;
Traist not all talis that wantoun wowaris tellis,
you to defloure purposyng, and not ELLIS.”

Douglas, Prol. to 4th boke, p. 97.

“And, bycause the derthe of things be suche as the soldyors be not able to lyue of theyr accustomed wages, which is, by the day, six pence .

¹ [The readings are elles;—pleyn: in Ritson's collection. The extracts from old English poems in the first edition of Warton are so inaccurate that no reliance can be placed in them. In the subsequent 8vo editions they have been collated and corrected by Mr. Price, and Sir F. Madden.—Ed.]

the foteman and nine pence th' horsman ; therfor we beseche your lordships to be meanes to the Queene's majestie, that order may be taken, eyther for th' encrease of theyr wages by the day, the foteman to eight-pence, and th' horsman to twelve pence, or ELLS to allow that at the pay daise they may, by their capteins or otherwise, haue some rewarde to counteruail the like somme."—The Council in the North to the Privy Council, 4th of Sept. 1557. Lodge's Illustrations.

N.B. "Wheat at this time was sold for four marks per quarter. Within one month after the harvest the price fell to five shillings."

"And eury man for his partie
A kyngdome hath to iustifie,
That is to sein his owne dome.
If he misrule that kyngdome,
He leseth him selfe, that is more,
Than if he loste ship and ore,
And all the worldes good with alle.
For what man that in speciall
Hath not him selfe, he hath not ELS,
No more the perles than the shels,
All is to him of o value."

Gower, lib. 8. fol. 185. p. 2. col. 2.

"Nede has no pere,
Him behoueth serue himselfe that has no swayn,
Or ELS he is a fole, as clerkes sayn."

Chaucer, Reues Tale, fol. 16. p. 1. col. 2.

Junius says—"ELSE, aliter, alias, alioqui. A.S. 'Elleþ. Al. Alles. D. Ellers."

Skinner says—"ELSE, ab A.S. Eller, alias, alioquin. Minshew et Dr. Thomas Hickes putant esse contractum a Lat. Alias, vel Gr. ἄλλως, nec sine verisimilitudine."

S. Johnson says—"ELSE, Pronoun, (Eller, Saxon) other, one besides. It is applied both to persons and things."

He says again—"ELSE, Adverb. 1. Otherwise. 2. Besides; except that mentioned."

THOUGH.

THO', THOUGH, THAH¹ (or, as our country-folks more purely pronounce it, THAF, THAUF, and THOF) is the imperative Ðaf

¹ See a ballad written about the year 1264, in the reign of Henry the third.

"Richard THAH thou be ever trichard, Tricthen shalt thou never more."

Percy's Reliques, vol. 2. p. 2.

or Ðaƿꝝ of the verb Ðaƿian or Ðaƿꝝan; to allow, permit, grant, yield, assent: And Ðaƿꝝ becomes Thah, Though, Thoug (and Thoch, as G. Douglas and other Scotch authors write it) by a transition of the same sort, and at least as easy, as that of Hawk from Ðaƿuc. And it is remarkable, that as there were originally two ways of writing the verb, either with the guttural G (Ðaƿꝝan) or without it (Ðaƿian): so there still continues the same difference in writing and pronouncing the remaining imperative of this same verb, with the guttural G (Though), or without it (Tho). In English the difference is only in the characters; but the Scotch retain in their pronunciation, the guttural termination.

In the earlier Anglo-Saxon the verb is written geðaƿꝝan. In a charter of William the conqueror it is written—ic nelle geðaƿian. And in a charter of Henry the first it is also written—ic nelle geðaƿian. But a charter of Henry the second has it—ic nelle geðaƿian.—See the Preface to Hickes's Thesaurus, p. 15, 16.

So that we thus have a sort of proof, at what time the f was dropped from the pronunciation of ðaƿian; (namely, about the reign of Henry the second;) and in what manner THAƿꝝic became THAF, and THAF became THAU or THO.

I reckon it not a small confirmation of this etymology, that our antient writers often used All be. All be it. All had. All should. All were. All give. How be it. Set. Suppose, &c. instead of Although.

"But AL BE that he was a philosophre,
Yet had he but lytel golde in cofre."

Chaucer, Prolog. to Canterb. Tales.

"Ye wote your selfe, she may not wedde two
At ones, though ye fyghten euer mo;
But one of you, ALL BE him lothe or lefe,
He mote go pype in an yue lefe."

Knyghtes Tale, fol. 5. p. 2. col. 2.

See also another ballad written in the year 1307, on the death of Edward the first.

"THAN mi tonge were mad of stel,
Ant min herte yzote of bras,
The godness myht y never telle
That with kyng Edward was."

Percy's Reliques, vol. 2. p. 10.

“ALBERT originally the King’s Bench be restrained by this Act to hold plea of any real action, yet by a mean it may ; as when removed thither, &c.”—Lord Coke.

“—I shall yeuen her sufficient answere,
And all women after for her sake,
That though they ben in any gylte itake,
With face bolde they shullen hem selue excuse,
And bere hem doun that wold hem accuse;
For lacke of answere, non of hem shull dyen;
ALL HAD he sey a thyng with both his eyen,
Yet shuld we women so visage it hardely,
And wepe and swere and chyde subtelly,
That ye shal ben as leude as gees.”

Chaucer, Marchauntes Tale, fol. 33. p. 1. col. 2.

“But rede that boweth down for euery blaste
Ful lyghtly cesse wynde, it wol aryse ;
But so nyl not an oke, whan it is caste
It nedeth me nought longe the forvyse,
Men shal reioysen of a great emprise
Atcheued wel, and stant withouten dout,
AL HAUE men ben the lenger there about.”

2d boke of Troylus, fol. 170. p. 2. col. 1.

“For I wol speke, and tel it the AL SHULDE I dye.”

Romaunt of the Rose, fol. 152. p. 2. col. 1.

“And I so loued him for his obeysaunce
And for the trouthe that I demed in his hert,
That if so were, that any thyng him smert
AL WERE it neuer so lyte, and I it wyst,
Methought I felt deth at my hert twist.”

Squiers Tale, fol. 27. p. 2. col. 1.

“ALLGYF England and Fraunce werethorow saught.”—Skelton.

“The Moor, HOWBEIT that I endure him not,
Is of a constant, loving, noble nature.”—Othello, act. 2. sc. 1.

“No wonder was, SUPPOSE in mynde that he
Toke her fygyre so soone, and Lo now why
The ydol of a thyng in case may be
So depe emprynted in the fantasy
That it deludeth the wyttes outwardly.”

Complaynt of Creseyde, fol. 204. p. 1. col. 2.

“In sere placis throw the ciete with thys
The murmour rais ay mare and mare, I wys,

And cleerar wax the rumour, and the dyn,
 So that, SUPPOIS¹ Anchises my faderis In
 With treis about stude secrete by the way,
 So bustuous grew the noyis and furious fray
 And ratling of thare armoure on the strete,
 Affrayit I glisnit of slepe, and sterte on fete."

Douglas, boke 2. p. 49.

"Eurill (as said is) has this ionell hint,
 About his sydis it brasin, or he stynt;
 Bot all for nocht, suppois the gold dyd glete."

Douglas, boke 9. p. 289.

"That scho might haue the copies of the pretendit writingis giuen in, quhilkis they haue diuerse tymes requirit of the Quene's maiestie and hir counsel, suppois thay haue not as yet obtenit the samin."—
Mary Queen of Scots.

N.B.—In the year 1788 I saw the same use of SUPPOSE for THOUGH, in a letter written by a Scotch officer at Guernsey, to my most lamented and dear friend the late Lieutenant General James Murray. The letter in other respects was in very good and common English.

"I feel exceedingly for Lord W. M., SUPPOSE I have not the honour of being personally acquainted with him."

I believe that the use of this word SUPPOSE for THOUGH is still common in Scotland.

The German uses Doch; the Dutch Doch and Dog; the Danish Dog and Endog; and the Swedish Dock; as we use Though: all from the same root. The Danish employs Skiont and Endskiondt; and the Swedish Ånskönt, for Though: from the Danish verb Skionner; and the Swedish verb, Skionja, both of which mean, to perceive, discern, imagine, conceive, suppose, understand.

As the Latin Si (if) means Be it: and Nisi and Sine (unless and without) mean Be not: so Etsi (although) means And be it.² The other Latin Conjunctions which are used for Although,

¹ ——— "QUANQUAM secreta parentis Anchisæ domus."

² It may not be quite needless to observe, that our conjunctions IF and THOUGH may very frequently supply each other's place, as—"THOUGH an host of men rise up against me, yet shall not my heart be afraid;" or, "IF an host of men, &c." So "THOUGH all men

(as, Quam-vis, Licet, Quantum-vis, Quam-libet,) are so uncorrupted as to need no explanation.

Skinner barely says—"THOUGH, ab A.S. Deah. Belg Doch, Belg. & Teut. Doch. etsi, quamvis."¹

BUT.

It was this word, BUT, which Mr. Locke had chiefly in view, when he spoke of Conjunctions as marking some "Stands, Turns, Limitations, and Exceptions of the mind." And it was the corrupt use of this One word (BUT) in modern English, for Two words (BOT and BUT) originally (in the Anglo-Saxon) very different in signification, though (by repeated abbreviation and corruption) approaching in sound, which chiefly misled him.

"BUT (says Mr. Locke) is a Particle, none more familiar in our language; and he that says it is a discretive Conjunction, and that it answers SED in Latin, or MAIS in French,² thinks he has sufficiently explained it. But it seems to me to intimate several relations the mind gives to the several propositions or parts of them, which it joins by this monosyllable.

"First—BUT to say no more :

"Here it intimates a stop of the mind, in the course it was going, before it came to the end of it.

"Secondly—I saw BUT two plants.

"Here it shows, that the mind limits the sense to what is expressed, with a negation of all other.

should forsake you, yet will not I;" or, "If all men should forsake you, &c."

¹ Though this word is called a conjunction of sentences, it is constantly used (especially by children and in low discourse) not only at the beginning, and between, but at the end of sentences.

"Pro. Why do you maintain your poet's quarrel so with velvet and good clothes? We have seen him in indifferent clothes ere now himself.

"Boy. And may again. But his clothes shall never be the best thing about him, THOUGH. He will have somewhat beside, either of humane letters or severe honesty, shall speak him a man, though he went naked."

[Relative to the word THOUGH, see Grimm. iii. 177, 285, &c., and Additional Notes.—ED.]

² It does not answer to Sed in Latin, or Mais in French; except only where it is used for Bot. Nor will any one word in any Language answer to our English BUT: because a similar corruption in the same instance has not happened in any other language.

“Thirdly—You pray ; BUT it is not that God would bring you to the true religion :

“Fourthly—BUT that he would confirm you in your own.

“The first of these BUTS intimates a supposition in the mind of something otherwise than it should be: the latter shews that the mind makes a direct opposition between that and what goes before it.

“Fifthly—All animals have sense, BUT a dog is an animal.

“Here it signifies little more, but that the latter proposition is joined to the former, as the Minor of a Syllogism.

“To these, I doubt not, might be added a great many other significations of this particle, if it were my business to examine it in its full latitude, and consider it in all the places it is to be found; which if one should do, I doubt whether in all those manners it is made use of, it would deserve the title of DISCRETIVE which Grammarians give to it.

“But *I intend not*¹ here a full explication of this sort of signs. The instances I have given in this one, may give occasion to reflect upon their use and force in language, and lead us into the contemplation of several actions of our minds in discoursing, which it has found a way to intimate to others by these Particles, some whereof constantly, and others in certain constructions, have the sense of a whole sentence contained in them.”

Now all these difficulties are very easily to be removed without any effort of the understanding: and for that very reason I do not much wonder that Mr. Locke missed the explanation: for he dug too deep for it. But that the Etymologists (who only just turn up the surface) should miss it, does indeed astonish me. It seems to me impossible, that any man who reads only the most common of our old English authors should fail to observe it.

Gawin Douglas, notwithstanding he frequently confounds the two words, and uses them often improperly, does yet

¹ “Essentiam finemque conjunctionum satis apte explicatum puto : nunc earum originem materiamque videamus. Neque vero Sigillatim percurrere omnes in Animo est.”—J. C. Scaliger.

The constant excuse of them all, whether Grammatists, Grammarians, or Philosophers; though they dare not hazard the assertion, yet they would all have us understand that they can do it; but non in animo est. And it has never been done.

(without being himself aware of the distinction, and from the mere force of customary speech) abound with so many instances, and so contrasted, as to awaken, one should think, the most inattentive reader.

“Bot thy werke shall endure in laude and glorie,
But spot or falt condigne eterne memorie.”—Pref. p. 3.

“Thoch Wylliams Caxtoun had no compatioun
Of Virgill in that buk he preyt in prois,
Clepan it Virgill in Eneados,
Quhilk that he sayis of Frensch he did translait,
It has nathing ado therwith, God wate,
Nor na mare like than the Deuil and sanct Austin.
Haue he na thank tharfore, BOT lois his pyne ;
So schamefully the storie did peruerte,
I reid his werk with harmes at my hert,
That sic ane buk, BUT sentence or ingyne,
Suld be intitult eftir the poete diuine.”—Pref. p. 5.

“I schrink not anys correkit for to be,
With ony wucht groundit on charite,
And glaidlie wald I baith inquire and lere,
And to ilk cunnand wicht la to myne ere ;
BOT laith me war, BUT uther offences or cryme,
Ane rural body suld intertrik my ryme.”—Pref. p. 11.

“BOT gif this ilk statew standis here wrocht,
War with your handis into the ciete brocht,
Than schew he that the pepil of Asia
BUT ony obstakill in fell battel suld ga.”—Booke 2. p. 45.

“This chance is not BUT Goddis willis went,
Nor it is not leful thyng, quod sche,
Fra hyne Creusa thou turs away wyth the,
Nor the hie governoure of the heuin aboue is
Will suffer it so to be, BOT the behuffis
From hens to wend full fer into exile,
And ouer the braid sey sayl furth mony a myle,
Or thou cum to the land Hisperia,
Quhare with soft coursis Tybris of Lydia
Rynnis throw the riche feildis of pepill stout ;
There is gret substance ordanit the BUT dout.”—Booke 2. p. 64.

“Vpoun sic wise vncertanlie we went
Thre dayes wilsum throw the mysty streme,
And als mony nyctes BUT sterneys leme,

That quhiddel was day or nycht vneth wist we.
 Bor at the last on the ferd day we so
 On fer the land appere, and hillis ryse,
 The smoky vapoure up casting on thare gyse.
 Doun fallis salis, the aris sone we span
 But mare abaid."—Booke 3. p. 74.

—"Bor gif the faitis, but pleid,
 At my plesure suffer it me life to leid,
 At my fre wil my workis to modify."—Booke 4. p. 111.

"Bor sen Apollo clepit Gryneus
 Grete Italie to seik commandis us,
 To Italie eik oraclis of Licia
 Admonist us but mare delay to ga
 Thare is my lust now and delyte at hand."—Booke 4. p. 111.

"Thou wyth thyr harmes ouerchargit me also,
 Quhen I fell fyrst into this rage, quod sche,
 Bor so to do my teris constrenyt the.
 Was it not lefull, allace, but company,
 To me but cryme allane in chalmer to ly?"—Booke 4. p. 119.

"Ane great eddir slidand can furth thraw,
 Eneas of the sycht abasit sum deile,
 Bor sche at the last with lang fard fare and wele
 Crepis amang the vescheil and conpis all,
 The drink, and eik the offerandis grete and small,
 Snokis and likis, syne ful the altaris left,
 And but mare harme in the graif enterit eft."—Booke 5. p. 130.

"Thare hartis on flocht, smytin with shame sum dele,
 Bor glaid and ioly in hope for to do wele,
 Rasis in thare breistis desyre of hie renowne:
 Syne but delay at the first trumpis sounne
 From thare marchis attanis furth thay spreit."—Booke 5. p. 132.

"Ane uthir mache to him was socht and sperit;
 Bor thare was nane of all the rout that sterit,
 Na durst presume mete that man on the land,
 With mais or burdoun, to debate hand for hand.
 Ioly and glaid therof baith all and sum,
 Into bargane wenyng for to ouercum,
 Before Eneas feite stude, but delay."—Booke 5. p. 140.

"The tothir answerd, Nowthir for drede nor boist,
 The luf of wourschip nor honoure went away is
 Bor certainly the dasit blude now on dayis

Waxis dolf and dull throw myne unweildy age,
 The cald body has mynyst my curage :
 Bot war I now as umquhile it has bene
 ging as gone wantoun woistare so strang thay wene, ge had I now sic goutheid, traistis me,
 BUT ony price I suld all reddy be :
 Na lusty bul me till induce suld nede,
 For nouthir I suld haue crauit wage nor mede.
 Quhen this was said he has BUT mare abade
 Tua kempis burdouns brocht, and before thaym laid."

Booke 5. p. 140.

"And fyrst to hym ran Acestes the kyng,
 And for compassioun has uphynt in feild
 His freynd Entellus unto him euin eild.
 Bot nowthir astonist nor abasit hereon,
 Mare egirly the vailgeant campion
 Agane to bargane went als hate as fyre :
 And ardently with furie and mekle boist
 Gan Dares cache, and driue ouer al the coist :
 Now with the richt hand, now with the left hand he Doublis dyntis, and BUT abade lete fle ;
 The prince Eneas than seand this dout,
 No langar suffir wald sic wraith procede,
 Nor feirs Entellus mude thus rage and sprede.
 Bot of the bargane maid end, BUT delay."—Booke 5. p. 143.

In nowmer war they BUT ane few menze,
 Bot thay war quyk, and valgeant in melle."—Booke 5. p. 153.

"Blyn not, blyn not, thou grete Troian Enee,
 Of thy bedis nor prayeris, quod sche :
 For BOT thou do, thir grete durris, BUT dred,
 And grislie gettis sall neuer warp on bred."—Booke 6. p. 164.

"On siclike wise as thare thay did with me,
 Grete goddis mot the Grekis recompens,
 Gif I may thig ane uengeance BUT offens.
 Bot say me this agane, freind, all togidder,
 Quhat auenture has brocht the leuand hidder?"
Booke 6. p. 182.

"How grete apperance is in him ; BUT dout,
 Tyll be of proues and ane vailgeant knycht :
 Bot ane blak sop of myst als dirk as nycht
 Wyth drery schaddow bylappis his hede."—Booke 6. p. 197.

"Nor mysknaw not the condiciouns of us
 Latyne pepyll and folkis of Saturnus,
 Unconstrenyt, not be law bound thertyll,
 Bot be our inclinacioun and fre wyll
 Iuste and equale, and BUT offensis ay,
 And reulit eftir the auld goddis way."—Booke 7. p. 212.

"Bot sen that Virgil standis BUT compare."

Prol. to Booke 9. p. 272.

"Qubidder gif the goddis, or sum spretis silly
 Mouis in our myndis this ardent thoctful fire,
 Or gif that enery mannish schrewit desyre
 Be as his god and genius in that place,
 I wat neuer how it standis, BOT this lang space
 My mynd mouis to me, here as I stand,
 Batel or sum grete thyng to tak on hand:
 I knaw not to quhat purpois it is drest.
 Bot be na way may I tak eis nor rest.
 Behaldis thou not so surelie BUT affray zone Rutulianis haldis thaym glaid and gay."—Booke 9. p. 281.

"His feris lukis about on euery side,
 To se quharfra the groundin dart did glide,
 Bot lo, as thay thus wouderit in effray,
 This ilk Nisus, wourthin proude and gay,
 And baldare of his chance sa with him gone,
 Ane uthir takill assayit he anone:
 And with ane sound smate Tagus BUT remede."

Booke 9. p. 291.

"Agane Encas can Tarquitus dres,
 And to reconuter Enee inflamyt in tene,
 Kest hym self in; BOT the tothir BUT fere
 Bure at hym mychtely wyth ane lang spere."

Booke 10. p. 337.

"Sic wourdis vane and unsemelis of sound
 Furth warpis wyde this Liger fulichelis:
 Bot the Troiane baroun unabasitlis
 Na wourdis preisis to render him agane;
 Bot at his fa let fle ane dart or flane,
 That hit Lucagus quhilke fra he felt the dynt,
 The schaft hinging in to his schield, BUT stynt
 Bad driue his hors and chare al fordwert streicht."

Booke 10. p. 338.

"Bot quhat awalis bargane or strang melle,
 Syne zeild the to thy fa, BUT ony why."

Prol. to Booke 11. p. 356.

“Than of his speich so wounderit war thay
 Kepit thare silence, and wist not what to say,
 Bot athir towart uthir turnis BUT mare,
 And can behald his fallow in ane stare.”—Booke 11. p. 364.

————“Lat neur demyt be
 The bustuousnes of ony man dant the,
 Bot that thy dochter, O thou fader gude,
 Unto gone wourthy prince of gentill blude
 Be geuin to be thy son in law, I wys,
 As he that wourthy sic ane wedlok is ;
 And knyt up pece BUT mare disseuerance,
 With all eternall band of alliaunce.”—Booke 11. p. 374.

“Turnus and thy cheif ciete haue I saue,
 Sa lang as that the fatis sufferit me,
 And quhil werde sisteris sa tholit to be :
 Bot now I se that young man haist BUT fale
 To mache in feild wyth fatis inequale.”—Booke 12. p. 412.

“On euery syde he has cassin his E;
 And at the last behaldis the ciete,
 Saikles of batal, fre of all sic stryffe,
 BUT pane or trauel, at quiet man and wyffe.
 Than of ane greter bargane in his entent
 All suddanly the fygure dyd emprent.
 And on ane litill mote ascendit in hye,
 Quhare sone forgadderit all the Troyane army,
 And thyck about hym flokkand can BUT baid,
 Bot nowthir scheild nor wappinnis down thay laid.”
Booke 12. p. 430.

————“Ha ! How,
 Sa grete ane storme or spate of felloun ire,
 Under thy breist thou rollis hait as fyre?
 Bot wirk as I the byd, and do away
 That wraith consauit BUT ony caus, I pray.”—Booke 12. p. 442.

The Glossarist of Douglas contents himself with explaining BOT by BUT.

The Glossarist to Urry's Edition of Chaucer says—“BOT for BUT is a form of speech frequently used in Chaucer to denote the greater certainty of a thing.”—This is a most inexcusable assertion: for I believe the place cited in the Glossary is the only instance (in this edition of Chaucer) where BOT is used; and there is not the smallest shadow of reason for forming even a conjecture in favour of this unsatisfactory assertion: unsatisfactory, even if the fact had been so; because it contains no explanation: for why should BOT denote greater certainty?

And here it may be proper to observe, that Gawin Douglas's language (where BOT is very frequently found), though written about a century after, must yet be esteemed more ancient than Chaucer's: even as at this day the present English speech in Scotland is, in many respects, more ancient than that spoken in England so far back as the reign of Queen Elizabeth.¹ So Mer. Casaubon (De vet. ling. Ang.) says of his time—"Scotica lingua Anglicâ hodiernâ purior."—Where by purior, he means nearer to the Anglo-Saxon.

So G. Hickes, in his Anglo-Saxon Grammar, (Ch. 3.) says—"Scoti in multis Saxonizantes."

But, to return to Mr. Locke, whom (as B. Jonson says of Shakespeare) "I reverence on this side of idolatry;" in the five instances which he has given for five different meanings of the word BUT, there are indeed only two different meanings:² nor could he, as he imagined he could, have added any other significations of this particle, but what are to be found in BOT and BUT as I have explained them.³

¹ This will not seem at all extraordinary, if you reason directly contrary to Lord Monboddo on this subject; by doing which you will generally be right, as well in this as in almost every thing else which he has advanced.

² "You must answer, that she was brought very near the fire, and as good as thrown in; or else that she was provoked to it by a divine inspiration. BUT, BUT that another divine inspiration moved the beholders to believe that she did therein a noble act, this act of her's might have been calumniated," &c.—Donne's Biadavaroç, part 2. distinct. 5. sect. 8.

In the above passage, which is exceedingly awkward, BUT is used in both it's meanings close to each other: and the impropriety of the corruption appears therefore in it's most offensive point of view. A careful author would avoid this, by placing these two BUTS at a distance from each other in the sentence, or by changing one of them for some other equivalent word. Whereas had the corruption not taken place, he might without any inelegance (in this respect) have kept the construction of the sentence as it now stands: for nothing would have offended us, had it run thus—"BOT, butan that another divine inspiration moved the beholders," &c.

³ S. Johnson in his Dictionary has numbered up eighteen different significations (as he imagines) of BUT: which however are all reducible to BOT and Be-utan.

BUT, in the first, third, fourth, and fifth instances, is corruptly put for Bot, the imperative of Botan :

In the second instance only it is put for Bute, or Butan, or Be-utan.¹

In the first instance—" To say no more," is a mere parenthesis: and Mr. Locke has unwarily attributed to BUT, the meaning contained in the parenthesis: for suppose the instance

¹ " I saw BUT two plants."

Not or Ne is here left out and understood, which used formerly to be inserted, as it frequently is still.

So Chaucer,

" Tel forth your tale, spareth for no man,
And teche us yong men of your practike.
Gladly (quod she) if it may you lyke.
But that I pray to all this company,
If that I speke after my fantasy,
As taketh not a grefe of that I say,
For myn entent is NOT BUT to play."—Wife of Bathes Prol.

" I ne usurpe not to haue founden this werke of my labour or of myne engyn, I NAM BUT a leude compylatour of the laboure of olde astrologiens, and haue it translated in myn englysshe."—Introduction to Conclusyons of the Astrolabye.

" Forsake I wol at home myn herytage,
And as I sayd, ben of your courte a page,
If that ye vouchesafe that in this place
Ye graunte me to haue suche a grace
That I may haue NAT BUT my meate and drinke,
And for my sustynauce yet wol I swynke."

" Yet were it better I were your wyfe,
Sithe ye ben as gentyl borne as I
And haue a realme NAT BUT faste by."

Ariadne, fol. 217. p. 1. col. 1. and 2.

We should now say—my intent is BUT to play.—I am BUT a compiler, &c.

[Webster says that the common people in America usually retain the negative in such cases. Lye erroneously explains Butan by solum, tantum, in Oros. 1. 1. pæp næpon butan tpezen. It should rather have been rendered by nisi;—Non erant nisi duo. It is true, indeed, that the negative and Butan together are equivalent to solum. The expressions "can but" and "cannot but," there evidently differ in signification. For Biutan, &c. (sine), see Grimm's Grammatik, iii. 263.—Ed.]

This omission of the negation before BUT, though now very common, is one of the most blameable and corrupt abbreviations of construction which is used in our language; and could never have obtained, but through the utter ignorance of the meaning of the word BUT. "There is not (says Chillingworth) so much strength required in the edifice as in the foundation; and if BUT wise men have the ordering of the build-had been this—" BUT to proceed."—Or this—" BUT, to go fairly through this matter."—Or this—" BUT, not to stop."

Does BUT in any of these instances intimate a stop of the mind in the course it was going? The truth is, that BUT itself is the furthest of any word in the language from "intimating a ing, they will make it much a surer thing, that the foundation shall not fail the building, than that the building shall not fall from the foundation. And though the building be to be of brick or stone, and perhaps of wood; yet it may be possibly they will have a rock for their foundation; whose stability is a much more indubitable thing, than the adherence of the structure to it."

It should be written—" If none but wise men."—But the error in the construction of this sentence will not excuse the present minister, if he neglects the matter of it. The blessings or execrations of all posterity for ever upon the name of PITT, (pledged as he is) will depend intirely upon his conduct in this particular.

The reader of this edition is requested to observe, that the above note is not inserted après coup; but was published in the first edition of this volume in 1786; when I was in possession of the following solemn, public engagement from Mr. Pitt, made to the Westminster DELEGATES in 1782:—

" SIR,

" I am extremely sorry that I was not at home when you and the other gentlemen from the Westminster Committee did me the honor to call. May I beg the favor of you to express that I am truly happy to find that the motion of Tuesday last has the approbation of such zealous friends to the public, and to assure the Committee that my exertions shall never be wanting in support of a measure, which I agree with them in thinking essentially necessary to the independence of Parliament, and to the liberty of the people.

" I have the honor to be, with great respect and esteem, Sir, your most obedient and most humble Servant,

" Lincoln's-Inn,

May 10.

W. PITT."

Although I had long known the old detestable maxim of political adventurers, (for Philip was no other)—" To amuse boys with playthings and men with oaths"—yet, I am not ashamed to confess, I, at that time, placed the firmest reliance on his engagement: and in consequence of my full faith and trust, gave to him and to his administration, most especially when it tottered and seemed overthrown (at the time of the Regency Bill in 1788), a support so zealous and effectual, as to draw repeatedly from himself and his friends the warmest acknowledgments.

This letter was produced by me upon my trial at the Old Bailey in the year 1794: when fidelity to the sentiments it contains was seriously and unblushingly imputed to me as High Treason. The original of this letter Mr. Pitt, upon his oath, to my astonishment acknowledged to be in his own handwriting; although every trace of DELEGATION was totally effaced from his memory.

stop." On the contrary it always intimates something MORE,¹ something to follow: (as indeed it does in this very instance of Mr. Locke's; though we know not what that something is, because the sentence is not completed.) And therefore whenever any one in discourse finishes his words with BUT, the question always follows—BUT what?

So that Shakespeare speaks most truly as well as poetically, when he gives an account of BUT, very different from this of Mr. Locke:

"Mess. Madam, he's well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mess. And friends with Cæsar.

Cleo. Thou art an honest man.

Mess. Cæsar and he are greater friends than ever.

Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me.

¹ In the French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch, and several other dead and living languages, the very word MORE is used for this conjunction BUT.

The French antiently used MAIS, not only as they now do for the conjunction MAIS; but also as they now use plus or d'avantage,—

Y puis-je Mais?

Je n'en puis Mais, are still in use among the vulgar people; in both which expressions it means more. So Henry Estienne uses it;

"Sont si bien accoustumez à ceste syncope, ou plutost apocope, qu'ils en font quelquesfois autant aux dissyllabes, qui n'en peuvent MAIS." H. E. de la Précellence du Langage François, p. 18.

"MAIS vient de magis (j'entens mais pour d'avantage.)"—Id. p. 131.

"Hélas! il n'en pouvoit MAIS, le pauvre prince, ni mort, ny vivant."—Brantome.

"Enfin après cent tours aiant de la manière Sur ce qui n'en peut MAIS déchargé sa colère."

Moliere, Ecole des Femmes, a. 4. sc. 6.

In the same manner the Italians;

"Io t' ho atato, quanto ho potuto: sì ch' io non so, ch' io mi ti possa piu atare: E però qui non ha MA che uno compenso. Comincia a piangere, e io piangeroe con teco insieme."—Cento Novelle. Nov. 35.

"Fue un signore, ch' avea uno giullare in sua corte, e questo giullare l' adorava sicome un suo Iddio. Un altro giullare vedendo questo, si gliene disse male, e disse: Or cui chiami tu Iddio? Elli non è MA che uno."—Cento Novelle. Nov. 18.

In the same manner also the Spanish language employs MAS both for But and More.

"Es la verdad la que MAS importa à los principes, y la que menos se halla en los palacios."—Saavedra. Corona Gothica.

"Obra de MAS novedad, y MAS estudio."—Id.

Mess. BUT—YET—Madam—

Cleo. I do not like BUT—YET.—It does allay

The good precedent. Fie upon BUT—YET.—

BUT—YET—is as a jaylour, to bring forth

Some monstrous malefactor."—Antony and Cleopatra, act 2. sc. 5.

where you may observe that YET (tho' used elegantly here, to mark more strongly the hesitation of the speaker) is merely superfluous to the sense; as it is always when used after BOT: for either BOT or YET alone has the very same effect, and will always be found (especially BOT) to allay equally the Good or the *Bad*¹ precedent; by something MORE² that follows. For BOTAN means—to BOOT,³ i. e. to superadd,⁴

¹ "Speed. Item, She hath more hairs than wit, and more faults than hairs; BUT more wealth than faults.

Laun. Stop there. She was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that article. Rehearse that once more.

Speed. Item, She hath more hair than wit.

Laun. What's next?

Speed. And more faults than hairs.

Laun. That's monstrous! O that that were out?

Speed. BUT more wealth than faults.

Laun. Why that word makes the faults gracious."

Two Gent. of Verona, act 3. sc. 1.

Here the word BUT allays the Bad precedent; for which, without any shifting of its own intrinsic signification, it is as well qualified as to allay the Good.

² So Tasso,

———"Am. Oh, che mi dici?

Silvia m'attende, ignuda, e sola? Tir. Sola,

Se non quanto v'è Dafne, ch'è per noi.

Am. Ignuda ella m'aspetta? Tir. Ignuda: MA—

Am. Oimè, che MA? Tu taci, tu m'uccidi."

Aminta, att. 2. sc. 3.

where the difference of the construction in the English and the Italian is worth observing; and the reason evident, why in the question consequent to the conjunction, what is placed after the one, but before the other.

Boot what? }

i. e. }

But what? }

{ What more?

i. o. }

{ Che ma?

³ S. Johnson and others have mistaken the expression—To Boot—(which still remains in our language) for a substantive; which is indeed the infinitive of the same verb, of which the conjunction is the Imperative. As the Dutch also still retain Boeten in their language, with the same meaning.

⁴ "Perhaps it may be thought improper for me to address you on this subject. BUT a moment, my Lords, and it will evidently appear, that you are equally blameable for an omission of duty here also."

to supply, to substitute, to atone for, to compensate with, to remedy with, to make amends with, to add something MORE in order to make up a deficiency in something else.

So likewise in the third and fourth instances (taken from Chillingworth.)¹ Mr. Locke has attributed to BUT a meaning which can only be collected from the words which follow it.

But Mr. Locke says—"If it were his business to examine it (BUT) in its full latitude."—And that he "intends not here a full explication of this sort of signs." And yet he adds, that—"the instances he has given in this one (BUT) may lead us into the contemplation of several actions of our minds in discoursing, which it has found a way to intimate to others by these particles." And these, it must be remembered, are Actions, or as he before termed them THOUGHTS of our minds, for which he has said, we have "either none or very deficient names."

Now if it had been so, (which in truth it is not,) it was surely for that reason, most especially the business of an Essay on Human Understanding, to examine these Signs in their full latitude; and to give a full explication of them. Instead of which, neither Here, nor elsewhere, has Mr. Locke given Any explication whatever.

This may be supposed an abbreviation of construction, for "BUT indulge me with a moment, my Lords, and it will," &c. But there is no occasion for such a supposition.

¹ Knott had said—"How can it be in us a fundamental error to say, the Scripture alone is not judge of controversies, SEEING (notwithstanding this our belief) we use for interpreting of Scripture all the means which they prescribe; as prayer, conferring of places, consulting the originals," &c.

To which Chillingworth replies,

You pray, BUT it is not that God would bring you to the true religion, BUT that he would confirm you in your own. You confer places, BUT it is, that you may confirm or colour over with plausible disguises your erroneous doctrines; not that you may judge of them and forsake them, if there be reason for it. You consult the originals, BUT you regard them not when they make against your doctrine or translation.

In all these places, BUT (i. e. BOT, or, as we now pronounce the verb, BOOT) only directs something to be added or supplied, in order to make up some deficiency in Knott's expressions of "prayer, conferring of places," &c. And so far indeed as an omission of something is improper, BUT (by ordering it's insertion) may be said "to intimate a supposition in the mind of the speaker, of something otherwise than it should be." But that intimation is only, as you see, by consequence; and not by the intrinsic signification of the word BUT.

Though I have said much, I shall also omit much which might be added in support of this double etymology of BUT: nor should I have dwelt so long upon it, but in compliment to Mr. Locke; whose opinions in any matter are not slightly to be rejected, nor can they be modestly controverted without very strong arguments.

None of the etymologists have been aware of this corrupt use of one word for two.¹

Minshew, keeping only one half of our modern BUT in contemplation, has sought for its derivation in the Latin imperative Putā.

Junius confines his explanation to the other half; which he calls its "primariam significationem."

And Skinner, willing to embrace them both, found no better

¹ Nor have etymologists been any more aware of the meaning or true derivation of the words corresponding with BUT in other languages. Vossius derives the Latin conjunction AT from ατα; and AST from AT, "inserto s." (But how or why s happens to be inserted, he does not say.) Now to what purpose is such sort of etymology? Suppose it was derived from this doubtful word ατα; what intelligence does this give us? Why not as well stop at the Latin word AT, as at the Greek word ατα? Is it not such sort of trifling etymology (for I will not give even that name to what is said by Scaliger and Nunnesius concerning sed) which has brought all etymological inquiry into disgrace?

Vossius is indeed a great authority; but, when he has nothing to justify an useless conjecture but a similarity of sound, we ought not to be afraid of opposing an appearance of Reason to him.

It is contrary to the customary progress of corruption in words to derive AST from AT. Words do not gain but lose letters in their progress; nor has unaccountable accident any share in their corruption; there is always a good reason to be given for every change they receive: and, by a good reason, I do not mean those cabalistical words Metathesis, Epenthesis, &c. by which etymologists work such miracles; but at least a probable or anatomical reason for those not arbitrary operations.

Adst, Adst, Ast, At.—This conjecture is not a little strengthened both by the antient method of writing this conjunction, and by the reason which Scaliger gives for it.—"AT fuit AD; accessionem enim dicit."—De C. L. L. cap. 173.

I am not at all afraid of being ridiculed for the above derivation, by any one who will give himself the trouble to trace the words (corresponding with BUT) of any language to their source: though they should not all be quite so obvious as the French Mais, the Italian Ma, the Spanish Mas, or the Dutch Maar.

method to reconcile two contradictory meanings, than to say hardily that the transition from one¹ to the other² was—"LEVI FLEXU!"

Junius says—"BUT, Chaucero T. C. v. 194. bis positum pro Sine. Primus locus est in summo columnæ—'BUT temperaunce in tene.'—Alter est in columnæ medio,

'This golden carte with firy bemes bright
Foure yoked stedes, full different of hew,
But baite or tiring through the spheres drew.'

ubi, tamen perperam, primo BOUT pro BUT reposueram: quod iterum delevi, cum (sub finem ejusdem poematis) incidissem in hunc locum—

'BUT mete or drinke she dressed her to lie
In a darke corner of the hous alone'—

atque adeo exinde quoque observare cœpi frequentissimam esse hanc particulæ acceptionem. In Æneide quoque Scotica passim occurrunt 'BUT spot or falt,' 3. 53.—'BUT ony indigence,' 4. 20.—'BUT sentence or ingyne,' 5. 41.—'principal poct BUT pere,' 9. 19.—atque ita porro. BUT videtur dictum quasi Be-ut, pro quo Angli dicunt WITHOUT: unde quoque, hujus derivationis intuitu, præsens hujus Particulæ acceptio videbitur ostendere hanc esse primariam ejus significationem."

The extreme carelessness and ignorance of Junius in this article is wonderful and beneath a comment.

Skinner says—"BUT, ut ubi dicimus None BUT he;—ab A.S. Bute, Butan, præter, nisi, sine; Hinc, LEVI FLEXU, postea cœpit, loco antiqui Anglo-Saxonici AC, Sed designare. Bute autem et Butan tandem deflecti possunt a præp. Be, circa; vel Beon, esse, et Ute vel Utan, foris."

Mr. Tyrwhit in his Glossary says—"BUT. prep. Sax. Without. Gloss. Ur.—I cannot say that I have myself observed this preposition in Chaucer, but I may have overlooked it. The Saxons used it very frequently; and how long the Scottish writers have laid it aside I am doubtful. It occurs repeatedly in Bp. Douglas."

Knowing that no Englishman had yet laid this preposition

¹ Id est, a direction to leave out something.

² Id est, a direction to superadd something.

aside, I was curious to see how many sentences Mr. Tyrwhit himself had written without the use of this preposition; and I confess I was a little disappointed in not meeting with it till the fourth page of his preface: where he says—"Passages which have nothing to recommend them to credit, BUT the single circumstance of having been often repeated."

So in Chaucer throughout—"Hys study was BUT lytel on the Byble." But Mr. Tyrwhit was not aware that, in all such instances, BUT is as much a preposition as any in the language.

WITHOUT.

BUT (as distinguished from Bot) and WITHOUT have both exactly the same meaning, that is, in modern English, neither more nor less than—Be-out.

And they were both originally used indifferently either as Conjunctions or Prepositions. But later writers having adopted the false notions and distinctions of language maintained by the Greek and Latin Grammarians, have successively endeavoured to make the English language conform more and more to the same rules. Accordingly WITHOUT, in approved modern speech,¹ is now entirely confined to the office of a Preposition; and BUT is generally though not always used as a Conjunction. In the same manner as Nisi and Sine in Latin are distributed; which do both likewise mean exactly the same, with no other difference than that, in the former the negation precedes, and in the other it follows the verb.

Skinner only says—"WITHOUT, ab A.S. wiðutan, Extra."

S. Johnson makes it a Preposition, an Adverb, and a Conjunction; and under the head of a Conjunction, says, "WITHOUT, Conjunct. Unless; if not; Except—Not in use."

Its true derivation and meaning are the same as those of BUT (from Butan).

It is nothing but the Imperative pȳpðutan, from the Anglo-

¹ It is however used as a Conjunction by Lord Mansfield in Horne's Trial, p. 56.

"It cannot be read, WITHOUT the Attorney General consents to it."

And yet, if this reverend Earl's authority may be safely quoted for any thing, it must be for Words. It is so unsound in matter of law, that it is frequently rejected even by himself.

Saxon and Gothic verb peopðan, WALKWAN; which in the Anglo-Saxon and English languages is yoked and incorporated with the verb Beon esse. And this will account to Mr. Tyrwhit for the remark which he has made, viz. that—“By and With are often synonymous.”¹

In modern English we have retained only a small portion of it; but our old English authors had not lost the use of any part of this verb peopðan, and frequently employed it, instead of BE, in every part of the conjugation.

“But I a draught haue of that welle,
In whiche my deth is and my lyfe;
My ioye is tourned in to strife,
That sobre shall I neuer WORTHE.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 128. p. 2. col. 2.

“Wo WORTHE the fayre gemme vertulesse,
Wo WORTH that herbe also that doth no bote,
Wo WORTH the beaute that is routhlesse,
Wo WORTH that wight trede eche under fote.”

Chaucer, Troylus, boke 3. fol. 165. p. 1. col. 1.

“The broche of Thèbes was of suche kynde,
So ful of rubies and of stones of Inde,
That euery wight that sette on it an eye
He wende anone to WORTHE out of his mynde.”

Complaynt of Mars, fol. 343. p. 2. col. 2.

“In cais thay bark I compt it neuer ane myte,
Quha can not hald thare peece ar fre to flite,
Chide quhill thare hedis riffe, and hals WORTHE hace.”

Douglas, Prol. to booke 3. p. 66.

“Thay WOURTH affrayit of that suddane sycht.”

Douglas, booke 8. p. 244.

“Wo WORTH euer false enuie.”

Gower, lib. 8. fol. 181. p. 1. col. 2.

“Wo WORTH all slowe.”—Gower, lib. 8. fol. 188. p. 2. col. 1.

“Sir Thopas wold out ryde,
He WORTH upon his stede gray,
And in his honde a launce gay,
A long swerde by his syde.”

Chaucer, Ryme of Syr Thopas, fol. 172. p. 2. col. 1.

¹ “Without and Within. Butan and Binnan : originally, I suppose, Bi utan and Bi innan. By and With are often synonymous.” Glossary.

“ O mother myn, that cleaped were Argyue,
Wo WORTH that day, that thou me bare on lyue.”

Troylus, boke 3. fol. 186. p. 2. col. 1.

“ Than in my mynd of many thingis I musit,
And to the goddes of vildernes, as is usit,
Quilk Hamadriades hait, I wourschip maid,
Beseiking this auisioun WORTH happy,
And the orakil prosperite suld signify.”

Douglas, booke 3. p. 68.

“ Pallas astonist of so hie ane name
As Dardanus, abasit WORTH for schame.”

Douglas, booke 8. p. 244.

“ His hals WORTH dry of blude.”—Douglas, booke 8. p. 250.

“ The large ground WORTH grisly unto se.”

Douglas, booke 11. p. 385.

“ In lesuris and on lewis litill lammes
Full tait and trig socht bletand to thare dammes,
Tydy ky lowis velis, by thaym rynniss,
And snod and slekit WORTH thir beistis skinniss.”

Douglas, Prol. to booke 12. p. 402.

“ Quhat wenys thou, freynd, thy craw be WORTHIN quhite.”

Douglas, Prol. to booke 3. p. 66.

“ And quhen thay bene assemblit all in fere,
Than glaid scho WOURTHIS.”—Douglas, booke 13. p. 458.

“ Euer as the batel WORTHIS mare cruel,
Be effusion of blude and dyntis fel.”—Douglas, booke 7. p. 237.

“ Wod wroith he WORTHIS for disdene and dispite.”

Douglas, booke 12. p. 423.

AND.

M. Casaubon supposes AND to be derived from the Greek ἔτι, postea.

Skinner says—“ Nescio an a Lat. Addere q. d. Adde, interjectâ per Epenthesis N, ut in Render a Reddendo.”

Lye supposes it to be derived from the Greek ἔτι, adhuc, præterea, etiam, quinetiam, insuper.

I have already given the derivation which, I believe, will alone stand examination.

I shall only remark here, how easily men take upon trust, how willingly they are satisfied with, and how confidently they repeat after others, false explanations of what they do not understand.—Conjunctions, it seems, are to have their denomination and definition from the use to which they are applied: per accidens, essentiam. Prepositions connect words; but—“the Conjunction connects or joins together sentences; so as out of two to make one sentence. Thus—‘You and I and Peter, rode to London,’¹ is one sentence made up of three,” &c.

Well! So far matters seem to go on very smoothly. It is,

“You rode, I rode, Peter rode.”

But let us now change the instance, and try some others, which are full as common, though not altogether so convenient.

Two AND two are four.

AB AND BC AND CA form a Triangle.

John AND Jane are a handsome couple.

Does AB form a triangle, BC form a triangle? &c.—Is John a couple? Is Jane a couple?—Are two four?

If the definition of a Conjunction is adhered to, I am afraid that AND, in such instances, will appear to be no more a Conjunction (that is, a connector of sentences) than Though in the instance I have given under that word: or than But, in Mr. Locke’s second instance: or than Else, when called by S. Johnson a Pronoun: or than Since, when used for Sithence or for Syne. In short, I am afraid that the Grammarians will scarcely have an entire Conjunction left: for I apprehend that there is not one of those words which they call Conjunctions, which is not sometimes used (and that very properly) without connecting sentences.²

¹ “Petrus et Paulus disputant: id est, Petrus disputat et Paulus disputat.”—Sanctii Minerva, lib. 1. cap. 18.

So again, lib. 3. cap. 14.: “Cicero et filius valet. Figura Syllepsis est: ut, valet Cicero, et valet filius.” Which Perizonius sufficiently confutes, by these instances—‘Emi librum x drachmis et iv. obolis.’ ‘Saulus et Paulus sunt iidem.’

² [Dr. Jamieson differs from Mr. Tooke with regard to the conjunction AND, referring its origin to the Teutonic preposition and, ant, int, unt, &c. Hermes Scythicus, p. 17.—See also Grimm, who considers it as related to the Latin at and et: Grammatik, vol. iii. p. 255, and 271.—Ed.]

LEST.

Junius only says—"LEST, least, minimus. v. little." Under Least, he says—"LEAST, lest, minimus. Contractum est ex ελαχιστος. v. little, parvus." And under Little, to which he refers us, there is nothing to the purpose.

Skinner says—"LEST, ab A.S. Lær, minus, q. d. quo minus hoc fiat."

S. Johnson says—"LEST, Conj. (from the Adjective Least) That not."

This last deduction is a curious one indeed; and it would puzzle as sagacious a reasoner as S. Johnson to supply the middle steps to his conclusion from Least (which always however means some) to "That not" (which means none at all). It seems as if, when he wrote this, he had already in his mind a presentiment of some future occasion in which such reasoning would be convenient. As thus—"The Mother Country, the seat of government, must necessarily enjoy the greatest share of dignity, power, rights, and privileges: an united or associated kingdom must have in some degree a smaller share; and their colonies the least share;"—that is, (according to S. Johnson¹) None of any kind.

¹ Johnson's merit ought not to be denied to him; but his Dictionary is the most imperfect and faulty, and the least valuable of any of his productions; and that share of merit which it possesses, makes it by so much the more hurtful. I rejoice, however, that though the least valuable, he found it the most profitable: for I could never read his Preface without shedding a tear. And yet it must be confessed, that his Grammar and History and Dictionary of what he calls the English language, are in all respects (except the bulk of the latter) most truly contemptible performances; and a reproach to the learning and industry of a nation, which could receive them with the slightest approbation.

Nearly one third of this Dictionary is as much the language of the Hottentots as of the English; and it would be no difficult matter so to translate any one of the plainest and most popular numbers of the Spectator into the language of that Dictionary, that no mere Englishman, though well read in his own language, would be able to comprehend one sentence of it.

It appears to be a work of labour, and yet is in truth one of the most idle performances ever offered to the public: compiled by an author who possessed not one single requisite for the undertaking, and, being a publication of a set of booksellers, owing its success to that very circumstance which alone must make it impossible that it should deserve success.

It has been proposed by no small authority (Wallis followed by Lowth) to alter the spelling of LEST to Least; and vice versa. "Multi," says Wallis, "pro Lest scribunt Least (ut distinguatur a Conjunctione Lest, ne, ut non): Verum omnino contra analogiam Grammaticæ. Mallem ego Adjectivum lest, Conjunctionem least scribere."

"The superlative Least," says Lowth, "ought rather to be written without the A; as Dr. Wallis has long ago observed. The Conjunction of the same sound might be written with the A, for distinction."

S. Johnson judiciously dissents from this proposal, but for no other reason but because he thinks "the profit is not worth the change."

Now though they all concur in the same Etymology, I will venture to affirm that LEST for Lesed (as blest for blessed, &c.) is nothing else but the participle past of Lejan, dimittere; and, with the article That (either expressed or understood) means no more than hoc dimisso or quo dimisso.¹

And, if this explanation and etymology of LEST is right, (of which I have not the smallest doubt,) it furnishes one caution more to learned critics, not to innovate rashly: Lest, whilst they attempt to amend a language, as they imagine, in one trifling respect, they mar it in others of more importance; and by their corrupt alterations and amendments confirm error, and make the truth more difficult to be discovered by those who come after.

Mr. Locke says, and it is agreed on all sides, that—"it is in the right use of these" (Particles) "that more particularly consists the clearness and beauty of a good style:" and that, "these words, which are not truly by themselves the names of any ideas, are of constant and indispensable use in language; and do much contribute to men's well expressing themselves."

Now this, I am persuaded, would never have been said, had ¹ As LES the Imperative of Lejan is sometimes used for UNLESS, as has been already shown under the article Unless: so is the same Imperative LES sometimes used instead of the participle LEST.

"I knew it was past four houris of day,
And thocht I wald na langare ly in May;
LES Phœbus suld me losingere attaynt."

G. Douglas, Prol. to the 12th book of Eneados.

these Particles been understood; for it proceeds from nothing but the difficulty of giving any rule or direction concerning their use; and that difficulty arises from a mistaken supposition that they are not "by themselves the names of any ideas:" and in that case indeed I do not see how any rational rules concerning their use could possibly be given. But I flatter myself that henceforward, the true force and nature of these words being clearly understood, the proper use of them will be so evident, that any rule concerning their use will be totally unnecessary: as it would be thought absurd to inform any one that when he means to direct an addition, he should not use a word which directs to take away.

I am induced to mention this in this place, from the very improper manner in which LEST (more than any other Conjunction) is often used by our best authors; those who are most conversant with the learned languages being most likely to make the mistake.—"You make use of such indirect and crooked arts as these to blast my reputation, and to possess men's minds with disaffection to my person; LEST peradventure, they might with some indifference hear reason from me."—Chillingworth's Preface to the Author of Charity maintained, &c.

Here LEST is well used—"You make use of these arts:"—Why? The reason follows—"Lepeth that," i. e. Hoc dimisso—"men might hear reason from me.—Therefore—you use these arts."

Instances of the improper use of LEST may be found in almost every author that ever wrote in our language; because none of them have been aware of the true meaning of the word; and have been misled by supposing it to be perfectly correspondent to some Conjunctions in other languages; which it is not.

Thus King Henry the Eighth, in A Necessary Doctrine, &c. sixte petition, says—"If we suffer the fyrste suggestion unto synne to tarry any whyle in our hartes, it is great peryll LEST that consent and dede wyll folowe shortly after."

Thus Ascham, in his Scholemaster, says—"If a yong gentleman will venture himselfe into the companie of ruffians, it is over great a jeopardie, LEST their facions, maners, thoughts, taulke, and dedes will verie sone be over like."

Any tolerable judge of English will immediately perceive something awkward and improper in these sentences; though he cannot tell why. Yet the reason will be very plain to him, when he knows the meaning of these unmeaning particles (as they have been called): for he will then see at once that LEST has no business in the sentences; there being nothing dimisso, in consequence of which something else would follow: and that, if he would employ LEST, the sentences must be arranged otherwise.

As—"We must take heed that the first suggestion unto sin tarry not any while in our hearts, LEST that," &c.

"A young gentleman should be careful not to venture himself," &c., "LEST," &c.

"Il est bon quelquefois (says Leibnitz) d'avoir la complaisance d'examiner certaines objections: car, outre que cela peut servir à tirer les gens de leur erreur, il peut arriver que nous en profitons nous-mêmes. Car les paralogismes spécieux renferment souvent quelque ouverture utile, et donnent lieu à résoudre quelques difficultés considérables. C'est pourquoi j'ai toujours aimé des objections ingénieuses contre mes propres sentiments, et je ne les ai jamais examinées sans fruit."¹

I shall, in this instance, be more complaisant than Leibnitz; and will descend to examine objections which are neither specious nor ingenious: and the rather because (before their publication) the substance of the Criticisms on the Diversions of Purley was, with singular industry and a characteristical affectation, gossiped by the present precious Secretary at War,² in Payne the bookseller's shop; the cannibal commencing with this modest observation, that—"I had found a mare's nest."³

¹ Essais de Théodicée. Discours de la conformité de la foi avec la raison.

² The Rt. Hon. W. Windham. EDIT.

³ This malignant and false observation was heard with an appearance of satisfaction which prudence dictated to the hearer; and communicated with that disgust which a liberal royalist always feels at Renegado illiberality. "No, (said my antipolitical communicating friend,) I will never descend with him beneath even a Japanese: and I remember what Voltaire remarks of that country;—Le Japon était partagé en plusieurs sectes, quoique sous un roi Pontife. Mais toutes

I shall examine them in this place, because one fourth part of these Criticisms (20 pages out of 79) is employed in objections to the derivation of UNLESS, ELSE, and LEST: which have all three one meaning (viz. of Separation), and are all, as I contend, portions of the same verb Lejan, i. e. of On-lejan, A-lejan, Lejan.

My Norwich critics¹ (for I shall couple them) blame me,

1. For the obscurity of my Title-page. Pag. 2.²
2. For the matter of my Introduction. Pag. 3.
3. For the place of my Advertisement. Pag. 21.
4. For a very strong propension towards inaccuracy. Pag. 2.
5. For having "introduced one of the champions for intolerance," by quoting a Roman Catholic bishop. Pag. 4.
6. For the imperfection of my Anglo-Saxon alphabet. Pag. 22.
7. And finally, For my politics. Pag. 32.³

All these I willingly abandon to their mercy and discretion; although they have not shown any symptoms of either.

But I should be sorry if any of my readers were hastily misled by them to believe, les sectes se réunissaient dans les mêmes principes de Morales. Ceux qui croiaient la métempsychose, et ceux qui n'y croiaient pas, s'abstenaient, et s'abstiennent encore aujourd'hui, de manger la chair des animaux qui rendent service à l'homme."

¹ [See Additional Notes.]

² "Vix plane a me impetrare possum, quin exemplum sequar Petri Francisci Giambullarii, qui librum suum de linguæ Florentinæ origine scriptum, a Johannis Baptistæ Gellii, viri sibi amicitia et studiis conjunctissimi, cognomine, quem in scribendo socium et consiliarium habuit, Il Gello nuncupari voluit. Perinde quidem et mihi TIWATESII nomine librum nostrum inscribendo, si per modestiam ejus liceret, nobis faciendum esset."—G. Hickes.

³ Mr. Secretary and his secretary will not be surprised that their disapprobation does not move me; when they consider that, as far as corrupt and unbridled power has been able to enforce the decree, I have, on account of these politics, been, for the last thirty years, robbed of the fair use of life, interdictus aqua et igni: and, by what I can prognosticate, I suppose I am still to lay down my life for them. I might have quitted them, as Mr. Secretary has done, and have received the reward of my treachery. But my politics will never be changed, nor be kept back on any occasion: and whilst I have my life, it will neither be embittered by any regret for the past, nor fear for the future.

1st. That "Grammar was one of the First arts which probably engaged the attention of the curious." Pag. 4.

For the contrary is not a matter of conjecture, but of historical fact: and whoever pleases may know at what precise period Grammar, as an art, had its commencement in every nation of Europe.

Or 2ndly. That "The desire which arises in the mind, next to that of communicating thought, is certainly to use such signs as will convey the meaning clearly and precisely." Pag. 19.

For a desire of communicating thought, and a desire of conveying our meaning clearly and precisely (though expressed by different words), are not two desires, but one desire: for as far as our meaning is not conveyed clearly and precisely, it is not conveyed at all; so far there is no communication of thought.

Or 3rdly. That "This desire of conveying our meaning clearly and precisely naturally leads to the use of abbreviations: and that abbreviations seem to bear a much stronger affinity to the desire of perspicuity than to that of dispatch." Pag. 20.

For, to satisfy himself that the desire of clearness and perspicuity does not lead to the use of abbreviations, (which are substitutes,) any person needs only to consult the legal instruments of any civilized nation in the world: for in these instruments, perspicuity or clearness is the only object. Now these legal instruments have always been, and always must be, remarkably more tedious and prolix than any other writings, in which the same clearness and precision are not equally important. For abbreviations open a door for doubt; and, by the use of them, what we gain in time we lose in precision and certainty. In common discourse we save time by using the short substitutes HE and SHE and THEY and IT; and (with a little care on one side and attention on the other) they answer our purpose very well; or if a mistake happens, it is easily set right. But this substitution will not be risqued in a legal instrument; and the drawer thinks himself compelled, for the sake of certainty, to say—HE (the said John A.) to HIM (the said Thomas B.) for THEM (the said William C. and Anne D.) as often as those persons are mentioned.¹ And for the same reason he is compelled to employ many other prolixities of the same kind.

Or 4thly. That "A desire of variety gave birth to Pronouns in language, which otherwise would not have appeared in it." Pag. 20.

For Pronouns prevent variety.

Or 5thly. That "Articles and Pronouns are neither Nouns nor Verbs." Pag. 26.

For I hope hereafter to satisfy the reader that they are nothing else, and can be nothing else.

Or 6thly. That Johnson considered Skinner as so ignorant that his authority ought not to be regarded. Pag. 39.²

For Johnson speaks of him as one whom "he ought not to mention but with the reverence due to his instructor and benefactor," and to whom he was chiefly indebted for his northern etymologies.³

Or 7thly. That I have myself represented Junius as a "very careless and ignorant" writer. Pag. 51.⁴

For (under the article AN) I have noticed "the judicious distinction which Johnson has made between Junius and Skinner." And when I had occasion (under the article BUT) to say that he was careless and ignorant concerning that particular word, I mentioned it as "wonderful." But thus these

¹ Abbreviations and substitutes undoubtedly cannot safely be trusted in legal instruments. But it is an unnecessary prolixity and great absurdity which at present prevails, to retain the substitute in these writings at the same time with the principal, for which alone the substitute is ever inserted, and for which it is merely a proxy. HE, SHE, THEY, IT, WHO, WHICH, &c. should have no place in these instruments, but be altogether banished from them. And I know a Solicitor of eminence who, at my suggestion, near twenty years ago, did banish them.

² Skinner, indeed, translates Onleran, or rather Aleran, to dismiss. "But Skinner is often ignorant," says Dr. Johnson.

³ "For the Teutonic etymologies I am commonly indebted to Junius and Skinner, the only names which I have forbore to quote when I copied their books: not that I might appropriate their labours or usurp their honours, but that I might spare a perpetual repetition by one general acknowledgement. These I ought not to mention but with the reverence due to instructors and benefactors."—Johnson's Preface.

⁴ "You have here, however, the authority of Junius, who puts down these verbs as being the origin; but I have yours to say, that he was sometimes very careless and ignorant."—Page 51 of the Criticisms.

critics meanly attempt to mislead their readers: catching at the word ignorant (which when applied to a person in a particular instance, means only that he did not know that particular thing,) in order fraudulently to fasten an imputation of general ignorance.

Or 8thly. That those who have spelled LESS with a single s, were not "civilized people:"¹ i. e. (I suppose) not capable of the accustomed relations of peace and amity.

Or 9thly. That "The blemishes of Johnson's Dictionary are not of the kind quas incuria fudit, but the result of too much nicety and exactness." Pag. 46.—But of this in another place: for it is of more consequence than any thing which relates to these Norwich critics.

Or 10thly. That it requires much practice in the Anglo-Saxon or old English writers, and much attention to the circumstance, to observe "the various spellings of one and the same word in the language."²

For not only are almost all the words spelled differently by different authors; but even by the same author, in the same book, in the same page, and frequently in the same line.

Or 11thly. That I "desire to pass my sentiments upon others, as articles of faith." Pag. 76.³

My critics commence with a solemn protestation, that they "aim at nothing but a fair representation of the truth." Pag. v.

¹ "The orthography of this word, I presume to say, is LESS. And it should seem as if civilized people had no other way of spelling it."—Page 40.

² "My taste for the Anglo-Saxon has never induced me to attend to the various spellings of one and the same word in the language."—Page 51 of the Criticisms.

³ This groundless apprehension is not unnatural in one of my critics. He startles at his own expression—an article of faith. But fear not me, Cassander. I pay the same regard to a sickly conscience that I do to a sickly appetite: and I have known those who, like some honest sectaries, have fainted at the smell of roast beef. No, I shall never wish to impose articles of faith on others, though I am not scared at their imposition upon me. I am a willing conformist to all that is not fatal. I would surely reject poison, i. e. power in the priesthood, and despotism any where; but otherwise I am not dainty; and can feed heartily upon any wholesome food, both in the church and out of it; although it might happen to be coarse and not overpleasing to my palate.

Yet twice in the 7th page, and twice in the 8th page, and again in the 25th page of the Criticisms, they pretend to quote my words; and falsely, to serve their own purpose, insert a word of their own. My words are—"Abbreviations employed for the sake of dispatch." They, five times repeatedly, assert that my words are—"words necessary for dispatch."

In their 8th page they twice assert that I "rank Articles, Prepositions, and Conjunctions, under the title of Abbreviations;" and in their 11th page they assert, that I have made "Abbreviations the principal object of the work" I have published, i. e. of the first edition of this volume.

I hope I have there spoken with sufficient clearness to make it impossible for any attentive reader to fall into such an error; or to suppose that I have hitherto spoken one word about those Abbreviations which compose my second class. It is evident however that my Critics made no such mistake, but falsified the matter willfully: for, in their 35th page, they contradict their own previous statement, and acknowledge the fact.—"Conjunctions in your system (say they) are not separate parts of speech, but words belonging to the species either of Nouns or Verbs."

I hardly think it necessary to inform the reader, that I have hitherto spoken little of the Noun, nothing of the Verb, and nothing of the Abbreviations; but have chiefly employed myself to get rid of the false doctrine concerning Conjunctions, Prepositions, and Adverbs. The method I have taken may perhaps be injudicious: indeed I have been told so: I may perhaps have begun at the wrong end: but I did it not wantonly or carelessly, but after the most mature reflection, and with the view of lessening the difficulties and sparing the labour of those who may chuse to proceed with me in this inquiry. Perhaps, when we come to the close of it, my readers will feel with me (they will hardly feel so forcibly as I do) the justness of the following reflection of Mr. Necker—"Je reviens à mon triste travail. On aura peine, je le crains, à se former une idée de son étendue; car, en résultat, tout devient simple: et l'un des premiers effets de la méthode, c'est de cacher les difficultés vaincues: aussi dans les plus grandes choses comme dans les plus petites, tous ceux qui jouissent de l'ordre n'en connoissent pas le mérite.¹”

In their 13th page, they say, that “It is evident from my words, that, in my opinion, Mr. Locke was no better than in a mist when he wrote his famous Essay.”

In their 12th page, they represent me (who have denied any abstract or complex ideas) as affirming—“that, in my opinion, it is the term that gives birth to the abstract idea.”

Because I have, in the 255th page of my first edition, observed that “it is contrary to the customary progress of corruption in words to gain letters;” and in the 131st page, that “Letters, like soldiers, are very apt to desert and drop off in a long march:”—they twice, in their 41st page, represent me as denying the possibility that any word should ever gain a letter,² or be written by any succeeding author with more letters than by his predecessor.

Because I have in the 218th page of my first edition, given the corresponding Terminations in the other northern languages; which terminations I suppose likewise, as well as LESS (which is not a modern English imperative) to have been originally the imperatives of their verbs; they, in their 44th page, and again in their 46th page, charge me with “contending” that LOOS (so written) is the present modern imperative in Dutch.

In their 55th page, though I call Douglas (in the very place alluded to by them) “one of the most common of our old English authors;” they would make their readers believe that I produce him “as an Anglo-Saxon writer.”

In the conclusion of their Criticisms they say—“Professor Schultens was the first philologist who suspected Prepositions, Conjunctions, Particles in general to be no more than Nouns or Verbs, and refused therefore to make separate classes of them, among those that comprehend the Parts of Speech. But he confined himself in the application of this truth to the learned languages. You are the first who applied it to those which are called modern.”

¹ Nouveaux Eclaircissemens sur le Comte Rendu.

² I had given instances in Unles, Whiles, Amiddes, Amonges, which afterwards became Unless, Whilst, Amidst, Amongst.

These are the gentlemen who commence with a solemn protestation, that they "aim at nothing but a fair representation of the truth." And yet, in the above extract, there is not a single proposition that does not convey more than one willful falsehood.

I will here insert the whole which Schultens has said upon the subject.

"SECTIO V. LXV. Partes orationis Hebræis eodem quæ Græcis, Latinis, omnibus populis. Ad tres classes concinne satis omnes illæ partes revocari solent, Verbum, Nomen, Particulam. Ab Arabibus distinctionem hanc hausere primi grammatici Hebræorum. In Gjarumia habes, Partes orationis tres sunt, Nomen, et Verbum, et Particula, quæ venit in significationem. Apud Rabbinos similiter Nomen, Actio, id est Verbum, et Vox, sive Particula. Veteres Stoici quatuor classes fecere. Alii plures, alii pauciores adhuc, solo Nomine et Verbo contenti. Optima divisio Theodectis, et Aristotelis, apud Dion. Halic. in Oreuvava, Pnyava, Zurdequous. Eam laudat unice Quintil. Nomina, Verba, et Convictiones, reddens: ut nomina exhibeant materiam, verba vim sermonis, in convictionibus autem complexus eorum indicetur. Consulendus de hisce G. J. Voss. qui dubium censet utrum Orientales hæc in re imitati sint Græcos, an Græci potius secuti sint exemplum Orientalium. Mihi Arabes ex Aristotele hausisse, planissime liquet."

The above is a mere transcript from Vossius, to whom Schultens very fairly refers us.¹ He then proceeds to apply this doctrine in the Hebrew language alone.—“Idem dixerim de methodo grammaticam texendi secundum has orationis partes. Arabes et Judæi a Verbo incipere solent, quod tanquam radix sit, unde Nomina et Particulæ propagentur.

¹ "De numero partium orationis diu est, quod tribus grammaticæ controversantur. Antiquissima eorum est opinio, qui tres faciunt classes. Estque hæc Arabum quoque sententia, quibus hæc classes vocantur Nomen, Verbum, et Particula. Hebræi quoque (qui cum Arabes grammaticam scribere desinerent, artem eam denum scribere coeperunt; quod ante annos contigit circiter quadringentos) Hebræi, inquam, hæc in re secuti sunt magistros suos Arabes. . . . Imo vero trium classium numerum aliæ etiam Orientis linguæ retinent. Dubium, utrum ea in re Orientales imitati sint antiquos Græcorum: an hi potius secuti sint Orientalium exemplum. Utut est, etiam veteres Græcos tres tantum partes agnovisse, non solum autor est Dionysius: sed etiam Quinctilianus testatur, ubi hanc Aristotelis ipsius, ac Theodectis sententiam fuisse docet. Idemque de veteribus Græcis testatur Rabbinus iste qui, &c."

“Verba nempe tanquam radices sunt unde Nomina propagantur, variis formis, et terminationibus: itemque Particulæ; sub quibus Pronomina, Adverbia, Præpositiones, Conjunctiones, et Interjectiones continentur. Et harum densa illa sylva a Nominibus ferme succrevit, quin ad classem Nominum maximam partem referenda.”

“SECTIO VI. XCI. A Nomine pergimus ad Particulas. Eas recte dividunt in separatas et inseparabiles. Minus commoda distinctio cl. Altingii inter particulas declinabiles et indeclinabiles. Ad priores refert pronomina. Ad posteriores adverbia, præpositiones, conjunctiones, et interjectiones: Atqui et pronomina quædam non declinantur, et bona pars adverbiorum ac præpositionum patitur declinationem, quippe quæ maximam partem sunt Nomina, vel Substantiva, vel Adjectiva. Hoc si perspexissent primi grammatici, multo felicius naturam, vim, mutationem, et constructionem particularum expedire valuissent.”

“xcvi. Particulas reliquas, sub quibus adverbia, præpositiones, conjunctiones, et interjectiones comprehensæ, minus rite indeclinabiles vocari, quod re vera declinentur, præsertim adverbia et præpositiones; utpote veri nominis substantiva vel adjectiva, maximam partem. Rectius in separatas et inseparabiles dirimuntur. Separatarum classes distinctius subnotabo: atque sub singulis specimina quædam exhibebo.—Sic reliqua sunt originis vel substantiva vel adjectiva. Horum enucleatio ampliora exigit spatia. Nonnulla infra tangentur.

“Atque ex Arabibus grammaticis eandem sequitur Giarumicæ autor Muhamed Sanhagius. Postea autem antiquissimi Stoicorum quatuor classes fecerunt. . . . Imo nec defuere, qui alias asserendo divisiones ampliorem facerent numerum Partium Orationis. Quorum omnium autor nobis Dionysius Halicarnassensis. Addam et insignem locum Quintiliani,—‘Veteres, quorum fuerunt Aristoteles quoque, atque Theodectes, Verba modo et Nomina et Convictiones tradiderunt. Videlicet, quod in verbis vim sermonis, in nominibus materiam, in convictionibus autem complexum eorum esse judicaverunt.’—Sed ut omnis hæc disputatio melius intelligatur, non abs re erit, si quæ a Dionysio et Prisciano scribuntur accuratius expendamus. Duæ sunt principes partes, Nomen et Verbum: de quibus solis iccirco Aristoteles agit libro Περὶ ἰσχυρίας.”—G. J. Vossius De Arte Gram. lib. 3. cap. 1.

“Apud Latinos quoque conjunctiones multæ a nominibus oriundæ, ut Verum. Vero. Verum Enimvero. Quemadmodum. Quamquam. Additum et verbum in Quamlibet. Quolibet. Quovis. Merum verbum est Licet, &c. De adverbiiis et præpositionibus idem submonitum velim.”

Thus it appears that Schultens, without reasoning at all upon the subject, took the old division of language exactly as he found it; and, with his predecessors on the Oriental tongues, considered and ranked the Particles as a distinct part of speech. But he condemns the subdivision of particles into declinable and indeclinable, and proposes to divide them into separate and inseparable.

In my opinion neither of these distributions is blameable in the grammar of a particular language, whose object is only to assist a learner of that language: but the one subdivision is just as unphilosophical as the other. If the Particles are all merely Nouns or Verbs, they are equally so whether used separately or not. The term inseparable, instead of not separated, is likewise justifiable in Schultens, who confined himself to a dead language; and who did not intend to consider the nature of general speech: for, in a dead language, authority is every thing; and those words which cannot be found to have been used separately by those who bequeathed it, are to us (speaking or writing it) not only not separate but inseparable.

But Schultens no where asserts that these particles are ALL nouns or verbs; nor does he adduce a single argument on the subject. He evidently supposes that there might be particles which were neither nouns nor verbs: for, besides the separate rank which he allows them, his words are always carefully coupled when he speaks of these particles. He confines them to Nouns, substantiva vel adjectiva (he never adds Verba, which my Critics have modestly slipped in for him); but even then he always scrupulously repeats—bona pars. multæ. maximam partem. ferme. præsertim. originis. oriundæ. propagantur. referenda. specimina quædam. Nonnulla tangentur. Horum enucleatio ampliora exigit spatia.—In which (so far from being “the first who suspected it”) he carefully and closely adopts the qualifying expressions of very many grammarians (especially Latin grammarians) who had used the same long before him. Many of these I have cited, who went much further in the doctrine than he has done: for it surely was not my business to sink them; but to avail myself of their partial authority, and to recommend my general doctrine by their partial hints and suspicions.

But my Critics, who say that Schultens suspected, in five lines further impudently convert this suspicion into a Truth, which they represent him as having demonstrated, or at least asserted: and with equal effrontery they tell us, he applied it to the dead languages; and that I applied his Truth to those which are called modern.

It is however of little consequence to the reader from what quarter he may receive a discovered truth; or (if it be a discovery) whose name it may bear; nor do I feel the smallest anxiety on the subject. But bear with my infirmity, reader, if it be an infirmity.—The enemies of the established civil liberties of my country have hunted me through life, without a single personal charge against me through the whole course of my life; but barely because I early descried their conspiracy, and foresaw and foretold the coming storm, and have to the utmost of my power legally resisted their corrupt, tyrannical and fatal innovations and usurpations: They have destroyed my fortunes: They have illegally barred and interdicted my usefulness to myself, my family, my friends, and my country: They have tortured my body:¹ They have aimed at my life and honour:—Can you wonder that, whilst one of these critics takes a cowardly advantage (where I could make no defence) to brand me as an acquitted Felon, I am unwilling (where I can make a defence) that he should, in conjunction with his anonymous associate, exhibit me as a convicted plagiarist and impostor? But no more of these cowardly assassins. I consign them to the lasting contempt they have well earned, and which no future Title will ever be able to obliterate from the name of Windham.

¹ The antient legal and mild imprisonment of this country (mild both in manner and duration, compared to what we now see) was always held to be Torture and even civil death. What would our old, honest, uncorrupted lawyers and judges (to whom and to the law of the land the word CLOSE was in abhorrence), what would they have said to seven months of CLOSE custody, such as I have lately suffered, without a charge, without a legal authority (for their own monstrous law, which arbitrarily suspended the Habeas Corpus, did not authorize CLOSE custody), and without even the most flimsy pretence of any occasion for it?

It may however be useful to examine the objections to my explanation of UNLESS, ELSE, and LEST; which are to be found in pages 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 51, 52, 53, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, of The Criticisms on the Diversions of Purley.

Four instances are produced, and only four, in which it is contended that my solution cannot be admitted.

“I have already observed” (say the Critics, page 53) “that it [Alejan] is not susceptible of the signification you have all along affixed to it as its primary one; but let us suppose it to signify Dismiss, and nothing besides; we shall find many phrases in which ELSE will hardly bear to be resolved into Hoc dimisso:¹ witness the following, Nothing else. How else. What else. Where else.”

To have a proof of the solidity or futility of this objection, we must have complete sentences.

EXAMPLE 1. Nothing ELSE.

You shall have a fool's cap for your pains; and Nothing ELSE.

Resolution.—You shall have a fool's cap for your pains; and Nothing BUT a fool's cap.

i. e. BUT for Be-out.

You shall have a fool's cap for your pains; and Nothing EXCEPT a fool's cap.

You shall have a fool's cap for your pains; and, IF NOT a fool's cap, Nothing.

You shall have a fool's cap for your pains; and, DISMISS the fool's cap, Nothing.

EXAMPLE 2. How ELSE.

If a nation's liberties cannot be secured by a fair representation of the people; How ELSE can they be secured?

Resol.—If a nation's liberties cannot be secured by a fair representation of the people ; WITHOUT it, How can they be secured ? i. e. WITHOUT for Be-out.

¹ I have said that ELSE is the Imperative of Alejan, and means Dimitte, but they give what they please as my words.

If a nation's liberties cannot be secured by a fair representation of the people ; EXCEPT by a fair representation of the people, How can they be secured ?

If a nation's liberties cannot be secured by a fair representation of the people ; DISMISS it, (i. e. a fair representation of the people,) How can they be secured ?

EXAMPLE 3. What ELSE.

You have shown impotence and malice enough ; What ELSE have you shown ?

Resol.—You have shown impotence and malice enough ; What have you shown BUT impotence and malice ? Or, What BUT them have you shown ?

You have shown impotence and malice enough ; EXCEPT them, (i. e. impotence and malice,) What have you shown ?

You have shown impotence and malice enough ; DISMISS them, What have you shown ?

EXAMPLE 4. Where ELSE.

Honour should reside in the breast of a king ; although it might not be found any Where ELSE.

Resol.—Honour should reside in the breast of a king ; although, EXCEPT in the breast of a king, it might not be found any where.

Honour should reside in the breast of a king ; although, DISMISS (i. e. Leave out, Take away, &c.) the breast of a king, it might not be found any where.

Having thus, as I trust, satisfactorily resolved the only instances they have produced as irreconcilable with my etymology, I will proceed to consider their other objections.

I.—They say—"The Latin, the Italian, the French, make use here [that is, where the English use UNLESS] of the word Except." P. 38.

The Latin commonly employs Ni si. i. e. Ne sit, the negative preceding the verb : the Italian, Se non, and the French, Si ne. i. e. Sit non, Sit ne, the negative following the verb : Instances have been already given of the same conjunctive use of Be not, or Be it not, in English. The Italians sometimes use In fuori, Senza che; and, if they please, the participle Eccetto: the French also sometimes use Si non que, Si ce n'est que, A moins que, A moins de; and, if they please, the imperative Exceptez, or the participle Excepté. And any word or words directing SEPARATION (and none other) in our own, or in any other language, will always be equivalent to UNLESS. And, instead of being an objection, I think this circumstance strongly enforces my etymology.

II.—“If there be such a verb [as Onlejan] in the Anglo-Saxon, it must be the same as Onlejon, a compound of On and Leran.” P. 39.

Why it should be doubted that there is any such verb as Onlejan in the Anglo-Saxon, I cannot imagine; but if any one, besides my Critics, should entertain such a doubt, it may easily be removed by opening Lye's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary; where both Onlejan and Onlyjan will be found, with various references to the places where they are used. But that Onlejon should be preferred by the Critics to Onlejan is truly extraordinary; An being the common termination of the Anglo-Saxon Infinitives.

III.—“Leran in the Anglo-Saxon does not signify to Dismiss. Leran in its primary signification means to unbind; in its secondary, to redeem, to unload, to set at liberty. Solvere, redimere, liberare, says the dictionary. In the first sense it answers to the English to Loosen, i. e. to make loose.” P. 39.

“It is possible that LES should be the Imperative of Leran; but LESS can have no pretensions to it.” P. 40.

“No sooner has the imperative of the Anglo-Saxon verb Leran shown itself with you in one form, than it appears in another. In the very next article to that we are upon here, you suppose it to be, not LES but LEAS. But it will be said, how can Lear be the imperative of Leran?—Certain it is, that the verb Leran is here all of a sudden transformed into Leorjan, in consequence of which its alliance with the affix Lear becomes unquestionable. But Leorjan signifies perdere, and is the same verb with the English to Lose.” P. 41.

If the reader will cast his eye over the following column, he will find that no transformation has been suddenly made by me; and that the alteration of a letter in the spelling of LES,

LESS and LEAS, will be no reasonable objection to the etymology.

ΛΛNSCĀN. M. Goth. Imperat. ΛΛns.

Lorīzan

Lorian

Loerian

Leorjan

Leorjan Imperat. Lær.

Leran Imperat. Ler, Lerr, Lerre.

Līran

Lýran

Ā-leran Imperat. Āler.

Ā-līran

Ā-lýran

Fop-leorjan

Fop-lýran

On-leran Imperat. Onler.

On-lýran

Under all these shapes this word appears in the Anglo-Saxon language: for I take them all to be one and the same verb, differently pronounced, and therefore differently spelled. And from this Gothic and Anglo-Saxon verb, I imagine, proceed not only the conjunctions, as they are called, UNLESS, ELSE, and LEST, and the privative termination LESS, together with LESS the adjective, as it is called, and the comparative LESS, and the superlative LEAST; but also

To Lose Lost. A Loss.

To Loose Loose.

To Un-loose

To Loosen

To Un-loosen

To Lessen

To Lease A Lease.

To Release. . . A Release, A Lease and Release.

To go a Leasing.¹

¹ Leasing, i. e. Loosing, i. e. picking up that which is Loose (i. e. Loosed) separate (i. e. separated) or detached (détaché) from the sheaf.*

* SHEAF, (A. S. ŕceap. Dutch Schoof;) which we call a substantive, is

And however this word (for they are all one) may be now differently spelled, and differently used and applied in modern English; the reader will easily perceive that SEPARATION is always invariably signified in every use and application of it.¹

I will give a few instances, out of very many, to show how variously our old English writers spelled and used this same word.

"Pardoun and life to thir teris gif we,
(Quod Priamus) and mercy grantis fre.
And first of all the mannakillis and hard bandis
Chargeit he LOUS of this ilk mannis handis.
—— Bot than the tothir wicht,
Full weil instrukkit of Grekis art and slicht,
LOUSIR and laitlye fred of all his bandis,
Unto the sternis heuit up his handis."

Douglas, booke 2. p. 43.

"Bewalit thair feris LOSIR on the flude." booke 1. p. 19.

"That we thy blud, thy kinrent, and ofspring
Has LOSIR our schippia." booke 1. p. 20.

"The grete LOIS of Anchises regretting sare,
And altogidir gan to wepe and rare." booke 5. p. 148.

"For neuir syne with ene saw I her eft,
Nor neuer abak, fra sche was LOIST or reft,
Blent I agane." booke 2. p. 63.

"His nauy LOIST reparellit I but falo,
And his feris fred from the deith alhale." booke 4. p. 112.

¹

—— Clavumque affixus et hærens

Nusquam A-mittēbat.

Æneis, lib. 5.

He never sent from his hand. He never parted with. He never missed his hold. He never let go his hold. He never lost his hold. He never loosed his hold. He never let go.

no other than the past participle ꝛearf (or ꝛearof) from the verb ꝛearian; which past participle in modern English we write shove (or shoved). Sheaf means, that which is shov'd together. N. B. The past participle in the Anglo-Saxon is usually formed by adding of (which we now write ed) to the præterperfect; but the præterperfect itself is often used (both in Anglo-Saxon and in English) for the past participle, without the termination of or ed. Now the præterperfect of ꝛearian is ꝛearf.

SHAFT (A. S. ꝛearf), which seems to us so different a word from Sheaf, is yet no other than the same past participle ꝛearof, ꝛearb, ꝛearf. Shaft means that which is shov'd.

“ Bewaland gretelye in his mynde pensife,
For that his freynd was fall, and LOIST his life.”

booke 5. p. 157.

“ Desist, Drances, be not abasit, I pray,
For thou sall neuer LEIS, schortlie I the say,
Be my wappin nor this rycht hand of myne
Sic any peuishe and cative saule as thine.”

booke 11. p. 377.

“ But yet LESSE thou do worse, take a wyfe :
Bet is to wedde, than brenne in worse wyse.”

Dreame of Chaucer, fol. 259. p. 2. col. 2.

“ And on his way than is he forthe yfare
In hope to ben LESSED of his care.”

Chaucer, Frankeleyns Tale, fol. 54. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Now let us stynt of Troylus a stounde,
That fareth lyke a man that hurt is sore,
And is som dele of akyng of his wounde
YLESSED well, but heled no dele more.”

Troylus, boke 1. fol. 163. p. 1. col. 1.

“ And gladly LESE his owne right,
To make an other LESE his.”

Gower, lib. 2. fol. 28. p. 2. col. 2.

“ Lo wherof sorcerie serueth.
Through sorcerie his loue he chese ;
Through sorcerie his life he LESE.”

lib. 5. fol. 137. p. 1. col. 1.

“ For unto loues werke on night
Hym lacketh both will and might.
No wondre is in lustie place
Of loue though he LESE grace.”

lib. 7. fol. 143. p. 1. col. 2.

“ It fit a man by wey of kynde
To loue, but it is not kinde
A man for loue his wit to LESE.”

lib. 7. fol. 167. p. 1. col. 2.

“ Wyne maketh a man to LESE wretchedly
His mynde, and his lymmes euerychone.”

Chaucer, Sompnors Tale, fol. 44. p. 1. col. 1.

“ There may nothing, so God my soule saue,
Lykyng to you, that may displese me ;
Ne I desire nothyng for to haue,
Ne dred for to LESE, saue onely ye.”

Clerke of Oxenfordes Tale, fol. 48. p. 1. col. 1.

“Him neded none helpe, if he ne had no money that he myght LESE.”—Boecius, boke 3. fol. 233. p. 1. col. 1.

“Al shulde I dye, I wol her herte seche
I shal no more LESEN but my speche.”

Troylus, boke 5. fol. 194. p. 2. col. 2.

“If so be that thou art myghtye ouer thy selfe, that is to sayne, by tranquyllyte of thy soule, than haste thou thyng in thy power, that thou noldest neuer LESEN.”—Boecius, boke 2. fol. 227. p. 2. col. 2.

“The maister LESETH his tyme to lere
Whan the disciple wol not here.”

Romaunt of the Rose, fol. 130. p. 1. col. 1.

“Ha, how grete harme, and skaith for euermare
That child has caught, throw LESING of his moder.”

Douglas, booke 3. p. 79.

IV.—“Skinner, Minshew and Johnson agree in deriving it [ELSE] from the Greek αλλως or the Latin alias. There is indeed as much reason to suppose that the Greeks and Latins borrowed the word from the Germans, as that these borrowed it from them.—AL and EL may be said to convey the same idea as the Greek αλλως and the Latin alias; and, if so, why should we have recourse to the verb Aleran to find their origin?”—p. 52.

This is truly curious: ELSE from αλλως or alias; although there is as much reason to suppose that the Greeks and Latins borrowed the word from the Germans, as that these borrowed it from them.

But AL and EL convey the same idea as αλλως and alias:—What is that idea? This is a question which my Critics never ask themselves; and yet it is the only rational object of etymology. These gentlemen seem to think that translation is explanation. Nor have they ever yet ventured to ask themselves what they mean, when they say that any word comes from, is derived from, produced from, originates from, or gives birth to, any other word. Their ignorance and idleness make them contented with this vague and misapplied metaphorical language: and if we should beg them to consider that words have no locomotive faculty, that they do not flow like rivers, nor vegetate like plants, nor spiculate like salts, nor are generated like animals; they would say, we quibbled with them; and might perhaps in their fury be tempted to exert against us “a vigour beyond the law.” And yet, untill they can get rid of these metaphors from their minds, they will not themselves be fit for etymology, nor furnish any etymology fit for reasonable men.

V.—“As there is an equivalent in the French of the word UNLESS, very much resembling it in turn, it is somewhat extraordinary that it should never have occurred to you, that possibly the one is a translation, or at least an imitation of the other. This equivalent is À moins que. What word more likely to have given birth to UNLESS; if we may suppose the latter to be a compound of ON and LESS?” P. 39.

“You add in a note—‘It is the same imperative LES, placed at the end of nouns and coalescing with them, which has given to our language such adjectives as Hopeless, Restless, &c.’—These words have been all along considered as compounds of Hope, Rest, &c. and the adjective Less, Anglo-Saxon Lear, and Dutch Loos: and this explanation is so natural, so clear and satisfactory, that it is inconceivable how a man, who has any notion of neatness and consistency in etymological disquisitions, could ever think of their being compounds of a noun, and the imperative of the verb Lejan. LEAS and LOOS are still extant, this in the Dutch, and that in the Anglo-Saxon language: and both answer to the Latin solutus in this phrase solutus cura.

—“Multa adjectiva formantur ex substantivis addendo affixum negativum Lear vel Leare. Hinc apud nos Carelesse, &c. Sciendum vero est Lear Anglo-Saxonicum deduci a M. Gothico Laus, quod significat liber, solutus, vacuus, et in compositione privationem vel defectum denotat. Hickes, A. S. Gram. p. 42.

“Dr. Johnson gives us, in his Dictionary, the following deduction of the word LEST:—‘LEST, conjunction from the adjective LEAST, That not.’” P. 70. “Your improvement upon Dr. Johnson is, *Lezed*¹ that, i. e. Hoc dimisso. Is it not astonishing that a man should plume himself on having substituted this strange and far-fetched manner of speaking, for the easy and natural explanation which precedes?" P. 71.

¹ “Lezed.”—They misrepresent my words just as it suits their purpose. I have said LESED not LEZED. They have not introduced the z here by accident; for the change is important to the etymology. We could never arrive at LEST from LEZED: for (when the vowel between them is removed) z must be followed by d in pronunciation, as s by t. —Take the word Greased for an instance: if you remove the vowel, you must either pronounce it Greaz’d or Greus’t.

"LEST, in the sense of That not, or the Ne emphaticum of the Latin, is generally written in the ancient language thus, LÆST. And as Lær is used also in the Anglo-Saxon for the comparative of lytel, parvus, it is evident that þ lær answers to the modern THE, or THAT LESS. þ lært, to THAT LEAST, supple, of ALL THINGS." P. 72.

I may answer them in the language of Shakespeare,

———— "merely ye are death's fools;
For him ye labour by your flight to shun,
And yet run toward him still."

They contend that the conjunction UNLESS, and the privative termination LESS, come from the adjective LESS; and the conjunction LEST, from the superlative LEAST. Well: And what is the adjective LESS? What is the comparative LESS? and what is the superlative LEAST? I say, What are they? for that is the rational etymological question; and not, whence do they come.—It is with words as with men: Call this Squire, my Lord; then he will be comparative: Call him by the new-fangled title of Marquis, or call him Duke; then he will be superlative: And yet whosoever shall trust him, or have to do with him, will find to their cost that it is the same individual Squire Windham still. So neither is the substance or meaning or real import or value of any word altered by its grammatical class and denomination.

The adjective Less and the comparative *Less*¹ are the imperative of Leran; and the superlative Least is the past participle.

The idle objections of these Critics have brought me to mention this etymology out of its due course: and I do not intend to pursue its consequences in this place. But the reader will see at once the force of this adjective as used by our ancestors, when, instead of nineteen and eighteen, they said,

¹ Parvum—Comparative Minus—Little or Small—Comparative Less.

The reader will not be surprised at the irregularity (as it is called) of the above comparisons, when he considers the real meaning and import of Minus and Less.

Æn læſ ƿpentiz—Tƿa læſ ƿpentiz. i. e. Twenty, Dismiss (or Take away) one. Twenty, Dismiss (or Take away) two. We also say—"He demanded twenty: I gave him two Less." i. e. I gave him twenty, Dismiss two. The same method of resolution takes place, when we speak of any other quantity besides bare numbers; nor can any instance of the use of Less or Least be found in the language, where the signification of Dismissing, Separating, or Taking away, is not conveyed.

VI.—"LEST for LESED say you, as BLEST for BLESSED.—This is the whole of what you tender for our deference to your opinion: and small as the consideration is, it is made up of bad coin. LESAN and BLESSIAN cannot, whatever you may think of the matter, be coupled together, as belonging to one and the same order of verbs: the one has a single, the other a double consonant before the termination of the infinitive mood: that forms a long, this a short syllable in the participle passive; and consequently, though the latter will bear the contraction, it does not follow that the former will bear it likewise. And thus much for the bad coin with which you attempt to put us off." P. 68.

The change of the terminating D to T in the past participles (or in any other words) does not depend either upon single or double consonants, or upon the length or shortness of the syllables; but singly upon the sound of the consonant which precedes it. There is an anatomical reason and necessity for it, which I have explained in pages 130 and 402 of the first edition of this volume. But, without the reason, and without the explanation, the facts are so notorious and so constantly in repetition, that they had only to open their eyes, or their ears, to avoid so palpable an absurdity as this rule about double consonants and long syllables, which they have, for the first time, conjured up. What then? Should I not speak common English, if I should say to Mr. Windham,

"Thou hast Fac't many things; Face not me."

"You have Fleec't the people, and Splic't a rope for your own neck?"

Here are no double consonants; and there are long syllables. But, if they will not believe their eyes and their ears, let them try their own organs of speech ; and they will find, that without a vowel between s and D (or an interval equal to the time of a vowel) they cannot follow the sound s with the audible sound D ; and that, if they will terminate with D, they must change the preceding s to a z. All this would be equally true of the sound, even if the spelling had always continued with a D, and that no writer had ever conformed his orthography to the pronunciation.¹ But we have very numerous written authorities to dumbfound these critics.² I shall give them but two ; believing they are two more than they wish to see.

• “None other wise negligent
Than I you saie, haue I not bec.
In good feith sonne wel me quemeth,
That thou thy selfe hast thus acquite
Toward this, in whiche no wight
Abide maie, for in an houre
He LEST all that he maie laboure
The long yere.”—Gower, de Conf. Aman. fol. 68. p. 1. col. 2.

“In the towne of Stafforde was (William of Cantorbury saith, Ihon Capgrau confirminge the same) a lustye minion, a trulle for the nonce, a pece for a prince, with whome, by report, the kinge at times was very familiare. Betwixte this wanton damsel or primerose pearlesse and Becket the chancellor, wente store of presentes, and of loue tokens plenty, and also the louers met at times, for when he resorted thidre, at no place would he be hosted and lodged, but wher as she held residence. In the dedde tyme of the night (the storye saithe) was it her generall custome, to come alone to his bedchambre with a candle in her hand, to toy and trifle with him. Men are not so folish, but they can wel conceiue, what chastity was obserued in those prety, nice, and wanton metinges. But they say, he sore amended whan he was once consecrated archbishop of Cantorbury, and LEAST³ well his accustomed embracings after the rules of loue, and became in life relygious, that afore in loue was lecherous.”—John Bale. Actes of English Votaries. Dedicated to kyng Edwarde the syxte. 1550.

¹ Ða halzan ƿaule ƿƿam ðam benbum ðær lichoman onlȳrbe. Bed. 8. 8. Onlȳrbe instead of onlȳreb ; the e being removed from between the r and b, this word must be pronounced onlȳrte.—“D literam ratio poscit, aures magis audiunt s.”

² Satis hoc potuit admonendi gratia dixisse, præter agrestes quosdam et indomitos certatores, qui nisi auctoritatibus adhibitis non comprimuntur.

³ He dismissed. He put away. He relinquished.

SINCE.

SINCE is a very corrupt abbreviation ; confounding together different words and different combinations of words : and is therefore in modern English improperly made (like BUT) to serve purposes which no one word in any other language can answer ; because the same accidental corruptions, arising from similarity of sound, have not happened in the correspondent words of any other language.

Where we now employ SINCE was formerly (according to its respective signification) used,

Sometimes,

1. Seoððan, Sioððan, Seððan, Siððan, Siððen, Sithen, Sithence, Sithens, Sithnes, Sithns :

Sometimes,

2. Syne, Sine, Sene, Sen, Syn, Sin :

Sometimes,

3. Seand, Seeing, Seeing that, Secing as, Sens, Sense, Sence.

Sometimes,

4. Siððe, Sið, Sithe, Sith, Seen that, Seen as, Sens, Sense, Sence.

Accordingly SINCE, in modern English, is used four ways.

Two, as a Preposition ; connecting (or rather affecting) words : and Two, as a Conjunction ; affecting sentence.¹

When used as a Preposition, it has always the signification either of the past participle Seen joined to thence, (that is, seen and thenceforward :)—or else it has the signification of the past participle seen only.

When used as a Conjunction, it has sometimes the signification of the present participle Secing, or Seeing that ; and sometimes the signification of the past participle Seen, or Seen that.

¹ It is likewise used adverbially : as when we say—It is a year SINCE : i. e. a year SEEN.

In French—une année passée.

In Italian—un anno fa : i. e. fatto.

As a Proposition,

1. SINCE (for Siddan, Sithence, or Seen, and thenceforward,) as,

"Such a system of government as the present has not been ventured on by any King SINCE the expulsion of James the Second."

2. SINCE (for Syne, Senc, or Seen,) as,

"Did George the Third reign before or SINCE that example?"

As a Conjunction,

3. SINCE (for Seand, Seeing, Seeing as, or Seeing that,) as,

"If I should labour for any other satisfaction, but that of my own mind, it would be an effect of phrensy in me, not of hope; SINCE it is not truth, but opinion, that can travel the world without a passport."

4. SINCE (for Sidda, Sith, Seen as, or Seen that,) as,

"SINCE Death in the end takes from all, whatsoever Fortune or Force takes from any one; it were a foolish madness in the shipwreck of worldly things, where all sinks but the sorrow, to save that."¹

Junius says,—"SINCE that Time, exinde. Contractum est ex Angl. Sith thence, q. d. sero post: ut Sith illud originem traxerit ex illo SEIΨN, Sero, quod habet Arg. Cod."

Skinner says,—"SINCE, a Tent. Sint. Belg. Sind. Post, Postea, Postquam. Doct. Th. H. putat deflexum a nostro Sithence. Non absurdum etiam esset declinare a Lat. Exhinc, et u abjectis, et x facillima mutatione in s transeunte." Again he says,—"SITH ab A. S. Siddan, Syddan. Belg. Seyd, Sint. Post, Post illa, Postea."

After the explanation I have given, I suppose it unnecessary to point out the particular errors of the above derivations. Sithence and Sith, though now obsolete, continued in good use down even to the time of the Stuarts.

¹ V'a, the French past participle of Voir, to See, is used in the same conjunctive manner in that language.

"Dis nous pourquoi Dieu l'a permis, Veu qu'il paroît de ses amis!"

Hooker in his writings uses Sithence, Sith, Seeing, and Since. The two former he always properly distinguishes; using Sithence for the true import of the Anglo-Saxon Sīððan, and Sith for the true import of the Anglo-Saxon Sīððe. Which is the more extraordinary, because authors of the first credit had, very long before Hooker's time, confounded them together; and thereby led the way for the present indiscriminate and corrupt use of SINCE in all the four cases mentioned.

Seeing Hooker uses sometimes perhaps (for it will admit a doubt)¹ improperly. And SINCE (according to the corrupt custom which has now universally prevailed in the language) he uses indifferently either for Sithence, Scen, Seeing, or Sith.

THAT.

There is something so very singular in the use of this Conjunction, as it is called, that one should think it would alone, if attended to, have been sufficient to lead the Grammarians to a knowledge of most of the other conjunctions, as well as of itself. The use I mean is, that the conjunction THAT generally makes a part of, and keeps company with, most of the other conjunctions.—If that, An that, Unless that, Though that, But that, Without that, Lest that, Since that, Save that, Except that, &c., is the construction of most of the sentences where any of those conjunctions are used.

Is it not an obvious question then, to ask, why this Conjunction alone should be so peculiarly distinguished from all the rest of the same family? And why this alone should be able to connect itself with, and indeed be usually necessary to, almost all the others? So necessary, that even when it is com-

¹ Such is the doubtful use of it by Shakespeare in the following passage :

“Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should fear;
SEEING that death, a necessary end,
Will come when it will come.”

For it may either be resolved thus;—It seems strange that men, SEEING that death will come when it will come, should fear :

Or—Strange that men should fear; it being SEEN that death will come when it will come.

pounded with another conjunction, and drawn into it so as to become one word, (as it is with sith and since,) we are still forced to employ again this necessary index, in order to precede, and so point out the sentence which is to be affected by the other conjunction?

B.—Ðe, in the Anglo-Saxon, meaning THAT, I can easily perceive that SITH (which is no other than the Anglo-Saxon Siððe) includes THAT. But when SINCE is (as you here consider it) a corruption for Seeing-as and Seen-as; how does it then include THAT?—In short, what is AS? For I can gather no more from the Etymologists concerning it, than that it is derived either from ως; or from ALS:¹ But still this explains nothing: for what ως is, or ALS, remains likewise a secret.

H.—The truth is, that AS is also an article; and (however and whenever used in English) means the same as It, or That, or Which. In the German, where it still evidently retains its original signification and use, (as *so*² also does,) it is written —Es.

¹ Junius says—"As, ut, sicut, Græcis est ως." Skinner, whom S. Johnson follows, says—"As, a Teut. Als, sicut; eliso scil. propter euphoniā intermedio L."

² The German so and the English so (though in one language it is called an Adverb or Conjunction, and in the other an Article or Pronoun) are yet both of them derived from the Gothic article SA, SX; and have in both languages retained the original meaning, viz. It, or That.

Mr. Tyrwhitt indeed (not perceiving that Al-es and Al-so are different compounds) in a note on the Canterbury Tales, v. 7327, says—"Our AS is the same with Als, Teut. and Sax. It is only a further corruption of Also." But the etymological opinions of Mr. Tyrwhitt (who derives For the Nones from Pro nunc) merit not the smallest attention.

Dr. Lowth, amongst some false English which he has recommended, and much good English which he has reprobated, says—"So-AS, was used by the writers of the last century to express a consequence, instead of so-THAT. Swift, I believe, is the last of our good writers who has frequently used this manner of expression. It seems improper, and is deservedly grown obsolete."

But Dr. Lowth, when he undertook to write his Introduction, with the best intention in the world, most assuredly sinned against his better judgment. For he begins most judiciously, thus,—“Universal Grammar explains the principles which are common to All languages. The Grammar of any particular language applies those common principles to that particular language.” And yet, with this clear truth before his

It does not come from Als; any more than Though, and Be-it, and If (or Gif), &c., come from Although, and Albeit, and Algif, &c.—For Als, in our old English, is a contraction of Al, and es or as: and this Al (which in comparisons used to be very properly employed before the first es or as, but was not employed before the second) we now, in modern English, suppress: As we have also done in numberless other instances; where All (though not improper) is not necessary.

Thus,

“She glides away under the foamy seas
As swift AS darts or feather’d arrows fly.”

That is,

“She glides away (with) THAT swiftness (with) WHICH feather’d arrows fly.”

eyes, he boldly proceeds to give a particular grammar; without being himself possessed of one single principle of Universal Grammar. Again: he says—“The connective parts of sentences are the most important of all, and require the greatest care and attention: for it is by these chiefly that the train of thought, the course of reasoning, and the whole progress of the mind, in continued discourse of all kinds, is laid open; and on the right use of these, the perspicuity, that is the first and greatest beauty of style, principally depends. Relatives and Conjunctions are the instruments of connection in discourse: it may be of use to point out some of the most common inaccuracies that writers are apt to fall into with respect to them; and a few examples of faults may perhaps be more instructive, than any rules of propriety that can be given.”

And again,—“I have been the more particular in noting the proper uses of these conjunctions, because they occur very frequently; and, as it was observed before of connective words in general, are of great importance with respect to the clearness and beauty of style. I may add too, because mistakes in the use of them are very common.”

After which he proceeds to his examples of the proper and improper use of these connectives:—without having the most distant notion of the meaning of the words whose employment he undertakes to settle. The consequence was unavoidable: that (having no reasonable rule to go by, and no apparent signification to direct him) he was compelled to trust to his own fanciful taste (as in the best it is), and the uncertain authority of others; and has consequently approved and condemned without truth or reason. “Pourquoi (says Girard) après tant de siècles et tant d’ouvrages les gens de lettres ont-ils encore des idées si informes et des expressions si confuses, sur ce qu’ils font profession d’étudier et de traiter? Ou s’ils ne veulent pas prendre la peine d’approfondir la matière, comment osent-ils en donner des leçons au public? C’est ce que je ne conçois pas.”

When in old English it is written,

“Sche _____

Glidis away under the fomy seis

ALS swift as ganze or fedderit arrow fleis :”

Douglas, booke 10. p. 323.

then it means,

“With ALL THAT swiftness with WHICH, &c.”

After what I have said, you will see plainly why so many of the conjunctions may be used almost indifferently (or with a very little turn of expression) for each other. And without my entering into the particular minutiae in the use of each, you will easily account for the slight differences in the turn of expression, arising from different customary abbreviations of construction.

I will only give you one instance, and leave it with you for your entertainment: from which you will draw a variety of arguments and conclusions.

“And soft he sighed, LEST men might him hear.

And soft he sighed THAT men might not him hear.

And soft he sighed, ELSE men might him hear.

UNLESS he sighed soft, men might him hear.

BUT that he sighed soft, men might him hear.

WITHOUT he sighed soft, men might him hear.

SAVE that he sighed soft, men might him hear.

EXCEPT he sighed soft, men might him hear.

OUTCEPT he sighed soft, men might him hear,

OUT-TAKE he sighed soft, men might him hear.

IF that he sigh'd NOT soft, men might him hear.

And AN he sigh'd NOT soft, men might him hear.

SET that he sigh'd NOT soft, men might him hear.

PUT CASE he sigh'd NOT soft, men might him hear.

BE IT he sigh'd NOT soft, men might him hear.”

B.—According to your account, then, Lord Monboddo is extremely unfortunate in the particular care he has taken to make an exception from the general rule he lays down, of the Verbs being the Parent word of all language, and to caution the candid reader from imputing to him an opinion that the Conjunctions were intended by him to be included in his rule, or have any connexion whatever with Verbs.¹

¹ “This so copious derivation from the verb in Greek, naturally

H.—In my opinion he is not less unfortunate in his rule than in his exception. They are both equally unfounded: and yet as well founded, as almost every other position which he has laid down in his two first volumes. The whole of which is perfectly worthy of that profound politician and philosopher, who esteems that to be the most perfect form, and as he calls it—“the last stage of civil society,”¹ where Government leaves nothing to the free-will of individuals; but interferes with the domestic private lives of the citizens, and the education of their children! Such would in truth be the last stage of civil society, in the sense of the lady in the comedy, whose lover having offered—“to give her the last proof of love and marry her,”—she aptly replied, “The last indeed; for there’s an end of loving.”

B.—But what say you to the bitter irony with which Mr. Harris treats the moderns in the concluding note to his doctrine of Conjunctions? Where he says,—“It is somewhat surprising that the politest and most elegant of the Attic writers, and Plato above all the rest, should have their works leads one to suspect that it is the Parent word of the whole language: and indeed I believe that to be the fact: for I do not know that it can be certainly shown that there is any word that is undoubtedly a primitive, which is not a verb; I mean a verb in the stricter sense and common acceptation of the word. By this the candid reader will not understand that I mean to say that prepositions, conjunctions, and such like words, which are rather the Pegs and Nails that fasten the several parts of the language together than the language itself, are derived from verbs or are derivatives of any kind.”—Vol. 2. part 2. b. 1. ch. 15.

Court de Gebelin is as positive in the contrary opinion:—“Il a fallu nécessairement,” says he, “que tous les autres mots vinssent des noms. Il n’est aucun mot, de quelque espèce que ce soit, et dans quelque langue que ce soit, qui ne descende d’un nom.”—Hist. de la Parole, p. 180.

¹ “But the private lives of the subjects under those Governments are left as much to the free will of each individual, and as little subjected to rule, as in the American Governments above mentioned; and every man in such a State may with impunity educate his children in the worst manner possible; and may abuse his own person and fortune as much as he pleases; provided he does no injury to his neighbours, nor attempts any thing against the State. The last stage of civil society, in which the progression ends, is that most perfect form of polity which, to all the advantages of the Governments last mentioned, joins the care of the education of the youth, and of the private lives of the citizens; neither of which is left to the will and pleasure of each individual; but both are regulated by PUBLIC WISDOM.”—Vol. 1. p. 243.

filled with Particles of all kinds, and with Conjunctions in particular; while in the modern polite works, as well of ourselves as of our neighbours, scarce such a word as a Particle or Conjunction is to be found. Is it that where there is connection in the meaning, there must be words had to connect; but that where the connection is little or none, such connectives are of little use? That houses of cards without cement may well answer their end; but not those houses where one would chuse to dwell? Is this the cause? Or have we attained an elegance to the antients unknown?

'Venimus ad summam fortunæ,' &c.

What will you say to Lord Monboddo, who holds the same opinion with Mr. Harris?¹

H.—I say that a little more reflection and a great deal less reading, a little more attention to common sense,² and less blind prejudice for his Greek commentators, would have made Mr. Harris a much better Grammarian, if not perhaps a Philosopher.—What a strange language is this to come from a man, who at the same time supposes these Particles and Conjunctions to be words without meaning! It should seem, by this insolent pleasantry, that Mr. Harris reckons it the perfection of composition and discourse to use a great many words without meaning!—If so, perhaps Master Slender's language would meet with this learned Gentleman's approbation:

"I keep but three men and a boy yet, till my mother be dead; but what though yet I live a poor gentleman born."

¹ "This abundance of Conjunctions and Particles," says he, vol. 2. p. 179, "is, in my opinion, one of the greatest beauties of the Greek language, &c. For I am so far from thinking that that disjointed composition and short cut of style, which is so much in fashion at present, and of which Tacitus among the antients is the great model, is a beauty, that I am of opinion it is the affectation of a deformity; nor is there, in my apprehension, any thing that more disfigures a style, or makes it more offensive to a man of true taste and judgement in writing," &c.

² "I shall only add at present, that one of the greatest difficulties of composing in English appears to me to be the want of such connecting particles as the Greeks have," &c.

³ The author would by no means be understood to allude to the common sense of Doctors Oswald, Reid, and Beattie; which appears to him to be sheer nonsense.

Now here is cement enough in proportion to the building. It is plain, however, that Shakespeare (a much better philosopher, by the bye, than most of those who have written philosophical Treatises) was of a different opinion in this matter from Mr. Harris. He thought the best way to make his Zany talk unconnectedly and nonsensically, was to give him a quantity of these elegant words without meaning, which are such favourites with Mr. Harris and Lord Monboddlo.

B.—This may be raillery perhaps, but I am sure it is neither reasoning nor authority. This instance does not affect Mr. Harris: for All cement is no more fit to make a firm building than no cement at all. Slender's discourse might have been made equally as unconnected without any particles, as with so many particles together. It is the proper mixture of particles and other words which Mr. Harris would recommend; and he only censures the moderns for being too sparing of Particles.

H.—Reasoning! It disdains to be employed about such conceited nonsense, such affected airs of superiority and pretended elegance. Especially when the whole foundation is false: for there are not any useful connectives in the Greek, which are not to be found in modern languages. But for his opinion concerning their employment, you shall have authority, if you please; Mr. Harris's favourite authority: an Antient, a Greek, and one too writing professedly on Plato's opinions, and in defence of Plato; and which, if Mr. Harris had not forgotten, I am persuaded he would not have contradicted.

Plutarch says—"Il n'y a ny Beste, ny instrument, ny armeure, ny autre chose quelle qu'elle soit au monde, qui par ablation ou privation d'une siene propre partie, soit plus belle, plus active, ne plus douce que paravant elle n'estoit; là où l'oraison bien souvent, en estans les conjunctions toutes ostées, a une force et efficace plus affectueuse, plus active, et plus esmouvante. C'est pourquoy ceulx qui escrivent des figures de Rhetorique louent et prisent grandement celle qu'ils appellent déliée; là où ceulx qui sont trop religieux et qui s'assubjettissent trop aux règles de la grammaire, sans ozer oster une seule conjunction de la commune façon de parler, en sont à bon droit blasmez et repris; comme faisans un stile énervé, sans aucune pointe d'affection, et qui lasse et donne peine à ouïr," &c.¹

I will give you another authority, which perhaps Mr. Harris may value more, because I value it much less.

"Il n'y a rien encore qui donne plus de mouvement au discours que d'en ôter les liaisons. En effet, un discours que rien ne lie et n'embarasse, marche et coule de soymême, et il s'en faut peu qu'il n'aille quelquefois plus vite que la pensée même de l'orateur." Longinus then gives three examples, from Xenophon, Homer, and Demosthenes; and concludes—"En égalant et applanissant toutes choses par le moyen de liaisons, vous verrez que d'un pathétique fort et violent vous tomberez dans une petite afféterie de langage qui n'aura ni pointe ni éguillon; et que toute la force de votre discours s'éteindra aussi-tôt d'elle-mesme. Et comme il est certain, que si on lioit le corps d'un homme qui court, on lui feroit perdre toute sa force; de même si vous allez embarasser une passion de ces liaisons et de ces particules inutiles, elle les souffre avec peine; vous lui ôtez la liberté de sa course, et cette impétuosité qui la faisoit marcher avec la mesme violence qu'un trait lancé par une machine."²

Take one more authority, better than either of the foregoing on this subject.

"Partes orationis similes nexu indigent, ut inter se uniantur; et iste vocatur Conjunctio, quæ definitur vocula indeclinabilis quæ partes orationis colligit. Alii eam subintelligi malunt, alii expresse et moleste repetunt: illud, qui attentiores sunt rebus; hoc, qui rigorosius loquuntur. Omittere fere omnes conjunctiones Hispanorum aut vitium aut character est. Plurimæ desiderantur in Lucano, plurimæ in Seneca, multæ in aliis authoribus. Multas omitto; et, si meum genium sequerer, fere omnes. Qui rem intelligit et argumentum penetrat, percipit sibi ipsis coherere sententias, nec egere particulis ut connectantur: quod, si interserantur voculæ connexivæ, scopæ dissolutæ illæ sunt; nec additis et multiplicatis conjunctionibus coherere poterunt. Hinc patet quid debuisset responderi Caligulæ, Senecæ calamum vilipendenti. Suetonius: Lenius comp- tiusque scribendi genus adeo contempsit, ut Senecam, tum maxime placentem, commissiones meras componere, et ARENAM SINE CALCE, diceret.—“Caligulae hoc judicium est, inquit Lipsius in judicio de Seneca; nempe illius qui cogitavit etiam de Homeri carminibus abolendis, itemque Virgilii et Titi Livii scriptis ex omnibus bibliothecis amovendis. Respondeo igitur meum Senecam non vulgo nec plebi scripsisse, nec omni viro docto, sed illi qui attente eum legeret. Et addo, ubi lector mente Senecam sequitur, sensum adsequi: nec inter sententias, suo se prementes et consolidantes pondere, conjunctionem majorem requiri.”—CARAMUEL, cxlii.

¹ Platonic Questions, Amyot's Translation.

² Boileau's Translation.

And I hope these authorities (for I will offer no argument to a writer of his cast) will satisfy the “true taste and judgment in writing” of Lord Monboddo; who with equal affectation and vanity has followed Mr. Harris in this particular: and who, though incapable of writing a sentence of common English, (defuerunt enim illi et usus pro duce et ratio pro suasore,) sincerely deplores the decrease of learning in England; ¹ whilst he really imagines that there is something captivating in his own style, and has gratefully informed us to whose assistance we owe the obligation.

CHAPTER IX.

OF PREPOSITIONS.

B.—WELL, Sir, what you have hitherto said of the Conjunctions will deserve to be well considered. But we have not yet entirely done with them: for, you know, the Prepositions were originally, and for a long time, classed with the Conjunctions: and when first separated from them, were only distinguished by the name of Prepositive Conjunctions.²

¹ See Mr. Boswell's Tour to the Hebrides, p. 473.

² The philosophers of Hungary, Turkey, and Georgia at least, were in no danger of falling into this absurdity; for Dr. Jault, in his preface to (what is very improperly, though commonly, called) Menage's Dictionary, tells us—“Par le fréquent commerce que j'ai eu avec eux [les Hongrois] pendant plusieurs années, ayant tâché de pénétrer à fonds ce que ce pouvoit être que cet idiôme si différent de tous les autres d'Europe, je les ai convaincus qu'ils étoient Scythes d'origine, ou du moins

H.—Very true, Sir. And these Prepositive Conjunctions, once separated from the others, soon gave birth to another subdivision;¹ and Grammarians were not ashamed to have a class of Postpositive Prepositives.—"Dantur etiam Postpositiones (says Caramuel); quæ Præpositiones postpositivæ solent dici, nulla vocabulorum repugnantia: vocantur enim Præpositiones, quia sensu saltem præponuntur; et Postpositivæ, quia vocaliter postponi debent."

B.—But as Mr. Harris still ranks them with Connectives, this, I think, will be the proper place for their investigation. And as the title of Prepositive or Preposition "only expresses their place and not their character; their Definition, he says, will distinguish them from the former Connectives." He therefore proceeds to give a compleat definition of them, viz.

—"A Preposition is a part of speech, devoid itself of signification; but so formed as to unite two words that are significant, and that refuse to coalesce or unite of themselves."—Now I am curious to know, whether you will agree with Mr. Harris in his definition of this part of Speech; or whether you are determined to differ from him on every point.

H.—Till he agrees with himself, I think you should not disapprove of my differing from him; because for this at least I have his own respectable authority. Having defined a word to be a "Sound significant;" he now defines a Preposition to be a word "devoid of signification." And a few pages after, he says, "Prepositions commonly transfuse something of their own meaning into the word with which they are compounded."

Now, if I agree with him that words are sounds significant; how can I agree that there are sorts of words devoid of signification? And if I could suppose that Prepositions are devoid que leur langue étoit une des branches de la Scythique; puisqu'à l'égard de l'inflexion elle avoit rapport à celle des Turcs, qui constamment passoient pour Scythes, étant originaire du Turquestan, et de la Transoxiane; et qu'outre cela les PRÉPOSITIONS de ces deux langues, aussi bien que de la Georgienne, se mettoient toujours après leur régime, contre l'ordre de la nature et la signification de leur nom."

Look at the English, i. e., The language we are talking OF: The language we deal IN: The object we look TO: The persons we work FOR: The explanation we depend UPON; &c.

¹ Buonmattei has still a further subdivision; and has made a separate part of speech of the Segnacasi.

of signification; how could I afterwards allow that they transfuse something of their own meaning?

B.—This is the same objection repeated, which you made before to his definition of the first sort of Connectives. But is it not otherwise a compleat definition?

H.—Mr. Harris no doubt intended it as such: for, in a note on this passage, he endeavours to justify his doctrine by a citation from Apollonius;¹ which he calls “rather a descriptive sketch than a compleat definition.” But what he gives us in the place of it as compleat, is neither definition nor even description. It contains a Negation and an Accident; and nothing more. It tells us what the Preposition is not; and the purpose for which he supposes it to be employed. It might serve as well for a definition of the East India Company as of a Preposition: for of that we may truly say—“It is not itself any part of the Government, but so formed as to unite those who would not have coalesced of themselves.”²—Poor Scaliger (who well knew what a definition should be) from his own melancholy experience exclaimed—“Nihil infelicius grammatico definitore!” Mr. Harris’s logical ignorance most happily deprived him of a sense of his misfortunes. And so little, good man, did he dream of the danger of his situation,

¹ “Je n’entends pas trop bien le Grec, dit le Géant.

“Ni moi non plus, dit la Mite philosophique.

“Pourquoi donc, reprit le Sirien, citez-vous un certain Aristote en Grec?

“C’est, repliqua le Savant, qu’il faut bien citer ce qu’on ne comprend point du tout, dans la langue qu’on entend le moins.”—Voltaire, Micromegas.

² Let the reader who has any sense of justice, or who feels any anxiety for the welfare of his country, look back and re-consider the corrupt use which one Coalition would have made of this company in the year 1783, and the corrupt use which another Coalition has made of it since. Let him then recall to his mind the parallel history of the Company of St. George, at the close of the flourishing days of the Republic of Genoa; and, in spite of all outward appearances, he will easily be able to foretell the speedy fate of this pilfered and annihilated body. Without any external shock, the sure cause of its rapid destruction is in its present despotic and corrupt constitution: to the formation of which (and to no supposed delinquency nor personal enmity) that much injured man, Mr. Hastings, was made the victim by all the corrupt parties in the kingdom.

that whilst all others were acknowledging their successful though indefatigable labours, and lamenting their insuperable difficulties, he prefaces his doctrine of Connectives with this singularly confident introduction:—"What remains of our work is a matter of less difficulty; it being the same here as in some historical picture: when the principal figures are once formed, it is an easy labour to design the rest."¹

B.—However contradictory and irregular all this may appear to you, Mr. Harris has advanced nothing more than what the most approved Greek and Latin Grammarians have delivered down to him, and what modern Grammarians and Philosophers have adopted.²

¹ Such is the language, and such are the definitions of him who, in this very chapter of the Prepositions, has modestly given us the following note:—"And here I cannot but observe, that he who pretends to discuss the sentiments of any one of these philosophers, or even to cite and translate him (except in trite and obvious sentences) without accurately knowing the Greek tongue in general; the nice differences of many words apparently synonymous; the peculiar style of the author whom he presumes to handle; the new coined words, and new significations given to old words used by such author and his sect; the whole philosophy of such sect, together with the connection and dependencies of its several parts, whether logical, ethical, or physical;—He, I say, that, without this previous preparation, attempts what I have said, will shoot in the dark; will be liable to perpetual blunders; will explain and praise and censure merely by chance: and though he may possibly to fools appear as a wise man, will certainly among the wise ever pass for a fool. Such a man's intellect comprehends antient philosophy, as his eye comprehends a distant prospect. He may see, perhaps, enough to know mountains from plains, and seas from woods; but for an accurate discernment of particulars and their character, this, without further helps, it is impossible to attain."

² "Præpositio seu adnomen, per se non significat, nisi addatur nominibus."—Campanella.

"Multas et varias hujus partis orationis definitiones invenio. Et præ cæteris arridet hæc,—Præpositio est vocula: modum quendam nominis adsignificans."—Caramuel.

"Ut omittam Particulas minores, cujusmodi sunt Præpositiones, Conjunctiones, Interjectiones, quæ nullam habent cum nominibus affinitatem."—J. C. Scaliger, de L. L. cap. 192.

Even Hoogeveen, who clearly saw—"Particulas in sua Infantia fuisse vel verba vel nomina, vel ex nominibus formata adverbia;" yet gives the following account and Definition of them:

"Primam, ut reliquarum, ita Græcæ quoque linguæ originem fuisse simplicissimam, ipsa natura ac ratio docent; primosque ονομαθιρας nomina, quibus res, et verba, quibus actiones exprimerent, non vero

H.—Yes. Yes. I know the errors are antient enough, to have been long ago worn out and discarded. But I do not think that any excuse for repeating them. For a much less degree of understanding is necessary to detect the erroneous principles of others, than to guard against those which may be started for the first time by our own imagination. In these matters it shows less weakness of judgment, because it is more easy to deceive ourselves than to be deceived by others.

B.—You will do well, Sir, to be particularly mindful of what you said last; and to place your strongest guard there, where it may be most wanted: for you seem sufficiently determined not to be deceived by others. And with this caution, I shall be glad to hear your account of the Preposition. Perhaps I shall save time, at least I shall sooner satisfy myself, by asking you a few questions.—Pray, how many Prepositions are there?

H.—Taking the Philosophy of language as it now stands, your question is a very proper one. And yet you know, that authors have never hitherto been agreed concerning their number. The antient Greek Grammarians admitted only eighteen (six mono-

Particulas instituisse, probabile est. Certe, cum ex nominibus et verbis integra constet oratio, quorum hæc actiones et affectiones, illa personas agentes et patientes indicant, jure quæritur, an primæva lingua habuerit particulas. Non utique necessariam, rem exprimendi, viam habere videntur, sed adscititiam quandam, et sententias per nomina et verba expressas variandi, stabiliendi, infirmandi, negandi, copulandi, disjungiendi, imminuendi, affirmandi, limitandi, multisque modis afficiendi: Ipsæ vero, quatenus particule, per se solæ spectatæ, nihil significant.—

“Natura, inquam, ipsa docet, Particulis antiquiora esse nomina et verba, quia, observato rerum ordine, necesse est, res et actiones prius fuisse natas et expressas, quam Particulas, quæ has vel conjungunt, vel disjungunt: priora sunt jungenda jungentibus, firmanda firmantibus, limitanda limitantibus, et sic deinceps. Neque mea hæc, neque nova est de particularum minus antiqua origine opinio: suffragantem habeo Plutarchum ad illam quæstionem, quæ inter Platonicas postrema est—‘Cur Plato dixerit orationem ex nominibus et verbis misceri.’ Ubi ait—‘Probabile esse, homines ab initio orationem distinguendum Particularum eguisse.’

“Dicamus ergo, Particulam esse voculam, ex nomine vel verbo natum, quæ sententiæ addita, aliquam ipsi passionem affert, et orationi adminiculo est, et officiosa ministra. Ministram voco, quia, orationi non inserta, sed per se posita et solitaria, nihil significat.”

syllables and twelve dissyllables). The antient Latin Grammarians above fifty.¹ Though the moderns, Sanctius, Scioppius, Perizonius, Vossius, and others, have endeavoured to lessen the number without fixing it.²

Our countryman Wilkins thinks that thirty-six are sufficient.³

Girard says, that the French language has done the business effectually with thirty-two: and that he could not, with the utmost attention, discover any more.⁴

But the authors of the Encyclopédie [Preposition], though they also, as well as Girard, admit only simple prepositions, have found in the same language forty-eight.

And Buffier gives a list of seventy-five; and declares that there is a great number besides, which he has not mentioned.

The greater part of authors have not ventured even to talk of any particular number: and of those who have, (except in the Greek,) no two authors have agreed in the same language. Nor has any one author attributed the same number to any two different languages.

Now this discordance has by no means proceeded from any carelessness or want of diligence in Grammatists or Lexicographers: but the truth is, that the fault lies with the Philosophers; for though they have pretended to teach others, they

¹ Scotus determines them to be forty-nine.

² Sanctius says,—“Ex numero Præpositionum, quas Grammatici pertinaciter asserunt, aliquas sustulimus.”

³ “There are thirty-six Prepositions which may, with much less equivocalness than is found in instituted languages, suffice to express those various respects which are to be signified by this kind of Particle.”—Part 3. chap. 3.

⁴ “Quoique les rapports déterminatifs qu’on peut mettre entre les choses soient variés et nombreux; le langage François a trouvé l’art d’en faire énoncer la multitude et la diversité des nuances, par un petit nombre de mots: car l’examen du détail fait avec toute l’attention dont je suis capable, ne m’en offre que trente deux de cette espèce. Il m’a paru que les dictionnaires confondent quelquefois des Adverbes et même des Conjonctions avec des Prépositions.—Je ne me suis jamais permis de ne rien avancer sans avoir fait un examen profond et rigoureux; me servant toujours de l’analyse et des règles de la plus exacte Logique pour résoudre mes doutes, et tâcher de prendre le parti le plus vrai. Je ne dissimulerai pourtant pas, que mes scrupules ont été fréquents: mais ma discussion a été attentive, et mon travail opiniâtre.”—Vrais Principes, Disc. 11.

have none of them known themselves what the nature of a Preposition is. And how is it possible that Grammarians should agree, what words ought or ought not to be referred to a class which was not itself ascertained? Yet had any of the definitions or accounts yet given of the Preposition and of language been just, two consequences would immediately have followed: viz. That all men would have certainly known the precise number of Prepositions; and (unless Things, or the operations of the human mind, were different in different ages and climates) their number in all languages must have been always the same.

B.—You mean then now at last, I suppose, to fix the number of real Prepositions in our own, and therefore in all other languages.

H.—Very far from it. I mean on the contrary to account for their variety. And I will venture to lay it down as a rule, that, of different languages, the least corrupt will have the fewest Prepositions: and, in the same language, the best etymologists will acknowledge the fewest. And (if you are not already aware of it) I hope the reason of the rule will appear in the sequel.

There is not, for instance, (as far as I am aware,) a preposition in any language answering directly to the French preposition CHEZ.¹ Yet does it by no means follow, that the modern French do therefore employ any operation of the mind, or put their minds into any posture different from their ancestors or from other nations; but only that there happens not to be in any other language a similar corruption of some word corresponding precisely with CHEZ. Which is merely a corruption of the Italian substantive CASA :¹ in the same manner as choss is from cosa ; or as cheval, chemise, chemin, chétif, che-

¹ In the same manner Témoin and Moyennant are prepositions peculiar also to the French, but which require no explanation: because the Substantive Témoin, and the Participle Moyennant, are not confined to their prepositive employment alone, (or, as in the Latin it is termed, put absolutely;) but are used upon all other common occasions where those denominations are wanted; and their signification is therefore evident. MOIENING was antiently used in English.—“At whose instigation and stirring I (Robert Copland) have me applied, Moiening the helpe of God, to reduce and translate it.”—(See Ames's History of Printing; or see Percy's Reliques, vol. 2. p. 273.) Had the use of this word continued in our language, it would certainly have been ranked amongst the prepositions; and we should consequently have been considered as exerting one operation of the mind more than we do at present.

¹ Though the bulk of the French language is manifestly a corrupt derivation from the Italian, yet, as Scaliger observed of the Romans—“Aliqui autem, inter quos Varro, etiam maligne eruerunt omnia e Latinis Græcisque, suas origines invidere.” So have the French, in all former times, shown a narrow jealousy and envy towards Italy, its authors, and language : to which however they originally owe every thing valuable which they possess. From this spirit Henri Estienne, De la précellence du langage François, (a book of ill-founded vanity, blind prejudice and partiality) asserts that the Italians have taken—“la bande des mots qu'on appelle indéclinables ; comme sont Adverbes, Conjunctions, et autres particules,” from the French ; and amongst others he mentions se, se non, che, ma, and senza. But I shall hereafter have occasion to show clearly the injustice of Henry Estienne to the Italian language, when I come to compare the respective advantages and disadvantages of the modern languages of Europe, and whence they flow. In the mean time it may not perhaps be improper to offer a general rule, by which (when applicable) all etymological disputants ought to be determined, whether such determination be favourable or adverse to their national vanity and prejudice : viz. That where different languages use the same or a similar particle, that language ought to be considered as its legitimate parent, in which the true meaning of the word can be found, and where its use is as common and familiar as that of any other verbs and substantives.

A more modern author (and therefore less excusable), Bergier, Eléments primitifs des Langues, having first absurdly imagined what is contradicted by all experience, viz.—“A mesure que les langues se sont éloignées de leur source primitive, les mots ont reçu de nouveaux accroissements : plus elles ont été cultivées plus elles se sont allongées. On ne leur a donné de l'agrément, de la cadence, de l'harmonie qu'aux dépens de leur brièveté.”—proceeds to this consequence,—“Les Romains ne nous ont pas communiqué les termes simples, les liaisons du discours : la plupart de ces termes sont plus courts en François qu'en Latin, et les Gaulois s'en servoient avant que de connoître l'Italie ou ses habitants.”—And then, to show more strongly the spirit which animates him (a spirit unworthy of letters and hostile to the investigation of truth), adds—“Sommes nous suffisamment instruits, lorsque nous avons appris de nos Etymologistes, que tel mot François est emprunté du Latin, tel autre du Grec, celui-ci de l'E-pagnol, celui-là du Teuton ou de l'Allemand ? Mais les Latins ou les Allemands de qui l'ont-ils reçu ? Ne semble-t-il pas que nos ayeux ne subsistoient que des emprunts, tandis que les autres peuples estoient riches de leur propre fonds ? Je ne puis souffrir qu'on nous envoie mendier ailleurs, tandis que nous l'avons chez nous.”

Perhaps there was something of this jealousy in Menage, when (not being able to agree with Sylvius, that CHEZ should be written Sus or creuil, cher, chenu, chien, toucher, &c. are corrupted from cavallo, camiscia, camino, cattivo, cavriuolo, caro, canuto, cane, toccare, &c.

If the ingenious Abbé Girard had known what CHEZ really was, he would not have said (Vrais Principes, Disc. 2.) “CHEZ a pour son partage particulier une idée d’habitation, soit comme patrie, soit comme simple demeure domestique.” But he would have said CHEZ is merely a corruption of CASA, and has all the same meaning in French which CASA has in Italian:¹ and that is something more than patrie or demeure domestique; viz.—Race, Family, Nation, Sect, &c. [“Ancien patron de la CASE,” says M. de Bussy Rabutin in his Memoirs, tom. 2. p. 175.] Neither again would he have said—“Il s’agit ici de la permission que l’usage a accordée à quelques prépositions d’en régir d’autres en certaines occasions: c’est à dire, de les souffrir dans les complemens dont elles indiquent le rapport; comme —Je viens DE CHEZ vous.” He would have seen through this

Sur) he asserts that—“CHEZ vient de APUD, d’où les Italiens ont fait APO, et les Espagnols CABE en préposant comme nous un c.”

Mr. de Brosses however, superior to all little prejudices, says—“On voit bien que CHEZ est une traduction de l’Italien CASA, et que quand on dit CHEZ VOUS, c’est comme si l’on disoit CASA VOI (MAISON de vous). Et encore ce dernier mot est plutôt dans notre langue une adverbe qu’une particule; ainsi que beaucoup d’autres dont l’origine devient plus facile à reconnoître. Mais quand ce sont de pures Particules, il est mal aisé de retrouver la première cause de leur formation; qui sans doute a souvent été arbitraire & précipitée: comme je l’ai remarqué en parlant de petites expressions conjonctives, qui ne servent qu’à former la liaison du discours.”—Formation Mécanique des Langues, tom. 2. chap. 14. art. 254.

The French Law Term Chezé, which has caused to that people so much litigation, and to their lawyers so much controversy, (and which some of their authors would have written Chesné, because they supposed the land to have been formerly measured with a Chain; and others would have written choisé parce que l’ainé choisit.) is derived in like manner from CASA, and means no more than what we in English call the Home-stead or Home-stall, whose extent is, of course, variable; but ought in reason to go with the house.

If therefore the French Etymologists thus stumbled at CHEZÉ, it is no wonder they knew not what to make of CHEZ, whose corruption had proceeded one step further.

¹ S. Johnson (who was conversant with no languages but English, Latin, and Greek) under the word AT, says hardily, but not truly, that—“CHEZ means sometimes application to, or dependence on.”

grammatical mystery¹ of one preposition's governing another; and would have said, that DE may be prefixed to the Substantive CHEZ (id est, CASA) in the same manner as to any other substantive. For,—“Je viens De CHEZ vous,” is no other than —Je viens de CASA à vous; or (omitting the *Segnacaso*²) de CASA vous; or, de CA vous.³

But thus it is that when Grammar comes at length (for its application is always late) to be applied to a language; some long preceding corruption causes a difficulty: ignorance of the corruption gives rise to some ingenious system to account for these words, which are considered as original and not corrupted. Succeeding ingenuity and heaps of misplaced learning increase the difficulty, and make the error more obstinate, if not incurable.

B.—Do you acknowledge the preposition to be an indeclinable word?

H.—No.

B.—Do you think it has a meaning of its own?

H.—Yes, most certainly. And indeed, if prepositions had no proper meaning of their own, why several unmeaning pre-

¹ [See another instance of this “mystery of one preposition's governing another” in the case of op dune, in the note on Down and Adown, in the Editor's Additional Notes.]

² That this omission of the Segnacaso is not a strained supposition of my own, we have the authority of Henri Estienne (De la précell. du lang. Fran. p. 178).

“*Qui la maison son voisin ardoir voit,
De la sienne douter se doit.*”

“Et faut noter—la maison son voisin—estre dict à la façon ancienne; au lieu de dire—la maison DE son voisin.”

So the Diction. della Crusca—“CASA. Nome dopo di cui vien lasciato talvolta dagli autori per proprietà di linguaggio, l'Articolo e il segnacaso.

“Sen' andarono a casa i prestatori.” BOCCACC.

³ “Pourquoy si souvent de Dissyllables font ils (les Italiens) des monosyllables; de CASA. CA, &c.”—H. ESTIENE, De la précell.

Diction. della Crusca,—“CA, accorciato da CASA.”

So Menage.—‘Fermato l'uso di questo troncamento di CA per CASA, familiare a nostri antichi.—Saræ simile all' uomo savio, il qu'ile edifica la CA sua sopra la pietra. Vangel di San Matteo volgare.—Vinegia, ne' quali paesi si dice CA in vece di CASA. Silvano Rozzi.” Many other instances are also given from Dante, Boccaccio, Giovan Villani, Franco Sacchetti, &c.

positions: ¹ when one alone must have answered the purpose equally? The cypher, which has no value of itself, and only serves (if I may use the language of Grammarians) to connote and consignify, and to change the value of the figures, is not several and various, but uniformly one and the same.

B.—I guessed as much whilst you were talking of Conjunctions: and supposed that you intended to account for them both in the same manner.²

¹ Speaking of Prepositions, Cour de Gebelin says, Gramm. Univers. p. 238, “Mais comment des mots pareils qui semblent ne rien peindre, ne rien dire, dont l’origine est inconnue, et qui ne tiennent en apparence à aucune famille, peuvent ils amener l’harmonie et la clarté dans les tableaux de la parole et devenir si nécessaires, que sans eux le langage n’offriroit que des peintures imparfaites? Comment ces mots peuvent ils produire de si grands effets et répandre dans le discours tant de chaleur, tant de finesse?”

² In a Letter to Mr. Dunning, published in the year 1778, I asserted in a note (page 23) that—“There is not, nor is it possible there should be, a word in any language, which has not a complete meaning and signification even when taken by itself. Adjectives, Prepositions, Adverbs, &c., have all compleat, separate meanings, not difficult to be discovered.” [See the Letter, reprinted at the end of this Edition.]

Having in that letter explained the unmeaning conjunctions, with which alone I had at that time any personal concern; and not foreseeing that the equally unmeaning Prepositions were afterwards by a solemn decision (but without explanation) to be determined more certain than certainty; I was contented by that note to set other persons who might be more capable and more at leisure than myself, upon an enquiry into the subject: being very indifferent from whose hand the explanation might come to the public. I must acknowledge myself a little disappointed, that in eight years time, no person whatever has pursued the enquiry; although the success I had had with the Conjunctions might reasonably have encouraged, as it much facilitated, the search. But though all men (as far as I can learn) have admitted my particular proofs concerning the Conjunctions, none have been inclined (as I wished they might be) to push the principle of my reasoning further, and apply it to the other Particles. The ingenious author of Essays Historical and Moral, published in 1785, says, (page 125)—“Possibly Prepositions were, at first, short interjectional words, such as our car-ters and shepherds make use of to their cattle, to denote the relations of place. Or perhaps a more skilful linguist and antiquarian may be able to trace them from other words, as the Conjunctions have been traced by the author above mentioned.”—It is therefore manifest, that the principle of my reasoning was either not sufficiently opened by me, or has not taken sufficient hold of the minds of others; and that it is necessary still further to apply it to the other Particles.

H.—You were not mistaken, Sir. For though Vossius and others have concurred with the censure which Priscian passes on the Stoics for classing Prepositions and Conjunctions, &c. together under one head; yet in truth they are both to be accounted for in the same way.

The Prepositions as well as the Conjunctions are to be found amongst the other Parts of Speech. The same sort of corruption, from the same cause, has disguised both: and ignorance of their true origin has betrayed Grammarians and Philosophers into the mysterious and contradictory language which they have held concerning them. And it is really entertaining, to observe the various shifts used by those who were too sharp-witted and too ingenuous to repeat the unsatisfactory accounts of these Prepositions handed down by others, and yet not ingenuous enough to acknowledge their own total ignorance on the subject.

The Grammarian says, it is none of his business; but that it belongs to the Philosopher: and for that reason only he omits giving an account of them. Whilst the Philosopher avails himself of his dignity; and, when he meets with a stubborn difficulty which he cannot unravel, (and only then), disdains to be employed about Words: although they are the necessary channel through which his most precious liquors must flow.

“Grammatico satis est,” says Sanctius, “si tres has partes posteriores (scil. Adverbia, Præpositiones, Conjunctiones), vocet Particulas indeclinabiles; et functus erit officio perfecti Grammatici.—Significationes enumerare, magis Philosophi est quam Grammatici: quia Grammatici munus non est, teste Varrone, vocum significationes indagare, sed earum usum. Propterea nos in arte hæc prætermisimus.”

Mr. Locke complains of the neglect of others in this particular; denies it to be his business “to examine them in their full latitude:” and declares that he “intends not here, a full explication of them.” Like Scaliger—Non in animo est.—And this serves him as an apology for not examining them at all in any latitude; and for giving no explication of them whatever in any place.

The author of the Port Royal philosophical Grammar saves himself by an Almost. “Ce sont presque les mêmes rapports dans toutes les langues, qui sont marqués par les Prépositions.” And therefore he will content himself to mention some of the principal French Prepositions, without obliging himself to fix their exact number. And as Sanctius had his reason for turning the business over to a philosophical grammar, whilst he was treating of a particular language: so this author, who was writing a general grammar, had his reason for leaving it to those who wrote particular grammars.—“C’est pourquoi je me contenterai de rapporter ici les principaux de ceux qui sont marqués par les prépositions de la langue Française; sans m’obliger à en faire un dénombrement exact, comme il seroit nécessaire pour une Grammaire particulière.”

M. L’Abbé de Condillac’s method is most conveniently cavalier, and perfectly adapted to a writer of his description.—“Je me bornerai à vous en donner quelques exemples: car vous jugez bien, Monseigneur, que je ne me propose pas d’analyser les acceptions de toutes les prépositions.” And again, concludes—“En voilà assez, Monseigneur!”¹

Even the learned President de Brosses, in his excellent treatise De la Formation mécanique des Langues, is compelled to evade the inquiry. “L’accroissement en tête des mots y amène une quantité fort variée d’idées accessoires. C’est un effet commun des Prépositions; qui pourroit fournir la matière d’un chapitre très-philosophique sur leurs causes, leurs racines, leur force, leur effet, leurs significations, leurs variétés, Je ne ferai que toucher cette matière en fort peu de mots dans un exemple que je donnerai, et seulement pour mettre sur les voies.”—Tom. 2. chap. 11. art. 198.

The laborious and judicious R. Johnson includes in one page of his National Grammar all that he has to offer on the Adverb, Conjunction, and Preposition: and concludes with saying—“And here, if I would show the reader the defectiveness of this Grammar (Lilly’s) in the account it gives of the use of the Prepositions, it would make a little volume.

¹ In the same manner he skips over all sorts of difficulty with the Conjunctions.

“Mais, Monseigneur, il est inutile de faire l’énumération de toutes les conjonctions.”—“Je ne crois pas, Monseigneur, qu’il y ait rien de plus à remarquer sur les conjonctions.”—Partie 2. chap. 23.

“Sed nos immensum spatio confecimus æquor,
Et jam tempus Equum fumantia solvere colla.”¹

Our countryman Wilkins, who is fairer and more intelligent than any of them, does not deny that it falls properly within his province; but saves himself by selecting such as he conceives sufficient. Speaking of Particles, he says, (Part 3. chap. 2.)—“The words of this kind are exceeding numerous and equivocal in all languages, and add much to the difficulty of learning them. It being a very hard matter to establish the just number of such as in all kinds are necessary,² and to fix to them their proper significations: which yet ought to be done in a philosophical grammar. I shall in this Essay select out of instituted languages, such of the several sorts as I conceive sufficient for this purpose.”

The learned Alexander Gil employs the denomination Consignificativa; which is more comprehensive than Particle, but not more explanatory.

“DE CONSIGNIFICATIVIS.—“Vox consignificativa Articulos comprehendit, Adverbia item, Conjunctiones, Præpositiones, Interjectiones. Et quia in his invariabilibus nihil difficultatis est, præter ipsam vocum cognitionem, classes enim eædem sunt, ut usus idem qui Latinæ, et aliis linguis, ad Lexicographos harum rerum studiosum lectorem ablegabo.”—Logonomia Anglica, p. 67, 68.

Doctor Wallis, after Gil's example, says—“Adverbia eandem sortiuntur naturam apud nos quam apud Latinos, aliasque gentes. Conjunctiones item eundem habent usum quem apud Latinos, aliosque. Præpositiones etiam eandem sortiuntur naturam, quam aliis linguis. Si quis tamen harum aliquot voces potius adverbia esse dicat; aut etiam ex adverbiis

¹ And in his Noctes Nottinghamicæ he says—“Præpositionum Constructio—

“We are come now to the most curious part of all grammar, and which, if it were truly stated, would at once instruct, and entertain the reader with a surprizing delight.”

And there he leaves it.

² No wonder that Wilkins found it so hard to fix the number which was necessary, since their number in every language depends merely upon how many of the most common words shall become obsolete or corrupted. This being mere matter of particular fact and of accident, can have no place in general or philosophical grammar.

aliquot ad conjunctionum classem referre malit: non tanti est ut hac de re quis contendat; cum, et apud Latinos, eadem non raro vox nunc pro adverbio, nunc pro conjunctione censenda est. Neque aliquod grave detrimentum pateremur, si tam adverbia quam conjunctiones et interjectiones, ad eandem classem redigerentur. Est quidem nonnihil discriminis, sed leviusculum." Cap. xiii.

Greenwood rashly ventures a little further than any other person; and upon Mr. Locke's authority, acknowledging it to be his duty to do what other grammarians had neglected, says—

"I am sensible that what I have here done"—(and he has done nothing)—"is slight and superficial to what may and ought to be done; but if this shall meet with any encouragement, I may be excited to make farther improvements in these matters, by taking more pains to observe nicely the several postures of the mind in discourse."¹

Now Greenwood's Grammar did actually meet with very great and extraordinary encouragement; and went through several editions speedily during the author's life; but he never fulfilled his promise: nor indeed is there any thing about him, to incline us to believe that he was a fit person for such an undertaking.

But not to multiply quotations without end (in which you are much better versed than I am), you know that all philosophers, philologists and grammarians, who have owned a dissatisfaction in the accounts already given of the Particles, have yet, for some shuffling reason or other, all desired to be excused from giving a satisfactory account themselves.

B.—But why not concur with MM. de Port Royal, and the President de Brosses? They are free from the contradiction and inconsistency of Mr. Harris's account of the Prepositions. For they acknowledge them to have a signification.—"On a eu recours," say the former, "dans toutes les langues à une autre invention; qui a été d'inventer de petits mots pour être mis avant les noms ; ce qui les a fait appeller Prépositions."

¹ In the same manner Greenwood slips the Conjunctions. "But this shall suffice for the Conjunctions, since it would be too tedious to go through all the divisions of them; and I may some other time explain them more largely and accurately."

And M. de Brosses with great ingenuousness tells us, (Traité de la formation mécanique des Langues, tom. 2. chap. 11. art. 198.)—"Chacune des Prépositions a son sens propre, mais qu'on applique à beaucoup d'autres sens par extension et par approximation. Elles sont des formules abrégées, dont l'usage est le plus frappant et le plus commode dans toutes les langues pour circonstancier les idées : elles sont d'elles-mêmes Racines primitives ; mais je n'ai pas trouvé qu'il fut possible d'assigner la cause de leur origine : tellement que j'en crois la formation purement arbitraire. Je pense de même des Particules, des Articles, des Pronoms, des Relatifs, des Conjonctions ; en un mot, de tous les monosyllabes si fréquens qu'on emploie pour lier les paroles d'un discours, en former une phrase construite, et lui donner un sens déterminé pour ceux qui l'entendent. Car ce n'est qu'en faveur de ceux qui écoutent qu'on introduit cet appareil de tant de conjonctions. *Un homme seul au monde ne parleroit que peu*¹ ou point. Il n'auroit besoin d'aucune de ces conjonctions pour former sa phrase mentale. Les seuls termes principaux lui suffiroient ; parcequ'il en a dans l'esprit la perception circonstanciée, et qu'il sçait assez sous quel aspect il les emploie. Il n'en est pas de même, lorsqu'il faut exprimer la phrase au dehors. Un tas de mots isolés ne seront non plus une phrase pour l'auditeur, qu'un tas de pierres toutes taillées ne seroient une maison, si on ne les arrangeoit dans leur ordre, et si on ne les lioit pas du sabbat et de la chaux. L'apprêt de cette espèce est très-pressé pour un homme qui veut se faire entendre. Cependant la nature, les images, l'imitation, l'onomatopée, tout lui manque ici : car il n'est pas question de peindre et de nommer aucun objet réel ; mais seulement de donner à entendre de petites combinaisons mentales, abstraites, et vagues. Alors l'homme aura usé pour conjonctions des premiers sons brefs et vagues qui lui venoient à la bouche. L'habitude en aura bientôt fait connoître la force et l'emploi. Ces petits signes de liaison sont restés en grand nombre dans chaque langue, où l'on peut les considérer comme sons radicaux ; et ils y ont en effet leurs dérivés."

¹ This is French reasoning, "seul au monde, il parleroit peu."

And again (Art. 254.) “J’ai fait voir combien il étoit difficile de trouver le premier germe radical des Particules conjonctives du discours. Leur examen m’a fait pencher à croire qu’elles étoient pour la plupart arbitraires; et que le prompt et prodigieux besoin qu’on en a pour s’énoncer, ayant forcé les hommes de chaque pays à prendre le premier monosyllabe ou geste vocal indéterminé qui lui venoit à la bouche dans le besoin pressant, l’usage réitéré en avoit déterminé l’habitude significative. Il n’est guère plus aisé d’assigner la première origine de Prépositions, quoiqu’un peu plus composées que les simples particules conjonctives.”

And again (Art. 274.) “On auroit à parler aussi de la cause des différentes terminaisons dans les langues, de la signification des prépositions, de leur variété à cet egard: car les mêmes ont plusieurs sens très-différents. C’est une matière extrêmement vaste et très-philosophique.”

H.—Messieurs de Port Royal and M. de Brosses deserve for ever to be mentioned with respect and gratitude; but, upon this occasion, I must answer them in the words of Mer. Casaubon (De Lingua Hebraica)—“Persuadeant fortasse illis, qui de verbis singulis, etiam vulgatissimis, a philosophis, prius quam imponerentur, itum in consilium credunt. Nos, qui de verborum origine longe aliter opinamur, plane pro fabula habemus,” p. 37.

Language, it is true, is an Art, and a glorious one; whose influence extends over all the others, and in which finally all science whatever must centre. But an art springing from necessity, and originally invented by artless men; who did not sit down like philosophers to invent “de petits mots pour être mis avant les noms,” nor yet did they take for this purpose “des premiers sons brefs et vagues qui leur venoient à la bouche :”¹ but they took such and the same (whether great or small, whether monosyllable or polysyllable, without distinction) as they employed upon other occasions to mention the same real objects. For Prepositions also are the names of real objects. And these petits mots happen in this case to be so, merely from their repeated corruption, owing to their frequent, long-continued, and perpetual use.

¹ It will seem the more extraordinary that M. de Brosses should entertain this opinion of the Articles, when we remember what he truly says of Proper names,—“Tous les mots formant les noms propres ou appellatifs des personnes, ont en quelque langage que ce soit, ainsi que les mots formant les noms des choses, une origine certaine, une signification déterminée, une étymologie véritable. Ils n’ont pas, plus que les autres mots, été imposés sans cause, ni fabriqués au hasard, seulement pour produire un bruit vague. Cependant comme la plupart de

B.—You assert then that what we call Prepositions, and distinguish as a separate part of speech, are not a species of words essentially or in any manner different from the other parts: that they are not “little words invented to put before nouns, and to which all languages have had recourse:” but that they are in fact either Nouns or Verbs. And that (like the Conjunctions) Prepositions are only words which have been disguised by corruption; and that Etymology will give us in all languages, what Philosophy has attempted in vain. And yet I cannot but perceive that such words as Prepositions are absolutely necessary to discourse.

H.—I acknowledge them to be undoubtedly necessary. For, as the necessity of the Article (or of some equivalent invention) follows from the impossibility of having in language a distinct name or particular term for each particular individual idea;¹ so does the necessity of the Preposition (or of some equivalent invention) follow from the impossibility of having in language a distinct complex term for each different collection of ideas which we may have occasion to put together in discourse. The addition or subtraction of any one idea to or from a collection, makes it a different collection: and (if there were degrees of impossibility) it is still more impossible to use in language a different and distinct complex term for each different and distinct collection of ideas, than it is to use a distinct particular term for each particular and individual idea. To supply, therefore, the place of the complex terms which are wanting in a language, is the Preposition employed:

ces mots ne portent à l'oreille de ceux qui les entendent aucune autre signification que de désigner les personnes nommées: c'est sur tout à leur égard que le vulgaire est porté à croire qu'ils sont dénués de sens et d'étymologie.” by whose aid complex terms are prevented from being infinite or too numerous, and are used only for those collections of ideas which we have most frequently occasion to mention in discourse. And this end is obtained in the most simple manner in the world. For having occasion in communication to mention a collection of ideas, for which there is no one single complex term in the language, we either take that complex term which includes the greatest number, though not All, of the ideas we would communicate: or else we take that complex term which includes All, and the fewest ideas more than those we would communicate: and then by the help of the Preposition, we either make up the deficiency in the one case, or retrench the superfluity in the other.

¹ See before, Chap. V.

For instance,

1. "A House WITH a Party-wall."

2. "A House WITHOUT a Roof."

' In the first instance, the complex term is deficient: The Preposition directs to add what is wanting. In the second instance, the complex term is redundant: The Preposition directs to take away what is superfluous.

Now considering it only in this, the most simple light, it is absolutely necessary, in either case, that the Preposition itself should have a meaning of its own: for how could we otherwise make known by it our intention, whether of adding to or retrenching from, the deficient or redundant complex term we have employed?

If to one of our modern grammarians I should say—" A House, JOIN ;"—he would ask me—" JOIN what ?"—But he would not contend that JOIN is an indeclinable word, and has no meaning of its own: because he knows that it is the Imperative of the Verb, the other parts of which are still in use; and its own meaning is clear to him, though the sentence is not completed. If, instead of JOIN, I should say to him,—"A House WITH ;"—he would still ask the same question, "WITH what ?" But if I should discourse with him concerning the word WITH, he would tell me that it was a Preposition, an indeclinable word, and that it had no meaning of its own, but only a connotation or consignification. And yet it would be evident by his question, that he felt it had a meaning of its own ; which is indeed the same as JOIN.¹ And the only difference between the two words WITH and JOIN, is, that the other parts of the verb ΥΙΨΑΝ, ψιδαν, to join, (of which WITH is the Imperative) have ceased to be employed in the language.² So that my instances stand thus,

¹ WITH is also sometimes the Imperative of ψιδαν, to be. Mr. Tyrwhitt in his Glossary (Art. BUT) has observed truly,—that “BY and WITH are often synonymous.”—They are always so, when WITH is the Imperative of ψιδαν : for BY is the Imperative of Beon, to be.

He has also in his Glossary (Art. WITH) said truly, that—“WITH mes hance. WITH misaventure. WITH sorwe. 5316. 7797. 6916. 4410. 5890. 5922. are to be considered as parenthetical curses.”—For the literal meaning of those phrases is (not God yere, but)—BE mischance, BE misadventure, BE sorrow, to him or them concerning whom these words are spoken. But Mr. Tyrwhitt is mistaken, when he supposes —“WITH evil prefe. 5829. WITH hurde grace. 7810. WITH sory grace. 12810.”—to have the same meaning : for in those three instances, WITH is the Imperative of ΥΙΨΑΝ ; nor is any parenthetical curse or wish contained in either of those instances.

As WITH means JOIN, so the correspondent French Preposition AVEC means—And Have that, or Have that also. And it was formerly written Avecque, i. e. Avezque. So Boileau, Satire 1 :—

“Quittons donc pour jamais une ville importune :
Où l’honneur est en guerre AVECQUE la fortune.”

And again, Satire 5.

“Mais qui m’assurera, qu’en ce long cercle d’ans,
A leurs fameux époux vos ayeules fidelles
Aux douceurs des galands furent toujours rebelles ?
Et comment sçavez-vous, si quelqu’audacieux
N’a point interrompu le cours de vos ayeux ?
Et si leur sang tout pur AVECQUE leur noblesse,
Est passé jusqu’à vous de Lucrece en Lucrece.”

² We still retain in English speech, though not often used in books, the substantives WITH or WITHE, WITHERS, and WITHER-BAND.

“Me thou shalt use in what thou wilt, and doe that with a slender twist, that none can doe with a tough WITH.”

Euphues and his England, pag. 136.

“They had arms under the straw in the boat ; and had cut the WITNES that held the oars of the town-boats, to prevent any pursuit, if they should be forced to fly.”—Ludlow’s Memoirs, pag. 435.

And again, pag. 437. “One of the four watermen was the person who cut the WITNES of all the town-boats, to prevent them from pursuing.”

“This troublesom rowing, though an ingenious invention of the Chineses, hath raised this proverb amongst them, that their boats are paper, and their watermen iron ; because they are made of very thin

1. A House JOIN a Party-wall.

2. A House BE-OUT a Roof.

And indeed so far has always been plainly perceived, that WITH and WITHOUT are directly opposite and contradictory. Wilkins, without knowing what the words really were, has yet well expressed their meaning, where he says that WITH is a preposition—"relating to the notion of social, or circumstance of society affirmed; and that WITHOUT is a preposition relating to the same notion of social, or circumstance of society denied."

And it would puzzle the wisest philosopher to discover opposition and contradiction in two words, where neither of them had any signification.

B.—According then to your explanation, the Preposition WITHOUT, is the very same word, and has the very same meaning, as the Conjunction WITHOUT. Does not this in some measure contradict what you before asserted, concerning the faithfulness of words to the standard under which they were originally enlisted? For there does not appear in this case to be any melting down of two words into one, by such a corruption as you before noticed in some of the Conjunctions. And yet here is one and the same word used both as a Conjunction and as a Preposition.

H.—There is nothing at all extraordinary, much less contradictory, in this; that one and the same word should be applied indifferently either to single words or to sentences: (for you must observe that the apparently different application constitutes the only difference between Conjunctions and Prepositions :) For I may very well employ the same word of direction, whether it be to add a word or to add a sentence: And again, one and the same word of direction will serve as well to take away a word as to take away a sentence. No wonder therefore that our ancestors (who were ignorant of the false boards, like our slit deal, which are not nailed, but fastened together with WITHS, in the Chinese tongue called rotang; by which means the boats, though often beaten by the strong current against the rocks, split not, but bend and give way."—History of China. By John Ogilby. vol. 2. pag. 609.

"The only furniture belonging to the houses, appears to be an oblong vessel made of bark, by tying up the ends with a WITHE."—Captain Cook's Description of Botany Bay.

divisions and definitions of Grammar which we have since received) should have used BUT indifferently to direct the omission either of a word, or of a sentence; and should have used WITHOUT also indifferently for the omission of a sentence or of a word. But after our authors became more generally and better acquainted with the divisions and definitions of the Greek and Latin Grammarians, they attempted by degrees to make our language also conform to those definitions and divisions. And after that it was, that BUT ceased to be commonly used as a known Preposition; and WITHOUT ceased to be correctly used as a Conjunction.

As the meaning of these two words BUT (I mean that part which is corrupted from Butan) and WITHOUT, is exactly the same, our authors would most likely have had some difficulty to agree amongst themselves, which should be the Preposition and which the Conjunction; had it not been for the corruption¹ of BOT, which becoming BUT, must necessarily decide the choice: for though WITHOUT could very well supply the place of the Preposition BUT, it could not supply the place of the Bot part of the Conjunction BUT: whereas BUT could entirely supply the place of the Conjunction WITHOUT. And this, I take it, is the reason why BUT has been retained as a Conjunction, and WITHOUT has been retained as a Preposition.

Not however that they have been able so to banish the old habit of our language, as that BUT should always be used as a Conjunction, and WITHOUT always as a Preposition (I mean that BUT should always apparently be applied to sentences, and WITHOUT always to words; for that, it must be remembered, is the only difference between Conjunctions and Prepositions): for BUT is still used frequently as a Preposition: though Grammarians, forgetful or heedless of their own definitions, are pleased to call it always a Conjunction;

As thus, “All BUT one.”

And, though it is not now an approved usage, it is very frequent in common speech to hear WITHOUT used as a Conjunction; where, instead of WITHOUT, a correct modern speaker would use UNLESS, or some other equivalent acknowledged conjunction: and that for no other reason, but because it has pleased our Grammarians to exclude WITHOUT from the number of Conjunctions.

¹ See p. 100.

B.—And is not that reason sufficient, when the best writers have for a long time past conformed to this arrangement?

H.—Undoubtedly. Nor do I mean to censure those who follow custom for the propriety of a particular language: I do not even mean to condemn the custom: for in this instance it is perfectly harmless. But I condemn the false philosophy which caused it. I condemn those who wilfully shut their eyes, and affect not to perceive the indifferent application of BUT, AND, SINCE, IF, ELSE, &c. both to words and to sentences; and still endeavour by their definitions to uphold a distinction which they know does not exist even in the practice of any language, and which they ought to know cannot exist in theory.

To the pedagogue, indeed, who must not trouble children about the corruption of words, the distinction of prepositions and conjunctions may be useful enough (on account of the cases which they govern when applied to words; and which they cannot govern when applied to sentences); and for some such reason, perhaps, both this and many other distinctions were at first introduced. Nor would they have caused any mischief or confusion, if the philosopher had not adopted these distinctions; taken them for real differences in nature, or in the operations of the human mind; and then attempted to account for what he did not understand. And thus the Grammatist has misled the Grammarian, and both of them the Philosopher.

B.

“SANS eyes, SANS teeth, SANS taste, SANS every thing.”

This preposition too, which was formerly used instead of WITHOUT, you mean, I suppose, to account for in the same manner: It can be shown, I suppose, to be the Imperative of some obsolete Saxon verb having a similar meaning.

H.—SANS, though sometimes used instead of WITHOUT, is not an English but a French preposition, and therefore to be derived from another source.

“Et je conserverai, malgré votre menace,
Une âme SANS courroux, SANS crainte, et SANS audace.”—Adelvide.

Nor is it a verb, but a substantive: and it means simply Absence. It is one proof, amongst many others, that Plutarch's half-conjecture was not ill-founded. After all, he thinks it may be worth considering, whether the Prepositions may not be perhaps little fragments of words, used in haste and for dispatch, instead of the whole words.¹ SANS is corrupted from the preposition Senza of the Italians (by old Italian authors written Sanza)² who frequently use it thus; SENZA di te, i. e. ASSENZA di te. The French (as we have seen in Chez) omit the Segnacaso, and say SANS toi. And as from the Italian Assenza they have their Absence; or, as they pronounce it, Absance or Absans; so have they their preposition SANS from SENZA or SANZA. But I persuade myself that you can have

¹ Όσα δε μη κομμάσι και θρασυμασί ονομάτων εισακόν, ὥστε γράμματων παραγίμασι και κειραῖσι; οἱ σπειρόντες γράφουσι, κ. τ. λ.—Πλάτωνικα Ζητήματα. θ.

² "Vai alla taverna, ripariti in Casa femmino, et dove si giuoca spendi SANZA modo."—Machiavelli. Clitia, atto 3. sce. 4.

"SENZA et SANZA (says Menage) Da Absentia, per aferesi, lo cava il Cittadini. Viene secondo me da Sine. Sine, Sines, (come lo Spagnuolo Antes da Ante) Senes, (onde il Francese Sens, che si pronunzia Sans) Sense, Sensa, SENZA. SANZA disser piu volentieri gli antichi."

Again Menage says, that SANS dessus dessous, should be written SENS dessus dessous "comme on écrit, En tout Sens, de ce Sens là, &c. SENS, c'est à dire, face, visage, situation, posture," &c.—Menage is surely wrong: for it means, without top or bottom, i. e. a situation of confusion in which you cannot discern the top from the bottom; or say which is the top and which the bottom. We translate it by a similar expression in English, Upside down, by our old authors more properly written Up so down.

"But the other partie was so stronge,
That for the lawe of no statute
There maie no right be execute:
And upon this division
The londe was tourned UP SO DOWNE."

Gower, lib. 2. fol. 37. p. 1. col. 2.

"Do lawe awaie, what is a kynge?
Where is the right of any thyng
If that there be no lawe in londe?
This ought a kynge well understonde,
As he whiche is to lawe swore,
That if the lawe be forelore
Withouten execucion,
It maketh a londe turne UP SO DOWNE."

Gower, lib. 7. fol. 159. p. 1. col. 1.

no doubt of the meaning of this preposition SANS, when you find the signification of its correspondent words equally clear in other languages.

The Greek preposition χωρίς is the corrupted Imperative of χωρίζειν, to sever, to disjoin, to separate.

The German preposition SONDER, the imperative of Sondern, which has the same meaning as χωρίζειν.

The Dutch preposition ZONDER, the imperative of Zonderen, with the same meaning.

The Latin preposition SINE, i. e. Sit ne. Be not.

The Spanish Sin, from the Latin Sine.

{  The Italian Fuori The Spanish Affuera (as Puerta from Porta) The French Hors¹ (by their old authors written Fors)² 	}	From the Latin Foris.³
--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	---	-----------------------------------------------------

¹ Menage, Cambiumenti delle Lettere, p. 8, exemplifies HORS used by the French for Foris.

² "Toute la troupe étoit lors endormie, FORS le galant qui trembloit pour sa vie."
Contes de la Fontaine. Le Muletier.

"Elle étoit jeune et belle creature,
Plaisoit beaucoup, FORS un point qui gâtoit
Toute l'affaire, et qui seul rebutoit
Les plus ardens ; c'est qu'elle étoit avare."

Contes de la Fontaine. Le Galant Escroc.

Brantome, Des Dames illustres, cites an account of the funeral of Queen Anne of Bretagne—"Ne furent à l'offrande FORS Monsieur d'Angoulesme." And again—"La reyne fut en colore de ce que tout ce grand convoy n'avoit passé outre, ainsi qu'elle attendoit, FORS Monsieur son fils, et le roy de Navarre."

³ The Greek ὦρα became the Doric Φορα and the Latin Fora, whence Fores, Foris, whence the Italian Fuora, Fuore, Fuori, and the French Hors; which, in the prepositive and conjunctive use of it, the French have latterly changed to Hors: but they have not so changed it when in composition. They say indeed Fauxbourg corruptly for Forsbourg, as it was anciently written by Froissart and others; ["La Bourg de Four n'estoit anciennement qu'un Fauxbourg qu'on appelloit en Savoyard Bourg de Feur, c'est à dire, Bourg de Dehors."]—Histoire de la Ville de Genève, par Jacob Spon; who gives us likewise from their Archives the translation of it into Burgi Foris. For the same reason, I suppose a part of the town of Reading, in Berkshire, is called 'The Forbery;'] but in their compounds the French retain For:—"Corbleu, je luy passerois mon épée au travers du corps, à elle et au galant, si elle avoit Forfait à son honneur."—George Dandin, act 1. sc. 4.

From the French we have many English words preceded by For with Whence Hormis, i. e. (put out) by the addition of the participle of mettre.

B.—If there were no other relations declared by the prepositions, besides those of adding or taking away, perhaps this explanation might convince me; but there are assuredly Prepositions employed for very different purposes. And instead of selecting such instances as may happen to be suited particularly to your own hypothesis, I should have more satisfaction if you would exemplify in those which Mr. Harris has employed to illustrate his hypothesis.

“From these principles (he says, book 2. chap. 3.) it follows, that when we form a sentence, the substantive without difficulty coincides with the verb, from the natural coincidence of substance and energy.—The Sun warmeth.—So likewise the energy with the subject on which it operates—warmeth the Earth.—So likewise both substance and energy with their proper attributes.—The splendid Sun genially warmeth the fertile Earth.—But suppose we were desirous to add other substantives; as for instance, Air or Beams: how would these coincide, or under what character could they be introduced? Not as Nominatives or Accusatives, for both those places are already filled; the Nominative, by the substance Sun; the Accusative by the substance Earth. Not as Attributes to these last, or to any other thing: for, attributes by nature, they neither are nor can be made.¹ Here then we perceive the rise and use of Prepositions. By these we connect those substantives to sentences, which at the time are unable to coalesce of themselves. Let us assume for instance a pair of these connectives, THRO’ and WITH, and mark their effect upon the substances here mentioned. The splendid sun WITH this meaning: as, Forfeit, Foreclose, &c. and we had antiently many more.

[“Nec alter jam inveniatur qui forefecit, alter qui satisfecit.”—S. Bernard. Epist. cxc. ad Innocentium.

In the Additional Notes to the edition of 1829, I collected some of the verbs compounded with FOR, and suggested that “the explanation given by Mr. Tooke would not apply to the generality:” Mr. Richardson, however, in his new Dictionary, adheres to it, and rather increases the confusion. See Additional Notes; and Grimm, ii. 724, fur, fuír, faur; —p. 730, faúrth, fuúrana; —p. 895, fora; also p. 901, 903, 912.—ED] his beams genially warmeth THRO' the air the fertile earth.—The sentence as before remains intire and one; the substantives required are both introduced; and not a word which was there before, is detruded from its proper place.”

¹ N.B. Air Pump; Air Gun.

The first of this pair of his connectives (WITH) you have already explained, and I am willing to admit the explanation. It is,—The splendid sun JOIN his beams—instead of one single complex term including sun and beams.¹

But of what real object is THROUGH the name?

H.—Of a very common one indeed.² For as the French peculiar preposition CHEZ is no other than the Italian substantive CASA or CA, so is the English preposition THOROUGH,³ Thourough, Thorow, Through, or Thro', no other than the Gothic substantive ἈΝΚΩ, or the Teutonic substantive Thuruh: and, like them, means Door, gate, passage.

So that Mr. Harris's instance (translated into modern English) stands thus,

“The splendid sun—JOIN his beams—genially warmeth—PASSAGE the air—(or, the air being the passage or medium) the fertile earth.” And in the same manner may you translate the preposition Through in every instance where Thro' is used in English, or its equivalent preposition is used in any other language.⁴

After having seen in what manner the substantive House became a preposition in the French, you will not wonder to see Door become a preposition in the English: and though in

¹ The Sun-beams.

² All Particles are in truth, in all languages, the signs of the most common and familiar ideas, and those which we have most frequently occasion to communicate: they had not otherwise become Particles. So very much mistaken was Mr. Locke, when he supposed them to be the signs or marks of certain operations of the mind for which we had either none or very deficient names; that the Particles are always the words which were the most common and familiar in the language from which they came.

³ S. Johnson calls “Thorough,—the word Through extended into two syllables.”—What could possibly be expected from such an Etymologist as this? He might, with as much verisimilitude, say that ΣΑΙΥΛΛΑ was the word Soul extended into three syllables, or that Ελεημοσυνη was the word Alms extended into six.

⁴ So, I suppose, the Greek word Περί has given the Latin and Italian preposition Per, the French Par, and the Spanish Por.

the first instance it was more easy for you to perceive the nature of the French preposition chez; because, having no preposition corresponding to it in English, there was so much prejudice out of your way; yet I am persuaded you will not charge this to me as a fantastical or far-fetched etymology, when I have placed before you, at one view, the words employed to signify the same idea in those languages to which our own has the nearest affinity.

	Substantive.	Preposition.
English	{ Door. Thorruke . ¹	{ Thourough. Thorough. Thurgh. ² Thorow. Through. Thro. ³
Anglo-Sax.	{ Dopa. Dupu. Dupe. Dupe. Dupa. ⁴	{ Ðupuh. Ðuph. Ðpuh. Ðop.
Goth.	{ ၵၢၢၢ. ၵၢၢၢ.	{ 𐍄𐍅𐍃𐍅.
Dutch	{ Deure. Deur. Door. Dore.	{ Deur. Door.
German	{ Thure. Thur. Thor.	{ Durch.

¹ "Than cometh ydelnesse, that is the yate of all harmes. This ydlenesse is the Thorruke of all wycked and vylayne thoughtes."—Chaucer, Persons Tale, fol. 3. p. 1. col. 2.

² "So in an antient roll in verse, exhibiting the descent of the family of the lords of Clare in Suffolk, preserved in the Austin Friary at Clare, and written in the year 1356.

" ————— So conioyned be
Ulstris armes and Glocestris thurgh and thurgh,
As shewith our wyndowes in houses thre."

Warton's Hist. of Engl. Poetry, vol. 1. p. 302.

"Relcued by thynfynyte grace and goodness of our said lord thurgh the meane of the mediatrix of mercy."—The Dictes and Sayinges of the Philosophers, 1477.

³ The Greeks abbreviated in the same manner as the English: and as we use Thro for Thorough, so they used Θρα for Θυρα. Thus we find Ουρηθρα, the Urethra, or urine passage, compounded of Ουρον and Θυρα, and by abbreviation Θρα.

⁴ Eif hīpan heopa cýpcean mape ðearf hæbben. healð hine mon on oppum hūr. and þæt næbbe ðonne ma ðupa ðonne jeo cýpce.—Ælfræde's æ. cap. 5. Lambard. Αρχαιονομια, fol. 30.

	Substantive.		Preposition.
Teuton.	Thurah.		Thuruh.	Thurah.
	Thur.	Thor.	Thur.	Duruch.
	Tura.	Dura.	Duruc.	Duruh.
	Dure.		Durch.	Durh.

Though it is not from Asia or its confines, that we are to seek for the origin of this part of our language; yet is it worth noticing here, that the Greek (to which the Gothic has in many particulars a considerable resemblance) employs the word Θύρα for Door. And both the Persian (which in many particulars resembles the Teutonic)¹ and the Chaldean, use THRO for Door. You will observe, that the Teutonic uses the same word Thurah both for the substantive (Door), and for what is called the preposition (Thorough). The Dutch, which has a strong antipathy to our Th, uses the very word Door for both. The Anglo-Saxon, from which our language immediately descends, employs indifferently for Door either Dure or Thure. The modern German (directly contrary to the modern English) uses the initial Th (Thur) for our substantive (Door), and the initial D (Durch) for our preposition (Thorough): and it is remarkable, that this same difference between the German and the English prevails in almost all cases where the two languages employ a word of the same origin having either of those initials. Thus Distel und Dorn—in German—are Thistles and Thorns in English. So the English Dear, Dollar, Deal, are in German Theur, Thaler, Theil.

Minshew and Junius both concur that Door, &c. are derived from the Greek Θύρα: Skinner says, perhaps they are all from the Greek Θύρα: and then without any reason (or rather as it appears to me against all reason) chuses rather uselessly to derive the substantive Door from the Anglo-Saxon preposition Thor, Thruh, Thurh. But I am persuaded that Door and Thorough have one and the same Gothic origin

¹ “On n’est pas étonné de trouver du rapport entre l’Anglois et le Persan : car on sçait que le fond de la langue Angloise est Saxon ; et qu’il y a une quantité d’exemples qui montre une affinité marquée entre l’Allemand et le Persan.”—Form. Méchan. des Langues, tom. 2. art. 166.

ΔΑΝΚΑ, mean one and the same thing ; and are in fact one and the same word.

B.—There is an insuperable objection, which, I fear, you have not considered, to this method of accounting for the Prepositions: for if they were really and merely, as you imagine, common Nouns and Verbs, and therefore, as you say, the names of real objects, how could any of them be employed to denote not only *different*¹ but even contrary relations? Yet this is universally maintained, not only by Mr. Harris, but by Messrs. de Port Royal,² by the President de Brosses, and by all those writers whom you most esteem ; and even by Wilkins³ and Locke.

Now if these words have a meaning, as you contend, and are constantly used according to their meaning, which you must allow, (because you appeal to the use which is made of them as proof of the meaning which you attribute to them;) how can they possibly be the names of real and unchangeable objects, as common nouns and verbs are? I am sure you must see the necessity of reconciling these contradictory appearances.

H.—Most surely. And I think you will as readily acknowledge the necessity of first establishing the facts, before you call upon me to reconcile them. Where is the Preposition to be found which is at any time used in contrary or even in different meanings?

B.—Very many instances have been given ; but none

¹ "Certains mots sont Adverbes, Prépositions, et Conjonctions en même temps. Et répondent ainsi en même temps à diverses parties d'oraison, selon que la Grammaire les emploie diversement."—BUFFIER, art. 150.

² "On n'a suivi en aucune langue, sur le sujet des prépositions, ce que la raison auroit désiré : qui est, qu'un rapport ne fût marqué que par une préposition ; et qu'une préposition ne marquât qu'un seul rapport. Car il arrive au contraire dans toutes les langues ce que nous avons vu dans ces exemples pris de la Française, qu'un même rapport est signifié par plusieurs prépositions : et qu'une même préposition marque divers rapports."—M.M. de Port Royal.

³ "Some of these prepositions are absolutely determined either to motion or to rest, or the Terminus of Motion. Others are relatively applicable to both. Concerning which this rule is to be observed : that those which belong to motion cannot signify rest ; but those which belong to rest may signify motion in the terminus."—WILKINS, part 3. chap. 3.

stronger than those produced by Mr. Harris of the Preposition FROM; which he shows to be used to denote three very different relations, and the two last in absolute contradiction to each other.

“FROM,” he says, “denotes the detached relation of Body; as when we say—These Figs came FROM Turkey.—So as to Motion and Rest, only with this difference, that here the preposition varies its character with the Verb. Thus if we say—That lamp hangs FROM the cieling—the preposition FROM assumes a character of quiescence. But if we say—That lamp is falling FROM the cieling—the preposition in such case assumes a character of motion.”

Now I should be glad you would show me what one Noun or Verb can be found of so versatile a character as this preposition: what name of any one real object or sign of one idea, or of one collection of ideas, can have been instituted to convey these different and opposite meanings?

H.—Truly, none that I know of. But I take the word FROM (preposition, if you chuse to call it so) to have as clear, as precise, and at all times as uniform and unequivocal a meaning, as any word in the language. FROM means merely BEGINNING, and nothing else. It is simply the Anglo-Saxon and Gothic noun Fpum, FKNM, Beginning, Origin, Source, Fountain, Author.¹ Now then, if you please, we will apply this meaning to Mr. Harris’s formidable instances, and try whether we cannot make FROM speak clearly for itself, without the assistance of the interpreting Verbs; who are supposed by Mr. Harris, to vary its character at will, and make the preposition appear as inconsistent and contradictory as himself.

Figs came FROM Turkey.

Lamp falls FROM Cieling.

Lamp hangs FROM Cieling.

Came is a complex term for one species of motion.

Falls is a complex term for another species of motion.

Hangs is a complex term for a species of attachment.

¹ ‘Ne pædd ge re ðe on ppmman pophte. he pophte pæpman and pīpman.” That is, Annon legistis, quod qui eos in principio creavit, creavit eos marem et foeminam? St. Matt. xix. 4.

[See Grimm’s Grammatik, ii. 732. iii. 265. for the word fram.—Ed.]

Have we occasion to communicate or mention the commencement or BEGINNING of these motions and of this attachment; and the place where these motions and this attachment commence or begin? It is impossible to have complex terms for each occasion of this sort. What more natural then, or more simple, than to add the signs of those ideas, viz. the word BEGINNING (which will remain always the same) and the name of the place (which will perpetually vary)?

Thus,

"Figs came—BEGINNING Turkey.

Lamp falls—BEGINNING Cieling.

Lamp hangs—BEGINNING Cieling."

That is

Turkey the Place of BEGINNING to come.

Cieling the Place of BEGINNING to fall.

Cieling the Place of BEGINNING to hang.

B.—You have here shown its meaning when it relates to place; but Wilkins tells us, that "FROM refers primarily to place and situation; and secondarily to time." So that you have yet but given half its meaning.

—"FROM morn till night th' eternal larum rang."—

There is no place referred to in this line.

H.—FROM relates to every thing to which BEGINNING relates,¹ and to nothing else: and therefore is referable to Time

¹ Is it unreasonable to suppose that, if the meaning of this word FROM, and of its correspondent prepositions in other languages, had been clearly understood, the Greek and Latin Churches would never have differed concerning the Eternal Procession of the Holy Ghost FROM the Father, or FROM the Father and the Son? And that, if they had been determined to separate, they would at least have chosen some safer cause of schism?

"Apelles. I have now, Campaspe, almost made an end.

Campaspe. You told me, Apelles, you would never end.

Ap. Never end my love: for it shall be Eternal.

Cam. That is, neither to have Beginning nor ending."

Campaspe by John Lilly, act 4. sc. 4.

—"Eternal sure, as without end Without Beginning."

Paradise Regained, book 4, line 391.

as well as to motion: without which indeed there can be no Time.

“The larum rang BEGINNING Morning:”

i. e. Morning being the time of its BEGINNING to ring.

B.—Still I have difficulty to trust to this explanation. For Dr. S. Johnson has numbered up twenty different meanings of this Preposition FROM. He says, it denotes,

- “1. Privation.
2. Reception.
3. Descent or Birth.
4. Transmission.
5. Abstraction.

“To say that Immensity does not signify boundless space, and that Eternity does not signify duration or time without Beginning and end; is, I think, affirming that words have no meaning.”—Dr. Sam. Clarke's fifth Reply to Leibnitz's fifth Paper, sect. 104-106.

Is it presumptuous to say, that the explanation of this single preposition would have decided the controversy more effectually than all the authorities and all the solid arguments produced by the wise and honest bishop Procopowicz? and thus have withheld one handle at least of reproach, from those who assert—“Que l'on pourroit justement définir la théologie—L'art de composer des chimères en combinant ensemble des qualités impossibles à concilier.”—Système de la Nature, tom. 2, p. 55.

[In order to see how far this reproach is applicable to some of the theology of the present day, take the following:

“But, alas! here proud men, by attempting to explain what is inexplicable, have rendered it necessary for the Church to be more explicit.”—p. 18. “The Church is now compelled, by the perverseness of disputers, to state plainly what has been revealed to her. . . . Still, observe, that the Church is not attempting to explain. She only asserts.”—p. 15. And again, “This verse is not added as an explanation of an inexplicable mystery, but simply to show what the Church means, &c.”—p. 22.—Letter on the Athanasian Creed, by Walter Farquhar Hook, D.D. 1838.

Thus, she can “show what she means” without “explanation,”—can “mean” that which is “inexplicable,”—can be “explicit” without “explaining,”—and “state plainly” that which she does “not attempt to explain.” “She only asserts” what is “inexplicable,” (and therefore unintelligible,) but without which “it is impossible to understand Scripture;”—p. 8.: i. e. Scripture cannot be understood but in a sense that is unintelligible.—The “proud men,” and “perverse disputers,” are doubtless such as lack “that prostration of the understanding and will, which are indispensable in Christian instruction.” See the Charge delivered at his Primary Visitation, 1815, by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury.—Ed.]

6. Succession.
7. Emission.
8. Progress from premises to inferences.
9. Place or Person from whom a message is brought.
10. Extraction.
11. Reason or Motive.
12. Ground or Cause.
13. Distance.
14. Separation or Recession.
15. Exemption or Deliverance.
16. Absence.
17. Derivation.
18. Distance from the past.
19. Contrary to.
20. Removal."

To these he adds twenty-two other manners of using it. And he has accompanied each with instances sufficiently numerous, as proofs.¹

H.—And yet in all his instances (which, I believe are above seventy) FROM continues to retain invariably one and the same single meaning. Consult them: and add to them as many more instances as you please; and yet (if I have explained myself as clearly as I ought, and as I think I have done) no further assistance of mine will be necessary to enable you to extract the same meaning of the word FROM from all of them.

¹ Greenwood says—"FROM signifies Motion from a place; and then it is put in opposition to TO.

"2. It is used to denote the Beginning of time.

"3. It denotes the Original of things.

"4. It denotes the Order of a thing. ("And in these three last senses it is put before Adverbs.")

"5. It signifies Off."

The caprice of language is worth remarking in the words Van (the Dutch From) and Rear, both of which we have retained in English as Substantives, and therefore they are allowed with us to have a meaning. But being only employed as Prepositions by the Dutch, Italian and French, our philosophers cannot be persuaded to allow them any transmarine meaning.—Animum mutant qui trans mare currunt. And thus Van in Holland, Von in Germany, Avanti in Italy, and Avant and Derrière in France, are merely des petits mots inventés pour être mis AVANT les Noms, or, in the VAN of Nouns.

And you will plainly perceive that the “characters of quiescence, and of motion,” attributed by Mr. Harris to the word FROM, belong indeed to the words Hang and Fall, used in the different sentences. And by the same manner of transferring to the preposition the meaning of some other word in the sentence, have all Johnson’s and Greenwood’s supposed different meanings arisen.

B.—You observed, some time since, that the Prepositions WITH and WITHOUT were directly opposite and contradictory to each other. Now the same opposition is evident in some other of the prepositions: And this circumstance, I should imagine, must much facilitate and shorten the search of the etymologist: For having once discovered the meaning of one of the adverse parties, the meaning of the other, I suppose, must follow of course. Thus—Going TO a place, is directly the contrary of—Going FROM a place.—If then you are right in your explanation of FROM, (and I will not deny that appearances are hitherto in your favour;) since FROM means Commencement or Beginning, TO must mean End or Termination. And indeed I perceive that, if we produce Mr. Harris’s instances, and say, “ These figs came from Turkey TO England.

The lamp falls from the cieling TO the ground.
The lamp hangs from the cieling TO the floor ;”

as the word FROM denotes the commencement of the motion and hanging ; so does the word TO denote their termination: and the places where they end or terminate, are respectively England, Ground, Floor.

And since we have as frequently occasion to mention the termination, as we have to mention the commencement of motion or time ; no doubt it was as likely that the word denoting End should become a particle or preposition, as the word which signified Beginning. But in the use of these two words TO and FROM, I observe a remarkable difference. FROM seems to have two opposites ; which ought therefore to mean the same thing: and, if meaning the same, to be used indifferently at pleasure. We always use FROM (and From only) for the beginning either of time or motion: but for the termination, we apply sometimes TO and sometimes TILL:¹ TO, indifferently either to place or time; but TILL to time only and never to place. Thus, we may say,

“From morn TO night th’ eternal larum rang.” or, From morn TILL night, &c.

But we cannot say,—From Turkey TILL England.

H.—The opposition of Prepositions, as far as it reaches, does undoubtedly assist us much in the discovery of the meaning of each opposite. And if, by the total or partial extinction of an original language, there was no root left in the ground for an etymologist to dig up, the philosopher ought no doubt to be satisfied with reasoning from the contrariety. But I fear much that the inveterate prejudices which I have to encounter, and which for two thousand years have universally passed for learning throughout the world, and for deep learning too, would not easily give way to any arguments of mine à priori. I am therefore compelled to resort to etymology, and to bring forward the original word as well as its meaning. That same etymology will very easily account for the peculiarity you have noticed: and the difficulty solved, like other enemies subdued, will become an useful ally and additional strength to the conqueror.

The opposition to the preposition FROM, resides singly in the preposition TO.² Which has not perhaps (for I am not clear that it has not) precisely the signification of End or Termination, but of something tantamount or equivalent. The preposition TO (in Dutch written TOE and TOT, a little nearer to the original) is the Gothic substantive TANI or TANHTS, i. e. Act, Effect, Result, Consummation. Which Gothic substantive is indeed itself no other than the past participle TANIA or TANIAS, of the verb TANGAN³ agere. And what is done, is terminated, ended, finished.⁴

¹ [Till seems to be the Scandinavian form—See Ihre :—also Grimm, iii. 257.—Ed.]

² [See Grimm, ii. 722. iii. 254 : du, tu, zu, ze, zi, to.—Ed.]

³ In the Teutonic, this verb is written Tuan or Tuon, whence the modern German Thun, and its preposition (varying like its verb) Tu. [Zu.]

In the Anglo-Saxon the verb is Teozan, and preposition To.

⁴ “Dativus cuicunque orationi adjungi potest, in qua acquisitio vel

After this derivation, it will not appear in the least mysterious or wonderful that we should, in a peculiar manner, in English, prefix this same word TO to the infinitive of our verbs. For the verbs, in English, not being distinguished, as in other languages, by a peculiar termination, and it being sometimes impossible to distinguish them by their place, when the old termination of the Anglo-Saxon verbs was dropped, this word TO (i. e. Act) became necessary to be prefixed, in order to distinguish them from NOUNS, and to invest them with the verbal character: for there is no difference between the NOUN, Love, and the VERB, TO Love, but what must be comprised in the prefix TO.

The infinitive, therefore, appears plainly to be, what the Stoics called it, the very verb itself; pure and uncompounded with the various accidents of mood, of number, of gender, of person, and (in English) of tense; which accidents are, in some languages, joined to the verb by variety of termination; and in some, by an additional word signifying the added circumstance. And if our English Grammarians and Philosophers had trusted something less to their reading and a little more to their own reflection, I cannot help thinking that the very awkwardness and imperfection of our own language, in this particular of the infinitive, would have been a great benefit to them in all their difficulties about the VERB: and would have led them to understand and explain that which the perfection of more artificial and improved languages contributed to conceal from others. For I reckon it a great advantage which an English philosopher has over those who are acquainted with such languages only which do this business by termination. For though I think I have good reasons to believe, that all these Terminations may likewise be traced to their respective origin; and that, however artificial they may now appear to us, they were not originally the effect of premeditated and deliberate art, but separate words by length of time corrupted and coalescing with the words of which they are now considered as the Terminations: Yet this was less likely to be suspected by others. And if it had been suspected, they would have had ademptio, commodum aut incommodum, aut FINIS, quem in scholis Logici Finem cui dicunt, significatur."—Scioppii Gram. Philosoph., p. xiii.

much further to travel to their journey's end, and through a road much more embarrassed; as the corruption in those languages is of much longer standing than in ours, and more complex.

And yet, by what fatality I know not, our Grammarians have not only slighted, but have even been afraid to touch, this friendly clue: for of all the points which they endeavour to shuffle over, there is none in which they do it more grossly than in this of the Infinitive.

Some are contented to call TO, a mark of the infinitive mood.¹ But how, or why, it is so, they are totally silent.

Others call it a Preposition.

Others, a Particle.

Skinner calls it an Equivocal Article.²

And others³ throw it into that common sink and repository of all heterogeneous unknown corruptions, the Adverb.

And when they have thus given it a name, they hope you will be satisfied: at least they trust that they shall not be arraigned for this conduct; because those who should arraign them, will need the same shift for themselves.

There is one mistake, however, from which this Prefix TO ought to have rescued them: they should not have repeated the error, of insisting that the Infinitive was a mere Noun:⁴

¹ Lowth (page 66) says—"The Preposition TO placed before the Verb makes the Infinitive Mood." Now this is manifestly not so: for TO placed before the Verb loveth, will not make the Infinitive Mood. He would have said more truly, that TO placed before some Nouns makes Verbs. But of this I shall have occasion to speak hereafter, when I come to treat of the Verb.

² "Melius infinitiva sua Anglo-Saxones per term. AN, quam nos hodie æquivoco illo articulo TO præmisso, sæpe etiam omisso, distinxerunt."—Canones Etymologici.

³ S. Johnson says—"To, adverb, [το, Saxon; Te, Dutch.]" And then, according to his usual method, (a very convenient one for making a bulky book without trouble,) proceeds to give instances of its various significations, viz. "1. A particle coming between two verbs, and noting the second as the object of the first. 2. It notes the intention. 3. After an adjective it notes its object. 4. Noting futurity."

⁴ "The words Actiones and Lectiones (Wilkins says) are but the plural number of Agere, Legere." However, it must be acknowledged that Wilkins endeavours to save himself by calling the Infinitive, not a mere noun, but a Participle Substantive.—"That which is called the Infinitive Mode should, according to the true analogy of speech, be styled since it was found necessary in English to add another word (viz.) TO, merely to distinguish the Infinitive from the Noun, after the Infinitive had lost that distinguishing Termination which it had formerly.¹

B.—I do not mean hastily and without further consideration absolutely to dissent from what you have said, because some part of it appears to me plausible enough. And had you confined yourself only to the Segnacaso or Preposition, I should not suddenly have found much to offer in reply. But when instead of the Segnacaso (as Buonmattei classes it), or the Preposition (as all others call it), or the mark of the Infinitive (as it is peculiarly used in English), you direct me to consider it as the necessary and distinguishing sign of the VERB, you do yourself throw difficulties in my way which it will be incumbent on you to remove. For it is impossible not to observe, that the Infinitive is not the only part of our English verbs, which does not differ from the noun: and it rests upon you to explain why this necessary sign of the Verb should be prefixed only to the Infinitive, and not also to those other parts of the verb in English which have no distinguishing Termination.

H.—The fact is undoubtedly as you have stated it. There are certainly other parts of the English verb, undistinguished a Participle Substantive. There hath been formerly much dispute among some learned men, whither the notion called the Infinitive Mode ought to be reduced according to the philosophy of speech. Some would have it to be the prime and principal verb; as signifying more directly the notion of action: and then the other varieties of the verb should be but the inflexions of this. Others question whether the Infinitive Mode be a verb or no, because in the Greek it receives articles as a noun. Scaliger concludes it to be a verb, but will not admit it to be a Mode. Vossius adds, that though it be not Modus in Actu, yet it is Modus in Potentia. All which difficulties will be most clearly stated by asserting it to be a Substantive Participle."

Real Character, part 4, chap. 6.

Mr Harris without any palliation says,—“These Infinitives go further. They not only lay aside the character of Attributives, but they also assume that of Substantives.”—Hermes, book 1, chap. 8.

¹ [It should be noted that in Anglo-Saxon the sign to had always been prefixed to the Future Infinitive: and Lye adds, “interdum, redundanter tamen, puris, i. e. primitivis Infinitivis: ut, To ðeþman, servire, Chron. Sax. 118. 10, &c.”—See Additional Notes.—ED.]

from the noun by termination; but this is to me rather a circumstance of confirmation than an objection. For the truth is, that to them also (and to those parts only which have not a distinguishing termination) as well as to the Infinitive, is this distinguishing sign equally necessary, and equally prefixed. Do (the auxiliary verb as it has been called)¹ is derived from the same root, and is indeed the same word as TO. The difference between a T and a D is so very small, that an Etymologist knows by the practice of languages, and an Anatomist by the reason of that practice, that in the

¹ "The verb to do (says Mr. Tyrwhitt, Essay, Note 37) is considered by Wallis and other later grammarians, as an auxiliary verb. It is so used, though very rarely, by Chaucer. It must be confessed that the exact power which do, as an auxiliary, now has in our language, is not easy to be defined, and still less to be accounted for from Analogy."

In Chaucer's time the distinguishing terminations of the verb still remained, although not constantly employed; and he availed himself of that situation of the language, either to use them or drop them, as best suited his purpose, and sometimes he uses both termination and sign. Thus, in the Wife of Bathes Tale, he drops the Infinitive termination; and uses TO.

"My liege lady : generally, quod he,
Women desyren to have soveraynte
As well over her husbondes as her love."

And again a few lines after, he uses the infinitive termination, excluding TO.

"In al the court nas there wife ne mayde
Ne widow, that contraried that he suide,
But said, he was worthy HAN his lyfe."

So also,

"I trowe that if Envye, iwys,
Knewe the best man that is
On thys syde or beyonde the see,
Yet somewhat LACKEN him wold she."

Romaunt of the Rose.

The same may be shown by innumerable other instances throughout Chaucer.

B. Jonson, in his Grammar, says—"The Persons plural keepe the termination of the first person singular. In former times, till about the reigne of King Henry the Eighth, they were wont to be formed by adding en. But now (whatsoever is the cause) it hath quite growne out of use, and that other so generally prevailed that I dare not presume to set this afoot againe." This is the reason why Chaucer used both TO and DO more rarely than we use them at present.

derivation of words it is scarce worth regarding.¹ And for the same reason that TO is put before the Infinitive, DO used formerly to be put before such other parts of the VERB which likewise were not distinguished from the noun by termination. As we still say—I DO love,—instead of—I love. And I DOED or DID love—instead of I loved. But it is worth our while to observe, that if a distinguishing termination is used, then the distinguishing DO or DID must be omitted, the Termination fulfilling its office. And therefore we never find—I DID loved; or He DOTH loveth. But I DID love; He DOTH love.

It is not indeed an approved practice at present, to use DO before those parts of the Verb, they being now by custom sufficiently distinguished by their Place: and therefore the redundancy is now avoided, and DO is considered, in that case, as unnecessary and expletive.

However it is still used, and is the common practice, and should be used, whenever the distinguishing Place is disturbed by Interrogation, or by the insertion of a Negation, or of some other words between the nominative case and the verb. As—

He DOES not love the truth.

DOES he love the truth?

He DOES at the same time love the truth.

And if we chuse to avoid the use of this verbal Sign, DO, we must supply its place by a distinguishing termination to the verb. As—

He loveth not the truth.

Loveth he the truth?

He at the same time loveth the truth.

Or where the verb has not a distinguishing termination (as in plurals)—

They do not love the truth;

Do they love the truth?

They do at the same time love the truth—

Here, if we wish to avoid the verbal sign, we must remove the negative or other intervening word or words from between the nominative case and the verb ; and so restore the distinguishing Place. As—

¹ See the Note, page 47.

They love not the truth.

Love they the truth ?

At the same time they love the truth.¹

And thus we see that, though we cannot, as Mr. Tyrwhitt truly says, account for the use of this verbal sign from any Analogy to other languages, yet there is no caprice in these methods of employing to and do, so differently from the practice of other languages : but that they arise from the peculiar method which the English language has taken to arrive at the same necessary end, which other languages attain by distinguishing Termination.

B.—I observe, that Junius and Skinner and Johnson have not chosen to give the slightest hint concerning the derivation of to.² Minshew distinguishes between the preposition to, and the sign of the Infinitive to. Of the first he is silent, and of the latter he says—“to, as to make, to walk, to do, a Græco articulo τὸ ; idem est ut τὸ ποιεῖν, τὸ περιπατεῖν, τὸ πράττειν.” But Dr. Gregory Sharpe is persuaded that our language has taken it from the Hebrew. And Vossius derives the correspondent Latin Preposition ad from the same source.

H.—Yes. But our Gothic and Anglo-Saxon ancestors were not altogether so fond of the Hebrew, nor quite so well acquainted with it, as Dr. Sharpe and Vossius were. And if Boerhaave could not consent, and Voltaire³ thought it ridiculous, to seek a remedy in South America for a disease which was prevalent in the North of Europe, how much more would they have resisted the etymology of this pretended Jewish

¹ It is not however uncommon to say—“They, at the same time, love the truth.” Where the intervening words (at the same time) are considered as merely parenthetical, and the mind of the speaker still preserves the connexion of place between the nominative case and the verb.

² [“Zu, ad. Goth. at and du ; Franc. za, ze, and az, &c. Omnia affinia Latino ad. Nam ad et to se mutuò produciunt per anastrophen.”—Wachter. Grimm supposes that to and at may be identical, and have the same origin with the Latin ad. Grammat. iii. p. 253, 254.—Ed.]

³ “La Quinquina, seul spécifique contre les fièvres intermittentes,

Preposition! For my own part, I am persuaded that the correspondent Latin Preposition AD has a more natural origin, and a meaning similar to that of TO. It is merely the past participle of Agere.¹ (Which past participle is likewise a Latin Substantive.)

$$\text{agitur-agtum} \left\{ \begin{array}{l} \text{agDum} \text{ — } \text{agD} \text{ — } \text{AD} \\ \text{or} \text{ — } \text{or} \text{ — } \text{or} \\ \text{actum} \text{ — } \text{act} \text{ — } \text{AT.} \end{array} \right.$$

The most superficial reader of Latin verse knows how easily the Romans dropped their final um: for their poets would never have taken that licence, had it not been previously justified by common pronunciation. And a little consideration of the organs and practice of speech, will convince him how easily Agd or Act would become AD or AT,² as indeed this preposiplacé par la nature dans les montagnes du Pérou, tandis qu'elle a mis la fièvre dans le reste du monde."—Voltaire, Hist. Générale.

"Il meurt à Mocha dans le sable Arabe
Ce café nécessaire aux pays des frimats;
Il met la fièvre en nos climats,
Et le remède en Amérique."

Voltaire, Lettre au Roi de Prusse.

¹ My much valued and valuable friend Dr. Warner, the very ingenious author of METRONARISTON, or a New Pleasure recommended, in a dissertation upon Greek and Latin prosody, has remarked that—"C and G were by the Romans always pronounced hard, i. e. as the Greek K and Γ, before ALL vowels: which sound of them it would have been well if we had retained; for, had this been done, the inconvenience of many equivocal sounds, and much appearance of irregularity in the language, would have been avoided."—Perhaps it may seem superfluous to cite any thing from a book which must assuredly be in every classical hand: but it is necessary for me here to remind the reader of this circumstance; lest, instead of Aggere and Aggitum he should pronounce these words Adjere and Adjitum, and be disgusted with a derivation which might then seem forced and unnatural.

² If the reader keeps in mind the note to page 47, he will easily perceive how actum became the irregular participle of agere, instead of agitur or agtum. For it depended entirely on the employment or omission of the compression there noticed. And it is observable, that in all languages (for the natural reason is the same) if two of the letters (coupled in that note) come together, in one of which the compression should be employed and in the other omitted, the speaker for his own convenience will either employ the compression in both, or omit it in both; and that without any regard to the written character. Thus (amongst innumerable instances) an Englishman pronounces—oBzerve—

tion was indifferently written by the antients. By the moderns the preposition was written AD with the D only, in order to distinguish it from the other corrupt word called the conjunction AT; which for the same reason was written with the T only, though that likewise had antiently been written, as the preposition, either AD or AT.¹

B.—You have not yet accounted for the different employment of TILL and TO.

H.—That TILL should be opposed to FROM, only when we are talking of Time, and upon no other occasion, is evidently for this reason, (viz.) that TILL is a word compounded of TO and While, i. e. Time. And you will observe that the coalescence of these two words, To-while, took place in the language long before the present wanton and superfluous use of the article THE, which by the prevailing custom of modern speech is now interposed. So that when we say—“From morn TILL night,”—it is no more than if we said—“From morn TO TIME night.”² When we say—“From morn TO night,” the word Time is omitted as unnecessary. So we might say—“From Turkey TO the PLACE called England,” or “TO PLACE England.” But we leave out the mention of Place, as superfluous, and say only—“TO England.”

B.—You acknowledge then that the opposition of prepositions is useful, as far as it reaches. But, besides their opposi-

and a Frenchman—observer. So we learn from Quinctilian (lib. 1. cap. 7.) that the Romans pronounced optinuit, though they wrote obtinuit.—“Cum dico obtinuit, secundam B literam ratio poscit; aures magis audiunt P.”—In the same manner a Roman would pronounce the word either agum or actum, that he might not, in two letters coming close together, shift so instantly from the employment to the omission of the compression.

¹ “AD et AT, non tantum ob significationem, sed et originem diversam, diversimode scribere satius est.”—G. J. Vossius, Etymol. Ling. Lat.

² It is not unusual with the common people, and some antient authors, to use While alone as a preposition; that is, to leave out TO, and say—I will stay WHILE Evening. Instead of—TILL Evening; or, TO WHILE Evening. That is—I will stay TIME Evening,—instead of—TO TIME Evening. Thus—“Sygeberte wyth hys two bretherne gave backe WHYLE they came to the ryver of Sigoune.”—“He commaunded her to be bounden to a wylde horse taylor by the here of her hedde and so to be drawen WHYLE she were dede.”

tion and absolute contradiction, I should imagine that the marked and distinguished manner also, in which different prepositions are sometimes used in the same sentence, must very much tend to facilitate the discovery of their distinct significations.

*“ Well ! ’tis e’en so ! I have got the London disease they call Love. I am sick OF my husband, and FOR my gallant.”*¹

Love makes her sick OF, and sick FOR. Here OF and FOR seem almost placed in opposition ; at least their effects in the sentence are most evidently different ; for, by the help of these two prepositions alone, and without the assistance of any other words, she expresses the two contrary affections of Loathing and Desire.

II.—No. Small assistance indeed, if any, can be derived from such instances as this. I rather think they tend to mislead than to direct an inquirer. Love was not here the only disease. This poor lady had a complication of distempers ; she had two disorders : a sickness OF Loathing—and a sickness OF Desire. She was sick FOR Disgust, and sick FOR Love.

Sick OF disgust FOR her husband.
Sick OF love FOR her gallant.
Sick FOR disgust OF her husband.
Sick FOR love OF her gallant.

Her disgust was the OFFSPRING of her husband, proceeded from her husband, was begotten upon her by her husband. Her gallant was the cause of her love.

I think I have clearly expressed the meaning of her declaration. And I have been purposely tautologous, that by my indifferent application of the two words OF and FOR—both to her disgust and to her love, the smallest appearance of opposition between these prepositions might be done away. Indeed, the difference between them (thus considered) appears to be so small, that the author, if it had pleased him, might have used OF, where he has put FOR. And that he might so have done, the following is a proof.

¹ Wycherley’s Country Wife.

"Marian. Come, Annie, you'll go with us.

"Annie. I am not well.

"Lionel. She's sick OF the young shep'ard that bekist her."¹

In the same manner we may, with equal propriety, say—"We are sick OF hunger,"—or, "We are sick FOR hunger." And in both cases we shall have expressed precisely the same thing.

B.—'Tis certainly so in practice. But is that practice justifiable? For the words still seem to me to have a very different import. Do you mean to say that the words OF and FOR are synonymous?

H.—Very far from it. I believe they differ as widely as CAUSE and CONSEQUENCE. I imagine the word FOR (whether denominated Preposition, Conjunction, or Adverb) to be a Noun, and to have always one and the same single signification, viz. CAUSE, and nothing else. Though Greenwood attributes to it eighteen, and S. Johnson forty-six different meanings: for which Greenwood cites above forty, and Johnson above two hundred instances. But, with a little attention to their instances, you will easily perceive, that they usually attribute to the Preposition the meaning of some other words in the sentence.

Junius (changing p into f, and by metathesis of the letter R) derives FOR from the Greek Προ.² Skinner from the Latin Pro. But I believe it to be no other than the Gothic substantive FAIRIN, CAUSE.

I imagine also that OF (in the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon AF and AF) is a fragment of the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon AFARA, posteritas, &c. Απογα, proles, &c.³ That it is a

¹ Sad Shepherd, act 1. sc. 6.

² [Dr. Jamieson adheres to this opinion; and gives the Gothic faur and Isl. fyrer, as having the same origin.—Hermes Scythicus, p. 95. See also Grimm, iii. 256. Ed.]

³ "OF, a, ab, abs, de. A.S. Of. D. Aff. B. Af. Goth. AF. Exprimunt Gr. απο, ab, de: præsertim cum απο ante vocabulum ab adspiratione incipiens, fiat αφ." JUNIUS.

Minshew and Skinner derive OF from the Latin AB, and that from the Greek απο.

noun substantive, and means always consequence, offspring, successor, follower, &c.

And I think it not unworthy of remark, that whilst the old patronymical termination of our northern ancestors was SON, the Slavonic and Russian patronymic was OF. Thus whom the English and Swedes named Peterson, the Russians called Peterhof. And as a polite foreign affectation afterwards induced some of our ancestors to assume Fils or Fitz (i. e. Fils or Filius) instead of SON; so the Russian affectation in more modern times changed OF to Vitch (i. e. Fitz, Fils or Filius) and Peterhof became Petrovitch or Petrowitz.

So M. de Broses (tom. 2. p. 295.) observes of the Romans—"Remarquons sur les noms propres des familles Romaines qu'il n'y en a pas un seul qui ne soit terminé en ius; désinence fort semblable à l' ios; des Grecs, c'est à dire filius."¹

B.—Stop, stop, Sir. Not so hasty, I beseech you. Let us leave the Swedes, and the Russians, and the Greeks, and the Romans, out of the question for the present; and confine yourself, if you please, as in the beginning you confined my enquiry, to the English only. Above two hundred instances, do you say, produced by Johnson as proofs of at least forty-six different meanings of this one preposition FOR, when Harris will not allow one single meaning to all the prepositions in the world together! And is it possible that one and the same author, knowing this, should in the same short preface, and in the compass of a very few short pages, acknowledge the former to be "the person best qualified to give a perfect Grammar,"² and yet compliment the grammar of the latter, as the standard of accuracy, acuteness and perfection!³

H.—Oh, my dear Sir, the wise men of this world know full well that the family of the *Blandishes*⁴ are universal favourites.

¹ "Et quamvis nunc dierum habeant quidem, ad Anglorum imitationem, familiarum nomina; sunt tamen ea plerumque mere patronymica: sunt enim Price, Powel, Bowel, Bowen, Pugh, Parry, Penry, Prichard, Probert, Proger, &c. nihil aliud quam Ap Rhys, Ap Howel, Ap Owen, Ap Hugh, Ap Harry, Ap Henry, Ap Richard, Ap Robert, Ap Roger, &c. . . . AP, hoc est MAB, filius." WALLIS, Preface.

² See A Short Introduction to English Gram. Preface, p. 6.

³ See id. p. 14.

⁴ See the Heiress, (one little morsel of false moral excepted,) the Good breeding and policy direct us to mention the living only with praise; and if we do at any time hazard a censure, to let it fall only on the dead.

B.—Pray, which of those qualities dictated that remark?

H.—Neither. But a quality which passes for brutality and ill-nature: and which, in spite of hard blows and heavy burdens, would make me rather chuse in the scale of beings to exist a mastiff or a mule, than a monkey or a lapdog. But why have you overlooked my civility to Mr. Harris? Do you not perceive, that by contending for only one meaning to the word for, I am forty-five times more complaisant to him than Johnson is?

R.—He loves every thing that is Greek, and no doubt therefore will owe you many thanks for this Greek favour.—Danaos dona ferentes.—But confirm it if you please; and (if you can) strengthen your doubtful etymology (which I think wants strengthening) by extracting your single meaning of for from all Greenwood's and Johnson's numerous instances.

H.—That would be a tedious task; and, I trust, unnecessary; and for that reason only I have not pursued the method you now propose, with all the other particles which I have before explained. But as this manner of considering the Prepositions, though many years familiar to me, is novel to you, I may perhaps suppose it to be easier and clearer than it may at first sight appear to others. I will risque therefore your impatience, whilst I explain one single instance under each separate meaning attributed to for.

Greenwood says—"The Preposition for has a great many significations, and denotes chiefly for what purpose, end, or use, or for whose benefit or damage any thing is done; As—Christ died for us."¹ [i. e. Cause us; or, We being the Cause of his dying.]

"1. For serves to denote the End or Object which one proposes in any action; As—To fight for the public good." [i. e. cause the public good; or, The public good being the Cause of fighting.]

most perfect and meritorious comedy, without exception, of any on our stage.

¹[The Brackets here and in the following 11 pages, do not, as elsewhere, denote new matter.—Ed.]

"2. It serves to mark the Motive, the Cause, the Subject of any action ; As—He does all things FOR the love of virtue." [i. e. The love of virtue being the Cause.]

"3. It is used to mark the use for which a thing is done ; As—Chelsey Hospital was built FOR disabled soldiers." [i. e. Disabled soldiers being the Cause of its being built.]

"4. It is used likewise to denote Profit, Advantage, Interest ; As—I write FOR your satisfaction." [i. e. Your satisfaction being the Cause of my writing.]

"5. It is used to denote for what a thing is Proper, or not ; As—It is a good remedy FOR the Fever." In which last example to cure is to be understood. [i. e. Curing the Fever being the Cause that it is called a good remedy.]

"6. This preposition is used to denote Agreement or Help ; As—The Soldier fights FOR the King." [i. e. The King being the Cause of his fighting.]

"7. It is used to denote the Convenience or Inconvenience of a thing ; As—He is big enough FOR his age." [i. e. His age being the Cause that he is big ENOUGH ; or that his size answers our expectation.]

"8. It is used to denote Exchange or Trucking, Recompence, Retribution or Requital, and Payment ; As—He rewarded him FOR his good services." [i. e. His good services being the Cause of reward.]

"Hither we may likewise refer these phrases, Eye FOR Eye," &c. [i. e. An eye (destroyed by malicious violence) being the Cause of an eye taken from the convict in punishment.]

"9. It is used to denote Instead of, In the place of ; As—I will grind FOR him." [i. e. He being the Cause of my grinding.]

"Sometimes it serves to denote a Mistake ; As—He speaks one word FOR another." [i. e. Another word being the Cause of his speaking that word which he speaks.]

"10. It is used to denote the Distribution of things by Proportion to several others ; As—He sets down twelve Acres FOR every man." [i. e. Every or each man being the Cause of his setting down twelve acres.]

"11. It denotes the Condition of Persons, Things, and Times ; As—He was a learned man FOR those times." [i. e.

The darkness or ignorance of those times being the Cause why he may be considered as a learned man.]

“12. It is likewise used to denote In the quality of; As—He suborned him FOR a witness.” [i. e. FOR that he might be a witness; or, FOR to be a witness.—That he might be a witness; or, to be a witness being the Cause of his suborning him.]

“It signifies likewise as much as Because of, By reason of; As—To punish a man FOR his crimes.” [i. e. His crimes being the Cause of punishment.]

“It signifies As, or To be; As—He was sent FOR a pledge.” [i. e. That he might be a pledge, or to be a pledge being the Cause of his being sent.]

“During; to denote the Future Time; As—He was chosen [to some office] FOR life.” [i. e. To continue in that office FOR life; or, FOR the continuance of his life—The continuance of his life being the Cause of the continuance of his office.]

“Concerning, About; As—As FOR me.” [The sentence here is not complete; but it shall be explained amongst Johnson’s instances.]

“Notwithstanding; As, after having spoken of the faults of a man, we add, FOR all that, he is an honest man.” [i. e. Though all that has been said may be the Cause of thinking otherwise, yet he is an honest man.]

S. Johnson says, “FOR, Preposition:

“1. Because of—That which we FOR our unworthiness [i. e. our unworthiness the Cause] are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God FOR the worthiness of his Son [i. e. the worthiness of his Son being the Cause] would notwithstanding vouchsafe to grant.” —

“2. With respect to, with regard to; As—

“*Lo, some are vellow, and the rest as good
FOR all his lordship knows, but they are wood.*”

[i. e. As far as all that his lordship knows is the Cause of their being denominated good or bad, the rest are as good.]

“3. In this sense it has often As before it; As—As FOR Maramaldus the general, they had no just cause to mislike him, being an old captain of great experience.” [i. e. As far as Maramaldus the general might be a Cause of their discontent, they had no just cause to mislike him.]

“4. In the character of ; As—“*Say, is it fitting in this very field,

This field, where from my youth I’ve been a carter,
I in this field should die FOR a deserter ?*”

[i. e. Being a Deserter, being the Cause of my dying.]

“5. With resemblance of ; As—“*Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,

He quiver’d with his feet, and lay FOR dead.*”

[i. e. As if Death, or his being dead, had been the Cause of his laying ; or, He lay in that manner, in which death or being dead is the Cause that persons so lay.]

“6. Considered as ; in the place of ; As—

“*Read all the Prefaces of Dryden :
FOR those our critics much confide in :
Though merely writ at first FOR filling,
To raise the volume’s price a shilling.*”

[i. e. Read, &c. the Cause why you should read them, being, that our critics confide in them. Though to fill up and to raise the volume’s price was the Cause that they were at first written.]

“7. In advantage of ; For the sake of ; As—

“*Shall I think the world was made FOR one,
And men are born FOR kings, as beasts FOR men ?*”

[i. e. Shall I think that one man was the Cause why the world was made ; that kings are the Cause why men were born ; as men are the Cause why there are beasts ?]

“8. Conducive to ; Beneficial to ; As—It is FOR the general good of human society, and consequently of particular persons, to be true and just : and it is FOR men’s health to be temperate.” [i. e. The general good, &c. is the Cause why it is fit or a duty to be true and just : and men’s health is the Cause why it is fit or a duty to be temperate.]

“9. With intention of going to a certain place ; As—We sailed directly FOR Genoa.” [i. e. Genoa, or that we might go to Genoa, being the Cause of our sailing.]

“10. In comparative respect ; As—FOR Tusks with Indian elephants he strove.” [i. e. He contended for a superiority over the elephants ; Tusks, or the claim of a superiority in point of Tusks, being the Cause of the striving or contention.]

“11. In proportion to ; As—As he could see clear, FOR those times, through superstition, so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy.” [i. e. The darkness, or ignorance, or bigotry of those times being the Cause, why even such sight, as he then had, may be called or reckoned clear.]

“12. With appropriation to ; As—Shadow will serve FOR summer. Prick him : FOR we have a number of Shadows to fill up the Muster-book.” [i. e. Summer is the Cause why Shadow will serve, i. e. will do ; or will be proper to be taken. Prick him : the Cause (why I will have him pricked, or set down) is, that we have many Shadows to fill up the Muster-book.]

“13. After O, an expression of Desire ; As—

“O ! FOR a Muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention.”

[i. e. O ! I wish FOR a Muse of fire, &c. i. e. A Muse of fire being the Cause of my wishing.]

“14. In account of ; In solution of ; As—Thus much FOR the beginning and progress of the deluge.” [i. e. The beginning and progress of the deluge is the Cause of thus much, or of that which I have written.] N. B. An obsolete and awkward method of signifying to the reader, that the subject mentioned shall not be the Cause of writing any more. It is a favourite phrase with Mr. Harris, repeated perpetually with a disgusting and pedantic affectation, in imitation of the Greek philosophers ; but has certainly passed upon some persons, as “elegance of method, as Beauty, Taste, and Fine Writing.”

“15. Inducing to as a motive ; As—There is a natural, immutable, and eternal reason FOR that which we call virtue ; and against that which we call vice.” [Or, That which we call virtue, we call virtue FOR a natural, eternal, and immutable reason, i. e. a natural, eternal, and immutable reason being the Cause of our so calling it.—Or, There is a natural, eternal, and immutable reason the Cause of that which we call virtue.]

“16. In expectation of ; As—He must be back again by one and twenty, to marry and propagate : the father cannot stay any longer FOR the portion, nor the mother FOR a new set of babies to play with." [i. c. The Portion being the Cause why the father cannot stay any longer: a new set of babies to play with being the Cause why the mother cannot stay longer.]

"17. Noting Power or Possibility; As—FOR a holy person to be humble; FOR one, whom all men esteem a saint, to fear lest himself become a devil, is as hard as FOR a prince to submit himself to be guided by Tutors." [i. e. To be humble is hard or difficult Because, or, the Cause being, he is a holy person: To fear lest himself become a devil is difficult Because, or, the Cause being, he is one whom all men esteem a saint: To submit himself to be guided by Tutors is difficult Because, or, the Cause being, he is a Prince. And all these things are equally difficult.]

"18. Noting Dependence; As—The colours of outward objects, brought into a darkened room, depend FOR their visibility upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by." [i. e. Depend upon the dimness of the light as the Cause of their visibility.]

"19. In prevention of, for fear of; As—

*"Corn being had down, any way ye allow,
Should wither as needeth FOR burning in Mow."*

[i. e. Burning in Mow, the Cause why it needeth to wither.]

*"And FOR the time shall not seem tedious
I'll tell thee what befell me on a day."*¹

[i. e. The Cause of my telling thee, is, that the time may not seem tedious.]

"20. In remedy of; As—Sometimes hot, sometimes cold things are good FOR the tooth-ach." [i. e. Their curing the tooth-ach the Cause of their being called good.]

¹ So Chaucer,

*"This dronken myller hath ytolde us here
Howe that begyled was a carpentere Perauenture in skorne FOR I am one."*

Reue's prol. fol. 15. p. 2. col. 1.

"FOR they seemed philosophers, they weren pursued to the dethe and slayne."—Boecius, boke 1. fol. 221. p. 1. col. 1.

“21. In exchange for; As—He made considerable progress in the study of the law, before he quitted that profession FOR this of Poetry.” [i. e. The profession of Poetry, the Cause of his quitting the profession of the law.]

“22. In the place of, Instead of; As—’To make him copious is to alter his character; and to translate him line FOR line is impossible.” [i. e. Line Cause of line, or, Each line of the original being the Cause of each line of the translation.]

“23. In supply of, to serve in the place of; As—Most of our ingenious young men take up some cried-up English poet FOR their model.” [i. e. To be their model the Cause of taking him.]

“24. Through a certain duration; As—

“Since hir’d FOR life thy servile Muse must sing Successive conquests and a glorious king.”

[i. e. The continuance of your life the Cause of the continuance of your hire.]

“25. In search of, in quest of; As—Some of the philosophers have run so far back FOR arguments of comfort against pain, as to doubt whether there were any such thing.” [i. e. Arguments of comfort against pain the Cause of running so far back.]

“26. According to; As—Chymists have not been able, FOR aught is vulgarly known, by fire alone to separate true sulphur from antimony.” [i. e. Any thing which is vulgarly known, being the Cause of ability, or of their being supposed to be able.]

“27. Noting a State of Fitness or Readiness; As—Nay if you be an Undertaker, I am FOR you.” [i. e. I am an Undertaker, an Adversary, a Fighter, &c. FOR you; or, I will undertake you; i. e. You the Cause of my being an Undertaker, &c.]

“28. In hope of, for the sake of, noting the final Cause; As—Scholars are frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go FOR ornament, if they will not serve FOR use.” [i. e. Ornament the Cause; Use the Cause.]

“29. Of tendency to, Towards; As—It were more FOR his honour to raise the siege, than to spend so many good men in the winning of it by force.” [i. e. His honour the Cause why it were more expedient, fitting, proper, &c. to raise the siege.]

“30. In favour of, on the part of, on the side of; As—It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have so often drawn it FOR a good one.” [i. e. A good one being the Cause of drawing it.]

“31. Noting Accommodation, or Adaptation; As—Persia is commodiously situated FOR trade both by sea and land.” [i. e. Trade the Cause of its being said to be commodiously situated.]

“32. With intention of; As—

*And by that justice hast remov'd the Cause
Of those rude tempests, which, FOR rapine sent,
Too oft alas involv'd the innocent.*

[i. e. Rapine the Cause of their being sent.]

“33. Becoming, Belonging to; As—

*It were not FOR your quiet, nor your good,
Nor FOR my manhood, honesty and wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts.*

[i. e. Your quiet is a Cause, your good is a Cause, my manhood, my honesty, my wisdom, each is a Cause, why it is not fit or proper to let you know my thoughts.]

“34. Notwithstanding; As—Probability supposes that a thing may or may not be so, FOR any thing that yet is certainly determined on either side.” [i. e. Any thing yet determined being the Cause of concluding.]

“35. FOR ALL. Notwithstanding; As—FOR ALL his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness.” [i. e. His exact plot being, all of it, a Cause to expect otherwise; yet he was cast down.]

“36. To the use of, to be used in; As—

*The Oak FOR nothing ill;
The Osier good FOR twigs; the Poplar FOR the Mill.*

[i. e. Not any thing the Cause why the oak should be pronounced bad; Twigs the Cause why the osier should be called good; the Mill the Cause why the poplar should be esteemed useful.]

“37. In consequence of; As—

FOR love they force through thickets of the wood.

[i. e. Love the Cause.]

“ 38. In recompense of; As—

“ *Now FOR so many glorious actions done
FOR peace at home, and FOR the public wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl to Cæsar's health :
Besides in gratitude FOR such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred Gladiators.*”

[i. e. I mean to crown a bowl to Cæsar's health, the Cause—so many glorious actions; the Cause—peace at home; the Cause—the public weal. Besides, I have in gratitude vowed two hundred gladiators, such high matters being the Cause of my gratitude.]

“ 39. In proportion to; As—He is not very tall, yet FOR his years he's tall.” [i. e. His years the Cause why he may be esteemed tall.]

“ 40. By means of; by interposition of; As—Moral considerations can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not FOR the will.” [i. e. Were not the will the Cause.]

“ 41. In regard of; in preservation of; As—I cannot FOR my life.” [i. e. My life being the Cause; or, To save my life being the Cause why I should do it: i. e. though my life were at stake.]

“ 42. FOR to; As—I come FOR to see you.” [i. e. To see you being the Cause of my coming.]

“ ————— *A large posterity
Up to your happy palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints FOR to increase the count.*”

[i. e. To increase the number being the Cause of their mounting.¹]

FOR. Conjunction; ² As—

¹ [Matth. xi. 8, “But what went ye out for to see?” Matth. xi. 14, “Elias, which was for to come.” Acts xvi. 4, “They delivered them the decrees for to keep.” Acts xvi. 10, “The Lord had called us for to preach the gospel.”—ED.]

² So the French correspondent Conjunction CAR (by old French authors written Quhar) is no other than Qua re, or, Que (i. e. Kai) ca re.

“QU and c (says Laurenbergius) communionem habuere apud antiquos, ut Arquus, oquulus, pro arcus, oculus. Prisc. Vicissim anticus, eculus, pro antiquus, equulus, antiqui libri. Cum et quum, cui et qui. Terentius Andriâ: Qui mihi expurgandus est, pro cui: annotat Donatus. Querquera febris, Lucilius: Quercera, Gellius, lib. 20. Cotidie, non *“Heav’n doth with us as we with torches deal,

Not light them FOR themselves: FOR if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, ’t were all alike
As if we had them not.”*

[i. e. Themselves not being the Cause of lighting them. If our virtues did not go forth of us, ’t were all alike as if we had them not: That is the Cause why heaven doth deal with us, as we deal with torches.]

“2. Because; on this account that; As—I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet FOR that the worst men are most ready to move, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men.” [i. e. The worst men are the most ready to move. That is the Cause why I would wish them (not the worst men, but the troops) chosen by discretion of wise men.]

“3. For as much. In regard that; in consideration of; As—FOR as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of Spaw water.” [i. e. As much as the thirst is intolerable, is the Cause why the patient may be indulged.]

“4. FOR WHY. Because; For this reason that; As—Solyman had three hundred field pieces, that a Camel might well carry one of them, being taken from the carriage: FOR WHY, Solyman ’purposing to draw the emperor unto battle, had brought no greater pieces of battery with him.” [i. e. the Cause, that.]

Quotidie, scribunt Quintil. et Victorinus. Sterci’inium, pro sterquilinio, habent libri veteres Catonis de R. R. et Terentius Phormione: Insece et Inseque Ennius, Livius, Cato: ut disputat Gellius, lib. 18. cap. 19. Hujusce, et hujusque, promiscue olim scribebant. Hinc Fortuna hujusce diei, apud Plinium, lib. 34. et Fortuna hujusque diei, apud Ciceronem, lib. 2. de legibus. Et Victor de regionibus urbis: VICUS. HUIJUSQUE. DIEI. FORT. ÆD. Lex vetus ædificiî: DIES OPERIS K. NOVEMB. PRIMEIS DIES PEQVVN. PARS DIMIDIA DABITUR VBI PRÆDIA SATIS SUBSIGNATA ERUNT. ALTERA PARS DIMIDIA SOLVETUR OPERE PERFECTO PROBATO QUE.”

Of which innumerable other instances might also be given. And the Latins, in cutting of the E at the end of Que, only followed the example of the Greeks, who did the same by Και (as should have been mentioned before in the note to page 47). Thus in Sappho’s ode to Venus,

Ἦρε ὅττι δ’ ἦν το πεπονθα, κ’ ὅττι

Δευρο καλοιμι.

Κ’ ὅττι γ’ ἐμω μαλιστ’ ἐβελω γινεσθαι.

Αἰ δε μη φιλει ταχεως φιλησει

Κ’ ὅττι κελευης.

B.—FOR, is not yet your own, however hard you have struggled for it: for, besides Greenwood and S. Johnson, you have still three others to contend with. Wilkins assigns two meanings to FOR. He says it denotes—“the efficient or final cause, and adjuvancy or agreement with.”

Lowth asserts that—“FOR, in its primary sense, is loco alterius, in the stead or place of another.” And he therefore censures Swift for saying—“Accused the ministers FOR betraying the Dutch:” And Dryden for saying—“You accuse Ovid FOR luxuriancy of verse.” Where, instead of FOR, he says OF should be written.

And Mr. Tyrwhitt, in his Glossary, says—“FOR. Prep. Sax. sometimes signifies AGAINST.” Of which he gives three instances.

“He didde next his white lere
Of cloth of lake fin and clere;
A breche and eke a sherte;
And next his shert an haketon,
And over that an habergeon
FOR percing of his herte.”

Mr. Tyrwhitt says—“AGAINST, or to prevent piercing.”

“Therefore FOR stealyng of the rose
I rede her nat the yate unclose.”

Mr. T. says—“Against stealing.”

“Some shall sow the sacke
FOR shedding of the wheate.”

Mr. T. says—“to prevent shedding.”

H.—As Wilkins has produced no instances, he has given me nothing to take hold of. And let any ingenuity try whether it can, with any colour of plausibility, apply Dr. Lowth’s meaning of loco alterius, or any other single meaning (except Cause) to the instances I have already explained. His corrections of Swift and of Dryden are both misplaced. For the meaning of these passages is—

Betraying the Dutch	}	CAUSE of the accusation.
Luxuriancy of Verse

So also in Mr. Tyrwhitt’s instances, though their construction is awkward and faulty, and now out of use, yet is the meaning of FOR equally conspicuous. The Cause of putting on the Habergeon, of the advice not to open the gate, of sowing the sack—being respectively—that the heart might not be pierced, that the rose might not be stolen, that the wheat might not be shed.

B.—I will trouble you with only one instance of my own. How do you account for this sentence—“To the disgrace of common sense and common honesty, after a long debate concerning the Rohillas, a new writ was moved FOR FOR Old Sarum: and every orator was tongue-tied. Although it is as much the duty of the House of Commons to examine the claim of representation, as of the other House to examine the claim of Peerage.” Is the repetition of FOR tautologous, or only awkward?

H.—Only awkward. For here are two Causes mentioned. The Cause of the writ, and the Cause of the motion. By a small transposition of the words you may remove the awkwardness and perceive the signification of the phrase.—“A motion was made FOR a new writ FOR Old Sarum.” [i. e. A new writ—Cause of the motion. Old Sarum, or a vacancy at Old Sarum—Cause of the writ.] And you will perceive that FOR may be repeated in a sentence as often as you mean to indicate a Cause; and never else. As, “A motion was made FOR an order FOR a writ FOR the election of a burgess FOR to serve in parliament FOR the borough of Old Sarum.”

1. An order—Cause of the motion.
 2. A writ—Cause of the order.
 3. Election of a burgess—Cause of the writ.
 4. To serve in Parliament—Cause of the election.
 5. Borough of Old Sarum—Cause of the service in Parliament.
- So in these lines of Butler—

“The Devil’s master of that office
Where it must pass, if’t be a drum;
He’ll sign it with Cler. Parl. Dom. Com.
To him apply yourselves, and he Will soon dispatch you for his fee.”

i. e. his fee the Cause.

B.—But if the words FOR and OF differ so widely as you say; if the one means Cause and the other means Consequence; by what etymological legerdemain will you be able to account for that indifferent use of them which you justified in the instances of “ Sickness OF hunger ; and Sickness FOR hunger.”

“ Sickness OF love ; and Sickness FOR love.”

H.—Qualified as it is by you, it is fortunate for me that I shall not need to resort to Etymology for the explanation. Between the respective terms

“ Sickness	—	Hunger,
Sic'ness	—	Love,”

it is certainly indifferent to the signification which of the two prepositions you may please to insert between them ; whether OF or FOR : this being the only difference,—that if you insert OF, it is put in apposition to Sickness ; and Sickness is announced the Consequence :—if you insert FOR, it is put in apposition to Hunger or to Love ; and Hunger or Love is announced the Cause.¹

B.—I do not well understand how you employ the term Apposition. Scaliger, under the head Appositio, (Cap. CLXXVII. de caussis) says—“ Causa propter quam duo substantia non ponuntur sine copula, e philosophia petenda est. Si aliqua substantia ejusmodi est, ut ex ea et alia, unum intelligi queat ; earum duarum substantiarum totidem notæ (id est nomina) in oratione sine conjunctione cohærere poterunt.”

H.—What Scaliger says is very true. And this is the case with all those prepositions (as they are called) which are really substantives. Each of these—ejusmodi est, ut ex ea et alia (to which it is prefixed, postfixed, or by any manner attached) unum intelligi queat.

B.—If it be as you say, it may not perhaps be so impossible as Lord Monboddo imagines, to make a Grammar even for the most barbarous languages : and the Savages may possibly have as complete a syntax as ourselves. Have you considered ¹ The Dutch are supposed to use Van in two meanings ; because it supplies indifferently the places both of our OF and FROM. Notwithstanding which Van has always one and the same single meaning, viz. Beginning. And its use both for OF and FROM is to be explained by its different apposition. When it supplies the place of FROM, Van is put in apposition to the same term to which FROM is put in apposition. But when it supplies the place of OF, it is not put in apposition to the same term to which OF is put in apposition, but to its correlative. And between two correlative terms, it is totally indifferent to the meaning which of the two correlations is expressed.

what he says upon that subject, vol. i. book 3. of his Origin and Progress of Language?¹

H.—I could sooner believe with Lord Monboddo, that there are men with tails like cats, as long as his lordship pleases;² and conclude with him, from the authority of his

¹ “The last thing I proposed to consider was, the expression of the relation or connexion of things, and of the words expressing them: which makes what we call Syntax, and is the principal part of the grammatical art.”

“Now let ever so many words be thrown together of the most clear and determinate meaning, yet if they are not some way connected, they will never make discourse, nor form so much as a single proposition. This connexion of the parts of speech in languages of art is either by separate words, such as prepositions and conjunctions, or by cases, genders, and numbers, in nouns, &c. But in less perfect languages the most of them are denoted by separate words.

“Now as every kind of relation is a pure idea of intellect, which never can be apprehended by sense, and as some of those relations, particularly such of them as are expressed by cases, are very abstract and metaphysical, it is not to be expected that savages should have any separate and distinct idea of those relations. They will therefore not express them by separate words, or by the variation of the same word, but will throw them into the lump with the things themselves. This will make their syntax wretchedly imperfect.—There are only three barbarous languages, so far as I know, of which we have any particular account published that can be depended upon,—the Huron, the Galibi, and the Caribbee; of which we have Dictionaries and Grammars also, so far as it is possible to make a Grammar of them. With respect to syntax, the Hurons appear to have none at all: for they have not prepositions or conjunctions. They have no genders, numbers, or cases, for their nouns; nor moods for their verbs. In short, they have not, so far as I can discover, any way of connecting together the words of their discourse. Those savages, therefore, though they have invented words, use them as our children do when they begin to speak, without connecting them together: from which we may infer, that Syntax, which completes the work of language, comes last in the order of invention, and perhaps is the most difficult part of language. It would seem, however, that persons may make themselves understood without syntax. And there can be no doubt but that the position of the word will commonly determine what other word in the sentence it is connected with.”

² As his Lordship (vol. 1. p. 238) seems to wish for further authorities for human tails, especially of any tolerable length, I can help him to a tail of a foot long, if that will be of any service.

“Avant que d’avoir vû cette ile, j’avois souvent ouï dire qu’il y avoit des hommes à longues queues comme les bêtes; mais je n’avois jamais pu le croire, et je pensois la chose si éloignée de nôtre nature, que j’y eus encore de la peine, lorsque mes sens m’ôterent tout lieu d’en douter par une aventure assez bizarre. Les habitans de FORMOSA furnished friend, that human flesh (even to those who are not furnished) is the sweetest of all viands to the human taste, than etant accoutuméz à nous voir, nous en usions ensemble avec assez de confiance pour ne rien craindre de part ni d'autre ; ainsi quoy qu'étrangers nous nous croyons en secreté, et marchions souvent sans escorte lorsque l'expérience nous fit connoître que c'étoit trop nous hazarder. Un jour quelques uns de nos gens se promenant ensemble, un de nos ministres, qui étoit de la compagnie, s'en éloigna d'un jet de pierre pour quelques besoins naturels ; les autres cependant marchaient toujours fort attentifs à un recit qu'on leur faisoit ; quand il fut fini ils se souvinrent que le ministre ne revenoit point, ils l'attendirent quelque temps ; apres quoy, las d'attendre, ils allèrent vèrs le lieu où ils crurent qu'il devoit être : Ils le trouvèrent mais sans vie, et le triste état où il étoit fit bien connoître qu'il n'avoit pas languì long-temps. Pendant que les uns le gardoient, les autres allèrent de divers côtez pour découvrir le meurtrier : ils n'allèrent pas loin sans trouver un homme, qui se voyant serré par les notres, écumoit, hurloit, et faisoit comprendre qu'il feroit repentir le premier qui l'approcheroit. Ses manières désespérées firent d'abord quelqu'impression ; mais enfin la frayeur céda, on prit ce misérable qui avoia qu'il avoit tué le ministre, mais on ne put sçavoir pourquoi. Comme le crime étoit atroce, et que l'impunité pouvoit avoir de facheuses suites, on le condamna à être brûlé. Il fut attaché à un poteau où il demeura quelques heures avant l'exécution ; ce fut alors que je vis ce que jusques-là je n'avois pu croire ; sa queue étoit longue de plus d'un pied toute couverte d'un poil roux, et fort semblable à celle d'un bœuf. Quand il vit que les spectateurs étoient surpris de voir en lui ce qu'ils n'avoient point, il leur dit que ce défaut si c'en étoit un, venoit du climat, puisque tous ceux de la parte méridionale de cette ile dont il étoit, en avoient comme lui."—Voyages de Jean Struys, An. 1650, tom. 1. chap. 10.

The meek, modest, sincere,* disinterested and amiable Doctor Horsley, Lord bishop of Rochester, could have furnished the other Lord with an authority for Tails nearer home, in his own metropolitan city :—"Ex hujus modi vocibus, fuerunt improbi nonnulli, quibus visa est occulta voluntas regis esse, ut Thomas e medio tolleretur ; qui propterea velut hostis regis habitus, jam tum cœpit sic vulgo negligi, contemni ac in odio esse, ut cum venisset aliquando Strodum, qui vicus situs est ad Medveiam flumen, quod flumen Rocestriam alluit, ejus loci accolæ cupidi bonum patrem ita despectum ignominia aliqua afficiendi, non dubitarint amputare caudam equi quem ille equitaret ; seipsos perpetuo probro obligantes : nam postea, nutu dei, ita accidit, ut omnes ex eo hominum genere, qui id facinus fecissent, nati sint instar brutorum animalium candati."—As this change of shape may afford a good additional reason why such fellows should have "nothing to do with the laws, but to obey them," the bishop perhaps will advise to sink what Polydore kindly adds in conclusion,—"Sed ea infamiæ nota jam pridem, una admit that “every kind of relation is a pure idea of intellect, which never can be apprehended by sense; and that those particularly which are expressed by cases are more abstract and metaphysical than the others.”

* [Mr. Baron Maseres used to relate, that he had often known the bishop to make a jest of doctrines which he strenuously defended in his writings.—ED.]

But his lordship and his fautors will do well to contend stoutly and obstinately for their doctrine of language, for they are menaced with a greater danger than they will at first apprehend: for if they give up their doctrine of language, they will not be able to make even a battle for their Metaphysics: the very term Metaphysic being nonsense; and all the systems of it, and controversies concerning it, that are or have been in the world, being founded on the grossest ignorance of words and of the nature of speech.

As far as relates to Prepositions and Conjunctions, on which (he says) Syntax depends, the principal and most difficult part (as he calls it) of the Grammatical art, and which (according cum gente illa eorum hominum qui peccarint, deleta est.”—Polyd. Virg. Urb. Angl. Hist. fol. 218.

“But who considers right will find indeed,
 ’Tis Holy Island parts us, not the Tweed.
 Nothing but Clergy could us two seclude;
 No Scotch was ever like a Bishop’s feud.
 All Litany’s in this have wanted faith,
 There’s no—Deliver us from a Bishop’s wrath.
 Never shall Calvin pardon’d be for sales;
 Never for Burnet’s sake, the Lauderdale’s;
 For Becket’s sake Kent always shall have tales.”

The Loyal Scot. By A. Marvell.

“Iohan Capgrave and Alexander of Esseby sayth, that for castynge of fyshe tayles at thys Augustyne, Dorsett Shyre menne hadde tayles ever after. But Polydorus applieth it unto Kentish men at Stroud by Rochester, for cuttinge of Thomas Becket’s horses tail. Thus hath England in all other land a perpetuall infamy of tayles by theyr wrytten legendes of lyes, yet can they not well tell, where to bestowe them truely.”—p. 37.

And again, p. 98.—“The spirituall sodomites in the legendes of their sanctified sorcerers have diffamed the English posterity with tails, as I have shewed afore. That an Englyshman now cannot travayle in an other land, by way of marchandyse or any other honest occupyng, but it is most contumeliously thrown in his tothe, that al Englishmen have tailes. That uncomly note and report have the nation gotten, without recover, by these laisy and idle lubbers the Monkes and the Priestes, which could find no ma’ters to advance their canonised gains by, or their saintes as they call them, but manifest lies and knaveries.”—Iohan Bale. Actes of English Volaries.

to him) is the last in the order of invention, and completes the work of language: As far as relates to these prepositions and conjunctions, I hope it is by this time pretty evident that, instead of invention, the classes of them spring from corruption; and that, in this respect, the Savage languages are upon an equal footing with the languages (as they are called) of art, except that the former are less corrupted: and that Savages have not only as separate and distinct ideas of those relations as we have, but that they have this advantage over us (an advantage in point of intelligibility, though it is a disadvantage in point of brevity,) that they also express them separately and distinctly. For our Prepositions and Conjunctions, like the languages of the Savages, are merely—"so many words of the most clear and determinate meaning thrown together," or (as he afterwards strangely expresses it), "thrown into the lump with the things themselves."¹

¹ What Lord Monboddo has delivered concerning Syntax, he has taken, in his own clumsy way, from the following erroneous article of M. de Brosse. —147. Fabrique des Syntaxes barbares.—"Dans son origine, elle n'a d'abord eu qu'un amas confus de signes épars appliqués selon le besoin aux objets à mesure qu'on les découvroit. Peu à peu la nécessité de faire connoître les circonstances des idées jointes aux circonstances des objets, et de les rendre dans l'ordre où l'esprit les place, a, par une logique naturelle, commencé de fixer la véritable signification des mots, leur liaison, leur régime, leurs dérivations. Par l'usage reçu et invétéré, les tournures habituelles sont devenues les préceptes de l'art bons ou mauvais, c'est à dire bien ou mal faits selon le plus ou le moins de logique qui y a présidé: et comme les peuples barbares n'en ont guères, aussi leurs langues sont elles souvent pauvres et mal construites: mais à mesure que le peuple se police, on voit mieux l'abus des usages, et la syntaxe s'épure par de meilleures habitudes qui deviennent de nouveaux préceptes. Je n'en dis pas davantage sur l'établissement des syntaxes; et même si j'y reviens dans la suite, ce ne sera qu'en peu de mots. C'est une matière immense dans ses détails, qui demanderoit un livre entier pour la suivre dans toutes les opérations mécaniques du concept, qui en général la rendent nécessaire en conséquence de la fabrique du sens intérieur, mais très arbitraire dans ses petits détails, par le nombre infini de routes longues ou courtes, droites ou tortues, bonnes ou mauvaises, que l'on peut prendre pour parvenir au même but. Au surplus toutes ces routes bien ou mal faites servent également dans l'usage lorsqu'elles sont une fois frayées et connues." This matière immense, as M. de Brosse imagines it, is in truth a very small and simple business. The whole of cultivated languages, as well as of those we call barbarous, is merely "un amas de signes épars appliqués selon le besoin aux objets."

B.—Well, Sir, after this tedious investigation of FOR, (one half of which I think might have been spared,) let us now, if you please, pause for a moment, and consider the ground which we have beaten. The Prepositions IF, UNLESS, BUT, WITHOUT, SINCE, you had before explained amongst the Conjunctions. To these you have now added the prepositions WITH, SANS, THROUGH, FROM, TO, WHILE, TILL, OF, and FOR. Though we have spent much time, we have made but little progress, compared with what still remains to be done: at least if our language is as fertile in prepositions as Buffier supposes the French to be.

H.—I rather think we have made great progress. And, if you have nothing to object to my derivations and explanations, I must consider the battle as already won. For I am not here writing a dictionary (which yet ought to be done, and of a very different kind indeed from any thing ever yet attempted any where), but only laying a foundation for a new theory of language. However, though the remaining prepositions are numerous, the greater part require but little, and many of them no explanation.

BY.

BY (in the Anglo-Saxon written B₁, Be, B₁z) is the Imperative¹ Býð of the Anglo-Saxon verb Beon, to be. And our ancestors wrote it indifferently either BE or BY. “Damville BE right ought to have the leading of the army, but, BYcause thei be cosen germans to the Admirall, thei be mistrusted.” 1568.—See Lodge’s Illustrations, vol. 2. p. 9. This preposition is frequently, but not always, used with an abbreviation of construction. Subauditur, instrument, cause, agent, &c. Whence the meaning of the omitted word has often been improperly attributed to BY. With (when it is the imperative

¹ [Býð is the third person singular of the optative, present and future; Elstop and Rawlinson give it as the Imperative, but not Rask. It would seem to be an objection to Mr. Tooke’s opinion, that bi or be is also a common prefix to verbs.

“ þar Brutus bi-feng
Al pat him bi-foren wes.”—Layam. v. 329.—Ed] of pȳpðan) is used indifferently for *By*¹ (when it is the imperative of Beon) and with the same subauditur and imputed meaning: As—“He was slain BY a sword, or, he was slain WITH a sword.”—“Kenwalcus was warreyd WITH the King of Britons.” Wallis, confounding together the imperative of pȳpðan with the imperative of ϣΙΨΑΝ, says—“With indicat instrumentum, ut Latinorum ablativus instrumenti; atque etiam concomitantiam, ut Latinorum cum.”

By was also formerly used (and not improperly nor with a different meaning) where we now employ other prepositions, such as For, In, During, Through. As;—

“Aboute the xviii yere of the reygne of Ine dyed the holy byshop Aldelme. Of him it is written, that when he was styred by his gostly enmy to the synne of the flesh, he to do the more torment to himselfe and of hys body, wolde holde within his bedde by him a fayre mayden BY so long a tyme as he myght say over the hole sauter.” Fabian, LXXVI.

“The which BY a longe time dwelled in warre.” XLV.

“To whom the fader had BY hys lyfe commytted him.” LXXII.

“He made Clement BY hys lyfe helper and successour.” LV.

“Whom Pepyn BY his lyfe hadde ordeyned ruler of Guian.” LXXXIII.

“Sleyng the people without mercy BY all the ways that they passyd.” LXXVIII.

So also OF was formerly used, and with propriety, where we now employ BY with equal propriety.

“*These quenes were as two goddesses
Of arte magike sorceresses*

¹ In compound prepositions also, the Anglo-Saxon uses indifferently either pīð or Be; as,

pīð-æftan	Be-æftan
pīð-foþan	Be-foþan
pīð-geonðan	Be-geonðan
pīð-innan	Be-innan
pīð-neoðan	Be-neoðan
pīð-uþan	Be-uþan
pīð-utan	Be-utan
pīð-hinðan	Be-hinðan

though the modern English has given the preference to Be: having retained only two of the above prepositions commencing with pīð, and dropped only two commencing with Be.

Thei couthe muche, he couthe more :
 Thei shape and cast ayenst hym sore,
 And wrought many a subtile wile.
 But yet thei might hym not begyle.
 Such crafte thei had aboue kynde,
 But that arte couth thei not fynde,
 Of whiche Ulisses was deceived."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 135. p. 1. col. 2.

BETWEEN. BETWIXT.¹

BETWEEN (formerly written Twene, Atwene, Bytwene) is a dual preposition, to which the Greek, Latin, Italian, French, &c., have no word correspondent; and is almost peculiar to ourselves, as some languages have a peculiar dual number. It is the Anglo-Saxon Imperative Be, and Tpezen or twain.

BETWIXT (by Chaucer written *Bytwyt*²) is the imperative Be, and the Gothic TVRS, or two: and was written in the Anglo-Saxon Betpeohs, Betpeox, Betpux, Betpýx, and Betpýxt.

BEFORE, BEHIND, BELOW, BESIDE, BESIDES.

These Prepositions are merely the imperative BE, compounded with the nouns FORE, HIND, LOW, SIDE, which—remaining still in constant and common use in the language; as—The fore part, the hind part, a low place, the side—require no explanation.³

BENEATH.

BENEATH means the same as Below. It is the imperative Be compounded with the noun, Neath. Which word Neath (for any other use but this of the preposition) having slipped away from our language, would perhaps have given some trouble, had not the nouns Nether and Nethermost (corrupted from Neoðemeɽ, Niðemæɽ), still continued in common

¹ Grimm's Grammat. iii. 269.

² "Thy wife and thou mote hange fer atwynne,
 For that Bytwyt you shall be no synne."—Miller's Tale.

³ [These and the like are what Grimm classes as substantive-prepositions, as being compounded with nouns; the prefix, however, being itself a preposition, and not, as Mr. Tooke supposes, a verb; this class including such words as again, anciently also to-gen (Layam.), among, A.S. on-gemanȝ, &c. See Additional Notes.—Ed.]

use.¹ The word Nether is indeed at present fallen into great contempt, and is rarely used but in ridicule and with scorn: and this may possibly have arisen from its former application to the house of commons, anciently called (by Henry VIII.) "The NETHER house of parliament."² That the word should thus have fallen into disgrace is nothing wonderful: for in truth this Nether end of our parliament has for a long time past been a mere sham and mockery of representation, but is now become an impudent and barefaced usurpation of the rights of the people.

NEATH, Neoðan, Neoðe, (in the Dutch Neden, in the Danish Ned, in the German Niedere, and in the Swedish Nedre and Neder) is undoubtedly as much a substantive, and has the same meaning as the word NADIR; which Skinner (and after him S. Johnson) says, we have from the Arabians. This etymology (as the word is now applied only to astronomy) I do not dispute; but the word is much more antient in the northern languages than the introduction of that science amongst them. And therefore it was that the whole serpentine class was denominated NAR in the Gothic, and Nedpe in the Anglo-Saxon.

If we say in the English—"From the TOP to the BOTTOM,"—the nouns are instantly acknowledged: and surely they are to the full as evident in the collateral Dutch, "Van BOVEN tot BENEDEN.—BENEDEN stad," &c.

UNDER.

UNDER (in the Dutch Onder,) which seems by the sound

¹ ——— "yet higher than their tops
The verd'rous wall of paradise up sprung:
Which to our general Sire gave prospect large
Into his NETHER empire neighb'ring round."

Par. Lost, book 4. ver. 445.

——— "among these the seat of men,
Earth with her NETHER ocean circumfus'd
Their pleasant dwelling-place."—Ibid. book 7. v. 624.

"In yonder NETHER world where shall I seek His bright appearances, or footstep trace?"

Ibid. book 11. v. 328.

² "Which doctrine also the lordes bothe spirituall and temporall, with the NETHER house of our parliament, have both sene, and lyke very wel."—A Necessary Doctrine and Erudition for any Christen Man. Set furthe by the Kynges maiestie of Englande. 1543.

to have very little connexion with the word Beneath, is yet in fact almost the same, and may very well supply its place :¹ for it is nothing but On neder, and is a Noun.

“ Nor engine, nor device polemic,
Disease, nor Doctor epidemic,
; Though stor'd with deletory med'cines
(Which whosoever took is dead since)
E'er sent so vast a colony
To both the UNDER worlds, as He.”—Hudib. can. 2. v. 320.

BEYOND.

BEYOND (in the Anglo-Saxon ƿiðgeondan, Biðgeond, Begeond) means be passed. It is the Imperative Be, compounded with the past participle geond, geoned, or goned, of the verb ƿan, ƿangan, or ƿongan, to go, or to pass. So that—“BEYOND any place,” means—Be passed that place, or, Be that place passed.

WARD.

WARD, in the Anglo-Saxon ƿapð or ƿeapð, is the imperative of the verb ƿapðian or ƿeapðian to look at; or to direct the view. It is the same word as the French garder:² and so Chaucer uses it, where it is not called a preposition.

“ Take REWARDE of [i. e. Pay regard to, or Look again at] thyn owne valewe, that thou ne be to foule to thy selfe.”—Parson's Tale, fol. 101. p. 2. col. 2.

“ And yet of Danger cometh no blame

In REWARD [i. e. in regard] of my daughter shame.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 135. p. 2. col. 1.

¹ [Unter, onder, in some cases also represents inter, both alone and in compounds : e. g. Ger. unterbrechen, interrupt; Dutch, ondermengen, intermingle; “onder weghen, inter eundum;” Kilian, under way; A.S. Undeƿ ðæm, interca; undeƿ beopzen, among (?) hills, Layam. 20854.—Wachter considers this sense to have been brought in by early translators, “ex affectatione Latinismi.” Haltaus says it is also sometimes confounded with Ilinder. These show the occasional tendency of language to be confluent; and that words which appear alike, or even the several senses of the same word (if same it can be called) are not always to be traced to one source. To this cause may perhaps be referred the relation between the words undertake and entreprendre, understand (verstaen) and intelligere.—ED.]

² “Literarum G et W frequentissima est commutatio,” &c.—Wallis's Preface.

“Galli semper G utuntur pro Sax. p. id est, pro W.”—Spelman Gloss. (Garantia.)

“ This shuld a rígtwise lord haue in his thougt
And nat be like tirauntes of Lombardy
That han no REWARDE [i. e. regard] but at tyranny.”

Legende of good Women, fol. 206. p. 2. col. 2.

“ Wherefore God him self toke REWARD to the thynges, and theron suche punyshment let fal.”—Testament of Loue, boke 2. fol. 322.
p. 2. c. 1.

Our common English word To reward,¹ which usually, by the help of other words in the sentence, conveys To recompence, To benefit in return for some good action done; yet sometimes means very far from benefit: as thus,—“ Reward them after their doings”—where it may convey the signification of punishment; for which its real import is equally well calculated: for it is no other than Regarder, i. e. To look again, i. e. To remember, to reconsider; the natural consequence of which will be either benefit or the contrary, according to the action or conduct which we review.

In a figurative or secondary sense only, Garder means to protect, to keep, to watch, to ward, or to guard. It is the same in Latin: Tutus, guarded, looked after, safe, is the past participle of Tueor, Tuitus, Tutus. So Tutor, he who looks after. So we say either,—Guard him well, or, Look well after him. In different places in England, the same agent is very properly called either a Looker, a Warden, a Warder, an Overseer, a Keeper, a Guard, or a Guardian.

Accordingly this word WARD may with equal propriety be joined to the name of any person, place, or thing, to or from which our view or sight may be directed.

“ He saide he came from Barbarie

To Romewarde.”

Gower, lib. 2. fol. 34. p. 1. col. 1.

¹ Skinner says—“ REWARD q. d. Re Award (i. e. contra seu vicissim assignare, ab A. S. peapþ, versus, erga. v. AWARD.”) And under Award, he says—“ AWARD, a part. initiali otiosa A, et A. S. peapþ, versus, erga. q. d. erga talem (i. e.) tali addicere, assignare.”

S. Johnson says, “ REWARD [Re and Award] to give in return. Skinner.” Which is the more extraordinary because under the article Award, Johnson says, that it is “ derived by Skinner, somewhat improbably, from peapþ Sax. towards.”

I suppose AWARD to be à garder, i. e. a determination à qui c'est à garder, the thing in dispute; i. e. to keep it—not custodire, as Spelman imagined; but to have or hold it in possession: for garder in French is used both ways, as keep is in English, and in both properly.

" This senatour repayreth with victorie
To Romeward."

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale, fol. 23. p. 2. col. 1.

" Kyng Demophon whan he by ship
To Troiewarde with felauship
Seyland goth upon his weie."—Gower, lib. 4. fol. 67. p. 1. col. 1.

" Agamemnon was then in waye
To Troiward."—Ibid. lib. 5. fol. 119. p. 1. col. 1.

———— " He is gon to Scotlondward."

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale, fol. 22. p. 1. col. 1.

" The morrow came, and forth rid this marchant
To Flaundersward, his prentes brought him auaunt
Til he came to Bruges."—Shypmans Tale, fol. 70. p. 1. col. 1.

" His banner he displayed, and forth rode To Thebesward."—Knyghtes Tale, fol. 1. p. 2. col. 1.

" And certayne he was a good felawe ;
Ful many a draught of wine had he drawe
From Burdeuxward, while the chapmen slepe."

Chaucer, Prol. to Cant. Tales.

" That eche of you to shorte with others way
In this viage, shal tel tales tway
To Canterburyward I meane it so,
And *Homwardes*¹ he shal tel tales other two."

Ibid.

———— " and forth goth he
To shyppe, and as a traytour stale away
Whyle that this Ariadne a slepe lay,
And to his countreyward he sayleth blyue."

Ariadne, fol. 217. p. 2 col. 1.

" Be this the son went to, and we forwrocht
Left desolate, the wyndis calmit eik :
We not bekend, quhat ryght coist mycht we seik,
War warpit to Seywart by the outwart tyde."

Douglas, booke 3. p. 87.

" The mone in till ane wauerand carte of licht Held rolling throw the heuynnis MIDDILWARDE."

Ibid. booke 10. p. 322.

" The Landwart hynes than, bayth man and boy,
For the soft sessoun ouerflowis ful of ioy."

Ibid. booke 13. p. 472.

¹ [This genitive termination should lead us rather to consider ward as a substantive, than as the imperative of a verb. See Needs, and Add. Notes.—ED.]

"Lo Troylus, right at the stretes ende
Came ryding with his tenthe somme yfere
Al softly, and thyderwarde gan bende
There as they sate, as was his way to wende
To Paleyswarde."

Chaucer, Troylus, boke 2. fol. 169. p. 2. col. 2.

"As she wold hane gon the way forth right
Towarde the garden, there as she had hight,
And he was to the Gardenwarde also."

Frankelynes Tale, fol. 55. p. 2. col. 1.

"And than he songe it wel and boldely
Fro worde to worde according to the note,
Twise a day it passeth through his throte
To Seokwarde, and Homwarde when he went."

Prioresse's Tale, fol. 71. p. 2. col. 1.

"To Mewarde bare he right great hate."

Romaunt of the Rose, fol. 138. p. 1. col. 1.

"He hath suche henynesse, and suche wrathe to unwarde, bycause of our offence."—Tale of Chaucer, fol. 82. p. 1. col. 1.

"But one thing I wolde wel ye wist
That neuer for no worldes good
Myne hert unto hirwarde stood,
But ouely right for pure loue."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 97. p. 2. col. 2.

"But be he squier, be he knight
Whiche to my Ladywarde pursueth,
The more he leseth of that he seweth,
The more me thinketh that I wyne."

Ibid. lib. 2. fol. 28. p. 2. col. 2.

"Wheras the Poo, out of a wel small
Taketh his first spring and his sours
That Estwarde euer increseth in his cours
To Emelleward, to Ferare, and to Vonyse."

Chaucer, Clerke of Oxenf. Tale, fol. 45. p. 1. col. 2.

"If we turned al our care to Godward, we shuld not be destitute of such things as necessari this presente lyfe nedeth."—Tho. Lupset, Of dyinge well, p. 203.

"It is hard for a man in a welthy state to kepe his mind in a due order to Godward."—Ibid. p. 205.

"The which is with nothing more hurted and hyndered in his way to Gracward than with the brokinge of loue and charitie."—Lupset, Exhortacion to yonge Men.

So we may bid the hearer look at or regard either the End or Beginning of any action or motion or time. Hence the compound Prepositions TOWARD and FROMWARD, and Adverbs of this termination without number: in all of which, WARD is always the imperative of the verb, and always retains one single meaning; viz. Regard, Look at, See, Direct your view.

Minshew, Junius, and Skinner, though they are very clear that WARD and GARDER are, on all other occasions, the same word; (and so in Warden and Guardian, &c.) yet concur that WARD, the Affix or postpositive preposition, is the Latin Versus: Skinner, with some degree however of doubt, saying—"A. S. autem Ʒearð, si a Lat. Vertere deflecterem, quid sceleris esset?"—Surely none. It would only be an error to be corrected.

The French preposition Vers, from the Italian Verso, from the Latin Versus (which in those languages supply the place of the English WARD, as Adversus also does of To-ward), do all indeed derive from the Latin verb Vertere, to turn; of which those prepositions are the past participle, and mean turned. And when it is considered that, in order to direct our view to any place named, we must turn to it; it will not seem extraordinary, that the same purpose should in different languages be indifferently obtained by words of such different meanings, as to look at, or, to turn to.

ATHWART.

ATHWART (i. e. Athweort, or Athweoried), wrested, twisted, curved, is the past participle of Ʒpeopian, To wrest, To twist; flexuosum, sinuosum, curvum reddere; from the Gothic verb 𐌹𐌺𐌿𐌿𐌺𐌿𐌹𐌸𐌰. Whence also the Anglo-Saxon Ʒpeop, Ʒpeoph, the German Zwerch, Zwar, the Dutch Dwars, Zwerven, the Danish Tverer, Tvert, Tver, the Swedish Twert, and Svarfwa, and the English Thwart, Swerve, and Veer.¹

AMONG, AMONGST, YMELL.

Minshew says—"ex Belg. Gemengt, i. e. mixtus."

Skinner says—"ab A. S. Lemanz, hoc a verbo Lemengan."²

¹ Junius derives Swerve from the Hebrew. And all our Etymologists Veer from the French Virer.

² In the Dutch Mingen, Mengen, Immengen. German Mengen. Danish Mænger. Swedish Menga.

Junius says—"Manifeste est ex A. S. Mængan, Mengian, miscere."

Here all our Etymologists are right in the meaning of the word, and therefore concur in their etymology. Mr. Tyrwhitt alone seems to have no notion of the word. For he says—"I suspect the Saxon Lemanz had originally a termination in an." But Mr. Tyrwhitt must not be reckoned amongst Etymologists.

EMONGE,¹ AMONGE,² AMONGES, AMONGEST,³ AMONGST, AMONG, is the past participle Le-mæncged, Le-mencged, (or, as the Dutch write it, Gemengd, Gemengt; and the old English authors, Meynt,)⁴ of the Anglo-Saxon verb Lemænczan, Lemenczan, and the Gothic verb ΓΑΜΛΙΝΓΑΝ. Or rather, it is the præterperfect Lemanz, Lemonz, Lemunz, or Amang, Among, Amung (of the same verb Mængan, Mengan), used as a participle, without the participial termination od, ad, or ed: and it means purely and singly Mixed, Mingled. It is usual with the Anglo-Saxons (and they seem

- ¹ "The kyng with all his hole entent
Then at laste hem axeth this,
What kyng men tellen that he is
EMONGE the folke touchinge his name,
Or it be price, or it be blame."

Gower, lib. 7. fol. 165. p. 1. col. 2.

- ² "And tho she toke hir childe in honde
And yafe it souke; and euer AMONGE
She wepte, and otherwhile songe
To rocke with her childe aslepe."

lib. 2. fol. 33. p. 2. col. 1.

- ³ "I stonde as one AMONGEST all Whiche am oute of hir grace fall."

lib. 8. fol. 187. p. 2. col. 1.

- ⁴ "Warne milke she put also therto
With hony MEYNT, and in suche wise
She gan to make hir sacrifice." lib. 5. fol. 105. p. 2. col. 1.

- "That men in eueryche myght se
Bothe great anoye, and eke swetnesse,
And ioye MEYNT with bytternesse,
Nowe were they easy, nowe were they wood."

Chaucer, Rom. of the Rose, fol. 130. p. 1. col. 1.

- "For euer of loue the sicknesse
Is MEYNT with swete and bitternesse."

Ibid. fol. 130. p. 2. col. 2.

to be fond of it) to prefix especially to their past participles A, Æ, Be, Fon, Le.¹

Chaucer uses this participle AMONGES in a manner which, I suppose, must exclude all doubt upon the subject; and where it cannot be called a preposition.

"Yf thou castest thy seedes in the felde, thou shuldest haue in mynde that the yeres bene AMONGES, otherwhyle plentuous, and otherwhyle bareyn."—Seconde Boke of Boecius, fol. 225. p. 2. col. 2.

This manner of using the præterperfect as a participle, without the participial termination ed or en, is still very common in English; and was much more usual formerly.² In the similar verbs, To sink Le-jencan, To drink Le-ðjencan, To stink Le-rtencan, To hang Þenzan, To spring A-rppunzan, To swing Spenzan, To ring Rinzan, To shrink A-rcpincan, To sting Stinzan, and in very many others, the same word is still used by us, both as præterperfect and participle; Sunk, Drunk, Stunk, Hung, Sprung, Swung, Rung, Shrunk, Stung. All these were formerly written with an o (as Among still continues to be), Sonk, Dronk (or A-dronk), Stonk, Hong (or *A-hong*³), Sprong (or Y-sprong), Swong, Rong, Shronk, Stong. But the o having been pronounced as an u, the literal character has been changed by the moderns, in conformity with the sound. And though Among (by being ranked amongst prepositions, and being unsuspected of being a participle like the others) has escaped the change, and continues still to be written with an o, it is always sounded like an u; Amung, Amunkst.

In the Reve's Tale, Chaucer uses the Preposition YMELL instead of among.

¹ [Also On, of which A is frequently the representative. So On-manz, and On gemanz; Gemanze as a substantive meaning a company.—ED.]

² Doctor Lowth is of a different opinion. He says—"This abuse has been long growing upon us, and is continually making further incroachments," &c. But Doctor Lowth was not much acquainted with our old English authors, and still less with the Anglo-Saxon. It is not an abuse, but coeval with the language, and analogous to the other parts of it; but it must needs have been highly disgusting to Doctor Lowth, who was excellently conversant with the learned languages, and took them for his model.

³ [An-honge, Weber's Romances, iii. 49; an-hongen, Layamon, 1020.—ED.]

“ Herdest thou ever slike a song er now ?
Lo whilke a complin is YMELL hem alle.”

But this will give us no trouble, but afford a fresh confirmation to our doctrine: for the Danes use Mellem, Imellein, and Iblandt, for this preposition Among, from their verbs Megler, Melerer, (in the French Mesler or Mêler,) and Iblander, To mix, To blend; and the Swedes Ibland, from their verb Blanda, To blend.

YMELL means y-medled, i. e. mixed, mingled. A medley is still our common word for a mixture. Ymeddled, ymelled, and ymell by the omission of the participial termination, than which nothing is more common in all our old English writers.

“ He drinketh the bitter with the swete,
He MEDLETH sorowe with likynge
And liueth so, as who saieth, diyngge.”

Gower, lib. 1. fol. 17. p. 1. col. 2.

“ O mighty lorde, toward my vice Thy mercy MEDLE with justice.” lib. 1. fol. 24. p. 2. col. 2.

“ But for all that a man maie finde
Nowe in this tyme of thilke rage
Full great disease in mareiage,
Whan venim MEDLETH with the sugre,
And mariage is made for lucre.” lib. 5. fol. 99. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Thus MEDLETH she with ioye wo,
And with her sorowe myrth also.” lib. 5. fol. 116. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Whan wordes MEDLEN with the songe,
It doth plesance well the more.” lib. 7. fol. 150. p. 1. col. 2.

“ A kinge whiche hath the charge on honde
The common people to gouerne
If that he wil, he maie well lerne
Is none so good to the plesance
Of God, as is good gouernance.
And euery gouernance is due
To pitee, thus I maie argue,
That pitee is the foundemente
Of euery kynges regimente.
If it be MEDLED with Justice,
Thei two remeuen all vice,
And ben of vertue most vailable
To make a kinges roylme stable.”

lib. 7. fol. 166. p. 2. col. 1.

"But he whiche hath his lust assised
With MEDLID loue and tyrannie."

Gower, lib. 7. fol. 170. p. 2. col. 1.

"And MEDLETH sorowe with his songe."

lib. 8. fol. 182. p. 2. col. 2.

"We haunten no tauernes, ne hobelen abouten, Att markets and miracles we MEDELEY us neuer."

Pierce Plowmans Crede.

"There is nothyng that sauoureth so wel to a chylde, as the mylke of his nouryce, ne nothyng is to him more abhomynable than the mylke, whan it is MEDLED with other meate."—Chaucer, Persons Tale, fol. 101. p. 2. col. 1.

"His garment was euery dele
Ypurtrayed and ywrought with floures
By dyuers MEDELYNG of coloures."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 124. p. 1. col. 2.

"O God (quod she) so worldly selynesse
Whiche clerkes callen false felicite
YMEDLED is with many a bytternesse
Ful anguyshous."—Troylus, boke 3. fol. 177. p. 1. col. 1.

"Some on her churches dwell
Apparailled porely, proude of porte,
The seuen sacramentes they done sell,
In cattel catchyng is her comfort,
Of eche matter they wollen MELI."

Plowmans Tale, fol. 97. p. 2. col. 1.

"Amang the Grekis MYDLIT than went we."

Douglas, booke 2. p. 52.

"And reky nycht within an litil thraw
Gan thikkin ouer al the cauerne and ouerblaw,
And with the mirknes MYDLIT sparkis of fire."

Ibid. booke 8. p. 250.

"Syne to thare werk in manere of gun powder,
Thay MYDLIT and they mixt this fereful souder."

Ibid. booke 8. p. 257.

"And stedis thrawand on the ground that weltis, MYDLIT with men, quhilk zeild the goist and sweltis."

Ibid. booke 11. p. 387.

"With blyithnes MYDLIT hauand paneful drede."

Ibid. booke 11. p. 394.

"Quhil blude and brane in haboundance furth schede MYDLIT with sand under hors fete was trede."

Ibid. booke 12. p. 421.

“Above all utheris Dares in that stede
Thame to behald abasit wox gretumly
Tharwith to MELL refusing aluterlie.” Douglas, booke 5. p. 141.

“Quhen Turnus all the chiftanis trublit saw,
And Eneas sare woundit hym withdraw ;
Than for this hasty hope als hate as fyre
To MELL in fecht he caught ardent desyre.”
Ibid. booke 12. p. 420.

AGAINST.

AGAINST (in the Anglo-Saxon Ongezen)¹ is derived by Junius from geond.

“Dr. Mer. Casaubonus mirabiliter (says Skinner) deflectit a Gr. κατα.”

Minshew derives it from κατεναντι.

I can only say that I believe it to be a past participle derived from the same verb (whatever it be, for I know it not), from which comes the collateral Dutch verb Jegenen, To meet, rencontrer, To oppose, &c. And I am the more confirmed in this conjecture, because in the room of this preposition the Dutch employ Jegens from Jegenen: and the Danes Mod and Imod, from their verb Möder of the same meaning: and the Swedes Emot from their verb Möta of the same meaning. The Danish and Swedish verbs from the Gothic MOȚGAN; whence also our verb to meet, and the Dutch Moeten, Gemoeten.

AMID or AMIDST.

These words (by Chaucer and others written Amiddes) speak for themselves. They are merely the Anglo-Saxon On-middan, On-midder, in medio: and will the more easily be assented to, because the nouns Mid, Middle (i. e. Mid-dæl), and Midst, are still commonly used in our language.

ALONG.

On long, secundum longitudinem, or On length:

“And these wordes said, she streyght her On length (i. e. she stretched herself ALONG) and rested awhile.”—Chaucer, Test. of Loue, fol. 325. p. 1. col. 2.

The Italians supply its place by Lungo:

“Così Lungo l'amate rive andai.”—Petrarch.

¹ [A. S. also Ongean and To-geaner; Flem. Teghen.—En.]

And the French by the obvious noun and article Le Long :

“ Joconde là dessus se remet en chemin

Révant à son malheur tout Le Long du voyage.”—La Fontaine.

So far there is no difficulty. But there was another use of this word formerly; now to be heard only from children or very illiterate persons :

“ King James had a fashion, that he would never admit any to nearness about himself, but such an one as the queen should commend unto him, and make some suit on his behalf; that if the queen afterwards, being ill treated, should complain of this Dear one, he might make his answer—‘ It is LONG of yourself, for you were the party that commended him to me.’ ”—Archbishop Abbot's narrative; in Rushworth's Collections, vol. 1. p. 456.

The Anglo-Saxon used two words for these two purposes, Andlang, Andlong, Onðlong, for the first; and Lelang for the second: and our most antient English writers observed the same distinction, using ENDLONG for the one, and ALONG for the other.

“ She slough them in a sodeine rage

ENDELONGE the borde as thei ben set.”

Gower, lib. 2. fol. 31. p. 1. col. 2.

“ Thys kyng the wether gan beholde,

And wist well, they moten holde

Her cours ENDLONGE the marche right.”

lib. 3. fol. 53. p. 1. col. 1.

“ That nigh his house he lette devise

ENDELONGE upon an axell tree

To sette a tonne in suche degree

That he it might tourne about.”

lib. 3. fol. 54. p. 1. col. 1.

“ And euery thyng in his degree

ENDELONGE upon a bourde he laide.”

lib. 5. fol. 100. p. 2. col. 2.

“ His prisoners eke shulden go

ENDLONGE the chare on eyther honde.”

lib. 7. fol. 155. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Than see thei stonde on euery side

ENDLONGE the shippes borde.”

lib. 8. fol. 179. p. 1. col. 2.

“ Loke what day that ENDELONG Brytayne

Ye remeue all the rockes, stone by stone,

That they ne let shyppe ne bote to gone,

Than wol I loue you best of any man.”

Chaucer, Frankeleyns Tale, fol. 53. p. 1. col. 2.

- "This lady rometh by the clyffe to play
With her meyne, ENDLONGE the stronde."
Hypsiphile, fol. 214. p. 1. col. 2.
- "I sette the point ouer ENDELONGE on the label."
Astrolabie, fol. 286. p. 2. col. 1.
- "I sette the poynte of F, ENDELONGE on my labell."
Ibid. fol. 286. p. 2. col. 2.
- "We slyde in fluddes ENDLANG feill coystes fare."
Douglas, booke 3. p. 71.
- "Syne eftir ENDLANGIS the sey coistis bray
Up sonkis set and desis did array." booke 3. p. 75.
- "ENDLANG the coistis side our nauy rade." booke 3. p. 77.
- "Bot than the women al, for drede and affray, Fled here and there, ENDLANG the coist away."
booke 5. p. 151.
- "In schawis schene ENDLANG the wattir bra." booke 7. p. 236.
- "ENDLANG the styll fludis calme and bene." booke 8. p. 243.
- "For now thare schippis full thik reddy standis, Brayand ENDLANG the coistis of thar laudis." booke 8. p. 260.
- "The bront and force of thare army that tyde ENDLANG the wallis set on the left ayde." booke 9. p. 293.
- "ENDLANG the bankis of flude Minionis." booke 10. p. 320.
- "The bankis ENDLANG al the fludis dynnys." booke 11. p. 372.
- "Before him cachand ane grete flicht or oist
Of foulis, that did hant ENDLANG the coist." booke 12. p. 416.
- "For euer whan I thinke amonge,
Howe all is on my selfe ALONGE,
I saie, O foole of all fooles."—Gower, lib. 4. fol. 66. p. 2. col. 1.
- "I wote well ye haue long serued,
And God wote what ye haue deserued,
But if it is ALONGE on me,
Of that ye unauanced be,
Or els if it be LONGE on you,
The soth shall be preued now." lib. 5. fol. 96. p. 1. col. 2.
- "And with hir selfe she toke such strife,
That she betwene the deth and life
Swounende lay full ofte amonge :
And all was this on hym ALONGE,
Whiche was to loue unkinde so." lib. 5. fol. 113. p. 1. col. 2.

“ But thus this maiden had wronge
 Whiche was upon the kyng ALONGE,
 But ageyne hym was none apele.” Gower, lib. 7. fol. 172. p. 2. c. 1. .

“ Ye wote your selfe, as wel as any wight
 Howe that your loue al fully graunted is
 To Troylus, the worthyest wyght
 One of the worlde, and therto trouth yplight,
 That but it were on him ALONGE, ye nolde
 Him neuer falsen, whyle ye lyuen sholde.”
Chaucer, Troylus, booke 3. fol. 176. p. 2. col. 2.

Once indeed (and only once, I believe) Gower has confounded them, and has used ALONG for both purposes:

“ I tary forth the night ALONGE,
 For it is nought on me ALONGE
 To slepe, that I soon go.”—lib. 4. fol. 78. p. 2. col. 1.

Andlang or ENDLONG is manifestly On long; But what is Lelang¹ or ALONG?

S. Johnson says it is—“a word now out of use, but truly English.” He has no difficulty with it: according to him it is—“Lelang, a fault, Saxon.”—But there is no such word in Saxon as Lelang, a fault. Nor is that, at any time, the meaning of this word LONG (or ALONG, as I have always heard it pronounced). Fault or not Fault, always depends upon the other words in the sentence: for instance,

“ Thanks to Pitt: it is ALONG of him that we not only keep our boroughs, but get peerages into the bargain.”

“ Curses on Pitt: it is ALONG of him that the free constitution of this country is destroyed.”

I suppose that Lord Lonsdale, Lord Elliot, and the father of Lady Bath, would not mean to impute any fault to the minister in the former of these sentences: though the people of England do certainly impute an inexpressible crime and treachery to him in the latter.

¹ [Mr. Tooke has clearly pointed out the distinction between these two senses of ALONG; but I suspect that he has missed of the complete explanation of the latter, Lelang, which, I believe, is not to be referred to any root signifying Length; but to an entirely distinct one, whence comes our word Belong, and which it is singular that so acute an observer as Mr. Tooke should have overlooked. It is pointed out by Wachter (v. Langen), of whose invaluable work he does not appear to have availed himself. Mr. Richardson, in his Dictionary, however, has consulted Wachter upon this word, but to no purpose, as he makes very light of his authority, alleging that he here “has several unnecessary distinctions!” See Additional Notes.—Ed.]

But Johnson took carelessly what he thought he found, without troubling himself about the fact or the meaning; and he was misled by Skinner:¹ as he was also concerning the verb To Long. I mention the verb To Long, because it may possibly assist us in discovering the meaning of the other word.—“To Long,” says Skinner, “valde desiderare, ut nos dicimus, to think the time LONG till a man ha's a thing.”

The word LONG is here lugged in by head and shoulders, to give something of an appearance of connexion between the verb and the noun. But when we consider that we have, and can have, no way of expressing the acts or operations of the mind, but by the same words by which we express some corresponding (or supposed corresponding) act or operation of the body: when (amongst a multitude of similar instances) we consider that we express a moderate desire for any thing, by saying that we incline (i. e. Bend ourselves) to it; will it surprise us, that we should express an eager desire, by saying that we LONG, i. e. Make long, lengthen, or stretch out ourselves after it, or for it? especially when we observe, that after the verb To incline we say To or Towards it; but after the verb To Long we must use either the word For or After, in order to convey our meaning.

Lenzian in the Anglo-Saxon is To Long, i. e. To make long, To lengthen, To stretch out, To produce, Extendere, protendere.

✠ “Langap ðe apuht, Aðam, up to Eode.” i. e. Longeth you, Lengtheneth you, Stretcheth you up to God.

Lang or Long is the præterperfect of Lenzian. The Anglo-Saxon and old English writers commonly use the præterperfect as a participle, especially with the addition of the prefixes a or ge.—

“Nota secundo,” says Hickes, “has præpositiones sæpe in vicem commutari, præsertim Ee, Be, et A.”—May we not

¹ Skinner says—“LONG ab A.S. Lelang, causa, culpa, ut dicimus It is LONG of him.” Which were evidently intended by Skinner to be understood causâ, culpâ.

So Lye says—“Lelang, Long of; Opera, causa, impulsu, culpa cujusvis.—æt ðe yf upe lyfe zelang, ut Anglice dici solet, It is LONG of thee that we live.” Here is no Fault.

then conclude that Le-lang or A-LONG is the past participle of Lengian, and means Produced?

ROUND, AROUND :

Whose place is supplied in the Anglo-Saxon by Ðpeil and On-hpeil.¹ In the Danish and Swedish by Omkring. In Dutch by Om-ring; and in Latin by Circum, a Gr. Κίρκος, of which circulus is the diminutive.

ASIDE, ABOARD, ACROSS, ASTRIDE, require no explanation.

DURING.

The French participle Durant; from the Italian; from the Latin. The whole verb Dure was some time used commonly in our language.

“And al his luste, and al his besy cure
Was for to loue her while his lyfe mai DURE.”

Chaucer, Man of Lawes T. fol. 19. p. 1. col. 2.

“How shuld a fyshe withouten water DURE.”

Troylus, boke 4. fol. 186. p. 2. col. 1.

“—— Elementes that bethe discordable
Holden a bonde, perpetually DURYNG,
That Phebus mote his rosy day forthbring
And that the mone hath lorship ouer the nightes.”

Ibid. boke 3. fol. 172. p. 1. col. 1.

“Euer their fame shall DURE.”

Testament of Loue, boke 2. fol. 315. p. 1. col. 1.

“This affection, with reason knytte, DURETH in eueryche trew herte.”—Ibid. boke 3. fol. 331. p. 1. col. 1.

“Desyre hath longe DURED some speking to haue.”

Ibid. boke 1. fol. 306. p. 1. col. 2.

PENDING.

The French participle Pendant; from the Italian; from the Latin.

OPPOSITE.

The Latin participle Oppositus.

MOIENING.

The French participle Moyennant; from the Italian Mediante; from the Low Latin.

¹ [Qu. Ðpæl, On-hpæl?—ED.]

SAVE.

The imperative of the verb. This prepositive manner of using the imperative of the verb To save, afforded Chaucer's Sompnour no bad équivoque against his adversary the Friar ;

“ God save you all, SAVE this cursed Frere.”

OUTCEPT.

The imperative of a miscoined verb, whimsically composed of Out and capere, instead of Ex and capere.

“ I'd play hun 'gaine a knight, or a good squire, or gentleman of any other countie i' the kingdome—OUTCEPT Kent : for there they landed all Gentlemen.”—B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, act 1. sc. 3.

OUTTAKE, OUTTAKEN.

The imperative, and the past participle, speak for themselves ; and were formerly in very common use.

“ Problemes and demaundes eke
His wisdom was to finde and seke :
Whereof he wolde in sondrie wise
Opposen them that weren wise.
But none of them it might beare
Upon his worde to yeue answer
OUTTAKEN one, whiche was a knight.”

Gower, Conf. Am. fol. 25. p. 1. col. 2.

“ And also though a man at ones
Of all the worlde within his wones
The treasour might haue euery dele :
Yet had he but one mans dele
Towarde hymselfe, so as I thynke,
Of clothyng, and of meate and drinke.
For more (OUTTAKE vanitee)
There hath no lorde in his degree.”—Ibid. fol. 84. p. 2. c. 2.

“ For in good feith yet had I leuer,
Than to coueite in suche aweye,
To ben for euer till I deye
As poore as Job, and loueles,
OUTTAKEN one.” Ibid. lib. 5. fol. 97. p. 1. col. 2.

“ There was a clerke one Lucius,
A courtier, a famous man,
Of euery witte somewhat he can,

OUTTAKE that hym lacketh rule,
His owne estate to guyde and rule."

Gower, Conf. Am. lib. 5. fol. 122. p. 2. col. 2.

"For as the fische, if it be drie,
Mote in defaute of water die :
Right so without aier on line
No man, ne beast, might thrine,
The whiche is made of flesshe and bone,
There is not, OUTTAKE of all none."

Ibid. lib. 7. fol. 142. p. 1. col. 2.

"Whiche euery kynde made die
That upon middel erthe stoode,
OUTTAKE Noe, and his blood."

Ibid. lib. 7. fol. 144. p. 1. col. 1.

"All other sterres, as men fynde,
Ben shinende of her owne kynde :
OUTTAKE onely the moone light,
Whiche is not of him selfe bright."

Ibid. lib. 7. fol. 145. p. 1. col. 1.

"Till that the great water rage
Of Noe, whiche was saide the flood,
The worlde, whiche than in synne stood,
Hath dreinte, OUTTAKE liues eight."

Ibid. lib. 8. fol. 174. p. 1. col. 1.

"And ye my mother, my soueraigne plesance, Ouer al thing, OUTTAKE Christ on lofte."

Chaucer, Man of Lawes T. fol. 19. p. 2. col. 2.

"But yron was there none ne stele,
For all was golde, men myght se,
OUTTAKE the fethers and the tre."

Romaunt of the Rose, fol. 124. p. 2. col. 1.

"Sir, sayden they, we ben at one
By euen accorde of eueryche one,
OUTTAKE rychesse al onely."

Ibid. fol. 147. p. 2. col. 2.

"And from the perrel saif, and out of dout
Was al the navy, OUTTAKE four schippis loist."

Douglas, booke 5. p. 151.

"And schortly euery thyng that doith repare
In firth or feild, flude, forest, erth or are,
Astablit lyggis styl to sleip and restis,
Be the small birdis syttand on thare nestis,
Als wele the wyld as the tame bestiall,
And euery uthir thingis grete and small :

OUTTAK the mery nyctyngale Philomene,
That on the thorne sat syngand fro the splene."

Douglas, prol. to booke 13. p. 450.

"And also I resygne all my knyghtly dygnitie, magesty and crowne, with all the lordeshyppes, powre and pryuileges to the foresayd kingely dygnitie and crown belonging, and al other lordshippes and possessions to me in any maner of wyse pertaynyng, what nams and condicion thei be of; OUTTAKE the landes and possessions for me and mine obyte purchased and boughte."—Fabian's Chronicle, Richard the Second.

NIGH. NEAR. NEXT.

NIGH, NEAR is the Anglo-Saxon adjective Nih, Neh, Neah, Neahz, vicinus. And NEXT is the Anglo-Saxon superlative Neahgez, Nehz.

"Forsoth this prouerbe it is no lye,
Men say thus alway, the NYE slye
Maketh the ferre loue to be lothe."

Chaucer, Myllers Tale, fol. 13. p. 1. col. 1.

"Lo an olde prouerbe alleged by manye wyse: Whan bale is greatest, than is bote a NYE bore."—Test. of Loue, boke 2. fol. 320. p. 2. c. 2.

Mr. Tyrwhitt in his Glossary says well—"Hext, Sax. highest. Hegh. Heghest. Hegst. Hext. In the same manner NEXT is formed from Negh."—But he does not well say that—"Next generally means the nighest following, but sometimes the nighest preceding." For it means simply the nighest, and never implies either following or preceding. As, "To sit NEXT," &c.

INSTEAD.

From the Anglo-Saxon On rēde, In rēde, i. e. In place. In the Latin it is Vice and Loco. In the Italian In luogo. In the Spanish En lugar. And in French Au lieu. In the Dutch it is either In stede or In plaats. In the German On statt. In the Danish Istæden. And in the Swedish (as we either Home STEAD or Home STALL) it is Istället.

Our oldest English writers more rarely used the French word Place, but most commonly the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon word STADS, Steð, Steðe. The instances are so abundantly numerous that it may seem unnecessary to give any.

“ But take this lore into thy wit,
That all thyng hath tyme and STEDE :
The churche serueth for the bede,
The chambre is of an other speche.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 124. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Geffray, thou wottest wel this,
That euery kyndely thyng that is Hath a kyndely STEDE there he May best in it conserued be.”

Chaucer, Fame, boke 2. fol. 295. p. 2. col. 2.

“ Furth of that STEDE I went.” Douglas, boke 2. p. 59.

“ But ge, unhappy men, fle fra this STEDE.” Ibid. boke 3. p. 89.

The substantive STEAD is by no means obsolete, as S. Johnson calls it; nothing being more common and familiar than —“ You shall go in their STEAD.” It is likewise not very uncommon in composition; as Homestead, Bedstead, Roadstead,¹ Girdlestead,² Noonsted,³ Steadfast, Steady, &c.

¹ We often meet with the word Roadstead in Voyages, and I suppose it is still a common term with all seafaring men.—“ On Thursday Captain Fauchey arrived at Plymouth. The purport of his dispatches, we conceive, can only be a representation of the necessity of evacuating L’Isle Dieu; as it produces nothing, has no good Roadsted, and is not tenable if not protected by a fleet.”—Morning Chronicle, October 19, 1795.

“ Extract of a letter from Plymouth. The Anson man of war, of 44 guns, rode out the storm like a duck, without the least damage, in the Sound; which, though an open Roadstead, has most excellent holding ground.”—Morning Chronicle, January 27, 1796.

“ In consequence of having received information on Wednesday night at eight o’clock, that three large ships of war and a lugger had anchored in a small Roadsted upon the coast, in the neighbourhood of this town.”—London Gazette Extraordinary, February 27, 1797.

² “ His nose by mesure wrought ful right,
Crispe was his heere, and eke ful bryght,
His shulders of largo brede,
And smalyshe in the Gyrdelstede.”

Chaucer, Rom. of the Rose, fol. 123. p. 2. col. 2.

For hete her clothes down she dede,
“ Almost to her Gerdylstede
Than lay she uncovert.”

See Warton’s Hist. of Engl. Poetry, 4to. vol. 3. p. xxxv.

“ Divide yourself into two halves, just by the Girdle-stead; send one-half with your lady, and keep t’ other to yourself.”—B. Jonson, Eastward Hoe, act 3.

One easy corruption of this word STED, in composition, has much puzzled all our etymologists. Becanus thinks that Step mother is quasi Stiff mother, from Stief, durus; and so called because she is commonly "dura, sæva, immitis, rigida." Vossius on the contrary thinks she is so called, quasi fulciens mater, as a stiff and strong support of the family; "quia fulcit domum cum nova hæreditate." Junius, observing that there is not only Stepmother, but also Stepchild, Stepson, Stepdaughter, brother, sister, &c. to all of whom this imputation of severity cannot surely belong, (neither can they be said fulcire domum cum nova hæreditate,) says Stepmother is so called, quasi orphanorum mater: "nam Stepan Anglo-Saxonibus, et Stiufan Alamannis videntur olim usurpata pro orbare." S. Johnson, neither contented with any of the foregoing reasoning, nor yet with the videntur olim usurpata, determined also to try his hand (and a clumsy one God knows it is) at an etymology; but instead of it produced a Pun. Stepmother, according to him, is—"a woman who has stepped into the place of the true mother."

But in the Danish collateral language, the compounds remain uncorrupted; and there they are, with a clear and unforced meaning applicable to all—Stedfader, Stedmoder, Stedbroder, Stedsöster, Stedbarn, Stedson, Steddotter; i. e. Vice, Loco, in the place of, INSTEAD of, a father, a mother, a brother, &c.

ABOUT.

Spelman. "ABUTTARE, occurrere, vergere, scopum appe-

3 "Should all hell's black inhabitants conspire,
And more unhear'd of mischief to them hire,
Such as high heav'n were able to affright,
And on the Noonsted bring a double night." Drayton's Mooncalf.

"It was not long ere he perceiv'd the skies
Settled to rain, and a black cloud arise,
Whose foggy grossness so oppos'd the light,
As it would turn the Noonsted into night." Ibid.

"She by her spells could make the moon to stay,
And from the East she could keep back the day,
Raise mists and fogs that could eclipse the light,
And with the Noonsted she could mix the night." Ibid.

"With all our sister nymphs, that to the Noonsted look."
Poly-olbion, First Song.

tere, finem exerere, terminare. A Gallico abutter, seu abouter; hæc eadem significant.—La Bout enim finem, terminum, vel scopum designat: Inde Angl. a But pro meta; et ABOUT, pro circa rem vel scopum versare. Vox feodalis, et agri mensuribus nostris frequentissima, qui prædiorum fines (quos ipsi capita vocant, Marculus frontes, Galli bouts) abuttare dicunt in adversam terram; cum se illuc adigant aut protendant. Latera autem nunquam aiunt abuttare:¹ sed terram proximam adjacere.”—La Coustume réformée de Normandie, cap. 556.—“Le Serjeant est tenue faire lecture des lettres, et obligations, et declaration, par Bouts et costes des dites terres saisies.”

Junius. “BUT, Scopus. G. But. Fortasse desumptum est nomen ab illis monticellis, qui in limitibus agrorum ab Agrimensuribus constituebantur, atque ab iis Bodones sive Botones nuncupabantur, et ad quos, artem sagittandi exercentes, tela sua veluti ad scopum dirigebant.”

Skinner. “ABOUT, ab A. S. Abutan, Ymbutan, Circum, illud, quantum ad priorem syllabam, a præp. Ab, hoc a præp. Ymb, quod a præp. loquelari, Lat. Am, Gr. Ἀμφι, ortum ducit; utr. secundum posteriorem syllabam ab A. S. Ute vel Utan, Foris, Foras, Extremus, item Extremitas, unde et defluxit Belg. Buyten, quod idem sonat; quod enim aliud ambit partes ejus exteriores, i. e. extimam superficiem attingit et obvolvitur.”

“ABUTT, a Fr. Aboutir. Vergere, confinem esse, ubi scilicet ager unus in, vel versus, alium protenditur, et ei conterminus est: hoc a nom. Bout, Extremitas, Terminus: quod satis manifeste a præp. Lat. Ab, et A. S. Ute, Foras, Foris, ortum trahit; q. d. quod foras protuberat vel extuberat.”

“BUT, a Fr. G. Bout, Extremitas, Finis, Punctum, Aboutir, ad finem tendere, accedere, acuminari. But etiam in re nautica Extremitatem alicujus rei signat, manifeste Franco-Gallicæ originis.”

Menage. “Bute—Botto et Botontinus se trouvent en cette signification. Faustus et Valerius dans le recueil des auteurs qui ont escrit De limitibus agrorum, p. 312.—‘In limitibus ubi rariores terminos constituimus, monticellos plantavimus de terra, quos BOTONTINOS appellavimus." Le jurisconsulte Paulus livre V. de ces sentences titre 22.—"Qui terminos effodiunt vel exarant arboresce terminales evertunt, vel qui convellunt BODONES, &c." Cujas sur ce lieu:—"BODONES, sic uno exemplari scriptum legimus, cujus nobis copiam fecit Pithæus noster. Bodones sive Botones vicem terminorum præstant. Vox est Mensorum, vel eorum qui de agrorum et limitum conditionibus scripserunt."¹

¹ I hardly venture to say that I believe the correct and exact Spelman is here mistaken.

Spelman, Junius, Skinner and Menage, all resort to Franco-Gall. for their etymology. As for BOTO and its diminutive BOTONTINUS (which have been quoted), they are evidently the translation of a Gothic word common to all the northern nations: which word, as it still remains in the Anglo-Saxon dialect, was by our ancestors written Boba (whence our English To BODE and many other words), and means the first outward extremity or boundary of any thing. Hence Onboda,² Onbuta, Abuta, ABOUT.

AFTER.

AFTER (Goth. 𐌳𐌹𐌸𐌹𐌸𐌰. A.S. Æfter. Dutch Agter, Achter. Danish Efter, Bag. Swedish Efter, Åtrå, Achter), is used as a noun adjective in Anglo-Saxon, in English, and in most of the Northern languages. I suppose it to be no other than the comparative of the noun AFT (A.S. Æft): for the retention of which latter noun in our language we are probably obliged to our scamen.

Hind, Aft, and Back, have all originally the same meaning. In which assertion (although AFT had not remained in our language) I should think myself well justified by the authority,

¹ So, Vitalis de Limit. "Hi non sunt semper a ferro taxati, et circa Botontinos conservantur." Innocent. de Cas. Litter. "Alius fontanas sub se habens, super se montem, in trivio tres Botontinos." Auctor de Agrim. "Si sint Botontini terræ ex superis prohibeo te sacramentum dare."

² [No such word occurs in the Anglo-Saxon dictionaries. For Onbuta, &c. read On-butan, Abutan.—ED.]

[In the Additional Notes to the last Edition I mentioned that I "could not imagine where Mr. Tooke had got" the word Onboda: Mr. Richardson, however, in his Dictionary persists in retaining it, without giving any authority; and even analyzes it into words which also, so far as I know, have no existence in Anglo-Saxon. See Addit. Notes.—ED.]

or rather the sound judgement, of M. de Brosses; who says well—"Quelquefois la signification primitive nous est dérobée, faute de monuments qui l'indiquent en la langue. Alors cependant on la retrouve parfois en la recherchant dans les langues mères ou collatérales." In the Danish language they express the same meaning by, For og Bag, which we express by Fore and Aft, or, Before and Behind. And in the Anglo-Saxon, they use indifferently Behindan, Beæftan, and Onbæc.

DOWN, ADOWN.

In the Anglo-Saxon Dun, Ȧdun. Minshew and Junius derive it from $\Delta\upsilon\nu\omega$, subeo.

Skinner says—"Speciose alludit Gr. $\Delta\upsilon\nu\omega$."

Lye says—"Non male referas ad Arm. Down, profundus."

S. Johnson, in point of etymology and the meaning of words, is always himself.

ADOWN, the adverb, he says, is "from A, and Down;" and means—"On the ground."

ADOWN, the preposition, means—"Towards the ground."

But though ADOWN comes from A, and Down—DOWN, the preposition, he says, comes from Ȧduna, Saxon: and means; "1st. Along a descent; and 2dly. Towards the mouth of a river."

DOWN, the adverb, he says, means—"On the ground." But DOWN, the substantive, he says, is from dun, Saxon, a hill; but is used now as if derived from the adverb: for it means, "1st. A large open plain or valley."

And as an instance of its meaning a valley, he immediately presents us with Salisbury Plain.

"On the Downs as we see, near Wilton the fair,
A hast'ned hare from greedy greyhound go."

Arcadia, by Sir Ph. Sydney.

He then gives four instances more to show that it means a valley; in every one of which it means hills or rising grounds. To compleat the absurdity, he then says, it means, "2dly. A hill, a rising ground; and that, This sense is very rare." Although it has this sense in every instance he has given for a contrary sense: nor has he given, nor could he give, any instance where this substantive has any other sense than that which he says is so rare.—But this is like all the rest from this quarter ; and I repeat it again, the book is a disgrace to the country.

Freret, Falconer, Wachter, and De Brosses, have all laboriously and learnedly (but, I think, not happily) considered the word Dun.

From what Camden says of the antient names (Danmonii or Dunmonii, and Dobuni) of the inhabitants of Cornwall and Gloucestershire, and of the two rivers (Daven or Dan or Dun or Don) in Cheshire and in Yorkshire ; it seems as if he supposed that our English word DOWN came to us from the Britons.

Solinus, he observes, called the Cornish men Dunmonii ; “ which name seems to come from their dwelling there under hills. For their habitation all over this country is low and in vallies ; which manner of dwelling is called in the British tongue Danmunith. In which sense also the province next adjoining is at this day named by the Britons Duffneint, that is to say, Low vallies.”

Of the Dobuni he says—“ This their name, I believe, is formed from Duffen, a British word ; because the places where they planted themselves, were for the most part low and lying under the hills.”

Speaking of the river in Cheshire, he says—“ Then cometh this Dan or more truly Daven, to Davenport, commonly called Danport.”

Of the river in Yorkshire, he says—“ The river Danus, commonly called Don or Dune, so termed, as it should seem, because it is carried in a channel low and sunk in the ground : for so much signifieth Dan in the British language.”¹

¹ “ Regionem illam insiderunt antiquitus Britanni, qui Solino Dunmonii dicti. Quod nomen ab habitatione sub montibus factum videtur. Inferius enim, et convallibus passim per hanc regionem habitatur, quod Danmunith Britannice dicitur : quo etiam sensu proxima provincia Duffneint, i. e. depressæ valles, a Britannis hodie vocatur.”—P. 133. Folio Edit. 1607.

“ Dobunos videamus, qui olim, ubi nunc Gloucestershire et Oxfordshire, habitârunt. Horum nomen factum a Duffen Britannica dictione credimus ; quod maxima ex parte loca jacentia et depressa sub collibus insidebant.”—P. 249.

Selden, in his notes on the first song of Drayton's Polyolbion, gives full assent to Camden's etymology. He says—"Duffneint, i. e. low valleys in British, as judicious Camden teaches me."

Milton, I doubt not on the same authority, calls the river "the gulphy DUN."

*"Rivers arise ; whether thou be the son
Of utmost Tweed, or Oose, or gulphy Dun."*

And Bishop Gibson concurs with the same; translating, without any dissent, the marginal note, "Duffen Britannice profundum sive depressum," in these words, "Duffen, in British, deep or low."

How then, against such authorities, shall I, with whatever reason fortified, venture to declare, that I am far from thinking that the Anglo-Saxons received either the name of these rivers, or their word DUN, Ȧdun (which is evidently our word DOWN, ADOWN, differently spelled), in any manner from the British language? And as for Duffen (from which, with Camden, I think the words proceeded), we have it in our own language, the Anglo-Saxon, and with the same meaning of sunk, depressum, deep or low.

If, with Camden, we can suppose the Anglo-Saxon dun to have proceeded through the gradations of $$Dufen \begin{cases} Dufen, Duvn, Dun, Don, Down ; \\ Daven, Davn, Dan ; \end{cases}$$

I should think it more natural to derive both the name of the rivers¹ and the preposition from Dufen,² the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dufian, mergere, To sink, To plunge, To dive, To dip. And the usual prefix to the Anglo-Saxon participles, Ȧ, in Ȧdun, strongly favours the suppo-

"Dan vel Daven e montibus, &c. fertur ad, &c. Deinde Davenport, vulgo Danport accedit."—P. 461.

"Danus, vulgo Don et Dune, ita, ut videtur, nominatus, quod pressiori et inferiori in solum labitur alveo ; id enim Dan Britannis significat."—P. 562.

¹ I suppose the river Dove in Staffordshire to have its denomination from the same word, and for the same reason.

² The Anglo-Saxons use indifferently for the past participle of Dufian sition.¹ In most of the passages too in which the preposition or adverb DOWN is used in English, the sense of this participle is clearly expressed; and, without the least straining or twisting, the acknowledged participle may be put instead of the supposed preposition: although there may perhaps be some passages in which the preposition DOWN is used, where the meaning of the participle may not so plainly appear.

UPON. UP. OVER. BOVE. ABOVE.

These prepositions have all one common origin and signification, Uƿon. Uƿan. Uƿa.

In the Anglo-Saxon Uƿa. Uƿepa. Uƿemæƿt. are the nouns, altus, altior, altissimus.

Uƿon, Uƿan, Uƿa. Altus (Fr. Th. Uph.) UPON, UP.

Uƿepa, Oƿepe, Oƿep, Altior. OVER or UPPER.

Uƿemæƿt. Altissimus. UPMOST, UPPERMOST, UPPEREST, OVEREST.

Be-uƿan or Buƿan. BOVE.

On-buƿan. ABOVE.

The use of these words in English as adjectives is very either Duƿeb, or Duƿen or Doƿen. I suppose this same verb to have been variously pronounced,

Doƿian	Hence	{	Doƿen.	Doven.	Dovn.	Doun.	DOWN.	DON.
Duƿian			Duƿen.	Duven.	Duvn.	DUN.	DUNE.
Daƿia			Daƿen.	Daven.	Davn.	DAN.

Dýƿian	{	—————	{	To Dive.
or Dýƿan

¹ [See Lamb. ten Kate, Anleitung, &c. v. Duiken, ducken, sese demittere, vol. 2. p. 171; and v. Duiv, dofen, gedofen, mergere, ib. p. 625. Ten Kate considers these as cognate roots.

But Mr. Richardson (Illustrations of Engl. Philology) observes that Mr. Tooke does not seem confident in this etymology: and I shall take the liberty to suggest that DOWN, ADOWN, is a contraction of Oƿ-bune, off or from hill, downhill, proclivis. See Lye v. “Oƿ-bune. Deorsum.”—Also, under the words Dun, mons, and Oƿ, Lye refers to A. S. authorities for the expression “oƿ bune. Downward, down. Deorsum.”—See Additional Notes.—Ed.]

[Subsequent investigation has fully confirmed this conjecture; so that there now remains no doubt upon the subject.—Ed.]

common; as it is also in all the northern languages: for the same words are used in all of them.¹

“About his hede also there hongeth
A fruite whiche to that peine longeth :
And that fruite toucheth euer in one
His OVER lippe.” Gower, lib. 5. fol. 85. p. 2. col. 2.

“Her OVER lyp wyped she so cleue
That in her cup was no ferthyng sene.”
Prol. to Cant. Tales. Prioress.

“Ful thredbare was his OVER courtpy.” Ibid. Clerke of Oxenf.

“That of his wurship recketh he so lyte
Hys OVEREST sloppe is not worth a myte.”
Prol. to Chan. Yeman's Tale.

“By which degrees men myght climben from the neytherest letter to the UPPEREST.”—Boecius, boke i. fol. 221. p. 1. col. 1.

“Why suffreth he suche slyding chaunges, that mysturnen suche noble thynges as ben we men, that arne a fayre persell of the erth, and holden the UPPEREST degree under God of benigne thinges.”—Test. of Loue, fol. 312. p. 1. col. 1.

It is not necessary for my present purpose, to trace the Particles any further than to some Noun or Verb of a determinate signification; and therefore I might here stop at the Anglo-Saxon noun Ufan, altus. But I believe that Upon, Ufa, UPON, UP, means the same as Top or Head, and is originally derived from the same source. Thus,

“—Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber Upwards turns his face;
But when he hath attain'd the Topmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back.”

Where you may use indifferently either Upward, Topward, or Headward; or Topmost, Upmost, or Headmost.

Some etymologists have chosen to derive the name of that part of our body from the Scythian HA, altus; or the Icelandic HAD, altitudo; or the Gothic hAnh, altus; or (with Junius)

¹ Germ. Auf. Auber. Danish. Oven. Over. Overste.
Oben. Ober. Oberste. Ober.

Dutch. Op. Opper. Opperste. Swedish. Uppe. Öfwer. Öfwerste.
Boven. Over. Overste. Up. Öfre. Ypperst.

by the oval figures are represented the prepositions determined to motion, wherein the acuter part doth point out the tendency of that motion. The squares are intended to signify rest or the term of motion. And by the round figures are represented such relative prepositions, as may indifferently refer either to motion or rest."

In all probability the Abbé de l'Epée borrowed his method of teaching the prepositions to his deaf and dumb scholars from this notion of Wilkins.

"Tout ce que je puis regarder directement en Face, est Devant moi: tout ce que je ne peux voir sans retourner la tête de l'autre côté, est Derrière moi.

"S'agissoit-il de faire entendre qu'une action étoit passée? Il jettoit au hasard deux ou trois fois sa main du côté de son épaule. Enfin s'il désiroit annoncer une action future, il faisoit avancer sa main droite directement devant lui."—Des Sourds et Muets, 2 édit. p. 54.

You will not expect me to waste a word on the prepositions touching, concerning, regarding, respecting, relating to, saving, except, excepting, according to, granting, allowing, considering, notwithstanding, neighbouring, &c., nor yet on the compound prepositions In-to, Un-to, Un-till, Out-of, Through-out, From-off, &c.

B.—I certainly should not, if you had explained all the simple terms of which the latter are compounded. I acknowledge that the meaning and etymology of some of your prepositions are sufficiently plain and satisfactory: and of the others I shall not permit myself to entertain a decided opinion till after a more mature consideration. Pedetentim progredi, was our old favourite motto and caution, when first we began together in our early days to consider and converse upon philosophical subjects; and, having no fanciful system of my own to mislead me, I am not yet prepared to relinquish it. But there still remain five simple prepositions, of which you have not yet taken the smallest notice. How do you account for IN, Out, ON, OFF, and At?

H.—Oh! As for these, I must fairly answer you with Martin Luther,—"Je les défendrais aisément devant le Pape, mais je ne sçais comment les justifier devant le Diable." With the common run of Etymologists, I should make no bad figure by repeating what others have said concerning them; but I despair of satisfying you with any thing they have advanced or I can offer, because I cannot altogether satisfy myself. The explanation and etymology of these words require a degree of knowledge in all the antient northern languages, and a skill in the application of that knowledge, which I am very far from assuming: and, though I am almost persuaded by some of my own conjectures concerning them,¹ I am not willing, by an apparently forced and far-fetched derivation, to justify your imputation of etymological legerdemain. Nor do I think any further inquiry necessary to justify my conclusion concerning the prepositions; having, in my opinion, fully intitled myself to the application of that axiom of M. de Brosses (Art. 215.)—"La preuve connue d'un grand nombre de mots d'une espèce, doit établir une précepte générale sur les autres mots de même espèce, à l'origine desquels on ne peut plus remonter. On doit en bonne logique juger des choses que l'on ne peut connoître, par celles de même espèce qui sont bien connues; en les ramenant à un principe dont l'évidence se fait appercevoir par tout où la vue peut s'étendre."

CHAPTER X.

OF ADVERBS.

B.—The first general division of words (and that which has been and still is almost universally held by Grammarians) is into Declinable and Indeclinable. All the Indeclinables except the Adverb, we have already considered. And though Mr. Harris has taken away the Adverb from its old station amongst the other Indeclinables, and has, by a singular whim of his own, made it a secondary class of Attributives, or (as he calls them) Attributes of Attributes; yet neither does he nor any other Grammarian seem to have any clear notion of its nature and character.

¹ In the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon, ĪNNΛ, inna, means uterus, viscera, venter, interior pars corporis. (Inna, inne, is also in a secondary sense used for cave, cell, cavern.) And there are some etymological reasons which make it not improbable that OUT derives from a word originally meaning skin. I am inclined to believe that IN and OUT come originally from two Nouns meaning those two parts of the body.

B. Jonson¹ and Wallis and all others, I think, seem to confound it with the Prepositions, Conjunctions, and Interjections. And Servius (to whom learning has great obligations) advances something which almost justifies you for calling this class, what you lately termed it, the common sink and repository of all heterogeneous, unknown corruptions. For, he says,—“Omnis pars orationis, quando desinit esse quod est, migrat in Adverbium.”²

H.—I think I can translate Servius intelligibly—Every word, quando desinit esse quod est, when a Grammarian knows not what to make of it, migrat in Adverbium, he calls an Adverb.

These Adverbs however (which are no more a separate part of speech than the particles we have already considered) shall give us but little trouble, and shall waste no time: for I need not repeat the reasoning which I have already used with the Conjunctions and Prepositions.

All adverbs ending in LY (the most prolific branch of the family) are sufficiently understood: the termination (which alone causes them to be denominated Adverbs) being only the word LIKE corrupted; and the corruption so much the more easily and certainly discovered, as the termination remains more pure and distinguishable in the other sister languages, the German, the Dutch, the Danish, and the Swedish; in which it is written lich, lyk, lig, liga. And the Encyclopædia Britannica informs us, that—“In Scotland the word Like is at this day frequently used instead of the English termination Ly. As, for a goodly figure, the common people say, a goodlike figure.”

ADRIFT

is the past participle Adrifed, Adrif'd, Adrift, of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dripan, Ādripan, To Drive.

¹ “Prepositions are a peculiar kind of Adverbs, and ought to be referred thither.—B. Jonson's Grammar.

“Interjectio posset ad Adverbium reduci; sed quia majoribus nostris placuit illam distinguere; non est cur in re tam tenui hæreamus.”—Caramuel.

“CHEZ est plutôt dans notre langue un Adverbe qu'une Particule.”—De Broses.

² “Recte dictum est ex omni adjectivo fieri adverbium.”—Campanella.

“ And quhat auenture has the hiddir DRIFFE ? ”

Douglas, booke 3. p. 79.

i. e. Driffed or Driffen.

AGHAST, AGAST,

may be the past participle Agazed.

“ The French exclaim’d—The Devil was in arms.

All the whole army stood AGAZED on him.”

First Part of Henry VI., act 1. sc. 1.

Agazed may mean, made to gaze: a verb built on the verb To gaze.

In King Lear (act 2. sc. 1.) Edmund says of Edgar, “ ——— GASTED by the noise I made,

Full suddenly he fled.”

Gasted, i. e. made aghast: which is again a verb built on the participle aghost. This progressive building of verb upon verb is not an uncommon practice in language.

In Beaumont and Fletcher’s Wit at several Weapons, (act 2.) “ Sir Gregory Fopp, a witless lord of land,” says of his clown,

“ If the fellow be not out of his wits, then will I never have any more wit whilst I live; either the sight of the lady has GASTERED him, or else he’s drunk.”

I do not bring this word as an authority, nor do I think it calls for any explanation. It is spoken by a fool of a fool; and may be supposed an ignorantly coined or fantastical cant word; or corruptly used for Gasted.

An objection may certainly be made to this derivation: because the word AGAST always, I believe, denotes a considerable degree of terror; which is not denoted by the verb To Gaze: for we may gaze with delight, with wonder or admiration, without the least degree of fear. If I could have found written (as I doubt not there was in speech) a Gothic verb formed upon the Gothic nouns AFIS, which means Fear and Trembling (the long-sought etymology of our English word Ague);¹ I should have avoided this objection, and with full assurance have concluded that AGAST was the past participle of ATISAN, i. e. ATISEA, ATIS'A, ATIST, i. e. made to shudder, terrified to the degree of trembling. There is indeed the verb ATGAN, timere; and the past participle ATIAS, territus; and it is not without an appearance of probability, that, as Whiles, Amonges, &c. have become with us Whilst, Amongst, &c. so ATIAS might become AGIDST, AGIST, AGAST; or ATIAS might become AGISD, AGIST, AGAST. And the last seems to me the most probable etymology.

¹ Junius says—“ AGUE, febris, G. Aigu est acutus. Nihil nempe usitatus est quam acutus dicere febres.”

Ago.

Go, Ago, Ygo, Gon, Agon, Gone, Agone, are all used indiscriminately by our old English writers as the past participle of the verb To Go.¹

But Skinner, a medical man, was aware of objections to this derivation, which Junius never dreamed of. He therefore says—“Fortasse a Fr. Aigu, acutus. Quia (saltem in paroxysmo) acutus (quodammodo) morbus est, et acutis doloribus exercet: licet a medicis, durationem magis quam vehementiam hujus morbi respicientibus, non inter acutas, sed chronicas febres numeretur.”

But Skinner's qualifying paroxysmo, quodammodo, acutis doloribus, by which (for want of any other etymology) he endeavours to give a colour to the derivation from Aigu, acutus, will not answer his purpose: for it is not true (and I speak from a tedious experience) that there are any acute pains in any period of the AGUE. Besides, S. Johnson has truly observed, that—“The cold fit is, in popular language, more particularly called the AGUE; and the hot, the fever.” And it is commonly said—“He has an AGUE and fever.”

I believe our word AGUE to be no other than the Gothic word ATIS, fear, trembling, shuddering:

1. Because the Anglo-Saxons and English, in their adoption of the Gothic substantives (most of which terminate in s), always drop the terminating s.

2. Because, though the English word is written AGUE, the common people and the country people always pronounce it AGHY, or AGUY.

3. Because the distinguishing mark of this complaint is the trembling or shuddering; and, from that distinguishing circumstance it would naturally take its name.

4. Because the French, from whom the term Aigu is supposed to have been borrowed, never called the complaint by that name.

¹ “Questi è un cavaliere Inglese che ho veduto la scorsa notte alla testa di ballo.”—Goldoni, La Vedova Scaltra, vol. 5. p. 98.

GO.

"But netheles the thyng is Do,
 'This fals god was soone GO
 With his deceite, and held him close."

Gower, lib. 6. fol. 138. p. 2. col. 2.

"The daie is GO, the nightes chaunce
 Hath derked all the bright sonne."

Ibid. lib. 8. fol. 179. p. 1. col. 2.

"But soth is sayed, GO sithen many yeres,
 That feld hath eyen, and wode hath eres."

Chaucer, Knyghtes Tale, fol. 4. p. 1. col. 2.

"How ofte tyme may men rede and sene
 The treson, that to women hath Be Do :
 To what fyne is suche loue, I can not sene,
 Or where becometh it, whan it is GO."

Ibid. Troylus, boke 2. fol. 167. p. 1. col. 2.

AGO.

"Of louers now a man maie see
 Ful many, that unkinde bee
 Whan that thei haue her wille Do,
 Her loue is after soone AGO."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 111. p. 2. col. 2.

"As God him bad, right so he dede
 And thus there lefte in that stede
 With him thre hundred, and no mo,
 The remenant was all AGO."—Ibid. lib. 7. fol. 163. p. 2. col. 2.

"Thus hath Lycurgus his wille :
 And toke his leue, and forth he went.
 But liste nowe well to what entent
 Of rightwisnesse he did so.
 For after that he was AGO,
 He shope him neuer to be founde."

Ibid. lib. 7. fol. 158. p. 2. col. 1.

"For cuer the latter ende of ioye is wo,
 God wotte, worldely ioye is soone AGO."

Chaucer, Nonnes Priest, fol. 90. p. 1. col. 1.

"For if it erst was well, tho was it bet
 A thousande folde, this nedeth it not enquire,
 AGO was euery sorowe and euery fere."

Troylus, boke 3. fol. 181. p. 2. col. 1.

"That after whan the storme is al AGO
Yet wol the water quappe a day or two."

Lucrece, fol. 215. p. 2. col. 1.

"Ful sykerly ye wene your othes last
No lenger than the wordes ben AGO."

La Belle Dame, fol. 267. p. 2. col. 2.

"Trowth somtyme was wont to take auayle
In euery matere, but al that is AGO."

Assemble of Ladyes, fol. 277. p. 1. col. 1.

YGO.

"A clerke there was of Oxenforde also 'That unto Logike had longe YGO."

Prol. to Cant. Tales.

"To horse is al her lusty folke YGO."

Chaucer, Dido, fol. 212. p. 2. col. 2.

GON.

"Thou wost thy selfe, whom that I loue parde
As I best can, GON sythen longe whyle."

Troylus, boke 1. fol. 161. p. 1. col. 1.

AGON.

"And euermore, whan that hem fell to speke
Of any thinge of suche a tyme AGON."

Troylus, boke 3. fol. 180. p. 1. col. 1.

"Thou thy selfe, that haddest habundaunce of rychesse nat longe AGON."—Boecius, boke 3. fol. 232. p. 2. col. 2.

"Ful longe AGON I might haue taken hede."

Annelyda, fol. 273. p. 1. col. 1.

GONE.

"I was right nowe of tales desolate,
Nere that a marchant, GONE is many a yere,
Me taught a tale, which ye shullen here."

Man of Lawes Tale, fol. 19. p. 1. col. 1.

"But sothe is said, GONE sithen many a day,
A trewe wight and a thefe thynketh not one."

Squiers Tale, fol. 28. p. 1. col. 2.

AGONE.

"Of suche ensamples as I finde
Upon this point of tyme AGONE

I thinke for to tellen one."—Gower, lib. 5. fol. 87. p. 1. col. 1.

"But erly whan the sonne shone,
Men sigh, that thei were AGONE,
And come unto the kyng, and tolde,
There was no worde, but out, alas,
She was AGO, the mother wepte,
The father as a wood man lepte."

Goocer, lib. 5. fol. 104. p. 2. col. 2.

"Whan that the mysty vapoure was AGONE,
And clere and fayre was the mornynge."

Chaucer, Blacke Knyght, fol. 287. p. 1. col. 1.

"For I loued one, ful longe sythe AGONE
With al myn herte, body and ful might."

Ibid. fol. 289. p. 1. col. 2.

"And many a serpent of fell kind,
With wings before and stings behind,
Subdu'd; as poets say, long AGONE,
Bold Sir George, Saint George did the dragon."

Hudibras, part 1. col. 2.

"Which is no more than has been done
By knights for ladies, long AGONE."

Ibid. part 2. col. 1.

Tillotson, in a Fast sermon on a thanksgiving occasion, 31st
January, 1689, says,

"Twenty years AGONE."

ASUNDER

is the past participle Asunder or Asundered, separated (as the particles of sand are), of the verb Sunder, Sunderian, Sunderian, Asunderian, &c. To separate.

"In vertue and holy almesedede
They liuen all, and neuer ASUNDER wende
Tyll deth departeth hem."

Chaucer, Squiers Tale, fol. 24. p. 2. col. 1.

"And tyl a wicked deth him take
Hym had leuer ASONDRE shake
And let al his lymmes ASONDRE ryue
Than leaue his riches in his lyue."

Ibid. Rom. of the Rose, fol. 145. p. 2. col. 2.

"These ylke two that bethe in armes lafte
So lothe to hem ASONDER gon it were."

Ibid. Troylus, boke 3. fol. 179. p. 2. col. 2.

"This yerle was large, and rayled al the aleyes
And shadowed wel, with blosomy bowes grene

And benched newe, and SONDED all the wayes
In which she walketh."

Chaucer, Troylus, boke 2. fol. 167. p. 2. col. 1.

This word (in all its varieties) is to be found in all the northern languages; and is originally from A. S. Sonð, i. e. Sand.

ASTRAY

is the past participle Ȧrtræged of the Anglo-Saxon verb Strægan, spargere, dispergere, To Stray, To scatter.

"This prest was drunke, and goth ASTRAYDE."

Gower, lib. 4. fol. 84. p. 2. col. 1.

"And ouer this I sigh also
The noble people of Israel
Dispers, as shepe upon an hille
Without a keper unaraied :
And as they wenten about ASTRAIED
I herde a voyce unto hem seyne."

Ibid. lib. 7. fol. 156. p. 2. col. 1.

"Achab to the batayle went.
Where Benedad for all his shelde
Him slough, so that upon the felde
His people goth aboute ASTRAIE."

Ibid. lib. 7. fol. 156. p. 2. col. 2.

S. Johnson says—To Stray is from the Italian Straviare, from the Latin extra viam. But STRAYAN, Stneapian, Stneopian, Stnepian, Stnezian, Strægian: and Strap, Stneop, Stneo, Stnea, Stne, were used in our own mother tongues, the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon, long before the existence of the word Straviare, and the beginning of the corrupted dialect of the Latin called Italian, and even of the corrupted dialect of the Greek called Latin. And as the words To Sunder and Asunder proceed from Sonð, i. e. Sand; so do the words To Stray, To Straw, To Strow, To Strew, To Straggle, To Stroll, and the well-named Strawberry (i. e. Straw'd-berry, Stray-berry), all proceed from Straw, or, as our peasantry still pronounce it, Strah.¹ And Astray, or

¹ "Me lyst not of the chaffe ne of the Strees
Make so longe a tale, as of the corne."

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale, fol. 22. p. 1. col. 1.

Astray'd, means Strawed, scattered and dispersed as the Straw is about the fields.

“Reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strawed.”—St. Matthew, chap. xxv. ver. 24.

ATWIST.

The past participle Γε-τρῖρεδ, Ἀτρῖρεδ, Ἀτρῖρδ, of the verb Τρῖραν, Τρῖραν, Γε-τρῖραν, torquere: Τρῖραν from Τρα, Τραε, Τρι, Τρι, Τρεο, TWO.

AWRY.

The past participle Ἀπρῖδεδ, Ἀπρῖδδ of the verb Πρῖδαν, Πρῖδαν, To Writhe.

In the late Chief-Justice Mansfield's time, for many years I rarely listened to his doctrines in the Court of King's Bench without having strong cause to repeat the words of old Gower ;

“Howe so his mouthe be comely
His worde sitte euermore AWRIE.”

Lib. 1. fol. 29. p. 2. col. 2.

ASKEW.

In the Danish, Skæw is wry, crooked, oblique. Skæver, To twist, To wrest. Skævt, twisted, wrested.

“And with that worde all sodenly
She passeth, as it were ASKIE,
All cleane out of the ladies sight.”

Gower, lib. 4. fol. 71. p. 1. col. 1.

ASKANT. ASKANCE.

[Probably the participles Aschuined, Aschuins.] In Dutch, Schuin, wry, oblique. Schuinen, To cut awry. Schuins, sloping, wry, not straight.

ASWOON.

The past participle Ἀρῡανδ, Ἀρῡονδ of the verb Σuanian, Ἀρῡunan, deficere animo.

“Whan she this herd, ASWOUNE down she falleth
For pitous ioy, and after her swounyng
She both her yong children to her calleth.”

Clerke of Oxenfordes Tale, fol. 51 p. 1 col. 1.

“ And with that word she fel ASWOUNE anon,
And after, whan her swounyng was gon
She riseth up.”

Doctour of Phisikes Tale, fol. 65. p. 1. col. 1.

ASTOUND.

The past participle Estonné [Estonné] of the French verb Estonner (now written Etonner), To astonish.

“ And with this worde she fell to grounde
ASWOUNE, and there she laie ASTOUNDE.”

Gower, lib. 4. fol. 83. p. 1. col. 2.

ENOUGH.

In Dutch Genoeg, from the verb Genoegen, To content, To satisfy. S. Johnson cannot determine whether this word is a substantive, an adjective, or an adverb; but he thinks it is all three.

“ It is not easy,” he says, “ to determine whether this word be an adjective or adverb; perhaps, when it is joined with a substantive, it is an adjective, of which Enow is the Plural.¹ In other situations it seems an adverb; except that, after the verb To have or To be, either expressed or understood, it may be accounted a substantive.”

According to him, it means—“ In a sufficient measure, so as may satisfy, so as may suffice. 2. Something sufficient in greatness or excellence. 3. Something equal to a man's power or abilities. 4. In a sufficient degree. 5. It notes a slight augmentation of the positive degree. 6. Sometimes it notes Diminution! 7. An exclamation noting fulness or satiety.”

In the Anglo-Saxon it is Lenoz or Lenoh: and appears to be the past participle Lenoged, multiplicatum, manifold, of the verb Lenogan, multiplicare.

FAIN.

The past participle Fægened, Fægen, Fægn, lætus, of the verb Fægenian, Fægman, gaudere, lætari.

¹ In his Grammar, he says—“ Adjectives in the English language are wholly indeclinable; having neither case, gender, nor number; being added to Substantives, in all relations, without any change.”

“Of that men speken here and there,
How that my lady beareth the price,
How she is faire, how she is wise,
How she is womanliche of chere :
Of all this thing whan I maie here
What wonder is though I be FAINE.”

Gower, lib. 1. fol. 23. p. 1. col. 2.

“For which they were as glad of his commyng
As foule is FAINE whan the sonne upryseth.”

Chaucer, Shypmans Tale, fol. 69. p. 1. col. 1.

“Na uthir wyse the pepyl Ausoniane
Of this glade time in hart wox wounder FANE.”

Douglas, booke 13. p. 472.

LIEF. LIEVER. LIEVEST.

Leop, Leope, Leopeft.

“I had as LIEF not be, as live to be in awe
Of such a thing as I myself.”—Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

No modern author, I believe, would now venture any of these words in a serious passage: and they seem to be cautiously shunned and ridiculed in common conversation, as a vulgarity. But they are good English words, and more frequently used by our old English writers than any other word of a corresponding signification.

Leop (Leoped, or Lupad, or Lupod or Luf) is the past participle of Lufian, To love; and always means beloved.¹

“And netheles by daies olde,
Whan that the bokes were LEUER,
Writyng was beloued euer
Of them that weren vertuous.”

Gower, Prol. fol. 1. p. 1. col. 1.

“It is a unwise vengeance
Whiche to none other man is LEFE
And is unto him selfe grefe.”—lib. 2. fol. 18. p. 1. col. 2.

“And she answerd, and bad hym go,
And saide, howe that a bed all warme
Hir LIEFE lay naked in hir arme.”—lib. 2. fol. 41. p. 1. col. 2.

¹ “The Fader Almychty of the heuin abuf,
In the mene tyme, unto Iuno his LUF,
Thus spak; and sayd—”—Douglas, booke 12. p. 441.

“Thre pointes whiche I fynde
Ben LEUEST unto mans kynde ;
The first of hem it is delite,
The two ben worship and profite.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 84. p. 2. col. 2.

“For euery thyng is wel the LEUER
Whan that a man hath bought it dere.”

lib. 5. fol. 109. p. 2. col. 1.

“Whan Rome was the worlde's chiefe,
The sooth saye tho was LEEFE,
Whiche wolde not the trouth spare,
But with his worde, playne and bare,
To themperour his sothes tolde.”

lib. 7. fol. 154. p. 2. col. 2.

“Of other mens passion
Take pitee and compassion
And let no thyng to the be LEEF
Whiche to an other man is grefe.”—lib. 8. fol. 190. p. 2. col. 1.

“They lyued in ioye and in felycite
For eche of hem had other LEFE and dere.”

Chaucer, Monkes Tale, fol. 85. p. 1. col. 2.

“In the swete season that LEFE is.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 120. p. 2. col. 1.

“His LEEFE a rosen chapelet
Had made, and on his heed it set.”

Ibid. fol. 124. p. 1. col. 1.

“And hym her LEFE and dere hert cal.”

Troilus, boke 3. fol. 176. p. 2. col. 2.

“Had I hym neuer LEFE? By God I wene Ye had neuer thyng so LEFE (quod she).”

Ibid. boke 3. fol. 177. p. 1. col. 2.

“Ye that to me (quod she) ful LEUER were Than al the good the sunne aboute gothe.”

Ibid. boke 3. fol. 178. p. 2. col. 1.

“For as to me nys LEUER none ne lother.”

Leg. of Good Women, Prol. fol. 205. p. 2. col. 2.

“Remembrand on the mortall anciant were
That for the Grekis to hir LEIF and dere,
At Troye lang tyme sche led before that day.”

Douglas, booke 1. p. 13.

“ Gif euir ony thanke I deseruit toward the Or ocht of myne to the was LEIF, quod sche.”

Douglas, booke 4. p. 110.

“ O thou nymphe, wourschip of fludis clere,
That to my saul is hald maist LEIF and dere.”

Ibid. booke 12. p. 410.

ADIEU. FAREWELL.

The former from the French à Dieu, from the Italian Addio: the latter the imperative of Fapan, To go, or To fare. So it is equally said in English—How fares it? or, How goes it?

The Dutch and the Swedes also say, Vaarwel, Farwål: The Danes Lev-vel, and the Germans Lebet-wohl.

HALT

means—Hold, Stop, (as when we say—Hold your hand,) Keep the present situation, Hold still.

In German Still halten is To halt or stop; and Halten is To Hold. In Dutch Still houden, To halt or stop; and Houden, To hold.

Menage says well—“Far Alto, proprio di quel fermarsi che fanno le ordinanze militari: Dal Tedesco Halte, che vale, Ferma là; dimora là; imperativo del verbo Halten, cioè, arrestarsi.”

The Italians assuredly took the military term from the Germans.

Our English word HALT is the imperative of the Anglo-Saxon verb Healdan, To hold; and Hold itself is from Healdan, and was formerly written HALT.

“ He leyth downe his one eare all plat Unto the ground, and HALT it fast.”

Gower, lib. 1. fol. 10. p. 1. col. 2.

“ But so well HALTE no man the plough,
That he ne balketh otherwhile.”—lib. 2. fol. 50. p. 1. col. 1.

“ For what thing that he maie embrace,
Of gold, of catell, or of londe,
He let it neuer out of his honde,
But gette hym more, and HALT it fast.”

“ To seie howe suche a man hath good,
Who so that reasone understoode,

It is unproperliche sayde :

That good bath hym, and HALT him taide."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 83. p. 2. col. 2 ; fol. 84. p. 1. col. 1.

" —Euery man, that HALT him worth a leke,
Upon his bare knees ought all hys lyfe
Thanken God, that him hath sent a wyfe."

Chaucer, Marchauntes Tale, fol. 29. p. 1. col. 1.

" For euery wight, whiche that to Rome went,
HALTE not o pathe, ne alway o manere."

Troylus, boke 1. fol. 163. p. 1. col. 2.

" Loue, that with an holsome alyaunce
HALTE people ioyned, as hym lyste hem gye."

Ibid. boke 3. fol. 182. p. 1. col. 1.

Lo.

The imperative of Look. So the common people say corruptly, —"Lo' you there now" — "La' you there."

Where we now employ sometimes LOOK and sometimes LO, with discrimination ; our old English writers used indifferently Lo, LOKE, LOKETH, for this imperative. Chaucer, in the Pardoner's Tale, says

" —Al the souerayne actes, dare I say,
Of victories in the Olde Testament
Were don in abstynence and in prayere ;
LOKETH the Byble, and there ye mowe it lere."

" LOKETH¹ Attyla the great conquerour Dyed in his slepe, with shame and dishonour."

" LOKE¹ eke howe to kynge Demetrius
The king of Parthes, as the boke sayth us,
Sent him a payre of dyce of golde in scorne."

" Beholde and se that in the first table
Of hye Gods hestes honourable,
Howe that the seconde heste of him is this,
Take not my name in ydelnesse amys.
Lo, he *Rather*² forbyddeth suche swering
Than homicide, or any other cursed thing."

Fol. 66. p. 2. col. 2 ; fol. 67. p. 1. col. 1.

¹ In both these places a modern writer would say Lo.

² Sooner, earlier.—He forbids such swearing Before he forbids homicide : i. e. in a forejoining part of the table.

So B. Jonson. (Alchymist, act 2. sc. 3.)

“For LOOK, how oft I iterate the work,
So many times I add unto his virtue.”

Here, if it had pleased him, he might have said—Lo how oft,
&c.

And again.

“Subtle. Why, rascall—Face. Lo you here, sir.”

Here, if it had pleased him, he might have said—LOOK you here.

The Dutch correspondent adverb is Siet, from Sien, To look or see. The German Siehe, or Sihe, from Sehen, To see. The Danish See, from Seer, To look or see. The Swedish Si, or Si der, from Se, To look.

NEEDS.

Need-is,¹ used parenthetically. It was antiently written Nedes and Nede is. Certain is was used in the same manner, equivalently to certes.

“And certaine is (quod she) that by gettyng of good, be men maked good.”

“I haue graunted that NEDES good folke moten ben myghty.”—Boecius, boke 4. fol. 241. p. 1. col. 1, 2.

“The consequence is false, NEDES the antecedent mote ben of the same condicion.”—Test. of Loue, boke 2. fol. 316. p. 1. col. 2.

“None other thyng signyfeth this necessite but onelye thus ; That shal be, may nat togider be and not be. Euenlyche also it is sothe, loue was, and is, and shal be, not of necessyte ; and NEDE IS to haue be al that was, and needeful is to be al that is.”—Test. of Loue, boke 3. fol. 328. p. 1. col. 1.²

¹ [Mr. Tooke does not seem to have been aware of the formation of adverbs from the genitive absolute, which prevails in the Teutonic languages ; otherwise he would probably have given a different account of this word.

NEEDS, genitive of Need, of necessity ; as in Straightways, and in German Nachts, by night, Theils, partly, &c. See the account of Once, Twice, &c., in the present chapter (page 288) ; Grimm's Grammat. iii. 132 (where a large collection of such adverbs will be found) ; Boucher's Glossary, v. ANES ; and the Additional Notes.—ED.]

² Necesse—nec esse aliter potest.

OFTEN, -er, -est.

PRITHEE.

I pray thee.

TOWIT,

though it is the infinitive of þitan, does not mean To know, as Skinner¹ and S. Johnson have supposed; but To Be known, Sciendum. For so (for want of Gerunds, as they are most absurdly called) our ancestors used the Active Infinitives, as well of other verbs as of þitan.² Similar adverbs are

¹ [Skinner is not chargeable with any error, as he is speaking merely of the obsolete verb WIT, and not of the adverbial expression TO-WIT. Mr. Tooke's account of this word is somewhat defective: it is not the simple infinitive þitan, which in A. Saxon is never preceded by to, but the derivative or future infinitive terminating in NNE and always preceded by to, and which in Anglo-Saxon, as well as in Francic, answers to gerunds, supines, and future participles. Nor is it necessarily Passive. Somner has "hit is to þitanne, sciendum est; it is to wit, or to be knowne:" also Is eac to þitanne þ.—Heptateuch. I'ræfat. Ælfr. p. 5. ed. Thwaites. Thus we say, The house is yet to build. Lye gives the following instances: eop is gereald to þitanne. Vobis datum est ad sciendum, Mar. 4. 11: þa com hit to þitenne; ubi evenit id cognoscendum. Chr. Sax. 165. 26. And adds, "Ab hac voce þitan, speciatim vero ab Infinitivo derivativo, To þitanne, phrasis ista, I do you to wit, q. d. Ic do eop to þitanne, Facio vos scire; Scire licet; Videre licet: unde contractiores istæ scribendi formulæ tam Anglorum quam Latinorum, To wit; Scilicet, videlicet." See Additional Note on the Infinitive Future.—ED.]

² "False fame is not TO DREDE, ne of wyse persons TO ACCEPTE."—Test. of Loue, boke 1. fol. 308. p. 2. col. 2.

Instances of this use of the Active Infinitives in English are very numerous; but the reason of it appears best from old translations.

"Quod si nec Anaxagoræ fugam, nec Socratis venenum, nec Zenonis tormenta novisti; at Canios, at Senecas, at Soranos scire potuisti. Quos nihil aliud in cladem detraxit, nisi quod nostris moribus instituti, studiis improborum dissimillimi videbantur. Itaque nihil est quod admirare, si in hoc vitæ salo circumflantibus agitemur procellis, quibus hoc maxime propositum est, pessimis displicere. Quorum quidem tametsi est numerosus exercitus, SPERNENDUS tamen est."—Boethius de Consol. lib. 1. prosa 3.

Thus translated by Chaucer:

"If thou hast not knowen the exilynge of Anaxagoras, ne the enpoysoning of Socrates, ne the turmentes of Zeno; yet mightest thou haue knowen the Senecas, the Canios, and the Soranos. The whiche men nothing els ne brought to the deth, but only for they were enformed of my maners and senieden most unlyke to the studies of wicked folke. And forthy thou oughtest not to wondren, though that those of the Latin and French, Videlicet, scilicet, à sçavoir. And it is worth noting, that the old Latin authors used the abbreviated Videlicet for Videre licet, when not put (as we call it) adverbially.¹

PERCHANCE.

Par-escheant, Par-escheance, the participle of Escheoir, Echeoir, Echoir, to fall.

PERCASE.

Per-casum, participle of cadere. Antiently written Parcas, Parcaas.

PERADVENTURE.

Antiently Peraunter, Paraunter, Inaunter, Inaventure.

MAYBE. MAYHAP.

In Westmoreland they say and write Mappen, i. e. may happen.

HABNAB.

Hap ne hap—happen or not happen.

“Philautus determined HAB NAB to send his letters.”

Euphues. By John Lilly, p. 109.

PERHAPS. UPHAP.

By or through Haps. Upon a Hap.

“The HAPPEs ouer mannes hede

Ben honged with a tender threde.”

Gower, lib. 6. fol. 135. p. 2. col. 2.

“In heuen to bene losed with God hath none ende, but endelesse endureth: and thou canste nothyng done aryght, but thou desyre the rumoure therof be healed and in euery wightes care; and that dureth but a pricke, in respecte of the other. And so thou sekest rewarde of

I in the bitter see be driuen with tempestes blowing aboute. In the which thys is my moste purpose, that is to sayne, to displesen wicked men. Of whiche shrewes al be the hooste neuer so great, it is to DISPISE.”—Fol. 222. p. 1. col. 1.

¹ “Pam. VIDELICET parcum illum fuisse senem, qui dixerit:

Quoniam ille illi pollicetur, qui eum cibum poposcerit.

Ant. VIDELICET fuisse illum nequam adolescentem, qui illico,

Ubi ille poscit, denegavit se dare granum tritici.”

Plautus. Stichus, act 4. sc. 1.

folkes smale wordes, and of vayne praysynge. Trewely therein thou lesest the guerdon of vertue, and lesest the grettest valoure of conscience, and UPHAP thy renome euerlastyng.”—Chaucer, Test. of Loue, boke 1. fol. 311. p. 1. col. 1.

BELIKE.

This word is perpetually employed by Sir Philip Sydney, Hooker, Shakespeare, B. Jonson, Sir. W. Raleigh, Bacon, Milton, &c. But is now only used in low language, instead of perhaps.

In the Danish language Lykke, and in the Swedish Lycka, mean Luck, i. e. chance, hazard, Hap, fortune, adventure.

“Dionysius. He thought BELIKE, if Damon were out of the citie, I would not put him to death.”—Damon and Pythias. By R. Edwards.

——“Brutus and Cassius

Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome.

Ant. BELIKE they had some notice of the people
How I had moved them.”—Julius Cæsar, act 3. sc. 2.

“How’s that? Your’s if his own! Is he not my son, except he be his own son? BELIKE this is some new kind of subscription the gallants use.”—Every Man in his Humour, act 3. sc. 7.

“Than she, remembering BELIKE the continual and incessant and confident speeches and courses that I had held on my lord’s side, became utterly alienated from me.”—Sir F. Bacon’s Apology.

“Will he, so wise, let loose at once his ire,
BELIKE through impotence, or unaware,
To give his enemies their wish?”

Paradise Lost, book 1. v. 156.

AFOOT.

“Many a freshe knight, and many a blisful route
On horse and ON FOTE, in al the felde aboute.”

Chaucer, Annelida, fol. 270. p. 2. col. 1.

“Sum grathis thame ON FUTE to go in feild, Sum hie montit on horsbak under scheild.”

Douglas, booke 7. p. 230.

Of the same kind are the adverbs Foot to foot. Vis à vis. Petto a petto. Dirimpetto. The Hand and Foot, being the principal organs of action and motion, afford a variety of allusions and adverbial expressions in all languages; most of which are too evident to require explanation: as when, of our blessed senators, we say, with equal truth and sorrow—They assume the office of legislation illotis pedibus, and proceed in it with dirty hands.

So FOOT HOT; which Mr. Warton has strangely mistaken in page 192 of his first volume of the History of English Poetry: [8vo. edit. vol. ii. p. 25.]

“The table adoune rihte he smote,
In to the floore FÖÖTE HOT.”

Misled by the word foot, Mr. Warton thinks that FÖÖTE HOT means “Stamped.” So that he supposes the Soudan here to have fallen upon the table both with hands and feet: i. e. first he smote it with his fist; and then he stamped upon it, and trampled it under foot.

But FOOT HOT means immediately, instantaneously, without giving time for the foot to cool: so our court of Pie Poudre, pied poudré; in which matters are determined before one can wipe the dust off one’s feet. So E vestigio, &c.

“There was none eie that might kepe
His heade, whiche Mercurie of smote,
And forth with all anone FÖTE HÖTE
He stale the cove whiche Argus kepte.”

Gower, lib. 4. fol. 81. p. 2. col. 1.

“And Custaunce han they taken anon FÖTEHOT.”

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale, fol. 20. p. 2. col. 1.

“Whan that he herde ianglyng
He ran anon as he were wode
To Bialacoil there that he stode,
Which had leuer in this caas
Haue ben at Reynes or Amyas,
For FÖTE HÖTE in his felonye
To him thus said Jelousye.”

Ibid. Rom. of the Rose, fol. 138. p. 1. col. 2.

———“And first Ascaneus,
As he on hors playit with his feris ioyus,
Als swyft and feirsly spurris his stede FÖTE HÖTE,
And but delay socht to the trublit fote.”¹

Douglas, booke 5. p. 150.

¹ “Primus et Ascanius, cursus ut lætus equestres
Ducebat, sic acer equo turbata petiuit Castra.”

" I sall declare all and reduce FUTE HATE¹
From the beginning of the first debate."

Douglas, booke 7. p. 205.

" The self stound amynd the preis FUTE HOTE² Lucagus enteris into his chariote."

Ibid. booke 10. p. 338.

" Wyth sic wourdis scho ansueris him FUTE HATE."³

Ibid. booke 12. p. 443.

" All with ane voice and hale assent at accorde,
Desiris the as for thare prince and lord ;
And ioyus ar that into feild FUTE HATE⁴
Under thy wappinis Turnus lyis doun bet."

Ibid. booke 13. p. 468.

ASIDE.

" Now hand to hand the dynt lichtis with ane swak,
Now bendis he up his burdoun with ane mynt,
ON SYDE he bradis for to eschew the dynt."

Douglas, booke 5. p. 142.

I suppose it needless to notice such adverbs as Aback, Abreast, Afront, Ahead, At hand, Beforehand, Behindhand, &c.

ABLAZE.

" That casten fire and flam aboute
Both at mouth and at nase
So that thei setten all ON BLASE."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 102. p. 2. col. 2.

ABOARD.

" This great shyp on anker rode :
The lorde cometh forth, and when he sigh
That other ligge ON BORDE so nighe."

Gower, lib. 2. fol. 33. p. 2. col. 2.

¹ "Ex-pedi-am : et primæ revocabo exordia pugnae." Virgil.
Notice Ex-ped-ire.

² Interea.—Virgil.

³ Talibus occurrit dictis.—Ibid.

⁴ There is no word in the original of Maphæus to explain or justify the FUTE HATE of Douglas in this passage : he barely says, —— "Turnumque sub armis Exultant cecidisse tuis." But the acer petivit, expediam, and occurrit dictis of Virgil are sufficient.

"What helpeth a man haue mete,
Where drinke lackethe ON THE BORDE."

Gower, lib. 4. fol. 72. p. 2. col. 1.

"And howe he loste hys steresman
Whiche that the sterne, or he toke kepe,
Smote over the BORDE as he slepe."

Chaucer, Flame, boke 1. fol. 294. p. 1. col. 2.

"We war from thens affrayit, durst nocht abide,
Bot fled anon, and within BURD has brocht
That faithful Greik."

Douglas, booke 3. p. 90.

"The burgeonit treis ON BURD they bring for aris."

Ibid. booke 4. p. 113.

"The stabill aire has calmyt wele the se,
And south pipand windis fare on hie
Challancis to pas ON BORD, and tak the depe."

Ibid. booke 5. p. 153.

ABROAD.

"The rose spred to spannishhyngge,
To sene it was a goodly thyngge,
But it ne was so sprede ON BREDE
That men within myght knowe the sede."

Chaucer, Rom. of the Rose, fol. 137. p. 1. col. 2.

"Als fer as his crop hie ON BREDE Strekis in the are, as fer his route dois sprede."

Douglas, booke 4. p. 115.

"—— his baner quhite as floure
In sing of batel did ON BREDE display."

Ibid. booke 8. p. 240.

ADAYS.¹

"But this I see ON DAIES nowe."

Gower, lib. 4. fol. 72. p. 2. col. 1.

"Thus here I many a man compleine,
That nowe ON DAIES thou shalte finde
At nede few frendes kinde."

Ibid. lib. 5. fol. 110. p. 1. col. 1.

"But certainly the dasit blude now ON DAYIS Waxis dolf and dull throw myne unweildy age."

Douglas, booke 5. p. 140.

¹ [This and the following, from their termination, should probably be referred to the genitive singular, like Needs, &c. See Additional Note.]—Ed.

ANIGHTS.

“ He mot one of two thynges chese,
Where he woll haue hir suche ON NIGHT,
Or els upon daies light;
For he shall not haue both two.”

Gower, lib. 1. fol. 17. p. 2. col. 2.

“ For though no man wold it alowe,
To slepe leuer than to wowe
Is his maner, and thus ON NIGHTES
When he seeth the lusty knightes
Reuelen, where these women are Away he sculketh as an hare.”

Ibid. lib. 4. fol. 78. p. 1. col. 1.

“ For though that wiues ben ful holy thinges,
They must take in patience a nyght
Suche maner necessaryes as ben plesinges
To folke that han wedded hem with ringes,
And lay a litell her holynesse asyde.”

Chaucer, Man of Laues Tale, fol. 22. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Madame, the sentence of this Latyn is,
Woman is mannes ioye and his blis,
For when I fele ON NYGHT your soft syde,
Al be it that I may not on you ryde,
For that our perche is made so narowe, alas,
I am full of ioye and solas.”

Ibid. Nonnes Priest, fol. 89. p. 2. col. 2.

AFIRE.

“ Turnus seges the Troianis in grete yre,
And al thare schyppis and nauy set IN FYRE.”

Douglas, booke 9. p. 274.

ALIVE.

On live, i. e. In Life.¹

“ For as the fisshe, if it be drie,
Mote in defaute of water die :
Right so without aier, ON LIUE
No man ne beast might thriue.”

Gower, lib. 7. fol. 142. p. 1. col. 2.

¹ In the first book of the Testament of Love, fol. 305. p. 1. col. 1, Chaucer furnishes another adverb of the same kind, to those who are admirers of this part of speech.—“ Wo is hym that is Aloue.”

“ For prouder woman is there none ON LYUE.”

Chaucer, Troylus, boke 2. fol. 143. p. 2. col. 2.

“ The verray ymage of my Astyanax zing :

Sic ene had he, and sic fare handis tua,

For al the warld sic mouth and face perfay :

And gif he war ON LIFE quhil now in fere,

He had bene euin eild with the, and hedy pere.”

Douglas, booke 3. p. 84.

ALOFT.

On Loft, On Lust, On Lyft, i. e. In the Lust or Lyft : or, (the superfluous article omitted, as was the antient custom in our language, the Anglo-Saxon) In Lyft, In Lust, In Loft.

“ The golde tressed Phebus hygh ON LOFTE.”

Chaucer, Troylus, boke 5. fol. 196. p. 2. col. 1.

“ Bot, lo amone (ane wounder thing to tell)

Ane huge bleis of flambyis brade doun fel,

Furth of the cluddys at the left hand straucht,

In manere of an lychtning or fyre flaucht :

And did alycht richt in the samyn stede,

Apoun the croun of fare Lauinias hede ;

And fra thine hie up IN the LYFT agane

It glade away, and tharein did remane.”

Douglas, booke 13. p. 476.

“ ——— With that the dow

Heich IN the LYFT full glaide he gan behald,

And with her wingis sorand mony fald.”

Ibid. booke 5. p. 144.

In the Anglo-Saxon, Lȳft is the Air or the Clouds. In St. Luke—“ in lȳfte cummende”—coming in the clouds. In the Danish, Luft is air, and “ At spronge i luften”—To blow up into the air, or Aloft. In the Swedish also Luft is air. So in the Dutch, De loef hebben, To sail before the wind ; loeven, To ply to windward ; loef, the weather gage ; &c. From the same root are our other words, Loft, Lofty, To Luff, Lee, Leeward, To Lift, &c.

ANEW.

“ The battellis war adionit now OF NEW,

Not in manere of landwart folkis bargane,

But with scharp scherand wappinnis made melle.”

Douglas, booke 7. p. 225.

“ Was it honest ane godly diuine wucht
 With ony mortall straik to wound in ficht ?
 Or git ganand the swerd loist and adew
 To rendir Turnus to his brand OF NEW,
 And strength increscis to thame that vincust be ? ”
Douglas, booke 12. p. 441.

AROW.

“ And in the port enterit, lo, we see
 Flokkis and herdis of oxin and of fee,
 Fat and tydy, rakand ouer all quhare,
 And trippis eik of gait but ony kepare,
 In the rank gers pasturing ON RAW.” Ibid. booke 3. p. 75.

“ The pepil by him vincust mycht thou knaw,
 Before him passand per ordour all ON RAW.”
Ibid. booke 8. p. 270.

ASLEEP.¹

“ Whan that pyte, which longe ON SLEPE doth tary, Hath set the fyne of al my heuynesse.”
Chaucer, La belle dame, fol. 269. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Apoun the earth the uthir beistis al,
 Thare besy thochtis ceissing grete and smal,
 Ful sound ON SLEPE did caucht thare rest be kind.”
Douglas, booke 9. p. 283.

“ In these provynces the fayth of Chryste was all quenched and IN SLEPE.”—Fabian.

AWHILE.

A time. Whil-es, i. e. Time, that or which. Whilst is a corruption ; it should be written as formerly, Whiles.²

“ She died, my lord, but WHILES her slander liv’d.”
Much Ado about Nothing.

AUGHT, or OUGHT.

The Anglo-Saxon hwīt: a whit, or o whit. N. B. O was formerly written for the article A, or for the numeral one. So Naught or Nought: Na whit, or No whit.

¹ [“ For David—fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers.” Acts, 13, 36.—ED.]

² [This has the genitive form ; see Grimm, iii. 134.—ED.]

FORTH.

“ Againe the knight the olde wife gan arise
And said ; Sir knight, here FORTH lyeth no way.”

Chaucer, Wife of Bathes Tale, fol. 38. p. 2. col. 2.

“ Alas (quod he) alas, that euer I beheyght
Of pured gold a thousande pounce of weight
Unto this phylosopher ! howe shall I do ?
I se no more but that I am FORDO :¹
Myn herytage mote I nedes sell,
And ben a beggar, here may I no lenger dwell.”

Frankelleyne's Tale, fol. 55. p. 2. col. 2.

“ Loke out of londe thou be not FORE,²
And if suche cause thou haue, that the Behoueth to gone out of countre,
Leaue hole thyn hert in hostage.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 132. p. 2. col. 2.

From the Latin Fores, Foris, the French had Fors (their modern Hors). And of the French Fors, our ancestors (by their favourite pronunciation of Th) made forð, FORTH : as from the French Asses or Assez, they made ASSETH, i. e. enough, sufficient.

“ Rychesse ryche ne maketh nought
Hym that on treasour sette his thought :
For rychesse stonde in suffysaunce,
And nothyng in haboundaunce :
For suffysaunce al onely
Maketh menne to lyue rychely.
For he that hath mytches tweyne
Ne value in hys demeyne,
Lyueh more at ease, and more is riche,
Than dothe he that is chiche
And in his barne hath, soth to sayne,
An hundred mauis of whete grayne,
Though he be chapman or marchaunt,
And haue of golde many besaunt :

¹ FOR-DO, i. e. Forth-done, i. e. Done to go FORTH, or caused to go FORTH, i. e. Out of doors. In modern language, turned out of doors.—[It should rather be explained in connection with other verbs compounded with FOR ; see Additional Notes.—ED.]

² FORE, i. e. Fors or FORTH.—[Rather the past participle of FARE, to go.—ED.]

For in the gettyng he hath suche wo,
 And in the kepyng drede also,
 And sette euermore his besignesse
 For to encrese, and nat to lesse,
 For to augment and multiplie,
 And though on heapes that lye him by,
 Yet neuer shal make rychesse
 ASSETH unto hys gredynesse.”¹

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 146. p. 2. col. 2.

The adverbs Outforth, Inforth, Withoutforth, Withinforth (which were formerly common in the language), have appeared very strange to the moderns ; but with this explanation of FORTH, I suppose, they will not any longer seem either unnatural or extraordinary.

“ Within the hertes of folke shall be the biting conscience, and withoutforth shal be the worlde all brenning.”—Chaucer, Persons Tale, fol. 102. p. 1. col. 2.

“ Whan he was come unto his neces place,
 Where is my lady, to her folke (quod he);
 And they him tolde, and Inforth in gan pace,
 And founde two other ladyes sit and she.”

Troilus, boke 2. fol. 163. p. 2. col. 1.

“ And than al the derkenesse of his misknowing shall seme more evidently to the sight of his understandyng, than the sonne ne seemeth to the sight Without forthe.”—Boecius, boke 3. fol. 238. p. 2. col. 2.

“ Philosophers, that hyghten Stoiciens, wende that ymages and sensibilitics war emprinted into soules fro bodies Withoutforth.”—Ibid. boke 5. fol. 250. p. 2. col. 2.

“ There the vaylance of men is demed in riches Outforth, wenen men to haue no proper good in them selfe, but seche it in straunge thinges.”—Test of Loue, boke 2. fol. 316. p. 2. col. 2.

¹ I have been compelled to make the above long extract, that my reader's judgement may have fair play ; and that he may not be misled by the interpretation given of ASSETH in the glossary of Urry's edition of Chaucer ; where we are told, that ASSETH means—“ Assent, to Answer ; from the Anglo-Saxon Āreðian, affirmare.” When the reader recollects the suffysaunce which is spoken of in the first part of the extract, he will have little difficulty, I imagine, to perceive clearly what ASSETH here means : for the meaning of the whole passage is—suffisance alone makes riches ; which suffisance the miser's greediness will never permit him to obtain.

“The goodnesse (quod she) of a person maye not ben knowe Outforth, but by renome of the knowers.”—Test. of Loue, boke 2. fol. 319. p. 1. col. 2.

“But he that Outforth loketh after the wayes of this knot, connyng with which he shuld knowe the way Inforth, slepeth for the tyme; wherfore he that wol this way know, must leave the lokyng after false wayes Outforth, and open the eyen of his conscyence and unclose his herte.”—Ibid. boke 2. fol. 322. p. 1. col. 2.

“Euery herbe sheweth his vertue Outforthe from wythin.”—Ibid. boke 2. fol. 323. p. 1. col. 1.

“Loue peace Withoute forth, loue peace Withinforth, kepe peace with all men.”

“There is nothings hid from God. Thou shalte be found guilty in the judgmentes of God, though thou be hid to mens judgementes: for he beholdeth the hert, that is Withinforth.”—Tho. Lupset, Gathered Counsailes.

GADSO.

CAZZO, a common Italian oath (or rather obscenity, in lieu of an oath), first introduced about the time of James the First, and made familiar in our language afterwards by our affected travelled gentlemen in the time of Charles the Second.—See all our comedies about that period.

Ben Jonson ridiculed the affectation of this oath at its commencement, but could not stop its progress.

“These be our nimble-spirited CARSO’s, that ha’ their evasions at pleasure, will run over a bog like your wild Irish; no sooner started but they’ll leap from one thing to another, like a squirrel. Heigh! dance and do tricks in their discourse, from fire to water, from water to air, from air to earth: as if their tongues did but e’en lick the four elements over and away.”—Every Man out of his Humour, act 2. sc. 1.

MUCH. MORE. MOST.

These adverbs have exceedingly gravelled all our etymologists, and they touch them as tenderly as possible.

MUCH.

Junius, and Skinner (whom Johnson copies), for MUCH, irrationally refer us to the Spanish Mucho.

MORE.

Under the article MORE (that he may seem to say something on the subject), Junius gives us this so little pertinent or edifying piece of information:—"Anglicum interim more est inter illa, quæ Saxonicum A in o convertunt; sicuti videmus usu venisse in ban, bone, os, ossis; hal, whole, integer, sanus; ham, home, domus, habitatio; stan, stone, lapis," &c.

Skinner says—"MORE, Mo, ab A.S. Ma, Mapa, Mæpe, Mape, &c. Quid si omnia a Lat. Major?"

S. Johnson finds MORE to be adjective, adverb, and substantive. The adjective, he says, is—"The comparative of Some or Great." The adverb is—"The particle that forms the comparative degree."—"Perhaps some of the examples which are adduced under the adverb, should be placed under the substantive."—"It is doubtful whether the word, in some cases, be noun or adverb."

MOST.

Junius says, untruly—"MOST: Ex positivo nempe mæpe, fuit comparativus mæppe, et superlativus mæperɛ, et contracte mæpɛɛ.

Skinner—"Teut. Meist feliciter alludit Gr. μειστον, plurimum, maximum, contr. a μεγιστον."

S. Johnson again finds in MOST an adjective, an adverb, and a substantive. Of the adverb he says, it is—"The particle noting the superlative degree. Of the substantive he says—"This is a kind of substantive, being according to its signification, singular or plural." And he gives instances, as he conceives, of its plurality and singularity.—I have wasted more than a page in repeating what amounts to nothing.

Though there appears to be, there is in reality no irregularity in MUCH, MORE, MOST: nor indeed is there any such thing as capricious irregularity in any part of language.

In the Anglo-Saxon the verb Mapan, metere, makes regularly the præterperfect Mop, or Mope (as the præterperfect of Slagan is Sloh), and the past participle Mowen or Meopen, by the addition of the participial termination en, to the præterperfect. Omit the participial termination en (which omission was, and still is, a common practice through the whole language, with the Anglo-Saxon writers, the old English writers, and the moderns), and there will remain Mope or

Mow; which gives us the Anglo-Saxon Mope and our modern English word Mow: which words mean simply—that which is Mowed or Mown. And as the hay, &c. which was mown, was put together in a heap; hence, figuratively, Mope was used in Anglo-Saxon to denote any heap: although in modern English we now confine the application of it to country produce, such as Hay-mow, Barley-mow, &c.¹ This participle or substantive, (call it which you please; for, however classed, it is still the same word, and has the same signification,) Mow or Heap, was pronounced (and therefore written) with some variety, Ma, Mæ, Mo, Mope, Mow; which, being regularly compared, give

Ma . . .	Ma-er	(i. e. mape)	. . .	Ma-est	(i. e. mæɾt)
Mæ . . .	Mæ-er	(i. e. mæpe)	. . .	Mæ-est	(i. e. mæɾt)
Mope . .	Mow-er	(i. e. mope)	. . .	Mow-est	(i. e. moɾt)
Mo . . .	Mo-er	(i. e. MORE)	. . .	Mo-est	(i. e. MOST)

I have here printed in the Anglo-Saxon character, those words which have come down to us so written in the Anglo-Saxon writings: and in Italics, the same words in sound; but so written, as to show the written regularity of the comparison: and in capitals, the words which are used in what we call English; though indeed it is only a continuation of the Anglo-Saxon, with a little variation of the written character.

Mo (mope, acervus, heap), which was constantly used by all our old English authors, has with the moderns given place to MUCH:² which has not (as Junius, Wormius, and Skinner

¹ Gawin Douglas uses the word MOWE, for a heap of wood, or a funeral pile.

“Under the oppin sky, to this purpois,
Pas on, and of treis thou mak an bing
To be ane fyre, &c.
Tharfore scho has hir command done ilk dele.
But quhen the grete bing was upbeildit wele
Of aik treis, and fyrren schidis dry
Wythin the secrete cloys under the sky,
Aboue the MOWE the foresaid bed was maid.”

Booke 4. p. 117.

² [But Ma or Mo is never found except as the comparative; thus mycle ma, much more, ma ðonne, more than: while Mæpa, Mæpe, imagined of Mickle) been borrowed from μεγας, but is merely the diminutive of mo, passing through the gradual changes of Mokel, Mykel, Mochil, Muchel (still retained in Scotland), Moche, MUCH.

‘ Yes certes (quod she) Who is a frayler thyng than the fleshly body of a man, ouer whiche haue often tyme flyes, and yet lasse thyng than a flye, MOKEL myght in greuaunce and anoyenge.”—Chaucer, Test. of Loue, boke 2. fol. 319. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Opinion is while a thinge is in non certayne, and hydde frome mens very knowlegyng, and by no parfyte reason fully declared, as thus : yf the sonne be so MOKEL as men wenen, or els yf it be MORE than the erth.”—Ibid. boke 3. fol. 325. p. 2. col. 2.

“ A lytel misgoyng in the gynning causeth MYKEL errorr in the end.”—Ibid. boke 2. fol. 315. p. 2. col. 1.

“ O badde and straye bene thilke (richesse) that at their departinge maketh men teneful and sory, and in the gatheryng of hem make men nedy. MOCHE folke at ones mowen not togider MOCHE therof haue.”—Ibid. boke 2. fol. 316. p. 2. col. 1.

“ Good chylde (quod she) what echeth suche renome to the conscience of a wyse man, that loketh and measureth hys goodnesse not by sleuelesse wordes of the people, but by sothfastnesse of conscience : by God, nothyng. And yf it be fayre a mans name be eched by MOCHE folkes praysing, and fouler thyng that mo folke not praysen.”—Ibid. boke 2. fol. 319. p. 2. col. 1.

“ Also ryght as thou were ensample of MOCHE FOLDE errorr, righte so thou must be ensample of manysfolde correctioun.”—Ibid. boke 1. fol. 310. p. 1. col. 2.

NEVERTHELESS.

In our old authors written variously, Na-the-les, Ne-the-les, Nocht-the-les, Not-the-les, Never-the-later : its opposite also was used, Wel-the-later.

“ Truly I say for me, sythe I came thys Margarit to serue, durst I neuer me discouer of no maner disease, and WEL THE LATER hath myn herte hardyed such thynges to done, for the great bounties and worthy magnus, is positive, answering to the Teutonic Mar, Mer, and the Celtic Maior. With regard to Mickle, it constantly occurs in all the earliest Teutonic dialects :—Goth. MIKILAS. Francic Mihhil, A.S. Micel, Isl. Mikle, Su. G. Magle.—ED.]

refreshmentes that she of her grace goodly without anye desert on my halve ofte hath me rekened."—Test. of Loue, boke 3. fol. 332. p. 2. col. 1.

"Habyte maketh no monke, ne wearynge of gylte spurres maketh no knyghte: NEUERTHELATER in conforthe of thyne herte, yet wol I otherwyse answer."—Ibid. boke 2. fol. 322. p. 2. col. 2.

RATHER.

In English we have Rath, Rather, Rathest; which are simply the Anglo-Saxon Rað, Raðor, Raðort. celer, velox.

Some have derived this English word RATHER from the Greek; as Mer. Casaubon from οὐρανος, "quod sane (says Skinner) longius distat quam mane a vespere:" and others, with a little more plausibility, from ῥαδιος.

The Italians have received this same word from our Northern ancestors, and pronounce it Ratto, with the same meaning: which Menage derives either from Raptus or from Rapidus, "Raptus, Rapdo, Raddo, Ratto."

Skinner notices the expressions Rath fruit, and Rath wine, from the Anglo-Saxon Rað; of which, after Menage, he says—"Nescio an contract. a Lat. Rapidus."

Minshew derives RATHER from the Lat. Ratus. Ray has a proverb—"The Rath sower never borrows of the late."

S. Johnson cites Spenser (except himself, the worst possible authority for English words)—

"Thus is my harvest hasten'd all to Rathe."

And May—

"Rath ripe and purple grapes there be."

"Rath ripe are some, and some of later kind."

And Milton—

"Bring the Rathe primrose that forsaken dies,"

And he adds most ignorantly—"To have Rather. This I think a barbarous expression, of late intrusion into our language; for which it is better to say—will rather."

Dr. Newton, in a note on Lycidas, says of the word Rathe—"This word is used by Spenser, B. 3. cant. 3. st. 28.—

'Too Rathe cut off by practice criminal.'

"And Shepherd's Calendar,

'The Rather lambs been starved with cold.'

T. Warton, in his note on the same passage of Milton, says—"The particular combination of, Rathe primrose, is perhaps from a pastoral called a Palinode by E. B. (probably Edmond Bolton), in England's Helicon, edit. 1614. signat. B. 4.

'And made the Rathe and timely primrose grow.'

"In the west of England, there is an early species of apple called the Rathe-ripe. We have—'Rathe and late'—in a pastoral, in Davison's Poems, edit. 4. London, 1621. p. 177. In Bastard's Epigrams, printed 1598, I find—'The Rashed primrose and the violet.' Lib. i. epigr. 34. p. 12. 12mo. Perhaps Rashed is a provincial corruption from Rathe."

By the quotations of Johnson, Newton, and Warton, from Spenser, May, Bolton, Davison, and Bastard, a reader would imagine that the word RATHE was very little authorized in the language; and that it was necessary to hunt diligently in obscure holes and corners for an authority.

"And netheles there is no man
In all this worlde so wise, that can
Of loue temper the measure :
But as it falleth in auenture.
For witte ne strength maie not helpe'
And whiche els wolde him yelp,
Is RATHEST throwen under foote."

Gower, lib. 1. fol. 7. p. 2. col. 2.

"Some seyne he did well enough,
And some seyne, he did amis.
Diuers opinions there is.
And commonliche in euery nede
The werst speche is RATHEST herde."

lib. 3. fol. 59. p. 1. col. 1.

"That euery loue of pure kynde
Is fyrst forth drawe, well I fynde ;
But netheles yet ouer this Deserte dothe so, that it is
The RATHER had in many place."—lib. 4. fol. 72, p. 1. col. 1.

—"Who that is bolde,
And dar travaile, and undertake
The cause of loue, he shall be take
The RATHER unto loues grace."—lib. 4. fol. 75. p. 1. col. 2.

“ But fortune is of suche a sleyght,
That whan a man is most on height,
She maketh hym RATHEST for to falle.”

Gower, lib. 6. fol. 135. p. 2. col. 2.

“ Why ryse ye so RATHE? Ey, benedicite,
What eyleth you?”—Chaucer, Myllers Tale, fol. 15. p. 1. col. 1.

“ O dere cosyn, Dan Johan, she sayde,
What eyleth you so RATHE to a ryse?”

Shypmans Tale, fol. 69. p. 1. col. 2.

“ For hym my lyfe lyeth al in dout
But yf he come the RATHER out.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 141. p. 2. col. 1.

“ They wolde eftsones do you scathe
If that they myght, late or RATHE.”—Ibid. fol. 152. p. 1. col. 1.

“ And haue my trouth, but if thou finde it so,
I be thy bote, or it be ful longe,
To peces do me drawe, and sythen honge.
Ye, so sayst thou? (quod Troylus) alas :
But God wot it is naught the RATHER so.”

Troylus, boke 1. fol. 161. p. 2. col. 1.

“ Loke up I say, and tel me what she is
Anon, that I may gon about thy nede,
Knowe iche her aught, for my loue tel me this,
Than wold I hope RATHER for to spede.”

Ibid. boke 1, fol. 161. p. 2. col. 2.

“ And with his salte teeres gan he bathe
The ruby in his signet, and it sette
Upon the wexe delyuerlyche and RATHE.”

Ibid. boke 2. fol. 169. p. 1. col. 1.

“ But now to purpose of my RATHER speche.”

Ibid. boke 3. fol. 179. p. 2. col. 2.

“ These folke desiren nowe delyueraunce
Of Antenor that brought hem to mischaunce.
For he was after traytour to the toun
Of Troy alas ; they quitte him out to RATHE.”

Ibid. boke 4. fol. 183. p. 2. col. 1.

“ But he was slayne alas, the more harme is,
Unhappely at Thebes al to RATHE.”

Ibid. boke 5. fol. 195. p. 2. col. 1.

“ Yf I (quod she) haue understonden and knowen utterly the causes and the habite of thy malady, thou languyshest and art defected for desyre and talent of thy RATHER fortune. She that ylke fortune onelye that is chaunged as thou faynest to thewarde, hath perverted the cleronesse and the estate of thy corage."—Boecius, boke 2. fol. 225. p. 1. col. 2.

"Whylom there was a man that had assayed with stryuyngge wordes an other man, the which not for usage of very vertue, but for proude vayne glorye, had taken upon him falsely the name of a phylosophre. This RATHER man that I spake of, thought he wold assay, wheder he thilke were a phylosophre or no."—Ibid. boke 2. fol. 230. p. 2. col. 2.

"Diuyne grace is so great that it ne may not ben ful praysed, and this is only the maner, that is to say, hope and prayers. For which it semeth that men wol speke with God, and by reson of supplycacion bene conioyned to thylke clerenesse, that nys nat approched no RATHER or that men seken it and impetren it."—Ibid. boke 5. fol. 249. p. 2. col. 1.

"Graunt mercy good frende (quod he)
I thanke the, that thou woldest so ;
But it may neuer the RATHER be do,
No man may my sorowe glade."

Dreame of Chaucer, fol. 256. p. 1. col. 1.

"The RATHER spede, the soner may we go,
Great coste alway there is in taryenge,
And longe to sewe it is a wery thyng."

Assemble of Ladyes, fol. 275. p. 2. col. 2.

"Thilke sterres that ben cleped sterres of the northe, arysen RATHER than the degree of her longytude, and all the sterres of the southe, arysen after the degree of her longytude."—Astrolabye, fol. 280. p. 2. col. 1.

"But lesynges with her flatterye,
With fraude couered under a pytous face
Accept be nowe RATHEREST unto grace."

Blacke Knyght, fol. 289. p. 2. col. 2.

"That shal not nowe be tolde for me,
For it no nede is redily,
Folke can syng it bet than I,
For al mote out late or RATHER."

Fame, boke 3. fol. 302. p. 1. col. 2.

"Who was ycrowned? by God nat the strongest, but he that RATHEREST come and lengest abode and continued in the iourney and spared nat to trauayle."—Test. of Loue, boke 1. fol. 307. p. 1. col. 2.

"Euery glytteryng thinge is not golde, and under colour of fayre speche many vices may be hyd and conseled. Therefore I rede no wight to trust on you to RATHER, mens chere and her speche right guyleful is ful ofte."—Ibid. boke 2. fol. 314. p. 2. col. 2.

“Veryly it is proued that rychesse, dygnyte, and power, been not trewe waye to the knotte, but as RATHE by suche thynges the knotte to be unbound.”

“—— Than (quod she) wol I proue that shrewes as RATHE shal ben in the knotte as the good.”—Test. of Loue, boke 2. fol. 319. p. 1. col. 1.

“Ah, good nyghtyngale (quod I then)
A lytel haste thou ben to longe hen,
For here hath ben the leude cuckowe
And songen songes RATHER than hast thou.”

Cuckowe and Nyghtyngale, fol. 351. p. 1. col. 2.

“His feris has this pray ressaut RAITH,
And to thare meat addressis it for to graith.”

Douglas, booke 1. p. 19.

“Quhen Paris furth of Phryge, the Troyane hird
Socht to the ciete Laches in Sparta,
And thare the douchter of Leda stal awa,
The fare Helene, and to Troy tursit RAITH.”

Ibid. booke 7. p. 219.

“And scho hir lang round nek bane bowand RAITH,
To gif thaym souck, can thaym culze bayth.”

Ibid. booke 8. p. 266.

“The princis tho, quhilk suld this peace making,
Turnis towart the bricht sonnys uprisyng,
With the salt melder in thare handis RAITH.”

Ibid. booke 12. p. 413.

FIE ;

The imperative of the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon verb.
FIAN, Fian, To hate.

QUICKLY.

Quick-like : from Lpic, cpicu, cpicob, vivus, (as we still oppose the Quick to the Dead.) Lpic is the past participle of Lpiccian, vivificare. QUICKLY means, in a life-like or lively manner ; in the manner of a creature that has life.

SCARCE.

The Italians have the adjective Scarso :

“Queste parole assai passano il core
Al tristo padre, e non sapea che fare

Di racquistar la sua figlia e l' onore,
Perchè tutti i rimedj erano SCARSI."

Il Morgante, cant. 10. st. 128.

which Menage improbably derives from Exparcus. The same word in Spanish is written Escasso. Both the Italian and the Spanish words are probably of Northern origin. In Dutch Skaars is, rare, unfrequent. It is still commonly used as an adjective in modern English; but anciently was more common.

"Hast thou be SCARSE or large of gifte
Unto thy loue, whom thou seruest?
And saith the trowth, if thou hast bee
Unto thy loue or SCARSE or free."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 109. p. 1. col. 2.

"What man that SCARSE is of his good,
And wol not gyue, he shall nought take."

Ibid. fol. 109. p. 2. col. 1.

"That men holde you not to SCARCE, ne to sparyng."

Tale of Chaucer, fol. 80. p. 2. col. 1.

"Loke that no man for SCARCE the holde,
For that may greue the manyfolde."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 131. p. 1. col. 1.

SELDOM.

"I me reioyced of my lyberte
That SELDEN tyme is founde in mariage."

Clerke of Oxenf. Tale, fol. 46. p. 1. col. 1.

The Dutch have also the adjective Zelden, Selten: The Germans Selten: The Danes Seldsom: The Swedes Sellsynt:—rare, unusual, uncommon.

STARK.

According to S. Johnson this word has the following significations—Stiff, strong, rugged, deep, full, mere, simple, plain, gross. He says, "It is used to intend or augment the signification of a word: as, Stark mad, mad in the highest degree. It is now little used but in low language."

In the Anglo-Saxon Starc, Stearc, German Starck,

Dutch Sterk, Danish Stærk, Swedish Stark, as in the English, all mean Strong. It is a good English word; common in all our old writers, still retaining its place amongst the moderns, and never had an interval of disuse.

“ And she that helined was in STARKE stoures,
And wan by force townes stronge and toures.”

Chaucer, Monkes Tale, fol. 85. p. 2. col. 2.

“ But unto you I dare not lye,
But myght I felen or espye
That ye perceyued it nothyng,
Ye shulde haue a STARKE leasyng.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 154. p. 2. col. 2.

“ This egle, of which I haue you tolde,
Me flyeng at a swappe he hente,
And with his sours agayne up wente
Me caryeng in hys clawes STARKE
As lyghtly as I had ben a larke.”

Fame, boke 1. fol. 294. p. 2. col. 2.

“ The followand wynd blew STERKE in our tail.”

Douglas, booke 3. p. 71.

“ So that, my son, now art thou souir and STERK,
That the not nedis to haue ony fere.”

Ibid. booke 8. p. 265.

“ Turnus ane litil, thocht he was STARK and stout, Begouth frawart the bargane to withdraw.”

Ibid. booke 9. p. 306.

“ Sa thou me saif, thy pissance is sa STARK,
The Troianis glorie, nor thare victorie
Sall na thing change nor dymynew tharby.”

Ibid. booke 10. p. 336.

“ And at ane hie balk teyt up sche has
With ane loupe knot ane STARK corde or lace,
Quharewith hir self sche spilt with shameful dede.”

Ibid. booke 12. p. 432.

“ As fast lock'd up in sleep, as guiltless labour,
When it lies STARKLY in the traveller's bones.”

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, act 4. sc. 2.

“ 1 Boor. Come, English beer, hostess. English beer, by th' belly.

“ 2 Boor. STARK beer, boy : stout and strong beer. So. Sit down, lads, and drink me upsey-dutch. Frolick and fear not.”—Beaumont and Fletcher. Beggars Bush, act 3. sc. 1.

VERY;

Means True.

“ And it is clere and open that thilke sentence of Plato is VERY and sothe.”—Chaucer. Boecius, boke 4. fol. 241. p. 2. col. 2.

It is merely the French adjective Vrai, from the Italian, from the Latin. When this word was first adopted from the French, (and long after,) it was written by them, and by us, VERAY; which they have since corrupted to Vrai, and the English to VERY.

“ For if a kyng shall upon gesse
Without VERAY cause drede,
He maie be liche to that I rede.”

Gower, lib. 7. fol. 162. p. 2. col. 2.

“ Constantyne thensample and myrrour
To princes al, in humble buxuinnesse
To holy church O VERAY sustaynour.”

Prologue to Cant. Tales.

“ But as Christe was, whan he was on lyue,
So is he there VERAMENT”—(vraiment).

Plowmans Tale, fol. 99. p. 2. col. 1.

“ O thou, my chylde, do lerne, I the pray, Vertew and VERAY labour to assay.”

Douglas, booke 12. p. 425.

“ Disce, puer, virtutem ex me Verumque laborem :
Fortunam ex aliis.”¹—Virgil.

ONCE. AT ONCE. TWICE. THRICE.

Antiently written ANES, ANIS, ANYS, ONES, ONYS, TWIES,

¹ The word Aliis in this passage, should in a modern version be translated Lord Grenville, Mr. Rose, Mr. Dundas, Mr. Wyndham, Mr. Pitt, Lord Liverpool, &c.—who only assert modestly (what our pilfering stewards and bailiffs will shortly tell us), that they hold their emoluments of office by as good a title, as any man in England holds his private estate and fair-earned property; and immediately after prove to us, that they hold by a much better title.—Their proof is, for the present only a triple or quadruple (they may take half or two thirds of our income next year) additional assessment upon our innocent property; whilst their guilty emoluments of office (how earned we know) remain untouched.

TWYIS, TWYISE, THRIES, THRYIS, &c., are merely the Genitives¹ of Ane, An, ΤΥΛΙ, Tpa, Tpez, Tpiz, Дри, Дры, &c., i. e. One, Two, Three (The substantive Time, Turn, &c., omitted).

The Italian and French have no correspondent adverb: they say Une fois, deux fois, Una volta, due volte, &c. The Dutch have Eens for the same purpose; but often forego the advantage.

“ For ONES that he hath ben blithe
He shal ben after sorie THRIES.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 117. p. 1. col. 1.

“ For as the wylde wode rage
Of wyndes maketh the sea sauage,
And that was caulme bringeth to wawe,
So for defaut and grace of lawe
The people is stered all AT ONES.”

Ibid. lib. 7. fol. 166. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Ye wote yovr selfe, she may not wedde two
AT ONES.”—Knyghtes Tale, fol. 5. p. 2. col. 2.

“ Sythen Christ went neuer but ONYS
To weddyng.”—Wyfe of Bathe, Prol. fol. 34. p. 1. col. 1.

“ And first I shrew myself, both blode and bones,
If thou begyle me ofter than ONES.”

Nonnes Priest, fol. 91. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Sen Pallas mycht on Grekis tak sic wraik,
To birn thare schyppis, and all for ANIS saik
Droun in the seye.”—Douglas, booke 1. p. 14.

“ My faddir cryis, How ! feris, help away, Streik airis ATTANIS with al the force ze may.”

Ibid. booke 3. p. 8.

“ The feblit breith ful fast can bete and blaw,
Ne gat he lasare ANYS his aynd to draw.”—Ibid. booke 9. p. 307.

“ THRIES she turned hir aboute
And THRIES eke she gan downe loute.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 105. p. 1. col. 1.

¹ [See Mr. Price's note (²⁰) in p. 493 of his Edition of Warton's History of English Poetry, 8vo, Vol. ii. Appendix; and Mr. Stephenson's note in Boucher's Glossary, v. ANES, ATWYX. &c. Grimm points out a distinction between the genitival eines and the abstract einst, 'olim,' of the old German, still existing in the Swiss dialect, and probably in our provincial one'st, yanst. See Grammat. iii. 227, 228; Zahladverbia; and Additional Notes.—Ed.]

"She made a cercle about hym THRIES,
And efte with fire of sulphur TWIES."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 105. p. 2. col. 2.

"That hath been TWYSE hotte and TWYSE colde."

Chaucer, Cokes Prol. fol. 17. p. 2. col. 2.

"For as Senec sayth: He that ouercometh his hert, ouercometh TWISE."—Tale of Chaucer, fol. 82. p. 2. col. 2.

"In gold to graif thy fall TWYIS etlit he,
And TWYISE for reuth failgeis the faderis handis."

Douglas, booke 6. p. 163.

"He sychit profoundlye owthir TWYIS or THRYIS."

Ibid. booke 10. p. 349.

ATWO. ATHREE.

On τpa. On ѿpy. In two; In three. The Dutch have Intween; the Dances Itu.

"And Jason swore, and said ther,
That also wis God hym helpe,
That if Medea did hym helpe,
That he his purpose might wyne,
Thei shulde neuer part ATWYNNE."¹

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 102. p. 2. col. 1.

"That death us shulde departe ATWO."

Ibid. lib. 4. fol. 84. p. 1. col. 1.

"And eke an axe to smyte the corde ATWO."

Myllers Tale, fol. 14. p. 1. col. 1.

"Ne howe the fyre was couched fyrst with Stre,
And than with drye stickes clouen ATHRE."

Knyghtes Tale, fol. 11. p. 1. col. 1.

ALONE. ONLY.

All-one. One-like. In the Dutch, Een is ONE: All-een, ALONE: and All-een-lyk, ONLY.

"So came she to him priuely,
And that was, wher he made his mone,
Within a gardeine ALL him ONE."

Gower, lib. 1. fol. 25. p. 2. col. 1.

"The sorowe, doughter, which I make,
Is not ALL ONELY for my sake,
But for the bothe, and for you all."

Ibid. lib. 1. fol. 25. p. 2. col. 2.

¹["The vail of the temple was rent in twain."—Matt. xxvii. 51.—ED.]

“ All other leches he forsoke,
And put him out of auenture
ALONLY to God's cure.”—Gower, lib. 2. fol. 45. p. 2. col. 2.

“ And thus full ofte a daie for nought
(Saufe ONLICHE of myn owne thought)
I am so with my seluen wroth.”—Ibid. lib. 3. fol. 47. p. 2. col. 1.

“ Thre yomen of his chambre there
ALL ONLY for to serue hym were.”
Ibid. lib. 6. fol. 137. p. 1. col. 2.

“ For ALL ONELYCHE of gentill loue
My courte stont all courtes aboue.”
Ibid. lib. 8. fol. 187. p. 1. col. 2.

“ Thou wost well that I am Venus, Whiche ALL ONELY my lustes seche.”
Ibid. lib. 8. fol. 187. p. 2. col. 1.

ANON.

Junius is right. ANON means In one (subauditur instant, moment, minute).

“ For I woll ben certayne a wedded man,
And that ANON in all the hast I can.”
Marchauntes Tale, fol. 29. p. 1. col. 2.

“ Than Dame Prudence, without delay or tarieng, sent ANONE her messenger.”—Tale of Chaucer, fol. 82. p. 1. col. 2.

All our old authors use ANON for immediately, instantly.

Mr. Tyrwhitt, vol. 4. note to verse 381 (Prol. to Canterb. Tales), says—“ From Pro nunc, I suppose, came For the nunc; and so, For the Nonce.¹ Just as from Ad nunc came ANON.”—I agree with Mr. Tyrwhitt, that the one is just as likely as the other.

In the Anglo-Saxon, An means One, and On means In: which word On we have in English corrupted to An before a vowel, and to A before a consonant; and in writing and speaking have connected it with the subsequent word: and from this double corruption has sprung a numerous race of Adverbs;

¹ [The reader is referred to Mr. Price's explanation of this phrase in his Appendix to Vol. ii. of Warton, 8vo edition, p. 496; where he shows it to be “for then ænes,” “for the once,” by transference of the final consonant of the article in the oblique case then to the initial vowel of the following word—as in “at the nende,” “at the nale,” for “at than (the) end,” &c. See also Grimm, iii. 107, in ein: and Boucher's Glossary, v. ATTEN.—ED.]

which (only because there has not been a similar corruption) have no correspondent adverbs in other languages.¹

Thus from On dæg, On niht, On lenge, On bræde, On bæc, On lande, On līfe, On middan, On rihte, On τρα, On pez; we have Aday, Anight, Along, Abroad, Aback, Aland, Alive, Amid, *Arigh*t, Atwo, Away: and from On Ān, ANON.

Gower and Chaucer write frequently In one: and Douglas, without any corruption, purely ON ANE.

“Thus sayand, scho the bing ascendis ON ANE.”

Douglas, booke 4. p. 124.

IN A TRICE.

Skinner, not so happily as usual, says—“In a Trice, fort. a Dan. at reyse, surgere, se erigere, attollere, q. d. tantillo temporis spatio quanto quis se attollere potest.”

S. Johnson—“believes this word comes from Trait, Fr., corrupted by pronunciation. A short time, an instant, a stroke.”

The etymology of this word is of small consequence; but, I suppose, we have it from the French² Trois: and (in a manner similar to ANON) it means—In the time in which one can count Three—One, Two, Three, and away.—Gower writes it TREIS.

“All sodenly, as who saith TREIS,
Where that he stode in his paleis,
He toke him from the mens sight,
Was none of them so ware, that might
Set eie where he become.”—Gower, lib. 1. fol. 24. p. 2. col. 1.

The greater part of the other adverbs have always been well understood: such as, Gratis, Alias, Amen, Alamode, Indeed, In fact, Methinks,³ Forsooth, Insooth, &c.

¹ [Here Mr. Tooke appears to be in error. A collection of them is given by Grimm, under the head (V.) Præpositionale substantivische adverbia; such as, in rihtî, enrihte, enwëge, â braut, &c.—Grammat. iii. 144, 155.—ED.]

² [But see Grimm, iii. 232-3.]

³ [Methinks:—‘it appears to me:’ Germ. ‘mich dunkt.’ It is the verb impersonal, governing the prefixed pronoun as Webster correctly says, in the dative:]

“Dampnith and savith as him thinke.”—Plowmans Tale, 2164.

The explanation in Richardson’s Dictionary, “It thinketh or causeth me to think,” is absurd. Wachter distinguishes between dunken

B.—But I suppose there are some adverbs which are merely cant words; belonging only to the vulgar; and which have therefore no certain origin nor precise meaning; such as SPICK and SPAN, &c.

SPICK, SPAN.

H.—I will not assert that there may not be such; but I know of none of that description. It is true S. Johnson says of Spick and Span, that “he should not have expected to find this word authorized by a polite writer.” “Span new,” he says, “is used by Chaucer,¹ and is supposed to come from spannan, To stretch, Sax., expandere, Lat., whence span. Span new is therefore originally used of cloth, new extended or dressed at the clothier’s: and spick and span new, is, newly extended on the spikes or tenters. It is, however, a low word.” In spick and span, however, there is nothing stretched upon spikes and tenters but the etymologist’s ignorance. In Dutch they say Spikspelder-nieuw. And spyker means a warehouse or magazine. Spil or Spel means a spindle, schiet-spoel, the weaver’s shuttle; and spoelder the and denken, which he says Junius has confounded. Is this one of those which Mr. Richardson terms Wachter’s “unnecessary distinctions?” See Additional Notes.—Ed.]

¹ Chaucer uses it, in the third book of Troylus, fol. 181. p. 2. col. 1.

“This is a worde for al, that Troylus
Was neuer ful to speke of this matere.
And for to praysen unto Pandarus
The bounte of his right lady dere,
And Pandarus to thanke and maken chere.
This tale was aye SPAN newe to begynne,
Tyl that the nyght departed hem atwynne.”

But I see no reason why Chaucer should be blamed for its use; any more than Shakespeare for using Fire-new, on a much more solemn occasion.

“Maugre thy strength, youth, place and eminence,
Despight thy victor sword, and Fire-new fortune,
Thy valour and thy heart,—thou art a traitor.”

King Lear, act 5. sc. 3.

[“Armado is a most illustrious wight,
A man of fire-new words, fashion’s own knight.”

Love’s Labour’s Lost, act i. sc. 1.

“Your fire-new stamp of honour is scarce current.”

Richard III., act 1. sc. 3.]

shuttle-thrower. In Dutch, therefore, Spik-spelder-nieuw means, new from the warehouse and the loom.

In German they say—Span-neu and Funckel-neu. Spange means any thing shining; as Funckel means, To glitter or sparkle.

In Danish, Funkcelnye.

In Swedish, Spitt spangande ny.

In English we say Spick and Span-new, Fire-new, Brand-new. The two last Brand and Fire speak for themselves. Spick and Span-new means shining new from the warehouse.

AYE. YEA. YES.

B.—You have omitted the most important of all the Adverbs—AYE and NO. Perhaps because you think Greenwood has sufficiently settled these points—“Ay,” he says, “seems to be a contraction of the Latin word Aio, as Nay is of Nego. For our Nay, Nay; Ay, Ay; is a plain imitation of Terence’s Negat quis? Nego. Ait? Aio.” Though I think he might have found a better citation for his purpose—“An nata est sponsa prægna? Vel ai, vel nega.”

H.—I have avoided AYE and NO, because they are two of the most mercenary and mischievous words in the language, the degraded instruments of the meanest and dirtiest traffic in the land. I cannot think they were borrowed from the Romans even in their most degenerate state. Indeed the Italian, Spanish and French¹ affirmative adverb, Si, is derived from the Latin, and means Be it (as it does when it is called an hypothetical conjunction). But our Aye, or Yea, is the Imperative of a verb of northern extraction; and means—Have it, possess it, enjoy it. And YES, is Ay-es, Have, possess, enjoy that. More immediately, perhaps, they are the French singular and plural Imperative Aye and Ayez; as our corrupted O-yes of the cryer, is no other than the French Imperative Oyez, Hear, Listen.¹

¹ The French have another (and their principal) affirmative adverb, Oui: which, Menage says, some derive from the Greek οὐροσι, but which he believes to be derived from the Latin Hoc est, instead of which was pronounced Hoce, then Oe, then Oue, then Oi, and finally Ouy. But (though rejected by Menage) Oui is manifestly the past participle of Ouir, to hear: and is well calculated for the purpose of assent: for when the proverb says—“Silence gives consent,”—it is always understood of the silence, not of a deaf or absent person, but of one who has both heard and noticed the request.

Danish, Ejer, To possess, have, enjoy. Eja, Aye or yea. Eje, possession. Ejer, possessor.

Swedish, Ega, To possess. Ja, aye, yea. Egare, possessor.

German, Ja, aye, yea. Eigener, possessor, owner. Eigen, own.

Dutch, Eigenen, To possess. Ja, aye, yea. Eigenschap, Eigendom, possession, property. Eigenaar, owner, proprietor.

Anglo-Sax. Ægen, own. Ægende, proprietor. Ægennýrre, property.

NOT. NO.

As little do I think, with Greenwood, that NOT, or its abbreviate NO, was borrowed from the Latin; or, with Minshew, from the Hebrew; or, with Junius, from the Greek. The inhabitants of the North could not wait for a word expressive of dissent, till the establishment of those nations and languages; and it is itself a surly sort of word, less likely to give way and to be changed than any other used in speech. Besides, their derivations do not lead to any meaning, the only object which can justify any etymological inquiry. But we need not be any further inquisitive, nor I think doubtful, concerning the origin and signification of NOT and NO, since we find that in the Danish Nödig, and in the Swedish Nödig, and in the Dutch Noode, Node, and No, mean, averse, unwilling.²

¹ “ And after on the daunce went
Largesse, that set al her entent
For to ben honorable and free,
Of Alexander’s kynne was she,
Her most ioye was ywis,

Whan that she yafe, and sayd : HAUE THIS.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 125. p. 2. col. 1.

Which might, with equal propriety, have been translated,

“ When she gave, and said YES.”

² M. L’Eveque, in his “ Essai sur les rapports de la langue des Slaves avec celle des anciens habitans du Latium,” (prefixed to his History of Russia,) has given us a curious etymology of three Latin adverbs; which I cannot forbear transcribing in this place, as an addi-

And I hope I may now be permitted to have done with Etymology: for though, like a microscope, it is sometimes useful to discover the minuter parts of language which would other-tional confirmation of my opinion of the Particles.—“Le changement de l'o en A doit à peine être regardé comme une altération. En effet ces deux lettres ont en Slavon tant d'affinité, que les Russes prononcent en A le tiers au moins des syllabes qu'ils écrivent par un o.

“Le mot qui signifioit auparavant (before Terra was used) la surface de la terre; ce mot en Slavon est POLE; qui par l'affinité de l'o avec l'A, a pu se changer en PALE. Ce qui me fait présumer que ce mot se trouvoit aussi en Latin, c'est qu'il reste un verbe qui paroît formé de ce substantif; c'est le verbe PALO ou PALARE, errer dans le campagne: PALANS, qui erre de côté et d'autre, qui court les champs. L'adverbe PALAM tire son origine du même mot. Il signifie manifestement, à découvert. Or, qu'est ce qui se fait à découvert pour des hommes qui habitent des tentes ou des cabannes? C'est ce qui se fait en plein champs. Ce mot PALAM semble même dans sa formation avoir plus de rapport à la langue Slavonne qu' à la Latine. Il semble qu'on dise PALAM pour POLAMI par les champs, à travers les champs. Ce qui me confirme dans cette idée, c'est que je ne me rappelle pas qu'il y ait en Latin d'autre adverbe qui ait une formation semblable, si ce n'est son opposé, CLAM, qui veut dire secrètement, en cachette; et qui me paroît aussi Slavon. CLAM se dit pour KOLAMI, et par une contraction très conforme au génie de la langue Slavonne, KLAMI, au milieu des Pieux: c'est à dire dans des cabannes qui étoient formées de Pieux revêtus d'écorces, de peaux, ou de branchages.

“J'oubliois l'adverbe CORAM, qui veut dire Devant, en présence.—‘Il diffère de PALAM (dit Ambroise Calepin) en ce qu'il se rapporte seulement à quelques personnes, et PALAM se rapporte à toutes: il entraîne d'ailleurs avec lui l'idée de proximité.’—Il a donc pu marquer autrefois que l'action se passoit en présence de quelqu'un dans un lieu circonscrit ou fermé. Ainsi on aura dit CORAM pour KORAMI, ou, Mejdou Korami; parce que la clôture des habitations étoit souvent faite d'écorce, Kora.”

I am the better pleased with M. L'Eveque's etymology, because he had no system to defend, and therefore cannot be charged with that partiality and prejudice, of which, after what I have advanced, I may be reasonably suspected. Nor is it the worse, because M. L'Eveque appears not to have known the strength of his own cause: for CLAM was antiently written in Latin calim: (though Festus, who tells us this, absurdly derives clam from clavibus, “quod his, quæ celare volumus, claudimus:”) and cala was an old Latin word for wood, or logs, or stakes. So Lucilius (quoted by Servius), “Scinde, puer, Calam, ut caleas.” His derivation is also still further analogically fortified by the Danish correspondent adverbs: for in that language Geheim, geheimt, I Hemmelighed (from Hiem, home), and I enrum (i. e. in a room), supply the place of Clam, and Fordagen (or, in the face of day) supplies the place of Palam.

wise escape our sight ; yet is it not necessary to have it always in our hands, nor proper to apply it to every object.

B.—If your doctrine of the Indeclinables (which I think we have now pretty well exhausted) is true, and if every word in all languages has a separate meaning of its own, why have you left the conjunction THAT undecyphered ? Why content yourself with merely saying it is an Article, whilst you have left the Articles themselves unclassed and unexplained ?

H.—I would fain recover my credit with Mr. Burgess, at least upon the score of liberality. For the freedom (if he pleases, harshness) of my strictures on my "predecessors on the subject of language," I may perhaps obtain his pardon, when he has learned from Montesquieu that—"Rien ne réculé plus le progrès des connoissances, qu'un mauvais ouvrage d'un auteur célèbre : parcequ'avant d'instruire, il faut détromper;" or from Voltaire, that—"La faveur prodiguée aux mauvais ouvrages, est aussi contraire aux progrès de l'esprit, que le déchainement contre les bons." But Mr. Burgess himself has undertaken to explain the Pronouns : and if I did not leave the field open to him (after his undertaking) he might perhaps accuse me of illiberality towards my followers also. I hope the title will not offend him ; but I will venture to say that, if he does any thing with the pronouns, he must be contented to follow the etymological path which I have traced out for him. Now the Articles, as they are called, trench so closely on the Pronouns, that they ought to be treated of together ; and I rather chuse to leave one conjunction unexplained, and my account of the Articles imperfect, than forestall in the smallest degree any part of Mr. Burgess's future discovery. There is room enough for both of us. The garden of science is overrun with weeds ; and whilst every coxcomb in literature is anxious to be the importer of some new exotic, the more humble, though (at this period of human knowledge especially) more useful business of sarculation (to borrow an exotic from Dr. Johnson) is miserably neglected.

B.—If you mean to publish the substance of our conversation, you will probably incur more censure for the subject of your inquiry, than for your manner of pursuing it. It will be said to be ὑπερ ὅπου οὐκ ἔστι.

H.—I know for what building I am laying the foundation :

and am myself well satisfied of its importance. For those who shall think otherwise, my defence is ready made :

“ Se questa materia non, è degna,
Per esser piu leggieri,
D’ un huom che voglia parer saggio e grave,
Scusatelo con questo ; che s’ ingegna
Con questi van pensieri
Fare il suo tristo tempo piu suave :
Perche altrove non have
Dove voltare il viso ;
Che gli è stato interciso
Mostrar con altre imprese altra virtute.”

END OF THE FIRST PART.

ΕΠΕΑ ΠΤΕΡΟΕΝΤΑ,

PART II.

TO MESSIEURS

JAMES HAYGARTH.	ROBERT MAIRIS.
THOMAS HARRISON.	WILLIAM COOKE.
EDWARD HALE.	CHARLES PRATT.
THOMAS DRANE.	MATTHIAS DUPONT.	} ¹
MATTHEW WHITING.	WILLIAM HARWOOD.
NORRISON COVERDALE.	HENRY BULLOCK.

To you, Gentlemen of my Jury, I present this small portion of the fruits of your integrity; which decided in my favour the Bill of Chancery filed against my life ;²

And to my learned Counsel,

THE HON. THOMAS ERSKINE.
VICARY GIBBS, Esq. ;

And their Assistants,

HENRY DAMPIER, Esq.
FELIX VAUGHAN, Esq.
JOHN GURNEY, Esq.

¹ [These three were challenged by the Attorney-General.]

² The fears of my printer* (which I cannot call unfounded, in the present degraded state of the press) do not permit me to expose (as ought to be done) the circumstances producing, preceding, accompanying, and following my strange trial of six days for High Treason ; or to make any remarks on the important changes which have taken place in our criminal legal proceedings ; and the consequent future (insecurity) of the lives of innocent English subjects.

[* Mr. Deodatus Bye.—ED.]

“ De moy voyant n'estre faict aulcun prix digne d'œuvre, et considérant par tout ce très-noble royaume ung chascun aujourd'huy soy instamment exercer et travailler, part à la fortification de sa patrie, et la deffendre : part au repoulement des ennemis, et les offendre—le tout en police tant belle, en ordonnance si mirifique, et à proufit, tant évident pour l'advenir. Par doncques n'estre adscript et en ranc mis des nostres en partie offensive, qui m'ont estimé trop imbecille et impotent : de l'autre qui est deffensive n'estre employé aulcunement : ay imputé à honte plus que médiocre, estre veu spectateur ocieux de tant vaillans, diserts et chevalereux personaiges qui en veue et spectacle de toute Europe jouent ceste insigne Fable et Tragique-comedie, ne m'esvertuer de moy-mesme, et non y consommer ce rien mon tout, qui me restoit.”—Rabelais, Prol. to 3rd book: edit. Du Chat. 1741.

“ The better please, the worse despise, I aske no more.”
Last line of the Epilogue to the Shepherds Calender.

ΕΠΕΑ ΠΤΕΡΟΕΝΤΑ, &c.

PART II.

CHAPTER I.

RIGHTS OF MAN.

*F.*¹—BUT your Dialogue, and your Politics, and your bitter Notes——

H.—Cantantes, my dear Burdett, minus via lædit.

F.—Cantantes, if you please ; but bawling out the Rights of Man, they say, is not singing.

H.—To the ears of man, what music sweeter than the Rights of man ?

F.—Yes. Such music as the whistling of the wind before a tempest. You very well know what these gentlemen think of it. You cannot have forgotten “ Sir, Whenever I hear of the word RIGHTS, I have learned to consider it as preparatory to some desolating doctrine. It seems to me, to be productive of some wide-spreading ruin, of some wasting desolation.”—Canning's Speech.

And do you not remember the enthusiasm with which these sentiments were applauded by the House, and the splendid rewards which immediately followed this declaration ? For no other earthly merit in the speaker that Œdipus himself could have discovered.

H.—It is never to be forgotten. Pity their ignorance.

F.—Punish their wickedness.

H.—We shall never, I believe, differ much in our actions,

¹ [The persons of the dialogue : H. the author ; F. Sir Francis Burdett, Bart.—ED.]

wishes, or opinions. I too say with you—Punish the wickedness of those mercenaries who utter such atrocities: and do you, with me, pity the ignorance and folly of those regular governments who reward them: and who do not see that a claim of RIGHTS by their people, so far from treason or sedition, is the strongest avowal they can make of their subjection: and that nothing can more evidently show the natural disposition of mankind to rational obedience, than their invariable use of this word RIGHT, and their perpetual application of it to all which they desire, and to every thing which they deem excellent.

F.—I see the wickedness more plainly than the folly; the consequence staring one in the face: for, certainly, if men can claim no RIGHTS, they cannot justly complain of any WRONGS.

H.—Most assuredly. But your last is almost an identical proposition; and you are not accustomed to make such. What do you mean by the words RIGHT and WRONG?

F.—What do I mean by those words? What every other person means by them.

H.—And what is that?

F.—Nay, you know that as well as I do.

H.—Yes. But not better: and therefore not at all.

F.—Must we always be seeking after the meaning of words?

H.—Of important words we must, if we wish to avoid important error. The meaning of these words especially is of the greatest consequence to mankind; and seems to have been strangely neglected by those who have made the most use of them.

F.—The meaning of the word RIGHT?—Why—It is used so variously, as substantive, adjective, and adverb; and has such apparently different significations (I think they reckon between thirty and forty), that I should hardly imagine any one single explanation of the term would be applicable to all its uses.

We say—A man's RIGHT.

A RIGHT conduct.

A RIGHT reckoning.

A RIGHT line.

The RIGHT road.

To do RIGHT.

To be in the RIGHT.

To have the RIGHT on one's side.

The RIGHT hand.

RIGHT itself is an abstract idea: and, not referring to any sensible objects, the terms which are the representatives of abstract ideas are sometimes very difficult to define or explain.

H.—Oh! Then you are for returning again to your convenient abstract ideas; and so getting rid of the question.

F.—No. I think it worth consideration. Let us see how Johnson handles it. He did not indeed acknowledge any RIGHTS of the people; but he was very clear concerning Ghosts and Witches, all the mysteries of divinity, and the sacred, indefeasible, inherent, hereditary RIGHTS of Monarchy. Let us see how he explains the term.

RIGHT——

RIGHT——

RIGHT——

No. He gives no explanation:¹—Except of RIGHT hand.

H.—How does he explain that?

F.—He says, RIGHT hand means——“Not the Left.”

H.—You must look then for LEFT hand. What says he there?

F.—He says—LEFT——“sinistrous, Not right.”

H. Aye. So he tells us again that RIGHT is——“Not wrong,” and WRONG is——“Not right.”²

But seek no further for intelligence in that quarter; where nothing but fraud, and cant, and folly is to be found—mis-

¹ Johnson is as bold and profuse in assertion, as he is shy and sparing in explanation. He says that RIGHT means——“True.” Again, that it means——“passing true judgment,” and——“passing a judgment according to the truth of things.” Again, that it means——“Happy.” And again, that it means——“Perpendicular.” And again, that it means——“In a great degree.”

All false, absurd, and impossible.

² Our lawyers give us equal satisfaction. Say they——“DROIT est, ou lun ad chose que fuit tolle d'auter per Tort; le challenge ou le claim de luy que doit aver ceo, est terme DROIT.”

“RIGHT is, where one hath a thing that was taken from another wrongfully; the challenge or claim of him that ought to have it, is called RIGHT.”——Termes de la Ley.

[See how Dr. Taylor sweats, in his chapter of LAW and RIGHT, in his Elements of Civil Law.

“Jus is an equivocal word, and stands for many senses, according to leading, mischievous folly; because it has a sham appearance of labour, learning, and piety.

RIGHT is no other than RECT-um (Regitum), the past participle of the Latin verb Regere.¹ Whence in Italian you have RITTO; and from Dirigere, DIRITTO, DRITTO: whence the French have their antient DROICT, and their modern DROIT. The Italian DRITTO and the French DROIT being no other than the past participle Direct-um.²

its different use and acceptation. Some lawyers reckon up near forty. From whence it follows that the Emperor and his lawyers, who begin their works with definition, would have done better if they had proceeded more philosophico, and distinguished before they had defined.

"Therefore, in this great ambiguity of signification, what relief can be expected must be had from the most simple and natural distribution; and this is what I am endeavouring."—Taylor's Elements of Civil Law, p. 40. "JURI operam daturum, prius nosse oportet, unde nomen JURIS descendat."—Ib. p. 55.

"Jus generale est: sed Lex juris est species. Jus ad non scripta etiam pertinet, Leges ad Jus scriptum." So says Servius, ad Virg. l. Æn. 511. In this Dr. Taylor thinks Servius mistaking. I think the Doctor greatly mistaking, and Servius a good expositor.]

¹ It cannot be repeated too often, that, in Latin, G should always be pronounced as the Greek Γ; and C as the Greek Κ. If Regere had been pronounced in our manner, i. e. Redjere; its past participle would have been Redjitum, Retchtum, not Rectum. And if Facere, instead of Fakere, had been pronounced Fassere; its past participle would have been Fassitum, Fastum; not Fakitum, Faktum.

[XEIP, MANUS. Xσιρ-siv—Xσιρ-spi, i. e. Ger-ere. Rem, or Res-gerere, Re-gerere—Re-gere. So Gerere—Gessi—Re-gessi, Regsi, Rexi.

"Et quidem, initio civitatis nostræ, populus, sine Lege certa, sine Jure certo, primum agere instituit; omniaque MANU a regibus gubernabantur." Dis. lib. 1. Tit. 2. lex 2. § 1.

"MANUS (says Dr. Taylor) is generally taken for power or authority, for an absolute, despotic, or unlimited controul. So Cicero (pro Quintio)—'Omnes quorum in alterius MANU vita posita est, sæpius illud cogitant, quod possit is, cujus in DITIONE et POTESTATE sunt, quam quid debeat, facere.' And Seneca (iii. Controv.)—'Nemo potest alium in sua MANU habere, qui ipse in aliena est.' To bring home the word therefore, and to our purpose, MANUS, when applied to government, is that arbitrary kind of administration, which depends rather upon the will of one than the consent of many."—Taylor's Elements of Civil Law, p. 6.]

[The following are from Ælfric's glossary: "Fas, Gober riht. Jus, manrc riht. Jus naturale, Gecynbe riht. Jus publicum, Ealþopmanna riht. Jus Quiritum, Feala runþer riht."—ED.]

² This important word RECTUM is unnoticed by Vossius. And of

In the same manner our English word JUST is the past participle of the verb jubere.¹

the etymology of JUSTUM he himself hazards no opinion. What he collects from others concerning Rego and Jus, will serve to let the reader know what sort of etymology he may expect from them on other occasions.

"Rego, et Rex (quod ex Regis contractum) quibusdam placet esse a ῥέγω, id est, facio. Isidorus Regem ait dici a recte agendo. Sed hæc Stoica est allusio. Nam planum est esse a Rego. Hoc Caninius et Nunnæius non absurde pro Rago dici putant: esseque id ab ῥέγω, κατὰ μεταθεσιν. Sed imprimis assentio doctissimo Francisco Junio, qui suspicatur Rego, omniaque ejus conjugata, venire a nomine Rac, quod Babylonii Regem notabat, &c.

"Jus forense a juvando aut jubendo dici putant. Alii jus quidem culinarium a juvando deducunt; forense autem a jubendo. Recentiores quidam mirificas originationes commenti sunt. Sane Franciscus Connarus jus civile dici ait a juxta; quia juxta legem sit, et ei adsequetur et accommodetur, veluti suæ regulæ: quod etiam etymon adfert Jod. de Salus. At Galeotus Martius et Franciscus Sanctius trahunt, Jus prima sua significatione signare olera aut pullum: sed quia in conviviiis pares unicuique partes dabantur, ideo metaphorice Jus vocatum, quod unum unicuique tribuit. Scipio Gentilis scribit—cum prisca in agris viverent, sæpeque infirmiores opprimerentur a potentioribus, eos qui afficerentur, ad misericordiam excitandam ius ius solitos exclamare. Vult igitur ab ius, JUS (ut veteres loquebantur) dictum esse: quia infirmiores nil nisi JUS cupiant atque expostulent.

"Alteram quoque ἰουσιολογίαν idem adfert; ut a Jove sit JUS; quemadmodum Græcis Δίκη (ut aiunt) quasi Διὸς ποῦρην, Jovis filia. Sane verisimilior hæc etymologia quam prior; quam et ii sequuntur, qui ius dici volunt quasi Jovis Os; quia nempe id demum justum sit, quod Deus sit profatus."

¹["Quod si populorum JUSSIS, si principum decretis, si sententiis judicium JURA constituerentur."—Cicero de Leg. lib. 1. 5.]

"Qui perniciose et injusta populis JUSSA descripserint."—Ibid. 1. 16.]

"The old Romans used JURA [i. e. Iussa] for what we now write JURA. Quinctilian, 1—7, says the same." See Dr. Taylor, Civil Law, p. 42.]

"Nel principio del mondo, sendo li habitatori rari vissono un tempo dispersi à similitudine delle bestie: dipoi multiplicando la generazione, si ragunorno insieme, et per potersi meglio difendere, cominciarono a riguardare fra loro, quello che fusse più robusto et di maggior onore, et feciono come capo, et l'obedivano. Da questo nacque la cognizione delle cose honeste et buone, differenti dalle perniciose et ree; perchè veggendo che se uno noceva al suo benefattore, ne veniva odio et compassione tragli huomini, biasimando gli ingrati et honorando quelli che fussero grati, et pensando ancora che quelle medesime ingiurie potevano essere fatte a loro; per fuggire simile male, si riducevano a fare leggi, ordinarne punizioni a chi contra facesse; donde venne la cognizione della Justitia."—Macchiavelli, Discorsi sopra Tito Livio, lib. 1. cap. 2.]

DECREE, EDICT, STATUTE, INSTITUTE, MANDATE, PRECEPT, are all past participles.

F.—What then is LAW ?

H.—In our antient books it was written Laugh, Lagh, Lage, and Ley; as Inlaugh, Utlage, Hundred-Lagh, &c.

It is merely the past tense and past participle Laȝ or Læȝ,¹ of the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon verb ΛΑΓΓΑΝ, Lecȝan, ponere: and it means (something or any thing, Chose, Cosa, Aliquid) Laid down—as a rule of conduct.

Thus, When a man demands his RIGHT; he asks only that which it is Ordered he shall have.

A RIGHT conduct is, that which is Ordered.

A RIGHT reckoning is, that which is Ordered.

A RIGHT line is, that which is Ordered or directed—(not a random extension, but) the shortest between two points.

THE RIGHT road is, that Ordered or directed to be pursued, (for the object you have in view.)²

To do RIGHT is, to do that which is Ordered to be done.

To be in the RIGHT is, to be in such situation or circumstances as are Ordered.

To have RIGHT or LAW on one's side is, to have in one's favour that which is Ordered or Laid down.

A RIGHT and JUST action is, such a one as is Ordered and commanded.

A JUST man is, such as he is commanded to be—*qui Leges Juraque servat*³—who observes and obeys the things Laid down and commanded.

¹ [On ðam fīf bocum ðe Moȝres appaȝ Leuiticus is ȝeo ðriððe. Numepur ȝeoðe. ȝeo fīfte ȝȝ ȝehaten Deuteponomium. ðæt ȝȝ oðer LĀLU. Ælfric. De Veteri Testamento.]

² ["All keepe the broad high way, and take delight
With many rather for to goe astray,
And be partakers of their evill plight,
Then with a few to walke the RIGHTEST way."

Spenser's Faerie Queene, booke 1. canto 10. stanza 10.]

³ It will be found hereafter that the Latin Lex (i. e. Legs) is no other than our ancestors' past participle Læȝ. But this intimation (though in its proper place here) comes before the reader can be ripe for it.

In the mean time he may, if he pleases, trifle with Vossius, concerning Lex:—

"LEX, ut Cic. 1 de Leg. et Varro, v. de L. L. testantur, ita dicta ;

The RIGHT hand is, that which Custom and those who have brought us up have Ordered or directed us to use in preference, when one hand only is employed: and the LEFT hand is, that which is Leaved, Leav'd, Left; or, which we are taught to Leave out of use on such an occasion. So that LEFT, you see, is also a past participle.

F.—But if the laws or education or custom of any country should order or direct its inhabitants to use the LEFT hand in preference; how would your explanation of RIGHT hand apply to them? And I remember to have read in a voyage of De Gama's to Kalekut, (the first made by the Portuguese round Africa,) that the people of Melinda, a polished and flourishing people, are all Left-handed.¹

H.—With reference to the European custom, the author describes them truly. But the people of Melinda are as Right-handed as the Portuguese: for they use that hand in quia Legi soleat, quo omnibus innotescat. Sunt quibus a Legendo quidem dici placeat; sed quatenus Legere est Eligere. Augustinus, sive alius, in quæst. Novi Testam. 'LEX ab electione dicta est, ut e multis quod eligas sumas.' Aliqui etiam sic dici volunt, non quia populo Legeretur, cum ferretur:—quod verum etymon putamus:—sed quia scriberetur, Legendaque proponeretur. At minime audiendus Thomas, quæst. xc. art. 1. ubi LEGEM dici ait a Ligando. Quod etymon plerique etiam Scholasticorum adferunt."

["LEX (says Dr. Taylor in his Civil Law) is a general term, including every law enacted by a proper authority."—p. 146.

The Greek words Νόμος and Θεσμός have similar derivations from Νέμω, rego; and Τίθημι, pono.

In page 147, Dr. Taylor says—"LEX, in the large idea of it, includes every law enacted by a proper authority, and is applicable to the Law of Nature, as well as the Civil Law; and to customary, or unwritten law, with the same propriety, as to written. It means a Rule, a Precept, or Injunction: a number or system of which, as we have seen above, gives us the idea of JUS."

"Hac LEGE tibi meam adstringo fidem."—Terence, Eunuch.

"Ea LEGE atque omine, ut, si te inde exemerim, ego pro te molam."
Terence, Andr.

See Dr. Taylor, how he boggles, p. 151.]

¹ ["When the Grecians write, or calculate with counters, they carry the hand from the left to the right; but the Ægyptians, on the contrary, from the right to the left: and yet pretend, in doing so, that preference which is Ordered by their custom, and Leave out of employ the other ; which is therefore their LEFT hand.¹

F.—Surely the word RIGHT is sometimes used in some their line tends to the right, and ours to the left.”—Littlebury's Translation of Herodotus, Euterpe, book 2. p. 158.

“ ———Boys crown'd the beakers high
With wine delicious, and from right to left Distributing the cups, served ev'ry guest.”

Cowper's Iliad, vol. 1. ed. 2. p. 29.

“ ———He from right to left
Rich nectar from the beaker drawn alert
Distributed to all the powers divine.” Ibid. vol. 1. ed. 2. p. 35.

“ Then thus Eupithes' son Antinoüs spake.
From right to left, my friends ! as wine is given,
Come forth, and in succession try the bow.”

Cowper's Odyssey, vol. 2. book 21. p. 230.]

¹ [In the 8th canto of the 1st book of the Faerie Queene, Spenser in the 10th stanza tells us, that Arthur, in his combat with the giant, “smott off his LEFT arme.”

“ ———With blade all burning bright
He smott off his LEFT arme, which like a block
Did fall to ground.”—Faerie Queene, booke 1. canto 8. st. 10.

After which he tells us, in the 17th and 18th stanzas, that this same giant,

“ ———all enraged with smart and frantick yre,
Came hurtling in full fiers, and forst the knight retyre :
The force, which wont in two to be disperst,
In one alone LEFT hand he now unites,
Which is through rage more strong than both were erst.”

Ibid. booke 1. canto 8. st. 18.

This force in the LEFT hand, after the LEFT arme had been smitten off, puzzled the editors of Spenser ; accordingly, in four editions RIGHT hand is substituted for LEFT.

On this last passage Mr. Church says—“So the first and second editions, the folio of 1609, and Hughes's first edition, read : which is certainly wrong ; for it is said, st. 10,

‘He smott off his LEFT arme’—

I read with the folios 1611, 1679, and Hughes's second edition—RIGHT HAND.”

On which Note Mr Todd says—“Mr. Church, I believe, has followed too hastily the erring decision of those editions which read—RIGHT HAND The poet means LEFT as a participle : the giant has now but one single hand LEFT ; in which, however, he unites the force of other sense. And see, in this Newspaper before us,¹ M. Portalis, contending for the Concordat, says—"The multitude are much more impressed with what they are commanded to obey, than what is proved to be RIGHT and JUST." This will be complete nonsense, if RIGHT and JUST mean Ordered and commanded.

H.—I will not undertake to make sense of the arguments of M. Portalis. The whole of his speech is a piece of wretched mummary, employed to bring back again to France the more wretched mummary of Pope and Popery. Writers on such subjects are not very anxious about the meaning of their words. Ambiguity and equivocation are their strong holds. Explanation would undo them.

F.—Well, but Mr. Locke uses the word in a manner hardly to be reconciled with your account of it. He says—"God has a RIGHT to do it, we are his creatures."

H.—It appears to me highly improper to say, that God has a RIGHT: as it is also to say, that God is JUST. For nothing is Ordered, directed, or commanded concerning God. The expressions are inapplicable to the Deity; though they are common, and those who use them have the best intentions. They are applicable only to men; to whom alone language belongs, and of whose sensations only Words are the representatives; to men who are by nature the subjects of Orders and commands,² and whose chief merit is obedience.

F.—Every thing, then, that is Ordered and commanded is RIGHT and JUST!

two. Mr. Upton's edition, and Tonson's of 1758, follow the original reading—In one alone LEFT hand."

Mr. Todd has well explained the meaning of the passage; but is not at all aware that LEFT is equally a participle in both its applications.

But Mr. Todd no where shows himself a Conjuror.]

¹ Morning Chronicle, Monday, April 12, 1802.

² What Ariosto fabled of his horses, is true of mankind:

"Si che in poche ore fur tutti montati,
Che con sella e con freno erano nati."

Orl. Fur. canto 38. st. 34.

H.—Surely. For that is only affirming that what is Ordered and commanded, is—Ordered and commanded.¹

F.—Now what becomes of your vaunted RIGHTS of man? According to you, the chief merit of men is obedience: and whatever is Ordered and commanded is RIGHT and JUST! This is pretty well for a Democrat! And these have always been your sentiments?

H.—Always. And these sentiments confirm my democracy.

F.—These sentiments do not appear to have made you very conspicuous for obedience. There are not a few passages, I believe, in your life, where you have opposed what was Ordered and commanded. Upon your own principles, was that RIGHT?

H.—Perfectly.

F.—How now! Was it Ordered and commanded that you should oppose what was Ordered and commanded? Can the same thing be at the same time both RIGHT and WRONG?

H.—Travel back to Melinda, and you will find the difficulty most easily solved. A thing may be at the same time both RIGHT and WRONG, as well as RIGHT and LEFT.² It may be commanded to be done, and commanded not to be done. The LAW, Læg, Lag, i. e. That which is Laid down, may be different by different authorities.

¹ [Dr. Taylor, in his Elements of Civil Law, erroneously condemns Ulpian's Definition of the Law of Nature. The Doctor's error springs from his not having been aware of the meaning of the words JUS, RECTUM, LEX.

"JUS naturale est quod Natura omnia animalia docuit." Digest, book 1. tit. 1. law 1. parag. 3.

Instead of docuit, he might have said JUSSIT.]

² In an action for damages the Counsel pleaded—"My client was travelling from Wimbledon to London: he kept the LEFT side of the road, and that was RIGHT. The plaintiff was travelling from London to Wimbledon: he kept the RIGHT side of the road, and that was WRONG."

"The rule of the road is a paradox quite:

In driving your carriage along,

If you keep to the LEFT, you are sure to go RIGHT;

If you keep to the RIGHT, you go WRONG."

I have always been most obedient when most taxed with disobedience. But my RIGHT hand is not the RIGHT hand of Melinda. The RIGHT I revere is not the RIGHT adored by sycophants; the Jus vagum, the capricious command of princes or ministers. I follow the LAW of God (what is Laid down by him for the rule of my conduct) when I follow the LAWS of human nature; which, without any human testimony, we know must proceed from God: and upon these are founded the RIGHTS of man, or what is ordered for man. I revere the Constitution and constitutional LAWS of England; because they are in conformity with the LAWS of God and nature: and upon these are founded the rational RIGHTS of Englishmen. If princes or ministers, or the corrupted sham representatives of a people, order, command, or lay down any thing contrary to that which is ordered, commanded, or laid down by God, human nature, or the constitution of this government; I will still hold fast by the higher authorities. If the meaner authorities are offended, they can only destroy the body of the individual; but can never affect the RIGHT, or that which is ordered by their superiors.¹

CHAPTER II.

OF ABSTRACTION.

F.—WELL, Well. I did not mean to touch that string which vibrates with you so strongly: I wish for a different sort of ¹ ["Quædam JURA non scripta, sed omnibus scriptis certiora."—Seneca (the father) I. Controv. l. quoted by Dr. Taylor in his Elements of Civil Law, p. 241. CUSTOM.

"Ante Legem Moysi scriptam in tabulis lapideis, LEGEM fuisse contendendo non scriptam, quæ naturaliter intelligebatur; et a patribus custodiebatur."—Tertullian. adversus Judæos, edit. Rigalt. p. 206.—Also quoted by Dr. Taylor.

"No custom can prevail against right reason, and the law of nature."—Dr. Taylor, Elements of Civil Law, p. 245.

Again, p. 246: "The will of the people is the foundation of custom. But if it be grounded not upon reason, but error, it is not the will of the people. Quoniam non velle videtur, qui erravit."] information. Your political principles at present are as much out of fashion as your clothes.

H.—I know it. I have good reason to know it. But the fashion must one day return, or the nation be undone. - For without these principles, it is impossible that the individuals of any country should long be happy, or any society prosperous.

F.—I do not intend to dispute it with you. I see evidently that, not He who demands RIGHTS, but he who abjures them, is an Anarchist. For, before there can be any thing RECT-um, there must be *Reg-ens, Reg's, Rex,*¹ i. e. Qui or Quod Reg-it. And I admire more than ever your favourite maxim of—Rex, Lex loquens ;² Lex, Rex mutus. I acknowledge the senses he has given us—the experience of those senses—and reason (the effect and result of those senses and that experience)—to be the assured testimony of God: against which no human testimony ever can prevail. And I think I can discover, by the help of this etymology, a shorter method of determining disputes between well-meaning men, concerning questions of RIGHT: for, if RIGHT and JUST mean ordered and commanded, we must at once refer to the order and command; and to the authority which ordered and commanded.

But I wish at present for a different sort of information. Is this manner of explaining RIGHT and JUST, and LAW and DROIT and DRITTO, peculiarly applicable to those words only, or will it apply to others? Will it enable us to account for what is called Abstraction, and for abstract ideas, whose existence you deny?

H.—I think it will: and, if it must have a name, it should rather be called subaudition than abstraction; though I mean not to quarrel about a title.

¹ The following lines have more good sense than metre :

“ Dum Rex a regere dicatur nomen habere,
Nomen habet sine re, nisi studet jura tenere.”

So Judicans.	—	Judic's.	Judix.	Judex.
Vindicans.	—	Vindic's.	Vindix.	Vindex.
Ducens.	—	Duc's.	Dux.
Indicans.	—	Indic's.	Indix.	Index.
Simplicans.	—	Simplic's.	Simplix.	Simplex.
Duplicans.	—	Duplic's.	Duplix.	Duplex.
Sup-plicans.	—	Supplic's.	Supplix.	Supplex, &c.

² [Buchanan, De Jure Regni apud Scotos.]

The terms you speak of, however denominated in construction, are generally (I say generally) Participles or Adjectives, used without any Substantive to which they can be joined; and are therefore, in construction, considered as Substantives.

An Act	— (aliquid) Act-um .
A Fact	— (aliquid) Fact-um .
A Debt	— (aliquid) Debit-um .
Rent	— (aliquid) Rendit-um . redditum.
Tribute	— (aliquid) Tribut-um .
An Attribute	— (aliquid) Attribut-um .
Incense	— (aliquid) Incens-um .
An Expanse	— (aliquid) Expans-um . &c. ¹

Such words compose the bulk of every language. In English those which are borrowed from the Latin, French, and Italian, are easily recognized; because those languages are sufficiently familiar to us, and not so familiar as our own: those from the Greek are more striking; because more unusual: but those which are original in our own language have been almost wholly overlooked, and are quite unsuspected.

These words, these Participles and Adjectives, not understood as such, have caused a metaphysical jargon and a false morality, which can only be dissipated by etymology. And, when they come to be examined, you will find that the ridicule which Dr. Conyers Middleton has justly bestowed upon the Papists for their absurd coinage of Saints, is equally applicable to ourselves and to all other metaphysicians; whose moral deities, moral causes, and moral qualities are not less ridiculously coined and imposed upon their followers.

Fate	Providence	Spirit
Destiny	Prudence	True
Luck	Innocence	False
Lot	Substance	Desert
Chance	Fiend	Merit
Accident	Angel	Fault
Heaven	Apostle	&c. &c.
Hell	Saint

¹ It will easily be perceived, that we adopt the whole Latin word, omitting only the sequent Latin Article; because we use a precedent Article of our own. For a similar reason we properly say—The Coran, and not the Al-coran.

as well as JUST, RIGHT and WRONG,¹ are all merely Participles poetically embodied, and substantiated by those who use them.

So CHURCH,² for instance (Dominicum, aliquid), is an Adjective; and formerly a most wicked one; whose misinterpretation caused more slaughter and pillage of mankind than all the other cheats together.

F.—Something of this sort I can easily perceive; but not to the extent you carry it. I see that those sham deities FATE and DESTINY—aliquid Fatum, quelque chose Destinée—are merely the past participles of Fari and Destiner.³

¹ ["These two Princes beyng neighbours, the one at Milan the other at Parma, shewed smal frendshyp the one to the other. But Octavio was evermore wrong to the worse by many and sundry spites."—R. Ascham's Letters, p. 12.]

² [Κυριακ-ος, -ον, -οι: edifice, or sect, or clergy, &c.]

³ ["Quid enim aliud est FATUM, quam quod de unoquoque nostrum Deus Fatus est."—Minucius Felix, Octavius.

"Id actum est, mihi crede, ab illo, quisquis formator universi fuit; sive ille Deus est potens omnium; sive incorporalis Ratio, ingentium operum artifex; sive divinus spiritus per omnia maxima ac minima æquali intentione diffusus; sive FATUM et immutabilis caussarum inter se cohærentium Series."—Senecæ Consolatio ad Helviam, edit. Lipsii, 4to. 1652. p. 77.

"On FATE alone man's happiness depends,
To parts conceal'd FATE's prying pow'r extends:
And if our stars of their kind influence fail,
The gifts of nature, what will they avail!"

Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 9.

"'Tis FATE that flings the dice; and, as she flings,
Of kings makes pedants, and of pedants, kings."—Ibid. Sat. 7.

"And think'st thou Jove himself with patience then
Can hear a pray'r condemn'd by wicked men?
'That, void of care, he lolls supine in state,
And leaves his bus'ness to be done by FATE?"

Dryden's translation of Persius, Sat. 2.

———— "E pure
Trovassi ancor chi, per sottrarsi a' Numi,
Forma un Nume del caso: e vuol ch'il mondo
Da una mente immortal retto non sia."

Metastasio, Ciro riconosciuto, att. 2. sc. 2.

"I can giue no certaine iudgement, whether the affaires of mortall men are governed by FATE and immutable NECESSITIE, or haue their course and change by CHANCE and FORTUNE."

"Others are of opinion thate FATE and DESTINY may well stand with the course of our actions, yet nothing at all depend of the planets and

That CHANCE¹ ("high Arbiter"² as Milton calls him) and his twin-brother ACCIDENT, are merely the participles of Escheoir, Cheoir, and Cadere. And that to say—"It befell me by CHANCE, or by ACCIDENT,"—is absurdly saying—"It fell by falling." And that an INCIDENT, a CASE, an ESCHEAT, DECAY, are likewise participles of the same verb.

I agree with you that PROVIDENCE, PRUDENCE, INNOCENCE, SUBSTANCE, and all the rest of that tribe of qualities (in Ence and Ance) are merely the Neuter plurals of the present participles of Videre, Nocere, Stare, &c. &c.

That ANGEL, SAINT, SPIRIT are the past participles of αγγελλειν, Sanciri, Spirare.³

starres ; but proceed from a connexion of naturall causes as from their beginning."—Annales of Tacitus, translated by Greenwey. 1622. 6 booke. p. 128. . .

"Oh ! come spesso il moudo
Nel giudicar delira,
Perchè gli effetti ammira,
Ma la cagion non sa.
E chiama poi FORTUNA
Quella cagion che ignora ;
E il suo difetto adora
Cangiato in Deità." Metastasio, Il Tempio dell' Eternità.]

¹ CHANCE—(Escheance).

"The daie is go, the nightes CHAUNCE
Hath derked all the bright sonne."

Gower, lib. 8. fol. 179. p. 1. col. 2.

² ——— "Next him, high Arbiter CHANCE governs all."—Paradise Lost, book 2.

["Some think that CHANCE rules all, that NATURE steers
The moving seasons, and turns round the years."

Juvenal, Sat. 13. by Creech.

"Sunt qui in FORTUNÆ jam casibus omnia ponant,
Et nullo credant mundum rectore moveri,
NATURA solvente vices et lucis et anni."—Juv. Sat. 13.

"Queste gran maraviglie falsamente
Son state attribuite alla FORTUNA,
Con dir, cho in questa cosa ell' è potente
Sopra quelle che son sotto la luna."

Orlando Innamorato (da Berni), cant. 8. st. 4.]

³ In the same manner Animus, Anima, Πνευμα, and Ψυχη, are participles.

"Anima est ab Animus. Animus vero est a Græco Ανιμος, quod dici volunt quasi Αιμος, ab Αω, sive Αιμι, quod est Πναιω : et Latinis a

I see besides that ADULT,¹ APT,² and ADEPT are the past participles of Adoleo and Apio.

That CANT, CHAUNT, ACCENT, CANTO, CANTATA, are the past participles of Canere, Cantare, and Chanter.

That the Italian Cucolo, a cuckow, gives us the verb To Cucol, (without the terminating v,) as the common people rightly pronounce it, and as the verb was formerly and should still be written.

“I am cuckolled and fool’d to boot too.”

B. and Fletcher, Women pleas’d.

“If he be married, may he dream he ’s cuckol’d.”

Ibid. Loyal Subject.

To Cucol, is, to do as the cuckow does: and Cucol-ed, Cucol’d, Cucold, its past participle, means Cuckow-ed, i. e. Served as the cuckow serves other birds.³

spirando, Spiritus. Imo et $\Psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ est a $\Psi\upsilon\chi\omega$, quod Hesychius exponit $\Pi\psi\omega$.

“Animam pro vento accipit Horat.

‘Impellunt Animæ lintea Thraciæ.’

“Pro Halitu accipit Titinius ;

‘Interea foetida Anima nasum oppugnat.’

“Et Plautus—Asin. act. 5. sc. 11.

‘Dic, amabo, an foetet Anima uxoris tuæ.’

“A posteriori hac significatione interdum bene maleve animatus dicitur, cui Anima bene maleve olet. Sic sane interpretantur quidam illud Varronia, Bimargo :

“Avi et atavi nostri, cum allium ac coepe eorum verba olerent, tamen optime animati erant.”—Vossii Etym. Lat.

¹ “Adolere proprie est crescere, ut scribit Servius ad Ecl. viii. Unde et Adultum pro Adoltum, sive Adolitum.”—Vossii Etym. Lat.

² “Apio, sive Apo, antiquis erat Adligo, sive vinculo comprehendo : prout scribit Festus in Apex. Servius ad x. Æn. Isidorus, lib. xix. cap. xxx. Confirmat et Glossarium Arabico-Latinum ; ubi legas—Apio, Ligo. Ab Apio quoque, Festo teste, Aptus is dicitur, qui convenienter alicui junctus est, &c.

“Ab Apio est Apiscor : nam quæ Apimus, id est, comprehendimus, ea Apiscimur. Ab Apisci, Adipisci, &c.”—Vossii Etym. Lat.

³ Nothing can be more unsatisfactory and insipid than the labours (for they laboured it) of Du Cange, Mezerai, Spelman, and Menage, concerning this word. Chaucer’s bantering etymology is far preferable.

—— “that opprobrious name COKOLD ;
Ransake yet we wolde if we might
Of this worde the trewe ortography,
The very discent and ethymology ;

A DATE is merely the participle Datum, which was written by the Romans at the bottom of their Epistles.

As DEBT [i. e. Debit] is the past participle of Debere; so DUE is the past participle of Devoir, and VALUE of Valoir.

[" Like as (O captaine) this farre seeing art
Of lingring vertue best beseemeth you,
So vigour of the hand and of the hart
Of us is lookt, as DEBET by us DEW."

Godfrey of Bulloigne, cant. 5. st. 6. translated by
R. C. Esq. printed 1594.]

DITTO (adopted by us together with the Italian method of

The wel and grounde of the first inuencion
To knowe the ortography we must deryue,
Which is COKE and COLD, in composycion,
By reason, as nyghe as I can contryue,
Than howe it is written we knowe belyue,
But yet lo, by what reason and grounde
Was it of these two wordes compounde.

" As of one cause to gyue very iudgement
Themylogy let us first beholde,
Eche letter an hole worde dothe represent,
As c, put for colde, and o, for olde,
K, is for knaue, thus diures men holde,
The first parte of this name we haue founde,
Let us ethymologise the seconde.

" As the first finder mente I am sure
C, for Calot, for of, we haue o,
L, for Leude, D, for Demeanure,
The crafte of the enuentour ye may se, lo,
Howe one name signyfyeth persons two,
A colde olde Knaue COKOLDE him selfe wening,
And eke a Calot of leude demeanyng."

Remedye of Loue, fol. 341. p. 2. col. 1.

Junius, Vossius, and Skinner were equally wide of the mark.

" Inepte autem Celtæ, eosque imitati Belgæ, CUCULUM vocant illum qui, uxorem habens adulteram, alienos liberos enutrit pro suis: nam tales Currucas dicere debemus, ut patet ex natura utriusque avis, et contrario usu vocis CUCULI apud Plautum."—Vossii Etym. Lat.

" Hi plane confuderunt CUCULUM et Currucam "—Junius.

" Certum autem est nostrum CUCKOLD, non a Cuculo ortum duxisse: tales enim non Cuculi sunt, sed Currucæ: non sua ova aliis supponunt; sed e contra, aliena sibi supposita incubant et foveant."—Skinner.

The whole difficulty of the etymologists, and their imputation upon us of absurdity are at once removed by observing that, in English, we do not call them CUCULI, but cuculati (if I may coin the word on this occasion), i. e. We call them not Cucknos but cuckowed.

Bookkeeping), DITTY (in imitation of the Italian verses), BANDITE, BANDETTO, BANDITTI, EDICT, VERDICT, INTERDICT, are past participles of Dicere and Dire.

“No savage fierce, BANDITE, or mountaneer
Will dare to soil her virgin purity.”—Comus, ver. 426.

“A Roman sworder and BANDETTO slaue Murder’d sweet Tully.”—2nd Part of Henry VI. 1st fol. p. 138.

ALERT (as well as Erect) is the past participle of Erigere, now in Italian Ergere: All’ erecta, All’ ercta, All’ erta.

[“Rinaldo stava ALL’ ERTA, attento e accorto.”
Orlando Innamorato (da Berni), lib. 1. cant. 5. st. 9.

“Fra se pensando il modo e la maniera
Di salir sopra al scoglio ERTO e villano.”
Ibid. lib. 1. cant. 5. st. 73.

“Veggonsi in varie parti a cento a cento
Quei, che per l’ alta disastrosa strada
Salir l’ eccelso colle anno talento.
La difficile impresa altri non bada,
Ma tratto dal desio s’ inoltra, e sale,
Onde avvien poi che vergognoso cada :
Altri con forza al desiderio uguale
Supera l’ ERTA.”

Metastasio, La Strada della Gloria, edit. Parigi. 1781.
vol. 8. p. 317.

“Tu rendi sol la maestà sicura
Di sorte rea contro l’ ingiurie usate,
Non le fosse profonde, o l’ ERTE mura.”
Metastasio. Edit. 1781. La Pubblica Felicità, tom. 9. p. 321.]

“Il palafren, ch’ avea il demonio al fianco,
Portò la spaventata Doralice,
Che non potè arrestarla fiume, e manco
Fossa, bosco, palude, ERTA, o pendice.”
Orlando Furioso, cant. 27. st. 5.

“Tu vedrai prima A L’ ERTA andare i fiumi, Ch’ ad altri mai, ch’ a te volga il pensiero.”
Ibid. cant. 33. st. 60.

“Chi mostra il piè scoperto, e chi gambetta,
Chi colle gambe ALL’ ERTA è sotterrato.”
Morgante, cant. 19, st. 173.

“ Or ritorniamo a Pagan, chi stupiti Per maraviglia tenean gli occhi ALL' ERTA.”

Morgante, cant. 24. st. 114.

All' ercta (by a transposition of the aspirate) became the French A l'herte, as it was formerly written ; and (by a total suppression of the aspirate) the modern French Alerte.

S. Johnson says—ALERT, adj. [Alerte Fr. perhaps from Alacris; but probably from A l'art, according to Art, or rule.]

“ 1. In the military sense, on guard, watchful, vigilant, ready at a call.

“ 2. In the common sense, brisk, pert, petulant, smart ; implying some degree of censure and contempt.”

By what possible means can any one extract the smallest degree of censure or contempt from this word ? Amyot, at least, had no such notion of it ; when he said—“ C'est une belle et bonne chose que la prévoyance, et d'estre toujours A l'herte,” (Καλον δε η προνοια και το ασφαλες,) most appositely translating ασφαλες, i. e. not prostrate, not supine, by A l'herte, i. e. In an erect posture.

See Morales de Plutarque. De l'esprit familier de Socrates.

I see that POST—aliquid POSIT-um (as well as its compounds Apposite, Opposite, Composite, Impost, Compost, Deposit, Dépôt, Repose, and Pause), however used in English, as substantive, adjective, or adverb,

As——A POST in the ground,
A military POST,
To take POST,
A POST under government,
The POST for letters,
POST chaise or POST horses,
To travel POST,

is always merely the past participle of Ponere. And thus, in our present situation, intelligence of the landing of an enemy will probably be conveyed by POST: for, whether positis equis, or positis hominibus, or positis ignibus, or positis telegraphis or beacons of any kind ; All will be by Posit or by POST.

I agree with Salmasius, Vossius, Ferrarius, and Skinner (though Menage feebly contests it), that POLTROON and Paltry are likewise past participles.

“ Iidem imperatores (scil. Valentinianus et Valens) statuerunt flammis ultricibus comburendum eum, qui, ad fugienda sacramenta militiæ, truncatione digitorum damnum corporis expetisset. Multi enim illo tempore, quia necessitate ad bellum cogeantur, præ ignavia sibi Pollices truncabant, ne militarent. Inde Pollice truncos hodieque pro ignavis et imbecilibus dicimus ; sed truncata voce POLTRONES."

Similar times, similar practices. We too have many POLTROONS in this country ; qui sacramenta militiæ fugiunt ; for want of rational motive, not want of courage.

In October 1795,¹ "One Samuel Caradise, who had been committed to the house of correction in Kendal, and there confined as a vagabond until put on board a King's ship, agreeable to the late Act, sent for his Wife the evening before his intended departure. He was in a Cell, and she spoke to him through the Iron Door. After which he put his hand underneath, and she with a mallet and chissel, concealed for the purpose, struck off a finger and thumb, to render him unfit for his Majesty's service."

I see that CLOSE, a CLOSE, with its diminutive a CLOSET, a CLAUSE, a RECLUSE, a SLUICE, are past participles of Claudere and Clorre.

["The thirty horse should face the house on that side next Nottingham ; and the foote should march a private way through the CLOSINGS."—Life of Colonel Hutchinson, pag. 206.

The Editor, in a note, says—"Vulg. Notts. CLOSEN."]

"He rose fro doth to lyfe in his sepulture CLOSE."

Lyfe of our Lady, by Lydgate. p. 59.

¹ [The Times.]

² There was some affection between this able-bodied vagabond and his wife.—(Able-bodied was the crime which, by the operation of a Late Act, cast him into this Cell with the Iron door.)—To avoid separation they both subjected themselves to very severe treatment. Some lawyers maintained that they were both liable to death, under the Coventry Act. The husband and wife would have thought it merciful

"To take them both, that it might neither wound."

Such a sentence however, in such a case, has not yet, I believe, been put in execution. For a similar performance now, upon a husband in his Majesty's service—(I submit it to the Attorneys-general)—might not a wife, by a still Later Act, be condemned to death for this new method of seduction? Or will a new Statute be necessary (it would soon be made, and may be expected) flammis ultricibus comburendum eum—et eam?

“ And whan the angell from her departed was,
 And she alone in her tabernacle,
 Right as the sonne percssheth thorowe the glasse,
 Thorowe the cristall, berall, or spectacle,
 Without harme, right so by myracle
 Into her CLOSET the fathers sapyence
 Entred is, withouten vyolence
 Or any wemme unto her maydenhede
 On any syde, in party or in all.”

Lyfe of our Lady, by Lydgate, p. 54.

DUCT, AQUEDUCT, CONDUCT, PRODUCE, PRODUCT, CONDUIT, of Ducere and Conduire.

FACT, EFFECT, DEFECT, PREFECT, PERFECT, FIT, a FIT, FEAT,
 a FEAT, DEFEAT, COUNTERFEIT, SURFEIT, FORFEIT, BENEFIT, PROFIT, of Facere and Faire.

“ Faythe withoute the FEATE is right nothing worth.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 2. fol. 7. p. 2.

MINŪTE and a MINŪTE, of Minuere.

There was antiently in our language a MINUTE of money, as well as a MINUTE of time ; and its value was half a Farthing.

“ Ihesu sittinge agents the tresorie bihelde hou the cumpany castide money in to the tresorie, and many riche men castiden manye thingis: sotheli whanne o pore widewe hadde come, she sente twey MYNUTIS, that is, a Ferthing.”—Mark xii. 42.

“ Tpezen ꝛȳcas, ðat ȳ, ꝛeopðung peninger.”

“ Duo stycæ, id est, quadrans denarii.”

So that a FARTHING is also a participle, and means merely Fourthing, or dividing into four parts.¹

And, as there was a MINUTE of money as well as a MINUTE of time ; so was there also a FARTHING of land, as well as a FAR-THING of money.

In our antient Law books a Farding-deale of land means the fourth part of an acre. Whose rent was, in Richard the second's time, so restrained, that for a Farding-deale of land they paid no more than one penny.—Walsingham, p. 270.

PROMISE, COMPROMISE, COMMITTEE, PREMISSES, REMISS, SUR-MISE, DEMISE, of Mittere.

¹ [In the Swedish language Fjerdedel or Fjerdings, means a quarter or a fourth part ; viz. of a pound, of an hour, of a mile, &c.]

AN EPISTLE, an APOSTLE, and a PORE, of Επιστελλω, Αποστελλω and Πισγω.

SECT and INSECT, of Secare; as TOME and ATOM of Τιμνω.

POINT (formerly Point), of Pungere.

PROMPT, EXEMPT, of Promere, Eximere.

RATE, of Reor.

REMORSE, MORSEL, of Mordere.

ALLEY, ENTRY, MONSTER, MUSTER (Mostra), ARMY (Armata, Armée), JURY, JURAT, LEVY, LEVEE, ALLY, ALLIANCE, LIEGE and ALLEGIANCE; as well as JUNTO, MANIFESTO, INCOGNITO, PUNTO, PROVISO, MEZZOTINTO, COMRADE (Camerata), FAVOURITE (Favorito), and VISTA, declare themselves at first sight.

So TRACT, EXTRACT, CONTRACT, ABSTRACT, TRACK, TRACE, TRAIT (formerly Traict), PORTRAIT (formerly Pourtraict), TREAT, TREATY, RETREAT, ESTREAT, are the participles of Trahere and Traire.

PULSE, IMPULSE, APPULSE, REPULSE, of Pellere. PRICE, PRIZE, CULPRIT, ENTERPRIZE, MAINPRIZE, REPRIZE, SURPRISE, REPRIEVE, of Prendre.

EVENT, CONVENT, ADVENT, VENUE, AVENUE, REVENUE, COVENANT, of Venire and Venir.

SAUTE, ASSAULT, ASSAILANT, INSULT, RESULT, SOMERSET, of Salire.

————— “put his folke to flyght,
And at a SAUTE he wan the cyte after.”—Knyghtes Tale.

[————— “Let him (quoth Godfrey) fetch his SAULT,
And brawles beare other where; nor I intend,
That you more seede here of new quarrels sow,
Ah no (for-god) let old strifes also go.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, cant. 5. st. 59. translated by R. C. Esq. 1594.]

Soprasalto, called also Salto mortale: i. e. (“voltando la persona sotto sopra senza toccar terra colle mani, o con altro.” Della Crusca.) which the French have corrupted to Soubresault, and the English to Sumersault, Somersalt, Summersaut, and then to Somerset.

————— “What a SOMERSALT,
“When the chair fel, she fetch’d, with her heels upward.”

B. and Fletcher. Tamer Tam’d.

Here when the labouring fish doth at the foot arrive,
 And find that by his strength but vainly he doth strive,
 His tail takes in his teeth, and bending like a bow
 That's to the compass drawn, aloft himself doth throw :
 Then springing at his height, as doth a little wand,
 That bended end to end, and flirtd from the hand,
 Far off itself doth cast, so doth the salmon vault.
 And, if at first he fail, his second SUMMERSAUT
 He instantly assays.

Poly-olbion, song 6.

“Now I will only make him break his neck in doing a SOMERSET, and that's all the revenge I mean to take of him.”

B. and Fletcher. Fair Maid of the Inn.

[“He was the first that more desir'd to haue
 One then another ; first that ere did craue
 Loue by mute signes, and had no power to speake ;
 First that could make Loue faces, or could do
 The valters SOMBERSALTS, or us'd to wooe
 With hoiting gambols, his owne bones to breake
 To make his mistresse merry.”—Dr. Donne, p. 24.]

QUEST, INQUEST, REQUEST, CONQUEST, ACQUEST, EXQUI-SITE, REQUISITE, PERQUISITE, of Quærere.

SUIT, SUTE, SUITE, PURSUIT, LAWSUIT, of Suivre.

STRICT, DISTRICT, STRAIT, STREIGHTS, STREET, RESTRAINT, CONSTRAINT, of Stringere.

TENT, INTENT, EXTENT, PORTENT, SUBTENSE, INTENSE, of Tendere.

SUCCINCT, PRECINCT, of Cingere.

VERSE, REVERSE, CONVERSE, UNIVERSE, TRAVERSE, A-VERSE, ADVERSE, INVERSE, PERVERSE, TRANSVERSE, DIVERS, DIVERSE, CONVERT, of Vertere.

BALLAD, BALLET, of Ballare.¹

ACCESS, RECESS, EXCESS, PROCESS, SUCCESS, PRECEDENT, of Cedere.

VIEW, REVIEW, INTERVIEW, COUNTERVIEW, PURVIEW, SUR-VEY, of Voir.

COLLECT, ELECT, SELECT, INTELLECT, NEGLECT, of Legere.

LASH (French Lasche) of a whip, i. e. that part of it which is

¹ “Le BALLATE dette così, perchè si cantavano a Ballo.”

Bembo. Volg. Ling., lib. 2. p. 74. Edit. Venez. 1729.

let loose, let go, cast out, thrown out; the past participle of Fr. Lascher, Ital. Lasciare.

“There was dayly pilled fro good men and honest, gret substaunce of goodes to be LASHED oute among unthriftes.”

Sir T. More, Richarde the thirde, p. 62.

[“Tindall sawe well also that any thing that his maister Martin Luther layde and LASHED out against the kinges hyghnes, &c.”

Sir T. More's Workes, p. 513.

“As among the seuerer sort Vitellius was thought base and demisse, so his fauourers termed it curtesie and godnesse; because without measure or iudgement he gaue out his owne, LASHT out other mens, construing vices for vertues.”

Historie of Corn. Tacitus, translated by Greenwey, p. 82.]

To these may be added

QUIT, QUITE, QUITTANCE.

POISE, (peser).¹

SPOUSE, RESPONSE.

EXPERT.

MERIT.

FALSE, FAULT (fallito), DEFAULT.

FRUIT (fruict).

RELIQUE, RELICT, DERELICT.

VOW, VOTE, DEVOUT.

DEMUR (demeurer).

TALLY.

ASPECT, RESPECT, PROSPECT, CIRCUMSPECT, RETROSPECT.

SUSPENSE.

CORRECT, DIRECT, INSURGENT.

TENET, CONTENT, CONTENTS, CONTINENT, DETINUE (Writ of), RETINUE.

¹ [“I gesse that from another head there came
The cause of all these stops, and concord torne,
Namely, th' authoritie in many wits,
And many men that equall PEYZED sits.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, translated by R. C. 1594

“Reco ad un' altra originaria fonte
La cagion d' ogni indugio, e d' ogni lite,
A quella autorità, che in molti, e vari
D' opinion, quasi librata, è pari.”

Gierusalemme liberata, cant. 1.]

CRUCIFIX, AFFIX, PREFIX.

DECREE, DISCREET, SECRET.

LAPSE, RELAPSE.

SCRIPT,¹ MANUSCRIPT, RESCRIPT, PRESCRIPT, EXSCRIPT, TRANSCRIPT.

CONSCRIPT, POSTSCRIPT, PROSCRIPT, NONDESCRIPT.

USE, MISUSE, DISUSE, ABUSE.

COURSE, DISCOURSE, CONCOURSE, RECOURSE, INTERCOURSE.

CONCEIT, DECEIT, RECEIPT, PRECEPT.

FINITE, INFINITE, DEFINITE, FINE.

FLUX, AFFLUX, INFLUX, CONFLUX, SUPERFLUX, REFLUX.

SUBJECT, OBJECT, ABJECT, PROJECT, TRAJECT.

DEGREE, GRADUATE, INGRESS, REGRESS, EGRESS, PROGRESS.

LEGATE, DELEGATE, LEGACY.

INSTINCT, DISTINCT, EXTINCT.

ADVOCATE.

VISIT.

CONVICT.

ABSTRUSE.

INTRIGUE, INTRICATE.

TRANSIT, EXIT, CIRCUIT, ISSUE. (Fr. Issir. Ital. Escire. Lat. Exire.)

ROAST.

TOAST.

STATUTE, INSTITUTE, DESTITUTE, PROSTITUTE, SUBSTITUTE.

TINT, TAINT.

TEXT, CONTEXT, PRETEXT.

TRITE, CONTRITE.

TACT, CONTACT.

TACIT.

ILLICIT.

SENSE, NONSENSE, ASSENT, DISSENT, CONSENT.

ASSIZE, ASSIZES.

EXCISE,² CONCISE, PRECISE.

¹ "Do you see this sonnet, this loving SCRIPT?"

B. and Fletcher, A Wife for a Month.

² ["Surely this charge which I put upon them, I know to be so

REPUTE, DISPUTE.

PRESS, IMPRESS, EXPRESS.

ESTEEM.

PRIVATE, PRIVY.

IMPORT, EXPORT, REPORT, TRANSPORT, SUPPORT.

POLITE.

APPLAUSE.

EXPENCE, RECOMPENCE.

PLEA.

RESIDUE.

REMNANT.

PACT, COMPACT, PEACE.

APPETITE.

REPAST.

IMMENSE.

QUADRANT.

JUBILEE.

FOSSE.

CONFLICT.

CREDIT, CREDENCE, MISCREANT.

DEBATE, COMBAT.

EXACT.

All the French participles in EE; as MORTGAGEE, ASSIGNEE, COMMITTEE, &c.

And, besides these which I have thus taken at random, a great multitude of others; which, if I had sworn to try your patience to the utmost, I would go on to enumerate.

CHAPTER III.

THE SAME SUBJECT CONTINUED.

H.—It gives me pleasure that you have so far noticed this, in the words which we have adopted from the Greek, Latin, reasonable, as that it will not much be felt; for the Port townes that have benefit of shipping may CUT it easily off their trading, and Inland townes of their corne and cattle; as wee see all the townes of the Low-Countryes doe CUT upon themselves an EXCISE of all things towards the maintenance of the warre that is made in their behalfe."—Spenser's View of the State of Ireland, Todd's edit. 1805. p. 472.]

Italian and French : for you will be inclined the more readily to concur with me, that the same thing is equally observable in those words which are original in our own language. Thus—

BRAND—in all its uses, whether Fire-brand, or a brand of infamy (i. e. Stigma, itself a participle of $\Sigma\tau\iota\zeta\omega$), or brand-new (i. e. newly burned), is merely the past participle Bren-ed, Bren'd,¹ of the verb To Bren ; which we now write To Burn.

Sir T. More wrote the word indifferently Bren and Burn.—"At St. Waleries here in Picardy there is a faire abbey, where saint Walery was monke. And upon a furlonge of, or two, up in a wood is there a chapel, in which the saint is specially sought unto for the Stone ; not only in those partyes, but also out of England. Now was there a yonge gentilman which had married a marchantes wife ; and having a littel wanton money, which hym thought BRENNED out the bottom of hys purs, in the firste yere of hys wedding toke hys wife with hym and went ouer the sea for none other erand, but to se Flaunders and France, and ryde out one somer in those countrees. And hauing one in hys company that tolde by the waye many straunge thinges of the pilgrimage, he thought he wold go somewhat out of his way, either to se it, if it were trew, or laughe at his man if he founde it false ; as he veryly thought he should have done in dede. But when they came in to the chapell they founde it all trewe. And to beholde they founde it fonder than he had tolde. For like as in other pilgrimages ye se hanged up legges of waxe or armes or suche other partes, so was in that chapell al theyr offringes that honge aboute the walles, none other thinge but mens gere and womans gere made in waxe. Then was there besides these, two rounde ringes of siluer, the one much larger than the other : through which euery man did put his prevy membres at the aulters ende.² Not euerye man thorough bothe, but

¹ [" And blow the fire which them to ashes BRENT."

Faerie Queene, booke 1. cant. 9. st. 10.]

² [" The author reports that, in crossing the forests of Westrogothia on horseback, they stopped a while at Lincopen, to look upon a column of stone, wherein there was a hole, designed for a use which cannot decently be expressed in vulgar language ; but here is the Latin of it—
' Vestrogoticis silvis equitantes inducti, Lincopiæ, ob loci religionem some thorough the one and some thorough the other. Then was there yet a monke standing at the aulter that holowed certeine thredes of Venice golde: and them he deliuered to the pilgrimes, teching them in what wise themselfe or theyr frendes should use those thredes agaynst the Stone: that they should knitte it aboute their gere, and say I cannot tel you what praiers. As this gentyman and his wife wer kneeling in the chapel, there came a good sadde woman to him, shewing him that one speciall poincte used in the pilgrimage and the surest against the Stone, she wist nere whither he were yet advertised of. Which if it were done she durst laye her lyfe, he shoulde neuer haue the Stone in his life. And that was, she would haue the length of his gere, and that should she make in a waxe candel whiche should BREN up in the chapell, and certaine praiers shoulde ther be sayd the while. And thys was against the Stone the very shote anker. Whan he had hard her (and he was one that in earnest fered the Stone) he went and askid his wife counsel. But she like a good faithfull christen woman loued no suche supersticions. She could abide the remenant wel ynough. But when she herde ones of BRENNING up the candell, she knit the browes, and earnestly blessing her:—Beware in the vertue of God what ye do, quod she, BURNE up, quoth-a! Marry, God forbede. It would waste up your gere, upon paine of my life. I praie you beware of such witchcraft.”—Sir Thomas More's Workes. A Dialogue made in the yere 1528, p. 195.

ODD—Is the participle Owed, Ow'd. Thus, when we are counting by couples or by pairs; we say—One pair, two pairs, &c., and one Owed, Ow'd to make up another pair. It has the same meaning when we say—An ODD man, or an ODD action: it still relates to pairing; and we mean—without a fellow, unmatched, not such another, one Owed to make up a couple.¹

non omittendæ, tantillum substitimus: ibi cippus lapideus, pertusus, explorandæ maritorum membris: qui pares foramini, approbantur, impares excluduntur connubiali toro: inde matrimonia aut stant aut cadunt, pro modulo peculii.”—Bayle's Dictionary, 2d edit. vol. 2. Artic'e Francis Blondel, p. 30. Note A.]

¹ [Odds and ends; probably opð and enðe, ‘beginning and end:’ see Cædmon, 225, 30. Thorpe's Edition.—ED.]

"So thou that hast thy loue sette unto God,
In thy remembraunce this emprint and graue,
As he in soueraine dignitie is ODDE,
So will he in loue no parting felowes haue."

Sir T. More's Works, Rules of Pious, p. 28.

HEAD—Is Heaved, Heav'd, the past participle of the verb To Heave: (As the Anglo-Saxon Heapob was the past participle of Heapan;) meaning that part—(of the body—or, any thing else) which is Heav'd, raised, or lifted up, above the rest.¹

In Edward the third's time, it was written Heved.

"And I say an other strong aungel comyng down fro Heuens, keuerid or clothid with a cloude, and the reyn bow in his Heued."—Apocalypa., chap. 10. (verse 1.)

"The Heuedes of holy church, and they holy were, Christe calleth hem salt."

Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 84. p. 1.

"Persons and priests that Heuedes of holy kyrke ben."

Ibid. passus 16, fol. 84. p. 2.

WILD—is Willed, Will'd (or self-willed), in opposition to those (whether men or beasts) who are tamed or subdued (by reason or otherwise) to the will of others or of Societies.

FLOOD—is Flowed, Flow'd.

"And sens it rayned, and al was in a FLODE."

Troylus, boke 3. fol. 176. p. 1. col. 1.

LOUD—is the past participle of the verb To Low, or To Bellow (Blupan, Behlopan) Lowed, Low'd. To Bellow, (i. e. To Be-low) differs no otherwise from To Low, than as Besprinkle differs from Sprinkle, &c. What we now write LOUD, was formerly, and more properly, written LOW'D.

Skinner mistakingly says—"LOW'D, melius LOUD, ab A. S. Blub."—Not perceiving that Blub is the past participle of Blupan: and Skinner's authority perhaps contributed to mislead those who followed him, to alter the spelling to LOUD.

"And with LOW'D larums welcome them to Rome."

Tit. Andron. fol. 1. p. 32.

"Who calls so LOW'D?"—Romeo and Juliet, p. 74.

¹ ["The first, to which we nigh approached, was An high HEADLAND thrust far into the sea."

Spenser, Colin Clouts come home again.]

“The large Achilles (on his prest-bed lolling)
From his deepe chest laughs out a LOWD applause.”

Troilus and Cressida.

——“Honor, loue, obedience, troopes of friends,
I must not looke to haue; but, in their stead,
Curses, not LOWD, but deepe.”—Macbeth, p. 149.

——“Why, what would you?
Make me a willow cabane at your gate,
Write loyall cantons of contemned loue,
And sing them LOWD euen in the dead of night:
Hollow your name to the reuerberate hilles,
And make the babling gossip of the aire
Cry out—Oliuia.”—Twelfth Night, p. 259.

——“Do but start
An eccho with the clamor of thy drumms,
And euen at hand a drumme is readie brac'd
That shall reuerberate all as LOWD as thine.
Sound but another, and another shall
(As LOWD as thine) rattle the welkin's eare
And mocke the depe-mouth'd thunder.”—King John, p. 20.

“That she may boast, she hath beheld the man Whose glory fills the world with LOWD report.”
1st part of Henry VI. p. 102.

[“Of love and lustihead tho maist thou sing,
And carrol LOWDE, and leade the millers rounde.”
Shepherd's Calender, October.

“If these reedes sing my shame so LOWD, will men whisper it softly?”—Midas (by Lily), act 5. sc. 1.

“The reason why we are so often LOWDER than the players, is, because we think we speak more wit; nay so much, that we find fault even with their bawdy upon the stage, whilst we talk nothing else in the Pit as LOWD.”—Wycherley, Country Wife, act 3. sc. 1. edit. 4to. 1675.

“The governor, fearing his enemies might not beare such testimonies of love to him without grieve, sent into the towne to desire them to forbear their kind intentions of giving him so LOWD a wellcome.”—Life of Colonel Hutchinson, p. 237.]

SHERED } —Each of them the past participle of the verb
SHERD } jcypan, To Sheer, or to cut off: thus, Shered, Sh'red: Shered, Sher'd.

FIELD.—This word, by Alfred, Gower, Chaucer, &c., was always written feld, Feld. It is merely the past participle Felled, Fell'd, of the verb To Fell (ƿællan, beƿællan); and is so universally written Feld by all our old authors, that I should be ashamed to produce you many instances. FIELD-land is opposed to Wood-land; and means—Land where the trees have been Felled.

“ In woodes, and in FELDES eke,
Thus robbery goth to seke
Where as he maie his purchas finde,
And robbeth mens goodes aboute
In woode and FELDE, where he goth oute.”

Gower, fol. 116. p. 2. col. 2.

“ In woode, in FELDE, or in citee,
Shall no man stele in no wise.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 122. p. 1. col. 1.

Maple, thorne, beche, ewe, hasel, whipulere,
Howe they were FELDE shal not be told for me.”

Chaucer, Knyghtes Tale, p. 2. col. 2.

“ My blysse and my myrthe arne FELDE, sickenesse and sorowe ben alwaye redy.”—Testament of Loue, boke 1. fol. 306. p. 2. col. 1.

In the collateral languages, the German, the Dutch, the Danish, and the Swedish, you will find the same correspondence between the equivalent verb and the supposed substantive.¹

German Fellen — Feld.

Dutch Vellen — Veld.

Danish Fæld — Felt.

Swedish Fälla — Felt.

CUD.—To chew the CUD, i. e. To chew the Chew'd. This change of pronunciation, and consequently of writing, from CH to K and from K to CH, is very common and frequent in our language; and you will have more than one occasion hereafter to notice what obscurity, difficulties, and errors it has caused to our etymologists.

[“ In some coole shadow from the scorching heat,
The whiles his flock their chawed CUDS do eate.”

Spenser, Virgils Gnat.

[¹ Meidinger connects field with the Swedish fiæll, Isl. fiæll, a mountain side, also “portio agri;” see Ihre. Thus in the north of England they say, “the cattle are in the upper, or lower, fells.” In this view, field might be used as distinguished from meadow. The words, if not of the same origin, seem at least to have been confounded: and Henry of Huntingdon, in his version of the Victory of Athelstan, renders fēld bennabe by “colles resonuerunt.”—Ed.]

A QUID, e. g. of Tobacco, the same as CUD.]

DASTARD—i. e. Territus, the past participle of δαρτιζαν, αδαρτιζαν, Terrere. Dastriged, Dastriyed, Dastried, Dastred, Dastr'd.

COWARD—i. e. Cowred, Cowered, Cower'd. One who has cower'd before an enemy. It is of the same import as Supplex.

“ Ille humilis Supplexque, oculos dextramque precantem
Protendens,—Vicisti, et victum tendere palmas
Ausonii videre.”

Supplex, i. e. Sub-plicans, Supplicans, Supplic's, Supplix. So Suppliant and Supple, i. e. Sous-pliant.

COWARD is the past participle of the verb To Cowre or To Cower; a word formerly in common use.

“ Her heed loueth all honour
And to be worshypped in worde and dede,
Kynges mote to hem knele and COWRE.”

Chaucer, Plowmans Tale, part 1. fol. 94. p. 1. c. 2.

“ And she was put, that I of talke,
Ferre fro these other, up in an halke;
There lurked, and there COURED she.”

Romaunt of the Rose, fol. 122. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Winter with his rough winds and blasts causeth a lusty man and woman to COURE and sit by the fire.”—Hist. of Prince Arthur, 3d part, chap. 142.

“ They spake all with one voice, Sir Launcelot, for Christs sake let us ride out with Sir Galihud, for we beene neuer wont to COURE in castels nor in townes.”—Ibid. 3d part, chap. 160.

“ They cow'R so o'er the coles, their eies be bler'd with smooke.”—Gammer Gurton's Needle.

“ The king is served with great state. His noblemen never look him in the face, but sit COWRING upon their buttocks, with their elbows upon their knees, and their hands before their faces; nor dare lift up their eyes, until his majesty commands them.”—Voyage to Benin, by Thomas Windham,¹ 1553. Hakluyt, vol. 2.

‘ The splitting rockes COWR'D in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides.”

2d Part Henry VI. p. 134.

“ Mistress, do you know the French knight that COWERS i' the hams?”—Pericles, act 4. sc. 4.

¹ This Thomas Windham was a Norfolk gentleman: and a curious account is given in this voyage of his usurping and cruel conduct, and of his mean, violent, selfish, and tyrannical character.

“COWRING and quaking at a conqu’ror’s sword,
But lofty to a lawful prince restor’d.”

Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel.

[“He in his chariot with his body bent
Sat cow’ring low.” Cowper’s Iliad, vol. 2. p. 142. book xvi.]

“As thus he spake, each bird and beast behold
Approaching two and two; these COWRING low
With blandishment, each bird stoop’d on his wing.”

Paradise Lost, book 8.

“You durst not meet in temples
T’ invoke the gods for aid, the proudest he Who leads you now, then COWR’D, like a dar’d lark.”

Dryden’s Œdipus, act 1. sc. 1.]

M. Iault (Art. COUARD) repeats much childishness of the French etymologists concerning this word, which I will spare you.

“CODARDO, says Menage, Da Coda, Codarus, Codardus: quia post principia lateat, et in extrema acie, quæ veluti Cauda agminis est, dice il S^r Ferrari.”

“Dalla Coda che fra le gambe portano i cani paurosi; dicono gli altri.”

Junius thinks it is “COW-HERD, Bubulcus.”

Some will have it “COW-HEART, or Cow-hearted.”

Skinner leaves us to choose amongst

1. CAUDA—“Chi a tutto il suo ardire nella Coda: et nos dicimus—He has his heart in his heels:—vel q. d. ampla Cauda præditus; quod physiognomis timiditatis signum est: vel. q. d. qui Caudam crebro ostendit.”

2. “Cow-herd.”

3. “Sin malis a vernacula origine petere, a nostro Cow et Germ. Aerd, Ard. natura.—q. d. Indole seu ingenio vaccino præditus: nihil enim vacca timidius.”

4. “Ab Hisp. Cueva, antrum, specus: quia sc. pusillanimus Latibula quærit. Cueva autem, satis manifeste, a Lat. Cava, pro Caverna, defluxit.”

Mr. Tyrwhitt says—“I think the opinion of Twysden and Somner much the most probable, who derive it from the Barb. Lat. Culum vertere; to turn tail, or run away. See Du Cange, in v. Culverta, and Culvertagium. CULVERT (as it is written in the oldest and best French MSS. that I have seen) might easily be corrupted, according to the French mode of pronunciation, into COUART and COUARD."

BLIND.—Blined, Blin'd, is the past participle of the old English verb To Blin (A. S. Blinnan) To Stop.¹

"So may they eke her prayer BLYNNE
Whyle that they werke her mete to wyne."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 151. p. 2. col. 2.

— "Easy syghes, suche as ben to lyke
That shewed his affection withinne,
Of suche syghes coude he not BLYNNE."

Troylus, boke 3. fol. 179. p. 2. col. 2.

"Ye that list of your palyardry neuer BLYN."

Douglas. Prol. to booke 4. p. 96.

"He sent them worde he should not BLYN tyll he had destroyed them."—Fabian, p. 152.

"My teares shall neuer BLIN
To moist the earth in such degree
That I may drowne therein."

Songes and Sonets by the Earle of Surrey, &c. fol. 72. p. 2.

In the French tongue they use Borgne and Aveugle; but in order to make the same distinction we are compelled to say—BLIND of one eye (stopped of one eye) or BLIND of both eyes, or totally BLIND, i. e. the sight totally stopped.

In this sense, I suppose, the word Stopped is used in Beaumont and Fletcher's Pilgrim.

"Do you blush at this, in such as are meer rudeness,
That have STOPT souls, that never knew things gentle?
And dare you glorifie worse in yourself?"

BREAD—is the past participle of the verb To Bray, (French Broyer,) i. e. To pound, or To beat to pieces: and the subauditum (in our present use of the word BREAD) is Corn, or Grain, or any other similar substances, such as Chestnuts,

¹ ["And Sisyphus an huge round stone did reele Against an hill, ne might from labour LIN."

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 5. st. 35.]

[By the addition of this example, Mr. Tooke doubtless considered LIN as connected with Blinnan, from which Skinner derives it.—ED.]

Acorns, &c., or any other *Substitutes*¹ which our blessed ministers may appoint for us in this blessed reign.

To Bray, though now obsolete, was formerly very common in our language.

——“ And whan he comet therat
And sigh his doughter, he to-BRAIDE
His clothes, and wepende he saide.”

Gower, lib. 4. fol. 71. p. 2. col. 1.

“Take camomel, &c., BRAYE them together, &c.”

“Take of the bloudestone, &c., beate and BRAYE all these together, &c.”—Byrth of Mankynde, fol. 34. p. 1. fol. 36. p. 2.

“The sedes (of sorrell), BRAIED and drunke with wine and water, is very holsome agaynst the colyke.”

“What auncient physition is there, that in his workes commendeth not ptylane, whiche is none other than pure barley, BRAIED in a mortar, and sodden in water?”

“The sedes of melons BRAYED, &c.”—Castel of Helth, fol. 27. fol. 34. fol. 81.

“I, now it heats. Stand, father,
Pound him to dust.

Nay, if he take you in hand, Sir, with an argument,
He'll BRAY you in a mortar.—Pray you, Sir, stay.

Rather than I'll be BRAYED, Sir, I'll believe.”—Alchemist.

¹ Substitute is in England the natural offspring of Prostitute. In consequence of virtual being substitute for real representation; we have innumerable commissioners of different descriptions substitute for our antient Juries: Paper substitute for money: Martial Law substitute for the antient law of the land: Substitutes for the Militia, for an army of Reserve, for Quota-men. But the worst of all these Substitutes (and I fear its speedy recurrence) is a Substitute for BREAD; the harbinger of wide-spreading putrefaction, disease, and cruel death. It was attempted not long since (by those who should least have done it) to blast the character of my excellent friend the late Dr. Addington, by (falsely, as I believe) adducing his authority to prove that Bran was more nutritive than Meal: I take this opportunity to rescue his memory from that disgrace, by asserting that he well knew that—“Bread of fine flour of wheat, having no leaven, is slow of digestion and makes slimy humours, but it nourishes much. If it be leavened, it digests sooner. Bread, having much Bran, fills the belly with excrements, and nourishes little or nothing, but shortly descends from the Stomach, &c.”

And this same doctrine will every intelligent medical man now declare; unless he shall chuse to substitute his interest for his character and conscience.

“Thou hast made me mad : and I will beat thee dead,
Then BRAY thee in a mortar, and new mold thee.”

“I will rectifie and rédeem eithers proper inclination,
Or BRAY 'em in a mortar, and new mold 'em.”

B. and Fletcher's Martial Maid.

Sir John Davies (an Attorney-general, whom Messrs. Pitt and Dundas have evidently consulted), in a little treatise called —“A Discoverie of the true causes, &c.”—speaking of Ireland, says——

“Whereupon the multitude, who ever loved to bee followers of such as could master and defend them, admyring the power of the crowne of England, being BRAID (as it were) in a mortar, with the sword, famine, and pestilence altogether, submitted themselves to the English government.”

F.—Thus it is always with you etymologists. Whilst you chuse your own instances, your explanations run upon all fours ; but they limp most miserably when others quote the passages for you.

H.—I can only give such instances as occur to me. I wish others were to furnish them : and the more hostile they were, the better I should be pleased.

F.—What say you then to this passage in All's well that ends well?

——“Since Frenchmen are so BRAIDE, Marry that will, I live and die a maid.”

Dr. Johnson, Mr. Steevens, and Mr. Malone, are all agreed, that—“BRAID signifies crafty or deceitfull.”

H.—I wish you had separated Mr. Steevens (for he has really done some good service) from the names of such (commentators I cannot call them) as Johnson and Malone. I think however that, upon a little reflection, you will have no difficulty to agree with me, that BRAIDE has here the same meaning that it has in the Proverbs, chap. 27. ver. 20. “Though thou shouldest BRAY a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him.”

The expression here alludes to this Proverb:—Diana does not confine herself merely to his craft or deceit ; but includes also all the other bad qualities of which she supposes Bertram to be compounded; and which would not depart from him, though BRAY'D in a mortar.

F.—By the words which you have attempted to explain, Brand, Odd, Head, Wild, Flood, Loud, Shred, Sherd, Field, Cud, Dastard, Coward, Blind, and Bread, you seem to have been led to these conjectures by the participial termination ED or 'D. I suppose therefore that the word FIEND, which you lately mentioned, is also a past participle.

H.—No. It is (what I must in conformity with custom call) a present participle; and, for which we now use ing, was in Anglo-Saxon the termination of the participle present: and

FIEND—i. e. FIANDS, fiand, the present participle of FIAN, fiān, To Hate,¹ means (subaudi Some one, Any one) Hating. In the same manner,

FRIEND—i. e. frīand, frēond, the present participle of frīan, frēon, To Love, means (subaudi Any one, Some one) Loving.²

"For he no more than the FENDE
Unto none other man is FRENDE
But all toward hym selfe alone."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 113. p. 2. col. 1.

F.—Why do you say that, in conformity with custom, you must call it a present participle?

H.—Because I do not allow that there are any present participles, or any present tense of the verb. But we cannot

¹ [Spa oft fpa hi fopleton ðone lipendān Gōð ðonne fupþon hi ge-hepðode and to horpe geþonne fpan hæðenum leobum ðe him abutan eapðodon. Eft ðonne hi clpðon on eopnoft to Gode mid foðpe bæððode ðonne fenbe he him fultum ðupf fuanne ðeman ðe pðfette heopa FCONDUÐ and hi alrpe of heopa YRÐÐE.—Ælfrie, de Veteri Testament, p. 12. L'Isle's Monuments, 4to. 1638.

And he betæhte hū on hæfpena handum. and heopa FYND foðlice hæfþon heopa ƳeƳealb. and hū fƳiðe ge þƳehton ða ðeƳenðlica FYND.
—Id. p. 23]

² [The following is the foolish derivation of Menage, which he spells ill to get nearer to his etymology:—"FRIANT de frigente, ablatif de frigens, participe de friger—Charles de Bouvelles: FRIANT; id est, delicatus; vel incertæ originis est, vel dictus a verbo Frigo, frigis: a quo Fricure, ciborum delicis: quod ejusmodi frixuras is amet quem vulgus FRIANT appellat."

It is the same Anglo-Saxon frīand.

See also Johnson's foolish derivation of Friend from the Dutch.]

enter into that question now. A proper time will arrive for it. Nor would I meddle with it at all; but that some foolish metaphysics depend upon it.

F.—There is a word in Shakespeare, ending with a D, which has exceedingly troubled all his editors and commentators. I wish much to know whether your method will help us on this occasion. In Troilus and Cressida, Ajax, speaking to Ther-sites, says (according to the first Folio), “Speake then, thou whinid’st leauen, speake.”

Not knowing what to make of this word Whinid, subsequent editors have changed it to Unsalted. And thus Mr. Malone alters the text, with the Quarto editions,

“Speak then, thou unsalted leaven, speak.”

H.—The first Folio, in my opinion, is the only edition worth regarding. And it is much to be wished, that an edition of Shakespeare were given literatim according to the first Folio: which is now become so scarce and dear, that few persons can obtain it. For, by the presumptuous licence of the dwarfish commentators, who are for ever cutting him down to their own size, we risque the loss of Shakespeare’s genuine text; which that Folio assuredly contains; notwithstanding some few slight errors of the press, which might be noted, without altering.

This is not the place for exposing all the liberties which have been taken with Shakespeare’s text. But, besides this unwarrantable substitution of unsalted, for whinid’st, a passage of Macbeth (amongst innumerable others) occurs to me at present, to justify the wish I have expressed.

“Approach thou like the rugged Russian beare,
The arm’d rhinoceros, or th’ Hircan tiger,
Take any shape but that, and my firme nerues
Shall neuer tremble. Or be aliue againe,
And dare me to the desart with thy sworde,
If trembling I Inhabit then, protest mee
The baby of a girle.”

Pope here changed Inhabit to Inhibit. Upon this correction Steevens builds another, and changes Then to Thee. Both which insipid corrections Malone, with his usual judgment, inserts in his text. And there it stands

“If trembling I inhibit thee.”

“The emendation Inhibit (says Mr. Malone) was made by Mr. Pope. I have not the least doubt that it is the true reading. By the other slight but happy emendation, the reading Thee instead of Then, which was proposed by Mr. Steevens, and to which I have paid the respect that it deserved by giving it a place in the text, this passage is rendered clear and easy.”

But for these tasteless commentators, one can hardly suppose that any reader of Shakespeare could have found a difficulty; the original text is so plain, easy, and clear, and so much in the author's accustomed manner.

——“Dare me to the desart with thy sworde,”

“If I inhabit then”——i. e. If then I do not meet thee there: if trembling I stay at home, or within doors, or under any roof, or within any habitation: If, when you call me to the desart, I then House me, or, through fear, hide myself from thee in any dwelling;

“If trembling I do House me then —Protest me, &c.”

But a much stronger instance of the importance of such a strictly similar edition (in which not a single letter or supposed misprint should be altered from the original copy) offers itself to me from the two following passages:

“He blushes, and 'tis HIT.”

All's well that Ends well, p. 253. col. 1.

Mr. Malone has altered the text to

“He blushes, and 'tis IT.”

And he adds the following note:

“The old copy has—'tis HIT.——The emendation was made by Mr. Steevens. In many of our old chronicles I have found HIT printed instead of IT. Hence probably the mistake here.”

“Stop up th' accesse and passage to remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of nature}
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
Th' effect and HIT.”—Macbeth, p. 134.

Upon this passage Mr. Malone (having again altered the text, from HIT to IT) says,

“The old copy reads—Between the effect and HIT—the correction was made by the editor of the third Folio.”

The Correcter and the Adopter deserve no thanks for their mischievous alteration: for mischievous it is; although no alteration can, at first sight, appear more trivial.

I can suppose one probable mischief to have resulted from it to my former castigator, Mr. Burgess—(I beg his pardon, the present Lord Bishop of St. David's).

It is possible that he may not have seen the first Folio, and may have read only the corrected text of Shakespeare. If so, by this alteration he may have missed one chance of a leading hint; by which, if followed, he might have been enabled to fulfil his undertaking, concerning an explanation of the Pronouns, which he promised: no unimportant part in the philosophy or system of human speech. For I can easily suppose that, with his understanding and industry, (for I have heard a very favourable mention of him, in all respects,) he might have been struck with this HIT in Shakespeare, and might, in consequence, have travelled backward; and have found that, not only in our old chronicles, but in all our old English authors, down to the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the word was so written, and that it was not, as poor Malone imagined, any mistake of the Printer.

“And whan the bisshop aright hym bethoughte,
He gan remembre playnly in his mynde
That of disdayne and wylful necligence
The yerde of Joseph was left behynde;
Wherby he knewe that he had done offence,
And gan alone to brynge HIT in presence,
And toke HIT Joseph deuoutely in his honde.”

Lydgate. Lyfe of our Lady, p. 27.

“The bisshoppe hath the cuppe fyrste directe
Unto Joseph, and hym the parell tolde,
And manly he gan it holde
And dranke HET up, and chaunged nat his chere.”—Ibid. p. 91.

“Whiche ordinaunce of Moses was afterward established in the citie of Athens, and from thens the Romaines receiued HIT.”—Dr. Martin's Confutation of Poynett, chapter 4.

“Not that matrimonie is of the church abhorred, for the church doeth reuerence and alowe HIT.”—Id. chap. 7.

“He useth not the onely tearme of womanne by HIT selfe.”—Id. chap. 13.

“I geue my regall manyer called Wie, with al thappertenaunces longinge to my regall crowne, with al liberties priuileges and regal customes as fre and gayet as I hadde HIT fyrste.”—The true Differences of Regall Power. By Lord Stafford.

[“ Much in his glorious conquest suffred hee :
And hell in vaine HIT selfe opposde.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, translated by R. C. Esq. p. 2.

“ Molto soffrì nel glorioso acquisto :

E in van l’ Inferno à lui s’ oppose.”—Gierus. liberata, cant. 1.

“ Wheregainst when Persians passing number preast,

In battaile bold they HIT defended thanne.”—God. of Bull. p. 5.

“ L’havea poscia in battaglia incontra gente

Di Persia innumerabile difesa.”

“ And in this course he entred is so farre,

That ought but that, HIT seemes of nought he weyes.”—Ibid. p. 6.

“ E cotanto internarsi in tal pensiero,

Ch’ altra impresa non par, che piu rammenti.”

“ His shape unseene, with aire he doth inuest,

And unto mortall sence HIT subject makes.”—Ibid. p. 9.

“ La sua forma inuisibil d’ aria ciuse,

Et al senso mortal la sottopose.”

“ But he her warlike image farre in hart

Preserued so as HIT presents aliue.”—Ibid. p. 26.

“ Ma l’ imagine sua bella e guerriera

Tale ei serbò nel cor, qual essa è viva.”

“ He past th’ Egean sea and Greekish shore,

And at the campe arriues, where far HIT stayes.”—Ibid. p. 33.

“ Sarcò l’ Egitto, passò di Grecia i liti, Giunse ne l’ campo in region remote.”

“ On that chast picture seyz’d in rau’ning wise,

And bare HIT to that church, whereof offence

Of fond and wicked rites prouokes the skyes.”

Ibid. p. 53. cant. 2. st. 7.

————— “ e irreverente

Il casto simulacro indi rapio ;

E portollo a quel tempio, ove sovente

S’ irrita il ciel col folle culto e rio.”

“ Th’ aduised chieftaine with a gentle bīt

Guideth, and seconds their so bent desire,

To turne the course more easie seemeth HIT

Of winding waue that roulds Caribdis nire,

Or Boreas when at sea he ships doth slit.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, p. 98. cant. 3. st. 2.

“Where is the kyngedome of the dyuelle, yf HIT be not in warre?”
—Bellum Erasmi, by Berthelet, 1534. p. 15.

“In warre if there happen any thyng luckely, HIT perteyneth to verye fewe: and to theym, that are unworthye to haue it.”—Ibid. p. 19.

“Fyrste of all consider, howe lothelye a thyng the rumour of warre is, when HIT is fyrste spoken of. Then howe enuious a thing HIT is unto a prince, whyles with OFTEN demes and taxes he PILLETH his subiectes.”—Ibid. p. 19. 2; and in eighteen other places in this very small treatise of thirty-nine small pages.

“For myself, gracious Sovereigne, that if HIT mishappe me, in any thing heerafter that is on the behalfe of your Commons in your high presence to be declared.”—Life of Syr Thomas More, by Mr. Roper, p. 35.]

I must suppose that when he had noticed innumerable such instances, he would then have gone still further back, to our original language: and there he would have found this same word written Hit, Hýt, and Hæt: which might perhaps have plainly discovered to him, that this pronoun was merely the past participle of the verb HALITAN, Hætan, nominare.¹ And, upon application, he would have found this meaning, viz. nominatum, i. e. The Said, perfectly to correspond with every use of the word IT in our language. Having observed this, he would have smiled at our grammatical arrangements; and would not have been in the least shocked to find (as he would often find) the word IT used in the following manner,

“The greate kynge, IT whiche Cambyses
Was hote.”—Gower, lib. 7. fol. 158. p. 1. col. 1.

“When King Arthur had seene them doe all this, hee asked Sir Launcelot what were those knights and that queene. Sir, said Launcelot, I cannot shew you no certaintie, but if Sir Tristram or Sir

¹ “And so befel that in the taas they founde
Two yonge knyghtes lyeing by and by
Both in armes same, wrought full rychely,
Of whiche two, Arcyte hight that one,
And that other hight Palamon.”—Knights Tale, fol. 1. p. 2. col. 2.

Mr. Tyrwhitt in his note upon this word Hight, says,

“It is difficult to determine precisely what part of speech it is; but, upon the whole, I am inclined to consider it as a word of a very singular form, a verb active with a passive signification.”

It is the same past tense, and therefore past participle of HALITAN; and has the same meaning as HIT or IT.

Palomides. Wit yee well of a certaine IT beene they and la beale Isond."
—Historie of Prince Arthur, 3d part, chap. 98.

For he would be well aware, that IT (or The Said) is (like all our other participles) as much masculine as feminine [or neuter,] and as plurally applicable as singularly.¹ And from this small inlet, perhaps (if from no other quarter), the nature of all the other pronouns might instantly have rushed upon his mind, and have enabled him to perform satisfactorily his contract with the public.

F.—I have often remarked, amongst all our old writers, a similar use of the word THAT; which, as well as IT, is applied by them indifferently to plural nouns and to singular. For instance; in that Traictise you have quoted, by Dr. Martin (who wrote accurately and was no mean scholar), we meet with such sentences as the following;

"Patrones elected many into THAT holy ordres, neither of age, nor of learnyng, nor of discretion, woorthie to take so high a function."—p. 2.

"The temporall menne at THAT dayes did much extolle and mayntaine chastitie."—p. 47.

"The midwife, christenyng the child, added not THAT solemne wordes, nor any man promised the same for him."—p. 113.

"There was a statute or ii deuysed to take away THAT peines of the church, that were before alwaies ordeined and used against married priestes."—p. 140.

"To the entente they might the more fully and frely repose them selues in THAT unspeakeble joyes with which Christe feedethe them."—p. 284.

So, in the Hist. of Prince Arthur, 3d part, chap. 98.

"And so three of them were come home againe, THAT were Sir Gawaine, Sir Ector, and Sir Lionell."

¹ ["My powers are cressent, and my auguring hope Sayer IT will come to th' full."

Antony and Cleopatra, p. 345. col. 1.

Malone has altered the text, and adopts Theobald's reading and note.

"My power's a crescent," &c.

"What (says Mr. Theobald) does the relative IT belong to? It cannot in sense relate to hope; nor in concord to powers."

"Is your gold and siluer ewes and rams?

I cannot tell, I make IT breede as fast."

Merchant of Venice, p. 166. col. 2.]

Sir Thomas More uses it in the same manner.

"This pleasure undoubtedly farre excelleth all THAT pleasures that in this life maie be obtained."—Life of Picus, p. 12.

"THAT euyl aungets the deuilles."—P. 386 of his Workes.

Now I have always hitherto supposed this to be a careless and vicious manner of writing in our antient authors;¹ but I begin to suspect that they were not guilty of any false concord in this application of the word. When treating formerly of the Conjunctions, I remember, you left THAT unexplained. I thought it not very fair at the time; and you gave but a poor reason for the omission. Will you oblige me now, by informing me whether you think the etymology and meaning of THAT will justify this antient use of the word.

H.—In my mind, perfectly. For THAT (in the Anglo-Saxon Ðæt, i. e. Dead, Ðeāt) means Taken, Assumed; being merely the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Ðean, Ðezan, Ðion, ϕihlan, Ðiczan, Ðizian; sumere, assumere, accipere; To THE, To Get, To Take, To Assume.

"Ill mote he THE

That caused me

To make myselfe a frere."—Sir T. More's Workes, p. 4.

["Wyse men alway affyrme and say 'That best is for a man diligently for to apply the business that he can, and in no wyse to enterpryse an other faculte; for he that wyll and can no skylle, is neuer lyke to THE.'"]
—Sir T. More's Workes, p. 1.

"Well mote yee THEE, as well can wish your thought."

Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 1. st. 33.

"Fayre mote he THEE, the prowtest and most gent,

That ever brandished bright steele on hye."

Ibid. book 2. cant. 11. st. 17.]

¹ [For a similar use of THAT, see Fabian: "of THAT partyes," page iii. 69, 98. "at THAT dayes," xi. xxiii. xxxiii. xxxix. xli. xlvi. 248, 374. "by THAT costes," xci. "THAT artycles," 60. "in THAT countres," 232. "THAT disguysers," 363.

"Of the ferther maner THIS examples or questyons be."—The thre bookes of Tullyes Offyces lately translated by Roberte Whytinton, poete laureate. Fyrst booke. By Wynkyn de Worde, 1534.

"Man that hath the use of reason wherby he seeth THAT thynges that folowe."—Id. Fyrst booke.

"Of THIS four places wherin we haue denyded the nature and the vertue of honesty."—Id. Fyrst booke.

"For THIS consyderacions," &c.—Id. Fyrst booke (pag. 68).]

It and THAT always refer to some thing or things, person or persons, Taken, Assumed, or Spoken of before; such only being the meaning of those two words. They may therefore well supply each other's place: as we say indifferently, and with the same meaning, of any action mentioned in discourse; either—"IT is a good action;" or, "THAT is a good action." i. e. The Said (action) is a good action; or, The Assumed (action) is a good action; or, The action, Received in discourse, is a good action.

THE (our Article, 'as it is called) is the Imperative of the same verb Dean: which may very well supply the place of the correspondent Anglo-Saxon article re, which is the Imperative of jeon, videre: for it answers the same purpose in discourse, to say—See man, or, Take man. For instance;

"THE man THAT hath not musicke in himselfe Is fit for treasons," &c. Or,

"THAT man is fit for treasons," &c.

TAKE man (or SEE man); TAKEN man hath not musicke, &c.
SAID man, or TAKEN man is fit for treasons, &c.

This analysed method of speech must, I know, seem strange and awkward to you at first mention; but try it repeatedly, as I have done for years; apply this meaning frequently on every occasion where THE and THAT are used in the language; and I fear not your conviction. But if the experiment should fail, and leave you in the smallest doubt, we will then enter further into the subject: for we must hereafter return to it.

F.—All this may be as you have represented it; and the Bishop perhaps may not be displeased at the intelligence. But you have lost sight of my original question. What say you to this monstrous alteration of unsalted for Whinid?

II.—I say, that a man must either have no ears, or very long ears, not to perceive that this was never Shakespeare's language. Metre is not confined to Verse: there is a tune in all good prose; and Shakespeare's was a sweet one. If unsalted is to be adopted instead of Whinid; to keep his tune, you must omit one of the two monosyllables, either then or thou.

In behalf of the word Whinid, Mr. Steevens has well noted that, Francis Beaumont in his letter to Speght, on his edition of Chaucer's works, 1602, says—"Many of Chaucer's words are become, as it were, vinew'd and hoarie with over long lying."

And Mr. Justice Blackstone, on the same side, has observed that—"In the preface to James the first's bible, the translators speak of Fenowed (i. e. Vinew'd or mouldy) traditions."

And Mr. Malone himself acknowledges, that—"In Dorsetshire they at this day call cheese, that is become mouldy, Vinny cheese."

F.—But why it is called Whinid, or Vinew'd, or Fenowed, or Vinny, does not any how appear: and its meaning is only to be conjectured from the context, where the word is found. Now I wish to know, whether Whinid is also a participle: and, if a participle, of what verb.

H.—WHINID—Vinew'd, Fenowed, Vinny, or ƿīne, is a past participle: and of the verb Fȳnizean, To corrupt, To decay, To wither, To fade, To pass away, To spoil in any manner.—ƿīne hlaf, in Anglo-Saxon is a corrupted or spoiled loaf, whether by mould or any other means. "Ʒpæt ða ða Labanizean gamenlice ƿæddon. And mid zeaplice ƿape ƿeðdon to Iorue. Namon him ealde gercȳ.¹ and unopnlic ƿeƿuð. and ƿīne hlafar." Joshua, ix. 3–5.

F.—It seems probable enough: and it is not at all surprising that this Anglo-Saxon verb, ƿȳnizean, should have been overlooked; since it has left behind it no other traces of its former existence, but barely this solitary expression.

H.—I beg your pardon: It has left a numerous issue. No European etymologist can do without it. Whither else can he turn, without exposing himself, for the French Faner, Se fener, Evanouir and Fange; for the Italian Affanno, Affannare, and Fango; for the Latin Vanus, and Vanesco; for the German Pfinnig; and for the English FAINT, and FEN; and many other words,² with which I forbear at this time to pester you?

F.—And yet they have done very well without it.

¹ [Ealde gercȳ. Old shoes.—Shoe is the past participle of ƿeȳan—ge-ƿeȳan, sub-ponere. Shoe, is, suppositum.]

² ["Per essa il re Agrican quasi VANEGGIA
E la sua vita non stima un danaio."]

Orlando Innamorato (da Berni), lib. 1. cant. 10. st. 18.]

[See below, ch. iv. v. FAINT:—also the quotation from Upton, in the Additional Notes.—Ed.]

H.—They have done, it is true: How well, yourself shall judge.—Junius says—“FAINT, languidus, pusillanimus, ignavus, periculo cedens, est a Gallico Feindre, non audere, subducere se discrimini: solent nempe timidi atque imbelles formidinem suam pluribus vanissimorum obtentuum figmentis tegere.”

Minshew—“FAINT, a Gallico Faner, a Lat. Vanescere.”

Skinner—“FAINT, a Fr. G. Funer, Fener; deficere, deflorescere, flaccescere, emori.”

Menage, Orig. Franc.—“FANER, comme ce mot vient de Fænum, quand on le dit dans le sens propre, en parlant d'une prairie que l'on Fane; je crois qu'il en vient pareillement quand il signifie Se flétrir, Se sécher: car comme le foin, quand on le fane, se flétrit et devient pâle; de même on dit, dans le sens figuré, Se Faner, de tout ce qui perd sa première couleur, sa beauté, son air vif.”

Menage, Orig. Ital.—“AFFANNARE, AFFANNO, Da Afa, che vale quel' affanno cagionato da gravezza d' aria, o da gran caldo: detto dagli Spagnuoli Afan; e Ahan da i Francesi. Vuole il Monosini, sia Afa, voce Ebreica.”

“FANGO—da Fimus: in questa maniera: Fimus, Fimi, Fimicus, Femcus, Fencus, Fengus, Fangus, Fango: e per metaplasmo Fanga: onde il Francese Fange.”

F.—Enough, and too much of this. I will have nothing to do with Afa, voce Ebreica; nor with Fimicus, Fencus, &c. I will rather accept your Anglo-Saxon derivation.—I understand you then to say that FAINT (as well as Fennowed, &c.) is the past participle of fynizean: yet it does not terminate in ED or 'D.

H.—In English nothing is more common than the change of the participial terminating D to T. Thus,

JOINT—is Joined, Join'd, Joint.

FEINT—is Feigned, Feign'd, Feint.

GIFT—is Gived, Giv'd, Gift.

RIFT—is Rived, Riv'd, Rift.

“The shippe droue unto a castle and was al to RIVEN.”

Historie of Prince Arthur, part 1st. chap. 25.

—— “Warres 'twixt you twaine would be

As if the world should cleave, and that slaine men

Should sodder up the RIFT.”—Antony and Cleopatra, p. 353.

————— “ The clouds
From many a horrid RIFT abortive pour’d
Fierce rain with light’ning mix’d.”

Paradise Regain’d, book 4. v. 411.

[“ He pluckt a bough : out of whose RIFTE there came Smal drops of gory bloud, that trickled down the same.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 2. st. 30.

“ Into a cloven pine ; within which RIFT
Imprison’d, thou didst painfully remain
A dozen years.”—Tempest.]

CLIFT }
CLIFT } —is Cleaved, Cleav’d, Cleft.
CLIFF }

“ Adowne he shofth his hand to the CLYFFE
In hope to fynde there some good gyfte.”

Sompners Tale, fol. 44. p. 2. col. 1.

“ But yet this CLIFTE was so narrowe and lyte
It was nat sene.”—Tysbe, fol. 210. p. 2. col. 1.

“ And romyng on the CLEUIS by the see.”

Hypsiphile, fol. 214. p. 1. col. 1.

“ This lady rometh by the CLYFFE to play.”

Ibid. fol. 214. p. 1. col. 2.

“ In tyme of Crystus passyon the veyl of the Jewes temple to rente and CLEEF in two partes.”—Dives and Pauper, thyrde Comm. cap. 3.

“ She founde that moneye hangynge in the craueyses and CLYFTES of the half bushel.”—Ibid. fourth Comm. cap. 4.

“ Loue led hym to his deth and CLEEF his hert atwo.”

Ibid. tenthe Comm. cap. 3.

“ Rob Douer’s neighbouring CLEEVES of sampyre.”

Poly-olbion. Song 18.

[——— “ As an aged tree,
High growing on the top of rocky CLIFT,
Whose hart-strings with keene steele nigh hewen be ;
The mightie truncke halfe rent with ragged RIFT
Doth roll adowne the rocks, and fall with fearefull DRIFT.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 8. st. 22.

“ So downe he fell, as an huge rocky CLIFT,
Whose false foundation waves have washt away,
With dreadfull poyse is from the mayneland RIFT,
And, rolling downe, great Neptune doth dismay.”

Ibid. book 1. cant. 11. st. 54.

“Whiles sad Celeno, sitting on a CLIFTE,
A song of bale and bitter sorrow sings,
That hart of flint asonder could have RIFTE.”

Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 7. st. 23.]

THRIFT—is Thrived, Thriv'd, Thrift.

SHRIFT—is Shrived, Shriv'd, Shrift.

DRIFT—is Drived, Driv'd, Drift.

“Be plaine, good son, rest homely in thy DRIFT, Ridling confession findes but ridling shrift.”

Romeo and Juliet, p. 61.

“It could no more be hid in him
Than humble banks can go to law with waters
That DRIFT winds force to raging.”

B. and Fletcher, Two Noble Kinsmen.

“Some log perhaps upon the waters swam
An useless DRIFT, which, rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became.”

Dryden, Annus mirabilis, st. 156.

THEFT—is Theved, Thev'd, Theft.

WEFT—is Weved, Wev'd, Weft.

HEFT—is Heved, Hev'd, Heft.

—————“There may be in the cup
A spider steep'd; and one may drinke, depart,
And yet partake no venome (for his knowledge
Is not infected); but if one present
Th' abhor'd ingredient to his eye, make knowne
How he hath drunke, he cracks his gorge, his sides,
With violent HEFTS.”—Winter's Tale, p. 282.

“In the hert there is the Hefde, and the hygh wyll.”

Vision of Pierce Ploughman, fol. 7. p. 1.

[“Inflam'd with wrath, his raging blade he HEFTE,
And strooke so strongly, that the knotty string
Of his huge taile he quite asonder cleft.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 11. st. 39.

“The other halfe behind yet sticking fast
Out of his head-peece Cambell fiercely reft,
And with such furie backe at him it HEFT.”

Ibid. book 4. cant. 3. st. 12.]

HAFT—is Haved, Hav'd, HAFT. The HAFT, of a knife or poniard, is the Haved part; the part by which it is Haved.

“But yet ne fond I nought the HAFT Whiche might unto the blade accorde.”

Gower, lib. 4. fol. 68. p. 1. col 1.

[“Forgo th’ advantage which thy arms have won,
Or, by the blood which trembles through the heart
Of her whom more than life I know thou lov’st,
I’ll bury to the HAFT in her fair breast
This instrument of my revenge.”—Dryden’s Ædipus, act 5. sc. 1.]

HILT—is Held, Helt, Hilt. The HILT of a sword is the Held part, the part which is Held.

[“If Tindall saye, nay : let him shew me which olde holy Popes were they, that euer HILD that the sacramentes of the Auler is suche a bare simple signe.”—Sir T. More’s Workes, p. 471.

“And in her other hand a cup she HILD,
The which was with Nepenthe to the brim upfild.”

Faerie Queene, book 4. cant. 3. st. 42.

“But what do I their names seeke to reherse,
Which all the world have with their issue fild ?
How can they all in this so narrow verse
Contayned be, and in small compasse HILD ?”

Faerie Queene, book 4. cant. 11. st. 17.]

TIGHT—is Tied, Tīd, Tight, of the Anglo-Saxon verb Tian, vincire, To Tie.

“To seie howe suche a man hath good
Who so that reasone understoode
It is unproperlicke sayde :
That good hath hym, and halt him TAIDE
That he ne gladdeth nought withall,
But is unto his good a thrall.”—Gower, fol. 84. p. 1. col. 1.

[“And in the midst of them he saw a knight,
With both his hands behinde him pinnoed hard,
And round about his necke an halter TIGHT,
And ready for the gallow tree prepard.”

Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 4. st. 22.

“Therewith he mured up his mouth along,
And therein shut up his blasphemous tong,
And thereunto a great long chaine he TIGHT,
With which he drew him forth, even in his own despight.”

Ibid. book 6. cant. 12. st. 34.]

DESERT—is Deserved, Deserv’d, Desert.

FART, a very innocent word (the Egyptians thought it divine),¹ Fared, Far'd, Fart, i. e. Fared, Gone; the past participle of ƿapan, To Fare, or To Go. The meaning of this word appears to have been understood by those who introduced the vulgar country custom of saying upon such an occasion——

“ And joy go with you.”

TWIST—is Twiced, Twic'd, Twist.

QUILT—is Quilled, Quill'd, Quilt.

WANT—is Waned, Wand, Want, the past participle of ƿanian, decrescere, To Wane, To fall away.

GAUNT—is Ge-waned, Gewan'd, Gewant, G'want, Gaunt; the past participle of Le-panian, To Wane, To decrease, To fall away. Ge is a common prefix to the Anglo-Saxon verbs. GAUNT was formerly a very common word in English.

“ As GANT as a greyhound.”—Ray's proverbial Similies.

—— “ How is't with aged GAUNT?

Oh how that name befits my composition :

Old Gaunt indeed, and GAUNT in being old :

Within me greefe hath kept a tedious fast,

And who abstaynes from meate, that is not GAUNT?

For sleeping England long time haue I watcht,

Watching breeds leannesse, leannesse is all GAUNT.

The pleasure that some fathers feede upon

Is my strict fast, I mean my childrens lookes,

And therein fasting hast thou made me GAUNT.

GAUNT am I for the graue, GAUNT as a graue,

Whose hollow wombe inherits nought but bones.”

Richard the Second, p. 28.

——— “ This man,

If all our fire were out, would fetch down new

Out of the hand of Jove ; and rivet him

To Caucasus, should he but frown : and let

His own GAUNT eagle fly at him, to tire.”—B. Jonson, Catiline.

¹ “ Crepitus ventris pro numinibus habendos esse docuere.”

Clemens Romanus. v. Recognit.

“ Iidem Ægyptii cum plerisque vobiscum non magis Isidem quam ceparum acrimonias metuunt ; nec Serapidem magis quam strepitus, per pudenda corporis expressos, extremiscunt.”—Minucius Felix, Octavius.

[“ Eleganter Demetrius noster solet dicere, Eodem loco sibi esse voces imperitorum, quo ventre redditos crepitus. Quid enim, inquit, mea refert, sursum isti an deorsum sonent ?”—Seneca, Epist. xcii. edit. 4ta. Lipsii. p. 583, 584.]

“ Two mastiffs GAUNT and grim her flight pursu’d,
And oft their fastened fangs in blood embru’d.
And first the dame came rushing through the wood,
And next the famish’d hounds.”—Dryden, Theodore and Honoria.

DRAUGHT—the past participle of Drağan, To Draugh (now written To Draw), Draughed, Draugh’d, Draught.

RENT—Rended, Rend’d, Rent; of the verb To Rend.

[———“ But thou, viper,
Hast cancell’d kindred, made a RENT in nature.”

Dryden, Don Sebastian, act 2. sc. 1.]

BENT—A person’s Bent or Inclination. Bended, Bend’d, Bent.

TILT—of a boat or waggon: the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Tilian, i. e. To raise, or To lift up. To Till the ground is, To raise it, To turn it up. Atilt is well said of a vessel that is raised up; but we ought to say To Till, and not To Tilt a vessel.

“ Many wynter men lyued, and no meate ne TILIDEN.”

Vision of Pierce Ploughman, pass. 15. fol. 72. p. 2.

“ Turned upsidowne, and ouer TILT the rote.”

Ibid. pass. 21. fol. 112. p. 1.

“ He garde good fayth flee, and false to abyde,
And boldly bare downe with many a bright noble
Much of the wit and wisdom of Westminster hal,
He justled tyll a justice, and iusted in his eare
And OUERTILT al his truth.”

Ibid. pass. 21. fol. 113. p. 2.

“ O hye God, nothyng they tell, ne howe,
But in Goddes worde TELLETH many a balke.”

Chaucer, Ploughmans Tale, fol. 95. p. 2. col. 2.

[The old French verb Attiltrer (used by Amyot¹ and others, and whose signification is mistaken by Cotgrave), means susciter, To excite, To raise up: it is derived from the A.-S. Tilian.]²

F.—What is MALT?

H.—MOULD and MALT, though now differently pronounced, written, and applied by us, are one and the same

¹ [Plutarch’s Life of Pericles.]

² [So the Till of a shop; so the Thill horse: and so perhaps a Tile. Query, may it not be from Tegola, Italian? [Tezl. from Lat. Tegula.—Ed.] Consider also the French Tilleul.]

French word Mouillé; the past participle of the verb Mouiller, To wet or To moisten. Mouillé, anglicized, becomes Mouilled, Mouill'd, Mould: then Moult, Mault, Mult. Wetting or moistening of the grain is the first and necessary part of the process in making what we therefore well term MALT.

"He had a cote of christendome as holy kyrke beleueth
And it was MOLED in mani places."

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 14. fol. 68. p. 2.

"Shal neuer chest BYMOLEN it, ne mough after byte it."

Ibid. pass. 15. fol. 71. p. 2.

"This leper loge take for thy goodly hour
And for thy bed, take now a bunch of stro,
For wayled wyne and meates thou hadst tho,
Take MOULED breed, pirate, and syder sour."

Complaynt of Cresseide, fol. 204. p. 1. col. 1.

"And with his blode shall wasshe undefouled
The gylt of man with rust of synne YMOULED."

Lydyate (1531). Lyfe of our Lady, boke 2. p. 45.

"Whan namockes was your meate

With MOULD bread to eat." Skelton. (Edit. 1736.) p. 197.

F.—EN, as well as ED, is also a common participial termination, and our ancestors affixed either indifferently to any word. Sir Thomas More appears to have had a predilection for EN, and he writes Understanden (Works, vol. 2. p. 550), whilst his contemporary Bishop Gardner preferred ED, and therefore wrote Understanded: We have deserted both, and now use the past tense Understood instead of the participle. But will not a final EN or 'N likewise direct us to some of these concealed participles?

H.—Surely, to many. After what we have noticed in Poltroon, Dastard, and Coward, we cannot avoid seeing, that CRAVEN—is one who has craved or craven his life from his antagonist—dextrinque precantem protendens.

LEAVEN—is from the French Lever, To raise; i. e. That by which the dough is raised. So the Anglo-Saxons called it Heafen, the past participle of their own verb Heafan, To raise.

HEAVEN—(subaud. some place, any place). Heav-en or Heav-ed.

"They say that this word HEUEN in the article of our foyth, ascendit ad cœlos, signifieth no certaine and determinat place. Som tyme it signifieth only the suppre place of creatures."—A Declaration of Christe, cap. 8. by Johan Hoper. 1547.

BACON—is evidently the past participle of Bacan, To Bake, or To dry by heat.

"Our brede was newe BAKEN, and now it is hored, our botels and our wyne weren newe, and now our botels be nygh brusten."—Diues and Pauper, 2d Comm. cap. 20.

"And there they dranke the wine and eate the venison and the foules BAKEN."—Hist of Prince Arthur, 1st. part, chap. 133.

"As Abraham was in the playn
Of Mamre where he dwelt,
And BEAKT himselfe agaynst the sunne
Whose parching heat he felt."

Genesis, chap. 18. fol. 34. p. 1. By W. Hunnis. 1578.

"Crane, beinge rosted or BAKEN, is a good meate."

Castel of Helth, fol. 21. p. 1. By Syr Thomas Elyot.

"Whosoeuer hath his mynd inwardly ameled, BAKEN, and through fyred with the loue of God." Lupset's Workes, Of Charite, p. 5.

BARREN—i. e. Barr-ed, stopped, shut, strongly closed up, which cannot be opened, from which can be no fruit nor issue.

"God shall make heuen and the ayer aboue the, brasen ; and the erthe byneth the, yreny ; that is to saye, BAREYNE, for defaute of rayne."—Diues and Pauper, 10th Comm. cap. 8.

"For God thus plagued had the house
Of Bimelech the king,
The matrix of them all were STOPT,
They might no issue bring."—Genesis. By W. Hunnis.

"For the Lord had fast CLOSED up all the wombs of the house of Abimelech."—Genesis, chap. 20, v. 18.

So, in an imprecation of barrenness, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Woman Hater, act 5. sc. 2 :

"Mayst thou be quickly old and painted ; mayst thou dote upon some sturdy yeoman of the Wood-yard, and he be honest ; mayst thou be barr'd the lawful lechery of thy coach, for want of instruments ; and last, be thy womb unopen'd."

STERN—Ster-en, Ster'n, i. e. Stirr'd. It is the same word and has the same meaning, whether we say—a STERN countenance, i. e. a moved countenance, moved by some passion: or the STERN of a ship, i. e. The moved part of a ship, or that part by which the ship is moved. It is the past participle of the verb rtynan, rtipan, movere; which we now in English write differently, according to its different application, To Stir, or To Steer. But which was formerly written in the same manner, however applied.

“The STERNE wynde so loude gan to route
That no wight other noyse might here.”

Troilus, boke 3. fol. 176. p. 2. col. 1.

“There was no more to skippen nor to praunce,
But bodden go to bedde with mischaunce,
If any wight STERYNG were any where
And let hem slepen, that a bedde were.”

Ibid. boke 3. fol. 176. p. 1. col. 2.

“And as the newe abashed nightyngale
That stynteth first, whan she begynneth syng,
Whan that she hereth any hearde tale,
Or in the hedges any wight STERYNG.”

Ibid. boke 3. fol. 179. p. 1. col. 2.

“She fell in a grete malady as in a colde palsey, so ferforth that she myght neyther STERE hande nor fote.”—Nychodemus Gospell, chap. 8.

“Whan I sawe the STERYNGES of the elementes in his passyon, I byleued that he was Sauyours of the worlde.”—Ibid. chap. 17.

“He dyd se as he thought oure blessed lady brynge to hym fayre mylke in a foule cuppe, and STERED hym to ete of it.”—Myracles of our Lady, p. 10. (1530.)

“Yf the chylde STEARE not ne moue at suche tyme.”

Byrthe of Mankynde, fol. 15. p. 2. (1530.)

“Warne the woman that laboureth to STERE and moue herselfe.”—Ibid. fol. 23. p. 2.

“I suffre, and other poore men lyke unto me, am many a tyme STERYD to grutche and to be wery of my lyfe.”—Diues and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 1.

“Yf a man wyll STYRE well a shyp or a bote, he may not stande in the myddes of the shyp, ne in the former ende; but he muste stande in the last ende, and there he may STYRE the shyp as he wyl.”—Ibid. 9th Comm. cap. 8.

“This bysshop STERITH up afreshe these olde heresies.”

Gardners Decl. against Joye, fol. 25. p. 1. (1546.)

“He STERID against himselfe greate wrath and indignation of God.”—Dr. Martin. Of Priestes unlawfull Marriages, ch. 8.

"It is yourselves that STEIRE your fleash."

Dr. Martin. Of Priestes unlawful Marriages, ch. 11.

"Let the husbände geue hys wyfe hir dutie, that is if she craue for it, if they feare otherwise that Sathan wyll STIERE in them the deuile she desyre to liue incontinentlie."—Ibid. ch. 11.

"Let hym that is angry euen at the fyrste consyder one of these thinges, that lyke as he is a man, so is also the other, with whom he is angry, and therefore it is as lefull for the other to be angry, as unto hym: and if he so be, than shall that anger be to hym displeasant, and STERE hym more to be angrie."—Castel of Helth, by Syr T. E. fol. 63. p. 1.

"Rough deeds of rage and STERNE impatience."

1st Part Henry 6. p. 113.

"The sea, with such a storme as his bare head
In Hell-blacke night indur'd, would have buoy'd up
And quench'd the stelled fires.
Yet, poore old heart, he holpe the heauens to raine.
If wolues had at thy gate howl'd that STERNE time,
Thou should'st haue said, good porter turne the key."

Lear, p. 300.

"He that hath the STIRRAGE of my course Direct my sute."

Romeo and Juliet, p. 57.

"Tread on a worm and she will STEIR her tail."

Ray's Scottish Proverbs.

["Goe we unto th' assault, and selfe instant,
Before the rest (so said) first doth he STEARE."

Godfrey of Bulloigne, translated by R. C. Esq.
Windet 1594. p. 122. cant. 3. st. 51.

"His steed was bloody red, and fomed yre,
When with the maistring spur he did him roughly STIRE."

Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 5. st. 2.]

DAWN—is the past participle of Dazian, lucescere.

"Tyll the daye DAWED these damosels daunced."

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 19. fol. 103. p. 2.

"In the DAWYNGE and spryngyng of the daye, byrdes begyne to syngc."—Diues and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 28.

"And on the other side, from whence the morning DAWS."

Poly-olbion, song 10.

BORN—is the past participle of Beapan, To bear: formerly written BOREN, and on other occasions now written BORNE. BORN is, Borne into life or into the world.

BEARN (for a child) is also the past participle of Beapan,

To bear ; with this only difference : that Born or Bor-en is the past tense Bore with the participial termination EN : and BEARN is either the past tense Bare, or the Indicative Bear, with the participial termination EN.

“ For Maris loue of heuen

That BARE the blissful BARNE¹ that bought us on the rode.”

Vision of P. P. pass. 3. fol. 8. p. 1.

[BAD and GOOD.

To Bay, i. e. To vilify, To bark at, To reproach, To express abhorrence, hatred, and defiance, &c. Bayed, Baed, i. e. Bay'd, Ba'd, abhorred, hated, defied, i. e. BAD.

Bayen, Bay'n, Baen, write and pronounce BANE.

Abbaiare, It. Abboyer, Fr. Abbaubare, Lat. &c. Greek, Boaw. When the Italians swarmed in the French court, not being able to pronounce the open sound of Oy or Oi, they changed the o into a ; as in Français, Anglais. See Henri Etienne. So also Nivernais. Abayer.

To Ban, i. e. to curse. Bas, Fr. Base.

Ge-owed perhaps Gowed, written and pronounced GOOD, which the Scotch pronounce and write GUDE.] .

CHURN—(Chyren, Chyr'n, Chyrn) is the past participle of Lýpan, agitare, vertere, revertere, To move backwards and forwards.

YARN—is the past participle of Lýnpan, Lýnian, To prepare, To make ready. In Antony and Cleopatra, p. 367. —“ YARE, YARE, good Iras”—is the Imperative of the same verb ; the Ē and ȝ of the Anglo-Saxons, however pronounced by them, being often (indeed usually) softened by their descendants to y.

When Valeria in Coriolanus, page 4, says—“ You would be another Penelope : yet they say, all the YEARN she spun in Ulysses absence did but fill Athica full of mothes,”—Yearne (i. e. Yaren) means Prepared (subaud. Cotton, Silk, or Wool) by spinning.

¹ [“ The A.S. has two similar words which have been confounded : Beorn, masc. ‘ a chieftain,’ pl. beornar ; and Beapn, neut. ‘ a child,’ sing. and pl. alike.”—Kemble's Glossary to Beowulf.]

F.—Is BRAWN one of these participles?

H.—ED and EN are Adjective as well as Participial terminations: for which, by their meaning (for all common terminations have a meaning, nor would they otherwise be common terminations) they are equally qualified. Thus we say—Golden, Brazen, Wooden, Silken, Woolen, &c., and formerly were used Silver-en, Ston-en, Treen-en, Ros-en, Glas-en, &c.

“Thei worshipiden not deuelys and symylacris, GOLDUN, SILUEREN, and BRASONE, and STONEN, and TREENEN; the whiche nether mown se nether here nether wandre.”

In the modern translation,

“That they should not worship Devils and Idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood; which neither can see nor hear nor walk.”—Apocalips, ch. 9. v. 20.

“And I saw as a GLASUN see meynd with fier, and hem that ouer-camen the beest and his ymage, and the noumbre of his name stondynge aboue the GLASUN sæ.”

In the modern translation,

“And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire: and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass.”—Ibid. ch. 15. v. 2.

“Whan Phebus the sonne begynneth to sprede hys clerenesse with ROSEN chariottes.”—Chaucer, Boecius, boke 2. fol. 227. p. 1. col. 1.

“The day the fayrer ledeth the ROSEN horse of the sonne.”

Ibid. boke 2. fol. 231. p. 2. col. 2.

“That er the sonne tomorrowe be rysen newe
And er he haue ayen ROSEN hewe.”

Chaucer, Blacke Knyght, fol. 291. p. 1. col. 1.

“In their time thei had TREEN chalices and golden prestes, and now haue we golden chalices and TREEN prestes.”—Sir T. More's Works. Dialogue, &c. p. 114.

“Sir Thomas Rokesby being controlled for first suffering himselfe to be serued in TREENE cuppes, answered—These homely cups and dishes pay truely for that they containe: I had rather drinke out of TREENE, and pay gold and siluer, than drinke out of gold and siluer, and make wooden payment."—Camdens Remains, p. 241.

[STRAWEN.

"Let him lodge hard, and lie in STRAWEN bed,
That may pull downe the courage of his pride."

Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 5. st. 50.

EUGHEN.

"Or els by wrestling to wex strong and heedfull,
Or his stiffe armes to stretch with EUGHEN bowe."

Spenser, Mother Hubberds Tale.]

Our English word BOAR is the Anglo-Saxon Bap, which they pronounced broad as Bawr; and so our Northern countrymen still call it, and formerly wrote it. So they wrote Rar, and pronounced Rawr, what we now write and pronounce Roar.

"The bersit BARIS and beris in thare styis Raring all wod."

Douglas, booke 7. p. 204.

"Or with loud cry folowand the chace Efter the fomy BARE."

Ibid. booke 1. p. 23.

So the Anglo-Saxon

Bac	} which we now call and write	Boat	} are still pro- nounced in the North	Bawl
Ban		Bone		Bawn
Bam		Home		Hawm
Abad		Abode		Abawd
Bald		Bold		Bawld
Dnan		Drone		Drawn
Stan		Stone		Stawn
Lað		Loth		Lawth
Fam		Foam		Fawm
κλαδ } Lald	— —	Cold	— —	Cawld.

Bar-en or Bawr-en, Bawr'n, was the antient adjective of Bar, Bawr; and, by the transposition of R, Bawrn has become BRAWN.

BRAWN therefore is an Adjective, and means Boar-en or Boar's (subaud.) Flesh.

F.—Is not this a very singular and uncommon kind of transposition?

H.—By no means. Amongst many others, what we now call and write

Grass	} was formerly called and written	Gers ¹	A.-S.	Læpp
Bright		-	-	-
Profile		Ital.	Porfilo
Brothel		Bordel
To Thresh		-	-	-
Threshold		-	-	-
Thrilled		Thirled
Wright		-	-	-
Nostril, &c.		Neisthyrl, &c.

GRASS.

“His uthir wechty harnes, gude in nede,
Lay on the GERS besyde him in the mede.”

Douglas, booke 10. p. 350.

“The grene GERS bedewit was and wet.” Ibid. booke 5. p. 138.

“Unto ane plesand grund cumin ar thay,
With battil GERS, fresche herbis and grene swardis.”

Ibid. booke 6. p. 187.

BROTHEL.

“One Leonin it herde telle, Whiche maister of the BORDEL was.”

Gower, lib. 8. fol. 181. p. 2. col. 2.

¹ [To the instances given above of the transposition of the R, as in Gers for Grass, may be added Kerse for Cress:—whence the harmless sayings “Not worth a Kerse” (cress)—“I don’t care a Kerse,” have been first changed for “I don’t care a Curse,” &c., and then whimsically metamorphosed into “I don’t care a Damn,”—“Not worth a Damn off a common.”

“Wysdom and wytt now is nat worthe a KERSE.”

Pierce Ploughman, Dowell, pass. 2.

“I sette not a STRAW by thy dreminges.”

Chaucer, Nonnes Preestes Tale.

“Of paramours ne raught he not a KERS.”—Miller’s Tale.

So also “ne raughte not a bene,” ibid., is used in the same sense:—and “nought worth a pease,” Spenser, Shep. Cal. Octob.—where note, that pease is the true singular (like riches, richesse; bellows, baleise), pea being formed on a misconception. The ancient plural peasen was long preserved, probably to avoid the cacophony of the second s, as in housen, hosen, still in use in Norfolk: so Daniel iii. 21, “bound in their hosen and hats.”—Ed.]

"He hath hir fro the BORDELL take."

Gower, lib. 8. fol. 182. p. 1. col. 2.

These harlottes that haunte BORDELS of these foule women."

Chaucer, Parsons Tale, fol. 114. p. 2. col. 1.

"She was made naked and ledde to the BORDELL house to be defouled of synfull wretches."—Dives and Pauper, 4th Comm. cap. 23.

THIRILL.

"Quhare as the swelth had the rokkiis THIRILLIT."

Douglas, booke 3. p. 87.

"The cald drede tho gan Troianis inuaide, THIRLLAND throwout hard Banis at every part."

Ibid. booke 6. p. 164.

"The prayer of hym that loweth hym in his prayer THYRELETH the clowdes."—Dives and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 56.

"It is a comon prouerbe, that a shorte prayer THYRELETH heuen."—Ibid. 1st Comm. cap. 56.

NOSTRIL.

"At thare NEISTHYRLES the fyre fast snering out."

Douglas, booke 7. p. 215.

["Flames of fyre he throw forth from his large NOSETHIRILL."

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 11. st. 22.]

And what we now write and call

Burnt

Bird

Third

Thirty

Thirst

Burst

Thorp, &c. } were formerly written and called

Brent

Brid

Thrid

Thritti

Thrust

Brast

Thrope, &c. }

BURN.

"Forsothe it is beter for to be woddid than for to be BRENT."

Corinthies, ch. 7. v. 9.

"The great clamour and the weymentyng

That tho ladies made at the BRENNYNG

Of the bodyes."

Knyghtes Tale, fol. 1. p. 2. col. 2.

"By the lawe, canone 26, suche wytyches sholde be heded and BRENT."—Dives and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 34.

"God hath made his arowes hote with BRENNYNGE thynges, for they that ben BRENT with synne shall BRENNE with the fyre of helle."—Ibid. 8th Comm. cap. 15.

“ But would to God these hatfull bookes all Were in a fyre BRENT to poudre small.”—Sir T. Mores Workes.

BIRD.

“ Foxis han Borwis or dennes, and BRIDDIS of the eir han nestis.”—Mattheu, ch. 8. (ver. 20.)

“ Whan euery BRYDDE upon his laie Emonge the grene leues singeth.”

Gower, lib. 7. fol. 147. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Houndes shall ete thy wyfe Iesabell, and houndes and BRYDDES shall ete thy bodye.”

Diues and Pauper, 9th Comm. cap. 4.

THIRD.

“ He wente ofte and preiede the THRIDDE tyme.”

Mattheu, ch. 26. (v. 44.)

THIRTY.

“ Thei ordeyneyde to him THIRTTY plates of siluer.”

Mattheu, ch. 26. (v. 15.)

“ Judas solde Cryste, Goddes Sone, for THIRTTY pens.”

Diues and Pauper, 9th Comm. cap. 4.

THIRST.

“ I hungride and ye gauen not to me for to ete ; I THRISTIDE, and ye gauen not to me for to drinke.—Lord, whanne saien we thee hungringe, ether THRISTINGE ?”—Mattheu, ch. 25. (v. 35. 37.)

“ He that bileueth in me shal neuer THRISTE.”—John, ch. 6. (v. 35.)

“ There spronge a welle freshe and clere,
Whiche euer shulde stonde there
To THRUSTIE men in remembrance.”

Gower, lib. 6. fol. 129. p. 2. col. 2.

“ Neither hunger, THRUST, ne colde.”

Parsons Tale, fol. 118. p. 1. col. 2.

“ Tantalus that was distroyed by the woodenesse of longe THRUSTE.”
—Boecius, boke 4. fol. 240. p. 1. col. 1.

“ And in deserte the byble bereth wytnesse
The ryuer made to renne of the stone
The THRISTE to staunche of the people alone.”

Lydgate, Lyfe of our Lady, p. 65.

“ The THRISTE of Daud to staunche.”

Ibid. p. 164.

“ They gaaf mete to the hungrye, drynke to the THRUSTYE.”

Diues and Pauper, Of holy Pouerte, cap. 11.

“ I hadde THRYSTE, and ye gaue me drynke.”

Ibid. 8th Comm. cap. 17.

"Ther shal be no wepyng, no cryeng, no hongre, no THRUST."

Dives and Pauper, 10th Comm. cap. 10.

"Their THRUST was so great

They asked neuer for meate

But drinke, still drynke."

Skelton, p. 132.

["His office was the hungry for to feed,

And THIRSTY give to drinke."

Fuerie Queene, book 1. cant. 10. st. 38.

"Is this the ioy of armes? be these the parts

Of glorious knighthood, after blood to THRUST?"

Ibid book 2. cant. 2. st. 29.]

BURST.

"All is to BURST thylke regyon."

Knyghtes Tale, fol. 10. p. 1. col. 1.

"The teares BRASTE out of her eyen two."

Doctour of Physikes Tale, fol. 65. p. 1. col. 1.

"Haue here my trueth, tyl that my hert BRESTE."

Frankelyns Tale, fol. 52. p. 1. col. 2.

"And in his brest the heaped woe began

Out BRUSTE."

Treylus, boke 4. fol. 183. p. 2. col. 1.

"BROSTEN is mine herte."

Dido, fol. 213. p. 1. col. 2.

"And with that worde he BREST out for to wepe."

Lydgate, Lyfs of our Lady, p. 78.

———"The great statue

Fell to the erthe and BRASTE on peeces smale."

Ibid. p. 139.

"The false idolis in Egipte fell downe

And all to BRASTE in peeces."

Ibid. p. 147.

"Wherefore his mother of very tender herte

Out BRASTE on teres."

Ibid. p. 167.

"The blood BRASTE out on euery syde."

Dives and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 2.

"Our botels and our wyne weren newe, and now our botels be nygh BRUSTEN."—Ibid. 2nd Comm. cap. 20.

"Sampson toke the two pylers of the paynims temple, which bare up all the temple, and shooke them togydre with his armes, tyl they BROSTEN, and the temple fell downe."—Ibid. 5th Comm. cap. 22.

"Esau hym met, embraced hym

And frendly did him kysse,

They both BRAST forth with teares and wept."

Genesis, ch. 33. fol. 83. p. 2.

“Here ye wyll clap your handes and extolle the strength of truth, that BRESTETH out, although we Pharisais (as ye Saduces call us) wolde oppresse it.”—Gardners Declaration, &c., against Joye, fol. 122. p. 2.

“The doloure of their heart BRASTE out at theyr eyen.”

Sir T. More, Rycharde the Thirde, p. 65.

“Such mad rages runne in your heades, that forasking and BRUSTING the quietnesse of the comon peace, ye haue heynously and traytorously encamped your selfe in fiede.”—Sir John Cheke. Hurt of Sedition.

[“No gate so strong, no locke so firme and fast,
But with that percing noise flew open quite, or BRAST.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 8. st. 4.

“Still, as he fledd, his eye was backward cast,
As if his feare still followed him behynd :
Als flew his steed, as he his bandes had BRAST.”

Ibid. book 1. cant. 9. st. 21.]

THORP.

“There stode a THROPE of syght ful delectable
In whiche poore folke of that village
Hadden her beestes.”—Clerke of Oxenf. Tale, fol. 46. p. 1. col. 2.

“As we were entring at the THROPES ende.”

Parsons Prolog. fol. 100. p. 2. col. 1.

So of Φρενῆσις the Italians made Farnetico; and of Farnetico we make Frantick; and of Chermosino we make Crimson.¹ In all languages the same transposition takes place; as in the Greek Καρδία and Κραδίη, &c. And the Greeks might as well have imagined these to be two different words, as our etymologists have supposed BOARD and BROAD to be; though there is not the smallest difference between them, except this metathesis of the letter r: the meaning of BOARD and BROAD being the same, though their modern application is different.

F.—Well. Be it so. I think your account of BRAWN

¹ [So in Italian: Ghirlanda, Grillanda.—Orlando, Roldano, Rolando.

“How my blood CRUDDLES!”—Dryden. Ædipus, act 1. sc. 1.]

[“I will not be crubbed.”—Col. Wilson, in the House of Commons.]

“CRULLE was his here.”—Millers Tale, 3314.—ED.]

has an advantage over Junius and Skinner :² for your journey is much shorter and less embarrassed. But I beg it may be understood, that I do not intirely and finally accede to every thing which I may at present forbear to contest.

CHAPTER IV.

THE SAME SUBJECT CONTINUED.

F.—I SEE the etymological use you would make of the finals D, T, and N. But you said, early in our conversation, that WRONG was a past participle, as well as RIGHT; yet WRONG does not fall within any of those three classes.

II.—True. It belongs to a much more numerous and less obvious class of participles; which I should have been sorry to enter upon, till you had been a little seasoned by the foregoing.

WRONG—is the past participle of the verb To Wring, Ppingan, torquere. The word answering to it in Italian is

² Junius says—“BRAWN, callum; inde Brawn of a boar est callum aprugnum. Videntur autem BRAWN istud Angli desumpsisse ex accusativo Gr. παργος, callus; ut ex παργον, per quandam contractionem et literæ R transpositionem, primo fuerit πργων, atque inde BRAWN.”

Skinner says—“BRAWN, pro Apro, ingeniose deflectit amicus quidam doctissimus a Lat. Aprugna, supple Caro; rejecto initiali A, P in B mutato, G eliso, et A finali per metathesin του U premissio.

“2 BRAWN autem pro callo declinari posset a Gr. παρρωμα, idem signante; π in β mutato, ω priori propter contractionem eliso, ω posteriori in AU, et M in N facillimo deflexu transeunte.

“3. Mallem tamen BRAWN, pro Apro, a Teut. Brausen, fremere; vel a Brummen, murmurare. Sed neutrum placet.

“4 BRAWN etiam sensu vulgatissimo callum aprugnum signat. Vir rev. deducit a Belg. Beer, aper, et Rauw, Rouw, in obliquis Rauwen, Rouwen, crudus: quia exteri omnes hujus cibi insueti (est enim Angliæ nostræ peculiaris) carnem hanc pro crudo habent; ideoque modo coquant, modo assant, modo frigunt, modo pinsunt. Sed obstat, quod nullo modo verisimile est, nos cibi nobis peculiaris, Belgis aliisque gentibus fere ignoti nomen ab insuetis sumsisse.

“5. Possit et deduci (licet nec hoc plane satisficiat) ab A.-S. Bap, aper, et pun, contr. pro punnen vel ge-punnen, coneretus, q. d. Barrun (i. e.) pars Apri maxime concreta, pars durissima.”

Torto, the past participle of the verb Torquere; whence the French also have Tort. It means merely Wrung, or Wrested from the RIGHT or Ordered—line of conduct.

F.—If it means merely Wrung, the past participle of To Wring, why is it not so written and pronounced? Doctor Lowth, in his account of the English verbs——

L.—O, my dear Sir, the bishop is by no means for our present purpose. His Introduction is a very elegant little treatise, well compiled and abridged for the object which alone he had in view; and highly useful to Ladies and Gentlemen for their conversation and correspondence; but affording no assistance whatever to reason or the human understanding: nor did he profess it. In the same manner an intelligent tasty milliner, at the court end of the town, may best inform a lady what the fashion is, and how they wear the things at present; but she can give her little or no account perhaps of the materials and manufacture of the stuffs in which she deals;—nor does the lady wish to know.

The bishop's account of the verbs (which he formed as well as he could from B. Jonson and Wallis) is the most trifling and most erroneous part of his performance. He was not himself satisfied with it; but says—"This distribution and account, if it be just."

He laid down in the beginning a false rule: and the consequent irregularities, with which he charges the verbs, are therefore of his own making.

Our ancestors did not deal so copiously in Adjectives and Participles, as we their descendants now do. The only method which they had to make a past participle, was by adding ED or EN to the verb:¹ and they added either the one or the other indifferently, as they pleased (the one being as regular ¹ ["Being a people very stubborn and untamed, or if it were ever tamed, yet now lately having quite SHOOKEN off their yoke."—Spenser's View of the State of Ireland. Todd's Edit. 1805. p. 303.

"The shepherds boy (best KNOWN by that name)."

Spenser. Colin Clouts come home agen, 1st line.

"That every breath of heaven SHAKED it."—F. Queene, b. 1. c. 4. st. 5.

"Who reapes the harvest SOWEN by his foe, SOWEN in bloodie field, and bought with woe."—Ibid. b. 1. c. 4. st. 42.

"Old loves, and warres for ladies DOEN by many a lord."

Ibid. book 1. cant. 5. st. 3.

as the other) to any verb which they employed : and they added them either to the indicative mood of the verb, or to the past tense. Shak-ed or Shak-en, Smytt-ed or Smytt-en, Grow-ed or Grow-en, Hold-ed or Hold-en, Stung-ed or Stung-en, Buyld-ed or Buyld-en, Stand-ed or Stand-en, Mow-ed or Mow-en, Know-ed or Know-en, Throw-ed or Throw-en, Sow-ed or Sow-en, Com-ed or Com-en, were used by them indifferently. But their most usual method of speech was to employ the past tense itself, without participializing it, or making a participle of it by the addition of ED or EN. So likewise they commonly used their Substantives without adjectiving them, or employing those adjectives which (in imitation of some other languages, and by adoption from them) we now employ.

Take as one instance (you shall have more hereafter) the verb To Heave, Heapan.

By adding ED to the Indicative, they had the participle Heaved
 By changing D to T, mere matter of pronunciation . . . Heaft
 By adding EN, they had the participle Heaven
 Their regular past tense was (Har Hoof) Hove
 By adding ED to it, they had the participle Hoved
 By adding EN, they had the participle Hoven

And all these they used indifferently. The ship (or any thing else) was

Heaved or Heav'd	} And these have left behind them in our modern language, the supposed substantives, but really unsuspected Participles	Head
Heaft		Heft
Heaven		Heaven
Hove		Hoof, Huff , and the diminutive Hovel
Hoved or Hov'd		Howe or Hood, Hat, Hut
Hoven :		Haven, Oven.

"Thou wouldst have heard the cry that wofull England made ;
 Eke Zeland's piteous plaints, and Hollands TORN heare."

Spenser. The Mourning Muse of Thestylis.

"That kiss went tingling to my very heart.
 When it was gone, the sense of it did stay ;
 The sweetness CLING'D upon my lips all day."

Dryden's Marriage A-la-Mode, act 2. sc. 1.]

You will observe that this past tense Has, Hos, Hove, was variously written, as Heff, Hafe, Howve.

"Whan Lucifer was HEFF in heuen
And ought moste haue stonde in euen."

Gower, fol. 92. p. 2. col. 2.

"And Arcite anon his honde up HAFE."

Knyghtes Tale, fol. 8. p. 2. col. 1.

"Yet hoved ther an hundred in HOWVES of silke Sergeaunts yt besemed that seruen at the barre."

Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 4. p. 1.

"Nowe nece myne, ye shul wel understonde,
(Quod he) so as ye women demen al,
That for to holde in loue a man in honde
And hym her lefe and dere hert cal,
And maken hym an HOWUE aboue a call,
I mene, as loue another in this mene whyle,
She doth herselfe a shame, and hym a gyle."

Troilus, boke 3. fol. 176. p. 2. col. 2.

"Nowe, sirs, quod this Oswolde the Reue,
I pray you al, that ye not you greue
That I answeere, and som dele set his HOUE
For lefull it is with force, force of shoufe."

Reues Prol. fol. 15. p. 2. col. 1.

N.B. In some copies, it is written Howue.

To set his Houfe or Howue, is equivalent to what the Miller says before,

"For I woll tell a legende and a lyfe
Both of a carpenter and hys wyfe,
Howe that a clerke set a wryghtes cappe."

Millers Tale, fol. 12. p. 1. col. 1.

"In this case it shal be very good to make a perfume underneth of the HOUE of an asse."—Byrth of Mankynde, fol. 30. p. 1.

"Also fumigation made of the yes of salt fysshes, or of the HOUE of a horse."—Ibid. fol. 33. p. 1.

"Strewe the powder or asshes of a calves HOUE burnt."

Ibid. fol. 54. p. 2.

"The stone HOUED always aboue the water."

Historie of Prince Arthur, 1st part, ch. 44.

"Monkes and chanones and suche other that use grete ouches of syluer and golde on theyr copes to fastene theyr HODES ayenst the wynde."—Diues and Pauper, 7th Comm. cap. 12.

If you should find some difficulties (I cannot think they will be great) to make out to your satisfaction the above derivations; it will be but a wholesome exercise; and I shall not stop now to assist in their elucidation; but will return to the word WRONG. I have called it a past participle. It is not a participle. It is the regular past tense of the verb To Wring. But our ancestors used a past tense, where the languages with which we are most acquainted use a participle: and from the grammars of the latter (or distribution of their languages) our present grammatical notions are taken: and I must therefore continue with this word (and others which I shall hereafter bring forward) to consider it and call it a past participle.

In English, or Anglo-Saxon (for they are one language), the past tense is formed by a change of the characteristic letter of the verb. By the characteristic letter I mean the vowel or diphthong which in the Anglo-Saxon immediately precedes the Infinitive termination an, ean, ian; or zan, zean, gian.

To form the past tense of Þringan, To Wring (and so of other verbs), the characteristic letter i or y was changed to A broad. But, as different persons pronounced differently, and not only pronounced differently, but also used different written characters as representatives of their sounds; this change of the characteristic letter was exhibited either by A broad, or by o, or by u.

From Alfred to Shakespeare, both inclusively, o chiefly prevailed in the South, and A broad in the North. During the former part of that period, a great variety of spelling appears both in the same and in different writers. Chaucer complains of this:

“And for there is so grete diuersyte

In Englyshe, and in writynge of our tonge.”

Troilus, boke 5. fol. 200. p. 1. col. 1.

But since that time the fashion of writing in many instances has decidedly changed to ou and u; and in some, to oa and oo and ai.

But, in our inquiry into the nature of language and the meaning of words, what have we to do with capricious and mutable fashion? Fashion can only help us in our commerce with the world to the rule (a necessary one I grant) of Loquendum ut vulgus.

But this same fashion, unless we watch it well, will mislead us widely from the other rule of Sentiendum ut sapientes.

F.—Heretic! What can you set up, in matter of language, against the decisive authority of such a writer as Horace?

——— “Usus,

Quem penes arbitrium est et jus et norma loquendi.”

H.—I do not think him any authority whatever upon this occasion. He wrote divinely: and so Vestris danced. But do you think our dear and excellent friend, Mr. Cline, would not give us a much more satisfactory account of the influence and action, the power and properties of the nerves and muscles by which he performed such wonders, than Vestris could? who, whilst he used them with such excellence, did not perhaps know he had them. In this our inquiry, my dear Sir, we are not poets nor dancers, but anatomists.

F.—Let us return then to our subject.

H.—To the following verbs, whose characteristic letter is i, the present fashion (as Dr. Lowth truly informs us) continues still to give the past tense in o.

Abide	——	Abode	Smite	——	Smote
Drive	——	Drove ¹	Stride	——	Strode
Ride	——	Rode	Strive	——	Strove
Rise	——	Rose	Thrive	——	Throve
Shine	——	Shone	Write	——	Wrote
Shrive	——	Shrove	Win	——	Won

¹ [“What franticke fit, quoth he, hath thus distraught
Thee, foolish man, so rash a doome to give!
What iustice ever other iudgement taught,
But he should dye, who merites not to live?
None els to death this man despayring DRIVE
But his owne guiltie mind, deserving death.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 9. st. 38. Todd's Edit.

To which he properly adds (though no longer in fashion)

Chide	—	Chode
And Climb	—	Clomb

“Jacob CHODE with Laban.”—Genesis xxxi. 36.

“And the people CHODE with Moses.”—Numb. xx. 3.

“And shortly CLOMBEN up all thre.”

Millers Tale, fol. 14. p. 1. col. 2.

“Sens in astate thou CLOMBEN were so hye.”

Monkes Tale, fol. 87. p. 2. col. 1.

“The sonne he sayde is CLOMBE up to heuen.”

Tale of Nonnes Priest, fol. 90. p. 1. col. 1.

“So effated I was in wantonnesse,

And CLAMBE upon the fychell whele so hye.”

Testam. of Creseyde, fol. 204. p. 2. col. 1.

“Up I CLAMBE with muche payne.”

3d Boke of Fame, fol. 297. p. 2. col. 1.

“High matters call our muse ; inviting her to see

As well the lower lands, as those where lately she

The Cambrian mountains CLOME.”—Poly-olbion, song 7.

“It was a Satyr’s chance to see her silver hair

Flow loosely at her back, as up a cliff she CLAME.”—Ibid. song 28.

[“Who, well them greeting, humbly did requight,

And asked, to what end they CLOMB that tedious hight?”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 10. st. 49.

“Which to behold he CLOMB up to the bancke.”

Ibid. book 2. cant 7. st. 57.

“Tho to their ready steedes they CLOMBE full light.”

Ibid. book 3. cant. 3. st. 61.

“She to her waggon CLOMBE : CLOMBE all the rest,

And forth together went.”

Ibid. book 3. cant. 4. st. 31.

“Then all the rest into their coches CLIM.”

Ibid. book 3. cant. 4. st. 42.

“And earely, ere the morrow did upreare

His deawy head out of the ocean maine,

“That the bold prince was forced foote to give

To his first rage, and yeeld to his despight :

The whilest at him so dreadfully he DRIVE,

That seem’d a marble rocke asunder could have RIVE.”

Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 11. st. 5.]

He up arose, as halfe in great disdaine,
And CLOMBE unto his steed."—Faerie Queene, b. 3. cant. 4. st. 61.

"Unto his lofty steede he CLOMBE anone."

Ibid. book 4. cant. 5. st. 46.

"Thence to the circle of the moone she CLAMBE,
Where Cynthia raignes in everlasting glory."

Ibid. Two cantos of Mutabilitie, cant. 6. st. 8.]

You will please to observe that the past participles of the above verbs Abide, Drive, Shrive, and Ride, besides the supposed substantives DRIFT, SHRIFT (which we before noticed), furnish also the following; viz.

ABODE. i. e. Where any one has Abided.

DROVE. i. e. Any number of animals Driven.

SHROVE—As SHROVE-TIDE. i. e. The time when persons are Shrived or Shriven.

ROAD. i. e. Any place Ridden over. This supposed substantive ROAD, though now so written (perhaps for distinction sake, to correspond with the received false notions of language), was formerly written exactly as the past tense. Shakespeare, as well as others, so wrote it.

—————"The martlet
Builds in the weather, on the outward wall,
Euen in the force and RODE of casualtie."

Merchant of Venice, (1st Folio) p. 172.

"Here I reade for certaine that my ships Are safelie come to RODE."—Ibid. p. 184.

"A theeuish liuing on the common RODE."—As you Like it, p. 191.

"I thinke this is the most villanouse house in al London RODE for fleas."—1st Part Henry 4. p. 53.

"Neuer a man's thought in the world keepes the RODE-WAY better than thine."—2d Part Henry 4. p. 80.

"This Dol Tearesheet should be some RODE, I warrant you, as common as the way betweene S. Alban's and London."—Ib. p. 81.

"I haue alwaye be thy beest, and thou haste alwaye RODEN on me, and I serued the neuer thus tyll now."

Dives and Pauper, 9th Comm. cap. 5.

"They departed and ROAD into a valey, and there they met with a squier that ROADE upon a hackney."

Historie of P. Arthur, 3d part, ch. 66.

["Now, strike your sailes, yee iolly mariners,
For we be come unto a quiet RODE."

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 12. st. 42.

"Such was that hag which with Duessa ROADE."

Ibid. book 4. cant. 1. st. 31.]

But, together with the unfashionable Clomb and Chode, the bishop should also have noticed, that by a former (and generally not more distant) fashion, the following verbs also (though now written with A, U, OU, or I short) gave us their past tense in O.¹

Begin	—	Begon	Sink	—	Sonk
Bid	—	Bod	Slide	—	Slode
Forbid	—	Forbode	Sling	—	Slong
Bind	—	Bond	Spin	—	Spon
Bite	—	Bote	Spring	—	Sprong
Cling	—	Clonge	Stick	—	Stoke, Stock
Drink	—	Dronk	Sting	—	Stong
Find	—	Fond	Stink	—	Stonk
Fling	—	Flong	Strike	—	Stroke
Fly	—	Flow	Swim	—	Swom
Give	—	Gove	Swing	—	Swong
Glide	—	Glode	Swink	—	Swonk
Ring	—	Rong	Will	—	Woll
Rive	—	Rove	Wind	—	Wond
[Shine	—	Shone]	Wit	—	Wot
Shrink	—	Shronk	Wring	—	Wrong
Sing	—	Song	Yield	—	Yold.

BEGIN.

"An hyne that had hys hyre ere he BEGONNE."

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 15. fol. 74. p. 1.

¹ [Mr. Tooke has added the following in the margin ;—Hear, Hard; Dread, Drad; Drip, Drop, or Dripped; Eat, Ate; Bylban; String; Thring.

Also,

To METE.

"For not by measure of her owne great mynd
And wondrous worth, she MOTT my simple song."

Spenser, Colin Clouts come home again.]

"The mightie God, which UNBEGONNE
Stont of hymselfe, and hath BEGONNE
All other thinges at his will."—Gower, lib. 8. fol. 183. p. 2. col. 2.

"His berde was well BEGONNE for to spring."
Knyghtes Tale, fol. 7. p. 1. col. 2.

"Now I praye the for Goddes sake for to perfourme that thou haste BEGONNEN."—Dives and Pauper, 4th Comm. cap. 1.

"This doctrine for priestes marriages tendeth to the ouerthrowe of Christes relligion, &c. And bothe this and all other lyke newe fangled teachynges be now euidently knowen, to haue BEGON with lecherie, to haue continued with couetise, and ended in treason."—Dr. Martin, Dedication to Queene Marie.

"The temple of God in Hierusalem was BEGON by Dauyd and fynyshed by Salomon."—True Differences, &c. By Lord Stafforde.

"Folow this godd worke BEGON."
A Declaration of Christe. By Johan Hoper, cap. 13.

"God will, as he hath BEGON, continue your hignes in felicitie."
An Epitome of the Kynges Title, &c. (1547.)

[———"But this same day
Must end that worke the Ides of March BEGUN."¹
Julius Cæsar, p. 128. col. 1.]

BID.²

"Whan Christe himselfe hath BODE pees
And set it in his testament."—Gower, Prol. fol. 2. p. 1. col. 2.

"He was before the kynges face Assent and BODEN."—Ibid. lib. 1. fol. 24. p. 1. col. 1.

"And saith, that he hymselfe tofore
Thinketh for to come, and BOD therfore
That he him kepe."—Ibid. lib. 2. fol. 32. p. 1. col. 1.

"Whan Loue al this had BODEN me."
Rom. of the Rose, fol. 133. p. 1. col. 1.

"He ete of the FORBODEN tree."
Lydgate, Lyfe of our Lady, boke 2. p. 37.

"Hadde he BODE them stone hyr, he hadde sayd ayenst his owne prechyngc."—Dives and Pauper, 6th Comm. cap. 6.

¹ [To this passage the sapient Malone subjoins the following note:
"Our authour ought to have written—Began. For this error, I have no doubt, he is himself answerable."]

² [BOD is used as the preterite in Norfolk.—ED.]

“For couetyse Nachor was stoned to deth, for he stalle golde and clothe ayenst Goddes FORBODE.”—Diues and Pauper, 9th Comm. cap. 4.

“But yet Lots wife for looking backe

Which was to her FORBOD

Was turnde into a pyller salt

By mightie worke of God.”—Genesis, ch. 19. fol. 39. p. 1.

“Up is she go

And told hym so

As she was BODE to say.”—Sir T. Mores Workes.

[“So piercing through her closed robe a way,

His daring thought to part FORBODDEN got.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, translated by R. C., Esq.
1594. cant. 4. st. 28.]

BIND.

“But Jupiter, which was his sonne,

And of full age, his father BONDE.”—Gower, fol. 88. p. 1. col. 1.

“He caught hir by the tresses longe

With the whiche he BONDE both hir armes.”

Ibid. lib. 5. fol. 114. p. 2. col. 1.

“And with a chayne unuisible you BONDE

Togider bothe twaye.”

Chaucer, Blacke Knyghts, fol. 290. p. 2. col. 2.

“The fende holdeth theym full harde BOUNDE in his BOUNDES as his chattles and his thralles.”—Diues and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 35.

“Moche more it is nedeful for to unbynde this doughter of Abraham in the sabbat from the harde BOUNDE in the whiche Sathanas had holden her BOUNDEN xviii yere longe.”—Ibid. 3d Comm. cap. 14.

“Onely bodely deth may departe them, as ayenst the BOUNDE of wedloke. Goostly deth breketh that BOUNDE.”

Ibid. 6th Comm. cap. 7.

“God BONDE man to haue cure of woman in hyr myschief.”

Ibid. 6th Comm. cap. 24.

“The moneye that thou hydest in the erthe in waste is the raunsome of the prysoners and of myscheuous folke for to delyuere them out of pryson and out of BOUNDES, and helpe them out of woo.”

Ibid. 7th Comm. cap. 12.

“He hath lefte us a sacrament of his blessid body the whiche we are BOND to use religiously.”

A Declaracion of Christe. By Johan Hoper, cap. 8.

[“Upon a great adventure he was BOND,

That greatest Gloriana to him gave.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 1. st. 3. Todd's Edit.

“Therefore since mine he is, or free or BOND,
Or false or trew, or living or else dead.”

Faerie Queene, b. 1. c. 12. st. 28.]

“And I will make my BAND wyth him,

An euerlasting BAND,

And wyth his future seede to come

That euermore shall stande.”—Genesis, ch. 17. fol. 33. p. 1.

———— “Sister, proue such a wife,

As my thoughts make thee, and as my farthest BAND

Shall passe on thy approofe.”—Antony and Cleopatra, p. 352.

“Tell me, was he arrested on a BAND?”

“Not on a BAND, but on a stronger thing—a chain.”

“I, Sir, the sergeant of the BAND; he that brings any man to answer it, that breakes his BAND.”—Comedy of Errors, p. 94.

BITE.

———— “He BOTE his lips,

And wringing with the fist to wreck himself he thought.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 6. fol. 21. p. 2.

“Whan Adam of thilke apple BOTE,

His swete morcell was to hote.”

Gower, lib. 6. fol. 127. p. 1. col. 2.

“Whan a mannes sone of Rome sholde be hanged, he prayed his fader to kysse hym, and he BOTE of his faders nose.”

Diues and Pauper, 7th Comm. cap. 7.

“The hart went about the table round, as he went by other bordes the white brachet BOTE him by the buttocke and pulled out a peece.”—Historie of Prince Arthur, 1st part, chap. 49.

“Bartopus was hanged upon a galos by the waste and armys, and by hym a mastyfe or great curre dogge, the whych as soon euer he was smytten, BOTE uppon the sayde Bartopus, so that in processe he all to rent hym.”—Fabian, fol. 156. p. 2. col. 2.

“He frowned as he wolde swere by cockes blode,

He BOTE the lyppe, he loked passynge coye.”

Skelton, p. 68. (Edit. 1736.)

“The selfe same hounde

Might the confound

That his own lord BOTE

Might bite asunder thy throte.”—Ibid. p. 224.

CLING.

“And than the knyghtes dyde upon hym a cloth of sylke whiche for haboundaunce of blode was so CLONGE to hym that at the pullynge of it was an hondred folde more payne to hym than was his scourgynges."—Nychodemus Gospell, ch. 6.

DRINK.

"But with stronge wine which he DRONKE
Forth with the trauncle of the daies
Was DRONKE"—Gower, lib. 2. fol. 33. p. 1. col. 1.

"And thus full ofte haue I bought
The lie, and DRONKE not of the wyne."

Ibid. lib. 3. fol. 52. p. 1. col. 2.

"They nolde drinke in no maner wyse
No drinke, that DRONKE might hem make."

Sompners Tale, fol. 43. p. 1. col. 2.

"Noe DRANKE wyne soo that he was DRONKE, for he knewe not the myght of the wyne."—Diues and Pauper, 4th Comm. cap. 1.

"Mykke newe mylked DRONKE fastynges."

Castel of Helth, fol. 14. p. 2.

FIND.

"Thus was the lawe deceivable,
So forforth that the trouthe FONDE
Rescous none."—Gower, lib. 2. fol. 37. p. 1. col. 1.

"Among a thousande men yet FONDE I one,
But of all women FONDE I neuer none."

Marchauntes Tale, fol. 33. p. 1. col. 2.

["Thence shee brought into this Faery lond,
And in an heaped furrow did thee hyde;
Where thee a ploughman all unweeting FOND."

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 10. st. 66. Todd's edit.]

FLING.

"And made him blacke, and rest him at his songe
And eke his speche, and out at dore him FLONG Unto the dyuel."—Manciples Tale, fol. 92. p. 2. col. 2.

"Matrons FLONG gloues, ladies and maids their scarffes."

Coriolanus, p. 11.

"And Duncan's horses——"

Beauteous and swift, the minions of their race,
Turn'd wilde in nature, broke their stalls, FLONG out,
Contending 'gainst obedience"—Macbeth, p. 138.

["At last whenas the Sarazin perceiv'd

How that straunge sword refus'd to serve his neede,
But, when he strouke most strong, the dint deceiv'd;
He FLONG it from him."—Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 8. st. 49.

“ So when the lilly-handed Liagore whereof wise Pæon SPRONG,
 Did feele his pulse, shee knew there staied still
 Some little life his feeble sprites emong ;
 Which to his mother told, despeyre she from her FLONG.”
Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 4. st. 41.

“ A dolefull case desires a dolefull song,
 Without vaine art or curious complements ;
 And squallid fortune, into basenes FLONG,
 Doth scorne the pride of wonted ornaments.”
Spenser, Teares of the Muses.]

FLY.

“ And the fowles that FLOWE forth.”
Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 44. p. 1.

“ But this Neptune his herte in vayne
 Hath upon robberie sette.
 The Brid is FLOWE, and he was let,
 The fayre maide is hym escaped.”
Gower, lib. 5. fol. 117. p. 1. col. 2.

“ But I dare take this on honde,
 If that she had wynges two,
 She wolde haue FLOWEN to hym tho.”
Ibid. lib. 5. fol. 104. p. 1. col. 1.

“ He FLOWE fro us so swyfte as it had ben an egle.”
Nychodemus Gospell, ch. 15.

GIVE.

“ Hadde suffrid many thingis of ful manye lechis, and hadde GOUVE alle hir thingis, and hadde not profited eny thing.”
Mark, ch. v. (v. 26.)

“ Forsoth the traitour hadde GOUVE to hem a signe.”
Ibid. ch. xiv. (v. 44.)

“ He seide to hem it is GOUN to you to knowe the misterie, ether priuyte, of the rewine of God.”—Ibid. ch. iv. (v. 11.)

“ Forsothe it shal be GOUN to him that hath.”
Ibid. ch. iv. (v. 25.)

“ The kynge counsailed in the case,
 Therto hath YOUEN his assent.”
Gower, lib. 1. fol. 14. p. 1. col. 1.

“ With that the kynge, right in his place,
 An erledome, whiche than of Eschete
 Was late falle into his honde,
 Unto this knight, with rente and londe,
 Hath YOUE.”
Ibid. lib. 1. fol. 26. p. 2. col. 2.

"Pallas whiche is the goddessse
And wife to Mars, of whom prowessse
Is YOUNG to these worthy knightes."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 117. p. 1. col. 1.

"The high maker of natures
The worde to man hath YOUNG alone."

Ibid. lib. 7. fol. 169. p. 2. col. 2.

GLIDE.

"She GLODE forth as an adder doth."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 105. p. 1. col. 1.

"The vapour, which that fro the erthe GLODE Maketh the sonne to seme ruddy and brode."

Squiers Tale, fol. 26. p. 2. col. 1.

[———— "Fiercely forth he rode,
Like sparke of fire that from the andvile GLODE."

Faerie Queene, book 4. cant. 4. st. 23.

RING.

"If he maie perce hym with his tonge,
And eke so loude his belle is RONGE."

Gower, lib. 2. fol. 49. p. 2. col. 2.

"The rynges on the temple dore they RONGE."

Knyghtes Tale, fol. 8. p. 2. col. 1.

"A fooles belle is soone RONGE."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 145. p. 1. col. 2.

"They wyll not suffre theyr belles be RONGEN but they haue a certayn moneye therfore."—Diues and Pauper, 7th Comm. cap. 23.

"Be man or woman deed and doluen under claye, he is soone forgotten and out of mynde passed a waye. Be the belles RONGE and the masses SONGE he is soone forgotten."—Ibid. 8th Comm. cap. 12.

"The great Macedon, that out of Persie chased
Darius, of whose huge power all Asia RONG,
In the rich arke Dan Homers rimes he placed,
Who fained iestes of heathen princes SONG."

Earle of Surreys Songes and Sonets, fol. 16. p. 1.

"Than shall ye haue the belles RONG for a miracle."

Sir T. More's Works. A Dialogue, &c., p. 134.

["It is said, the evill spirytes that ben in the regyon of thayre, doubte moche when they here the belles RONGEN: and this is the cause why the belles ben RONGEN when it thondreth, and when grete tempesto and outrages of weather happen."

Golden Legend, by W. de Worde.]

RIVE.

"And for dispayre. out of his witte he sterte
And ROTE hymselfe anon throughout the herte."

Leg. of Good Women, Cleopatra, fol. 210. p. 1. col. 2

"Therewith the castle ROTE and walls brake, and fell to the earth."
—Historie of Pr. Arthur, 1st part, ch. 40.

"He ROTE himselfe on his owne swori."—Ibid. ch. 42.

"The thick mailles of their halbeards they carued and ROTE in sunder."—Ibid. 1st part, ch. 54.

"The boore turned him soiaieely and ROTE out the lungs and the heart of Sir Launcelots horse, and or euer Sir Launcelot might get from his horse the boore ROTE him on the brawne of the thighe up to the huckle bone."—Ibid. 3d part, ch. 17.

SHRINK.

"Her lippes SHRONKEN ben for age."

Gower, lib. 1. fol. 17. p. 1. col. 1.

"Somtyme she constrayned and SHRONKE her seluen lyke to the commen mesure of men : and somtyme it seemed that she touched the heuen with the hight of her hed. And whan she houe her heed hyer, she perced the selfe heuen."

Chaucer, Boecius, boke 1. fol. 221. p. 1. col. 1.

"Because the man that stroue with him

Did touch the hollow place

Of Jacob's thighe, wherein hereby

The SHRONKEN synewe was."—Genesis, ch. 32. fol. 83. p. 1.

"A nother let flee at the lorde Standley which SHRONKE at the stroke and fel under the table, or els his hed had ben cleft to the tethe : for as shortely as he SHRONKE, yet ranne the blood aboute hys eares."—Sir T. More. Rycharde the Thirde, p. 54.

SING.

"And therto of so good measure
He SONGE that he the beastes wilde
Made of his note tame and milde."

Gower, Prxl. fol. 7. p. 1. col. 2.

"On whiche he male on nyghtes melody
So swetely, that all the chambre RONG
And Angelus ad virginem he SONG,
And after that he SONGE the kynges note."

Myllers Tale, fol. 12. p. 1. col. 2.

"So loude SANGE that al the woode RONG."

Blacke Knyght, fol. 287. p. 2. col. 2.

“Some SONGE loude, as they had playned.”

Cuckowe and Nyghtingale, fol. 351. p. 1. col. 1.

“For here hath ben the leude cuckowe
And SONGEN Songes rather than hast thou.”

Ibid. fol. 351. p. 1. col. 2.

“The Abbot SONGE that same daye the hye masse.”

Myracles of our Lady, p. 7. (1530.)

“Euery note so SONGE to God in the chirche is a prayeynge to God.”—Diues and Pauper, 1st. Comm. cap. 59.

“By this nygtyngale that syngeth soo swetely, I understande Cryste, Goddes sone, that SONGE to mankynde SONGES of endeles loue.”

Ibid. 9th Comm. cap. 4.

“Which is SONG yerly in the chirch.”

Declaracion of Christe. By Johan Hoper, cap. 5. (1547.)

“If Orpheus had so play’d, not to be understood,
Well might those men have thought the harper had been wood;
Who might have sit him down, the trees and rocks among,
And been a verier block than those to whom he SONG.”

Poly-olbion, song 21.

[“And to the maydens sownding tymbrels SONG
In well attuned notes or ioyous lay.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 12. st. 7.]

SINK.

“They SONKEN into hell.”

Vis. of P. Ploughman, pass. 15. fol. 72. p. 2.

“And all my herte is so through SONKE.”

Gower, lib. 6. fol. 128. p. 1. col. 1.

“And wolde God that all these rockes blacke
Were SONKEN in to hell for his sake.”

Frankelneys Tale, fol. 52. p. 2. col. 2.

“His eyen drouped hole SONKEN in his heed.”

Test. of Creseyde, fol. 202. p. 2. col. 1.

“The trees hath leaues, the Bowes done spread, new changed is the yere,
The water brookes are cleane SONKE downe, the pleasant banks appere.”

Songes and Sonets by the Earle of Surrey, &c., fol. 62. p. 2. (1587.)

“Our ship is almost SONKE and lost.”

Ibid. fol. 91. p. 2.

SLIDE.

“The sword SLOD downe by the hawberke behinde his backe.”

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 1st part, ch. 14.

“His sword SLODE down and kerued asunder his horse necke.”

Ibid. 2d part, ch. 59.

"In hys goynge oute of his shyp, and takying the land, hys one fote SLODE, and that other Stacke faste in the sande."

Fabian, fol. 139. p. 2. col. 1.

SLING.

"This Pandarus came leapyng in at ones
And sayd thus, who hath ben wel ybete
To day with swerdes and SLONG stones."

Troilus, boke 2. fol. 168. p. 1. col. 1.

SPIN.

"O fatall sustren, whiche or any clothe
Me shapen was, my destyne me SPONNE,
So helpeth to thys werke that is Begonne."

Troilus, boke 3. fol. 176. p. 2. col. 1.

"Or I was borne, my desteny was SPONNE
By Parcas systerne." Blacke Knyght, fol. 300. p. 1. col. 1.

"Thende is in hym or that it be Begonne,
Men sayne the wolfe, whan it is well SPONNE,
Doth that the clothe is stronge and profitable."

Ballade to K. Henry 4. fol. 350. p. 1. col. 1.

"If that thy wicked wife had SPONNE the threade,
And were the weauer of thy wo."

Songes and Sonets by the Earle of Surrey, &c., fol. 93. p. 2.

["With fine small cords about it stretched wide,
So finely SPONNE, that scarce they could be spide."

Spenser's Muirpotmus, st. 45.]

SPRING.

"Out of the flint SPRONGE the flood that folke and beastes Dronke."

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 15. fol. 72. p. 2.

"And thus is mankind or manhode of matrimony SPRONG."

Ibid. pass. 17. fol. 90. p. 1.

"Tho might he great merueile see,
Of euery toth in his degree
SPRONG up a knight with spere and shelde."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 103. p. 2. col. 2.

"Anone there SPRONG up floure and gras."

Ibid. fol. 106. p. 1. col. 1.

"Thou shalt eke consider al the causes from whence they be SPRONG."

Tale of Chaucer, fol. 76. p. 2. col. 2.

"Out of his graue SPRONGE a fayre lyly."

Myracles of our Lady, p. 22. (1530.)

“ From these three sonnes that Noah left,
And others of their bloud,
Haue SPRONGE all nacions on the earth.”

Genesis, ch. 10. fol. 19.

“ Happy it was that these heretiques SPRONGE up in his dayes.”

Gardner's Declaration, &c., fol. 25. p. 1.

“ With our new religion new logicke is SPRONG furth of late.”

Dr. Martin of Priestes unlauful Mariages, chapitre 5. p. 52.

“ Where loue his pleasant traines hath sowed
Her beautie hath the fruites opprest,
Ere that the buddes were SPRONG and blowen.”

Songes, &c., by the Earle of Surrey, &c., fol. 3. p. 2.

“ Of lingring doubts such hope is SPRONG.” Ibid. fol. 18. p. 1.

“ Wherupon newe war SPRONG betwene them and us.”

Epitome of the Title, &c. (1547.)

“ From whence all knightly deeds and brave atchievements SPRONG.”

Poly-olbion, song 3.

[“ For both the lignage, and the certein sire
From which I SPRONG, from mee are hidden yitt.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 9. st. 3.

“ Sweete Love devoyd of villanie or ill,
But pure and spotles, as at first he SPRONG
Out of th' almighties bosom, where he nests.”

Spenser, Teares of the Muses.

“ Surely I would you had your wish : for then should not I now nede to bungle up yours so great a request, when presently you should haue sene with much pleasure, which now peradventure you shall read with some doubt, lesse thynges may encrease by writyng which were so great in doying, as I am more afrayd to leaue behind me much of the matter, than to gather up more than hath SPRONG of the trouth.”

Roger Ascham's letter to John Astely, p. 4.

“ He said ; and, mantled as he was, SPRANG forth,
And seiz'd a quoit in bulk and weight all those Transcending far, by the Phæacians used.
Swiftly he SWUNG, and from his vig'rous hand
Dismiss'd it.”

Cowper's translation of Homer's Odyssey, p. 208.]

STICK.

“ Thei haue anone the coffre STOKE.”

Gower, lib. 8. fol. 180. p. 1. col. 2.

“ This coffer in to his chamber is brought Whiche that thei finde faste STOKE.”

Ibid. p. 2. col. 1.

“In the midst thereof was an anuile of steele, and therein STOOKE a faire sworde naked by the point.”

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 1st part, ch. 3.

“There to abyde STOCKED in pryson.”

Lydgate, Lyfe of our Lady, boke 2. p. 35. (1531.)

STING.

“As thoughe he STONGEN were to the herte.”

Knyghtes Tule, fol. 2. p. 1. col. 1.

“If cowe or calfe, shepe or oxe swel

That any worne hath eaten or hem STONGE

Take water of this wel.” Pardoners Prol. fol. 65. p. 2. col. 1.

“I suffered to beten and bound, to be spateled and despysed, to be nayled to the crosse, crowned with thornes, STONGEN to the herte with a spere.”—Diues and Pauper, 8th Comm. cap. 14.

“The fende which appered in the lyknes of an adder to Eue and STANGE her full euyll.”—Ibid. 10th Comm. cap. 3.

“With serpents full of yre

STONG oft with deadly payne.”

Songes, &c., by the Earle of Surrey, &c., fol. 84. p. 1.

“Who so euer was STONG or venemyd with the poyson of the serpentes, if he lokyd upon the serpent of brasse might be helyd.”

Declaracion of Christe. By Johan Hoper, cap. 7.

“The people were STONG with serpentes.”—Ibid. cap. 7.

[“For hardly could be hurt, who was already STONG.”

Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 1. st. 3.

“I saw a wasp, that fiercely him defide,

And bad him battaile even to his iawes ;

Sore he him STONG, that it the blood forth drawes.”

Spenser, Visions of the Worldes Vanitie.]

STINK.

“Badde wedes whiche somtime STONKEN.”

Testament of Loue, boke 1. fol. 313. p. 1. col. 2.

[“That, through the great contagion, direful deadly STONCK.”

Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 2. st. 4.]

STRIKE.

“Thou shalt strike a stroke the most dolorous that euer man STROKE.”—Hist. of Prince Arthur, 1st part, ch. 33.

“Drew out his sword and STROK him such a buffet on the helmet.”

Ibid. ch. 111.

“They lashed together with their swords, and somtime they STROKE and somtime they foined.”—Ibid. 3d part, ch. 13.

"And when this man might not preuayle
 Jacob to ouerthrow,
 He Jacob STROKE under the thigh."

Genesis, ch. xxxii. fol. 82. p. 1.

"Frets call you these, (quoth she) Ile fume with them :
 And with that word she STROKE me on the head."

Taming of a Shrew, p. 216.

"Myselfe am STROOKE in yeeres I must confesse." Ibid. p. 217.

"Ile haue an action of battery against him, if there be any law in Illyria : though I STROKE him first, yet it's no matter for that."

Twelfth Night, p. 270.

"With endless grief porplext her stubborn breast she STRAKE."

Poly-olbion, song 7.

["STROKEN this knight no strokes againe replyes."

Godfrey of Bulloigne, translated by R. C., Esq.

Windet 1594. p. 110. cant. 3. st. 24.

"Lifts up his hand as at her backe he ran,
 And where she naked show'd, STROKE at her there."

Godfrey of Bulloigne, p. 113. cant. 3. st. 28.

"Methinks these holy walls, the cells, the cloysters, Should all haue STROOK a secret horror on you."

Dryden, Love in a Nunnery, act 5. sc. 1.

"And, as from chaos, huddled and deform'd,
 The God STROOK fire, and lighted up the lamps."

Dryden, Edipus, act 1. sc. 1.]

SWIM.

"Swear then how thou escap'dst.
 SWOM ashore (man) like a ducke."

Tempest, p. 10.

"You neuer swom the Hellespont."

Two Gent. of Verona, act 1. sc. 1.

"Put myself to merry of the ocean, and swom to land."

B. and Fletcher, Knight of Malta.

———"Fish under water

Wept out their eyes of pearle, and swoom blind after."

Camdens Remains, p. 338.

["The Norman usurpor, partly by violence, partly by falshood, layd here the foundation of his monarchie in the people's blood, in which it hath swom about 500 yeares."—Lyfe of Mrs. Lucy Hutchinson, p. 4.

"Don Constantine de Braganza was now viceroy of India ; and Camoens, desirous to return to Goa, resigned his charge. In a ship, freighted by himself, he set sail, but was shipwrecked in the gulph near the mouth of the river Mehon on the coast of China. All he had acquired was lost in the waves: his poems, which he held in one hand, while he SWIMMED with the other, were all he found himself possessed of, when he stood friendless on the unknown shore."

Enc. Brit. vol. iv. p. 63.

SWING.¹

"The fiery Tibalt, with his sword prepar'd,
Which, as he breath'd defiance to my eares,
He SWONG about his head, and cut the windes."

Romeo and Juliet, p. 54.

SWINK.

"Some put hem to the ploughe, pleden full selde,
In settynge and sowynge SWONKEN full harde."

Vision of Pierce Ploughman, fol. 1. p. 1.

"Thei had that thei han BESWONKE."

Gower, lib. 1. fol. 22. p. 2. col. 2.

"Aleyn waxe wery in the dawning,
For he had SWONKEN all the long nyght."

Reeues Tale, fol. 17. p. 1. col. 2.

"Hast thou had fleen al nyght, or art thou Dronke,
Or hast thou al nyght with some queen ISWONKE."

Manciples Prol. fol. 91. p. 1. col. 2.

WILL.

"And saide, if that he might acheue
His purpos, it shall well be Yolde,
Be so that thei hym helpe WOLED."

Gower, lib. 7. fol. 169. p. 1. col. 2.

WIND.

"And with the clothes of hir loue
She Hilled all hir bedde aboute.
And he, whiche nothyng had in doute,
Hir wimple WONDE aboute his cheke."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 121. p. 2. col. 1.

"Loue bounde hym in cradel and WONDE in cloutes ful poure."

Dines and Pauper, 10th Comm. cap. 3.

¹ ["So we see that Princes not in gathering much money, nor in bearing ouer great SWING, but in keping of frendes, and good lawes, liue most merely, and raigno most surely."—R. Ascham, p. 19.]

WIT.

“ For God it wote, he satte ful ofte and Songe
When that his shoe ful bitterly hym Wronge.”

Wife of Bathes Prol. fol. 36. p. 1. col. 2.

WRING.

“ Hunger in hast tho hent wastour by the maw,
And WRONG him so bi the wombe, that his eies watred.”

Vision of Pierce Ploughman, pass. 7. fol. 33. p. 2.

“ For whiche he wept and WRONGE his honde,
And in the bedde the bloody knyfe he Fonde.”

Man of Lawes Tale, fol. 21. p. 2. col. 1.

“ So hard him WRONG of sharpe desyre the payne.”

Troylus, boke 3. fol. 210. p. 2. col. 2.

“ And but it the better be stamped, and the venomous ieuse out WRONGEN, it is lykely to empoysonen all tho that therof tasten.”

Testament of Loue, boke 3. fol. 332. p. 1. col. 1.

“ To moche trusted I, wel may I sayne,
Upon your lynage, and your fayre tonge,
And on your teares falsly out WRONGE.”

Chaucer, Phillis, fol. 209. p. 1. col. 2.

“ The dome of God is lykened to a bowe, for the bowe is made of ii thynges, of a WRONGE tree and ryght stryngge, &c. And as the archer in his Shetyng taketh the WRONGE tree in hys lyfte honde, and the ryght stryngge in his ryght honde, and draweth them atwyne,” &c.—Diues and Pauper, 8th Comm. cap. 15.

“ And then Sir Palomides wailed and WRONG his hands.”

Hist. of P. Arthur, 2nd part, ch. 73.

“ And with my hand those grapes I tooke

That rype were to the show :

And WRONGE them into Pharos cuppe

And wyne therof did make.”—Genesis, ch. 40. fol. 100. p. 1.

“ Wiues WRONG their hands.”

Songes, &c., by the Earle of Surrey, &c., fol. 89. p. 1.

“ Give me those lines (whose touch the skilful ear to please)

That gliding flow in state, like swelling Euphrates,

In which things natural be, and not in falsely WRONG ;

The sounds are fine and smooth, the sense is full and strong.”

Poly-olbion, song 21.

“ When your ignorant poetasters have got acquainted with a strange word, they never rest till they have WRONG it in.”

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, act 2. sc. 4.

“Conuoy me, Sibyll, that I go not WRANG.”

Douglas, Prol. of boke 6. p. 158.

[“But Messalina neuer more loose and dissolute in lusts, the autumne being well spent, celebrated in her house the feast of grape-gathering; the presses were WRONG, the vessels flowed with wine, women danced about kirt with skins, like unto mad women, solemnizing the feasts of Bacchus.”

Tacitus Annales, translated by Greenwey, 1622, boke 11. 31. p. 152.

“Let false praise, and WROONG out by praiers, be restrained, no lesse than malice and cruelty.”—Ibid. p. 228.]

YIELD.

“And thus this tyranne there
Beraft hir suche thyngc, as men seyne,
May neuer more be YOLDEN ageyne.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 114. p. 1. col. 2.

“And glader ought his frendes bo of his deth,
Whan with honour YYOLDE is up the breth.”

Knyghtes Tale, fol. 11. p. 2. col. 1.

“Ne had I er now, my swete herte dere,
Ben YOLDE, iwis, I were nowe not here.”

Troilus, boke 3. fol. 179. p. 1. col. 1.

“The said Charles so sharply assauted the towne of Dam, that in shorte processe after it was YOLDEN unto him.”—Fabian, p. 154.

“Yf an other mannes good be not YOLDEN ayen whan it may be YOLDEN, he that stale it doth noo verry penaunce.”

Diues and Pauper, 7th Comm. cap. 12.

[“Because to yield him love she doth deny,
Once to me YOLD, not to be YOLDE againe.”

Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 11. st. 17.

“And in his hand a sickle he did holde,
To reape the ripened fruits the which the earth had YOLD.”

Ibid. Two Cantos of Mutabilitie, cant. 7. st. 30.]

F.—Enough, enough. Innumerable instances of the same may, I grant you, be given from all our antient authors. But does this import us any thing?

H.—Surely much: if it shall lead us to the clear understanding of the words we use in discourse. For, as far as we “know not our own meaning;” as far as “our purposes are not endowed with words to make them known;” so far we “gabble like things most brutish.” But the importance rises higher when we reflect upon the application of words to Metaphysics. And when I say Metaphysics; you will be pleased to remember, that all general reasoning, all Politics, Law, Morality, and Divinity, are merely Metaphysic.

F.—Well. You have satisfied me that Wrong, however written, whether Wrang, Wrong, or Wrung (like the Italian Torto and the French Tort), is merely the past tense (or past participle, as you chuse to call it) of the verb To Wring; and has merely that meaning. And I collect, I think satisfactorily, from what you have said, that SONG.—i. e. Any thing Singed, Sang, or Sung, is the past participle of the verb To Sing: as Cantus is of Canere, and Ode of αειδω. That

BOND ¹	} —however spelled, and with whatever subaudition applied, is still one and the same word, and
BAND
BOUND

“As the custome of the lawe hem BONDE.”

Lydgate, Lyfe of our Lady. (1530.) p. 29.

“We shall this serpent from our BONDES chase.”—Ibid. p. 56.

“His power shall fro royalme to royalme

The BONDES stratche of his royalte

As farre in south as any flode or any see.”—Ibid. p. 156.

“As the custome and the statute BANDE.”—Ibid. p. 99.

“And false goddes eke through his worchynges

With royall might he shall also despise,

And from her sees make hem to arise,

And fro the BANDES of her dwellynge place

Of very force dryue hem and enchace.”—Ibid. p. 155.

“Droue theim all out of the mayne lande into isles the uttermost BONDES of al Great Briteigne.”—Epitome of the Kynge's Title, &c.

[“Let him (quoth he) in BONDS goe plead his cace,

Thats BOND, and fit for bondage hath a graine,

I free was borne, and liue, and free in place

Will die, ere base cord hand or foot astraine.

¹ [It is questionable whether BOUND, a limit, be connected with the verb To Bind: and there is also another BOND, Bonda, paterfamilias, which forms a part of our word HUSBOND or HUSBAND, whose origin is entirely distinct, being the present participle of Buan, habitare, incolere; and which furnishes another curious instance of the tendency of similar words to coalesce. See Additional Notes.—ED.]

Usde to my sword, and used palmes to beare
Is this right hand, and scornes vile gyues to weare."

Godfrey of Bulloigne, translated by R. C., Esq.
cant. 5. st. 42. printed 1594.]

And that

BUNDLE—i. e. Bondel, Bond-dæl, is a compound of two participles Bond and dæl: i. e. a small part or parcel Bound up.

"Papistrie being an heresie, or rather a BUNDLE made up of an infinite number of heresies."

Warnyng agaynst the dangerous Practises of Papistes. (1559.)

And that

BIT } —whether used (like Morso, Morceau, or Morsel)

BAIT } for a small piece, part, or portion of any thing; or for that part of a bridle (imboccatura) which is put into a horse's mouth; or for that hasty refreshment which man or beast takes upon a journey; or for that temptation which is offered by treachery to fish or fool;—is but one word differently spelled, and is the past participle of the verb To Bite.

"BAITS, BAITS, for us to bite at."—Sejanus, act 2.

["She feeling him thus bite upon the BAIT,
Yet doubting least his hold was but unsound."

Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 5. st. 42.]

And that

BATTEL—(a term used at Eton for the small portion of food, which, in addition to the College allowance, the collegers receive from their Dames,) is Bat-dæl. And BAT-FUL—(a favourite term of Drayton,) is a similar compound of the two participles Bat and Full.

"That brook whose course so BATFUL makes her mould."

Poly-olbion, song 10.

"Of Bever's BATFUL earth, men seem as though to fain, Reporting in what store she multiplies her grain."—Ibid. song 13.

"There's scarcely any soil that fitteth by thy side, Whose turf so BATFUL is, or bears so deep a swath."—Ibid. song 21.

"Which for the BATFUL glebe, by nature them deny'd,
With mighty mines of coal, abundantly are blest."—Ibid. song 23.

["The soile, although differing somewhat in kinde, yet generally is wilde with woods, or unpleasant and il-fauoured with marishes: moist towards Gallia: more windie towards Noricum and Pannony, BATFUL enough; but bad for fruit-bearing trees."

Description of Germanie, translated from Tacitus, by Richard Greenwey. 1622.

“ Whether or no ought we to folowe the nature of groundes that be BATWELL, which bringe moche more fruyte than they receyued.”

Roberte Whytinton, Translation of Tullyes Offyces, 1534, Wynkin Worde.

“ The best advizement was, of bad, to let her
Sleepe out her fill without encomberment ;
For sleepe, they sayd, would make her BATTIL better.”

Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 8. st. 38.]

That

DRUNK—is the past participle of the verb To Drink : and STROKE—of the verb To Strike.

Still this is but a very scanty portion of participles passing for substantives from the verbs in English whose characteristic letter is I or Y.

H.—Scanty indeed, if these were all : especially if we include, as we ought to do, the numerous verbs which in the Anglo-Saxon have the same characteristic letters. But I will produce enough to you ; if you will promise me not to be tired with their abundance.

F.—That is more than I can possibly undertake ; but I do engage to let you know it when it happens.

H.—THRONG—is the past participle of the verb To Thring.
Ðringan, comprimere, constringere.

F.—Thring ! Where is that word to be found in English ?

H.—In the antient New Testament, in Gower, in Chaucer, in Douglas, and in all our old authors.

“ He was THROGUN of the cumpanye.”—Luke, ch. 8. v. 42.

“ And Ihesu seyth, who is it that touchide me ? sotheli alle men denyinge, Petir seide and thei that weren with him, Commaundour, companyes THRYNGEN and tourmenten thee, and thou seist, who touchide me.”—Ibid. v. 45.

“ A naked swerde the whiche she bare
Within hir mantell priuely,
Betwene hir hondes sodeinly
She toke, and through hir herte it THRONGE.”

Gower, lib. 7. fol. 171. p. 2. col. 1.

“ And sodainly anon this Damyan
Gan pullen up the smocke, and in he THRONGE
A great tent, a thrifty and a longe.”

Marchauntes Tale, fol. 33. p. 2. col. 2.

“ For there was many a birde singyng
Throughout the yerde al THRINGYNG.”

Romaunt of the Rose, fol. 123. p. 1. col. 1.

“ But in his sleue he gan to THRYNG
A rasour sharpe and wel byting.”—Ibid. fol. 155. p. 2. col. 2.

“ When Calcas knew this tretise shulde helde
In consistorie amonge the Grekes sone
He gan in THRINGE forthe with lordes olde
And set hym there as he wont to done.”

Troylus, boke 3. fol. 182. p. 2. col. 2.

“ But your glory that is so narowe and so strayte THRONGEN into so lytel boundes.”—Boecius, boke 2. fol. 230. p. 1. col. 2.

“ With bloody speres restod neuer styl ;
But THRONG now here now there amonge hem bothe
That euerich other slew, so were they wroth.”

Annelida and Arcite, fol. 170. p. 2. col. 2.

“ But of my disease me lyst now a whyle to speke, and to informe you in what maner of blysse ye haue me THRONG.”

Testament of Loue, boke 1. fol. 306. p. 1. col. 2.

“ What shal I speke the care but payne, cuen lyke to hel, sore hath me assayled, and so ferforthe in payne me THRONGE, that I leue my tre is scer, and neuer shal it fiute forth bring.”

Ibid. boke 3. fol. 332. p. 2. col. 1.

“ Amang the men he THRANG, and naue him saw.”

Douglas, booke 1. p. 26.

“ Remoif all drede, Troianis, be not agast, Pluk up your hartis, and heuy thouchtis doun THRING.”

Ibid. p. 30.

“ The Grekis ruschand to the thak on hicht
Sa thik thai THRANG about the portis all nyght,
That like ane wall they umbeset the yettis.”

Ibid. booke 2. p. 53.

“ The rumour is, doun THRUNG under this mont Enceladus body with thunder lyis half Bront.”

Ibid. booke 3. p. 87.

“ All folkis enuiron did to the coistis THRING.”

Ibid. booke 5. p. 131.

“ And euer his schynand swerd about him Swang Quhil at the last in Volscens mouth he THRANG.”

Ibid. booke 9. p. 292.

“ And of hys inemys sum inclusit he,
Ressauand al that THRANG to the entre :

Ane full he was, and witles ane nothing,
Persaut not Turnus Rutuliane kiug
So violentlie THURING in at the yet."—Douglas, p. 304.

"The bustuous Straks throw al the armour THURING."
Ibid. books 10. p. 334.

"The matrouns and young damysellis, I wys,
That grete desire has sic thing to behald,
THURING to the stretis and hie wyndoys thik fald."
Ibid. booke 13. p. 472.

"When Sir Launcelot saw his part goe to the worst, hee THURONG into the thickest presse with a sword in his hand."
Historie of Prince Arthur, 2d. part, ch. 127.

"Sir Launcelot THURONG in the thick of the presse."
Ibid. 3d. part, ch. 150.

"And so it hapt when Joseph came
His brethren them amonge,
They stript from him his partie coate
And then with thrust and THURONG
They cast him in an emptie pit."—Genesis, ch. 37. fol. 93. p. 2.

STRONG—is the past participle of the verb To String. A STRONG man is, a man well Strung.¹

"Orpheus, whose sweet harp so musically STRONG, Inticed trees and rocks to follow him along."
Poly-olbion, song 21.

"And little wanted, but a woman's heart
With cries and tears had testified her smart ;
But inborn worth, that fortune can controul,
New STRUNG, and stiffer bent her softer soul."
Dryden, Sigismunda and Guiscardo.

["I saw an harpe STROONG all with silver twyne."
Spenser, Ruines of Time.

"Phœbus shall be the author of my song, Playing on ivory harp with silver STRONG."
Spenser, Virgils Gnat.

———— "nor fear I foil
From the Phœacians, save in speed alone ;
For I have suffer'd hardships, dash'd and drench'd
By many a wave, nor had I food on board
At all times, therefore am I much UNSTRUNG."

Cowper's translation of Homer's Odyssey, p. 211.]

¹ ["He will the rather do it, when he sees Ourselves well SINEWED to our defence."—King John, p. 23.]

BOLD—is the past participle of the verb To Build.

BOLT—is the same.—You seem surprised: which does not surprise me; because, I imagine, you are not at all aware of the true meaning of the verb To Build; which has been much degraded amongst us by impostors. There seems therefore to you not to be the least shadow of corresponding signification between the verb and its participle. HUTS and HOVELS, as we have already seen, are merely things Raised up. You may call them habitations, if you please; but they are not Buildings (i. e. Buildens:¹) though our modern architects would fain make them pass for such, by giving to their feeble erections a strong name. Our English word To Build is the Anglo-Saxon Býldan, To confirm, To establish, To make firm and sure and fast, To consolidate, To strengthen; and is applicable to all other things as well as to dwelling places.

“Amyd the clois undar the heuin all bare
 Stude thare that time ane mekle fare altare,
 Heccuba thidder with hir childer for BEILD
 Ran all in vane and about the altare swarmes.
 Bot quhen she saw how Priamus has tane
 His armour so, as thocht he had bene ying;
 Quhat fuliche thocht, my wretchit spous and kinge,
 Mouis the now sic wappynniss for to weild?
 Quhidder haistis thou? quod sche, of ne sic BEILD
 Haue we now myster, nor sic defendoris as the.”

Douglas, booke 2. p. 56.

[————— “Most noble Anthony,
 Let not the peece of vertue, which is set
 Betwixt us as the cymment of our loue
 To keepe it BUILDED, be the ramme to batter
 The fortresse of it.”—Antony and Cleopatra, p. 352. col. 1.]

And thus a man of confirmed courage, i. e. a confirmed heart, is properly said to be a Builded, Built, or BOLD man; who, in the Anglo-Saxon, is termed Býld, Býldeð, Le-býld, Le-býldeð as well as Bald. The Anglo-Saxon words Bold and Bolt, i. e. Builded, Built, are both likewise used indifferently for what we now call a Building (i. e. Builden) or strong edifice.

¹ [Such an account of the Verbal Substantive is quite inadmissible. See Additional Note on the Present Participle.—ED.]

BOLT, as we now apply it, is that by which a door, shutter, &c. is fastened or strengthened.

DROP—any thing Dripped; the past participle of To Drip. So DRIPPING, i. e. DRIPPEN.

CHOP—Any thing Chipped; the past participle of the verb To Chip.

PLOT—i. e. Plighted. A plighted agreement; any agreement to the performance of which the parties have plighted their faith to each other.

“Pilgrames and Palmers PLYGHT hem togyther
For to seke S. James and sayntes at Rome.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 1. p. 2.

PLEDGE—i. e. Pleght: the past participle of the same verb To Plight. The thing Plighted; from the Anglo-Saxon verb Plihtan, Exponere vel objicere periculo, spondere, oppignere.

SPOT } The past participle of the verb To Spit, A.-S.
SPOUT } Spittan. SPOT is the matter Spitten, Spate, or Spitted: and SPOUT is the place whence it was Spitten or Spate.

SNOT } Is the past participle of the verb To Snite,¹ A.-S.
SNOUT } Snytan, emungere, To Wipe. SNOT the matter
Snited or wiped away. SNOUT the part Snited or wiped.

¹ [This verb remained in use up to the last century. Grew, describing the various uses of the tongue, says, “Nor would any one,” without it, “be able to SNITE his nose or to sneeze: in both which actions the passage of the breath through the mouth being intercepted by the tongue, ’tis forced, as it then ought to do, to go through the nose.” Cosmologia Sacra, 1701. p. 26.]

Mr. Tooke reverses the order in which Wachter and Ihre place these words; for they derive the verb Snuiten, Snutten, from the noun Snuit, Snut, the Snout. And indeed we can hardly derive the Snout of a pig from the act of wiping. Moreover, To wipe, generally, is not an adequate translation of Snytan. “SNOT est a SNUITEN, et hoc a SNUIT, nasus.” Wachter. “SNYTAN, a SNUT, rostrum. Metaphorice de candelæ purgatione.” It is remarkable that this application of the same word to the nose and to a candle, or the nozzle of a lamp, prevails among the Romance as well as the Teutonic dialects: see Moucher, Menage; Mucatorium, Emunctoria. &c., Ducange; and Emunctorium, Candel-jnytelj, Ælfric’s Glossary, p. 61. The derivation of Mouchoir de cou from Mucatorium, “quod collum defendit a muscis,” will not, I suppose, obtain credit, and we must be content with the homelier one, although, as Menage says, “ce mot de moucher donne une vilaine image.”—ED.]

“He that SNITES his nose, and hath it not, forfeits his face to the king.”—Ray's Proverbial Sayings, p. 68.

	SHOT
	SHOTTEN
	SHUT
	SHUTTLE
	SHUTTLE cork
	SHOOT
	SHOUT
	SHIT
	SHITTEN
	SHITTLE
	SHEET
	SCOT
Italian	SCOTTO
French	ESCOT, ÊCOT
Italian	SCHIATTA
	SCOUT SCATES
	SKIT
	SKITTISH
Dutch	SCHEET
	SKETCH
Dutch	SCHETS
Italian	SCHIZZO
French	ESQUISSE
Latin	SAGITTA

All these, so variously written, pronounced, and applied, have but one common meaning: and are all the past participle, ŕceat, of the Anglo-Saxon and English verb Scýtan, ŕcitan, To Shite, i. e. projicere, dejicere, To throw, To cast forth, To throw out.

Under the article SHEET, Junius promised—“Variarum vocabuli ŕceat acceptionum exempla, Deo vitam viresque largiente, Lectori suppreditabit lexicon nostrum Anglo-Saxonicum.” But this has not been performed.

“About me than my swerde I belt agane,
And SCHOTE my lefte arme in my scheild all mete.”

Douglas, booke 2. p. 61.

“Syne tuke his wand, quhare with, as that thai tel,
The pail saulis he cauchis out of hell,
And uthir sum thare gaith gan SCHETE ful hot,
Deip in the sorouful grisle hellis Pot.”—Ibid. booke 4. p. 108.

“All kynd defensis can Troianis prouide,
Threw stanis doun, and SHOTYS here and thare,
At euery part or opin fenister.”—Ibid. booke 9. p. 296.

“The archer SHETYNGE in this bowe is Cryste.”

Diucs and Pauper, 8th Comm. cap. 15.

“Eke Hanniball when fortune him OUTSHIT
Clene from his reigne, and from all his entent.”

Songes, &c. By the Earle of Surrey, &c., fol. 20. p. 1.

“ ’Tis one of those odd tricks which sorow SHOOTS
Out of the minde.”—Antony and Cleopatra, p. 358.

“ I shall heare abide the hourelly SHOT
Of angry eyes.”—Cymbeline, p. 370.

“ Another soul into my body SHOT.”—Beaumont and Fletcher.

The French used formerly this same word in the same general meaning—

“ Les autres Nes qui nerent mie cele par guenchies, furent entrees en boche d’Auie : et ce est la, ou li Braz Sain Iorge CHIET en la grant mer.”—Ville Hardhuin, edit. 1601. p. 18.

I have already said, that it is common to all the verbs whose characteristic letter is i or y, to form the past tense in this manner ; and our ancestors wrote it ad libitum, either with o, or ʌ broad, or ou, or oo, or u, or i short.

That a SHOT—from a gun, or bow, or other machine, means—something Cast or Thrown forth, needs neither instance nor explanation to persuade you. But a SHOT window may require both.

“ And forth he goth, ielous and ameraus,
Tyl he came to the carpenters hous,
A lytel after the cockes had yerowe,
And dressed him by a SHOT wyndowe.”

Myllers Tale, fol. 13. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Quharby the day was dawing wele I knew ;
Bad bete the fyre, and the candyll alicht,
Syne blissit me, and in my wedis dicht ;
Ane SCHOT wyndo unschet ane litel On Char.”

Douglas, prol. to booke 7. p. 202.

A SHOT window means a projected window, thrown out beyond the rest of the front : What we now call a Bow window. And this was a very common method in our antient houses (many of which still remain) ; and was a circumstance worth the painting poet’s notice ; as affording a much better station for the serenading Clerk Absolon (whom I think I now see) than that which Mr. Urry and Mr. Tyrwhitt assign to him.¹

¹ Mr. Urry alters the text to “SHOP” window.

Mr. Tyrwhitt retains SHOT window ; but says—“ That is, I suppose, a window that was SHUT.”

When Speed (in the Two Gentlemen of Verona, p. 27.) says to Launce—"Ile to the alchouse with you presently ; where for one SHOT of five pence, thou shalt haue five thousand welcomes ;"—what else does he say, but that—For five pence Cast down, or, For one Cast of five pence, he shall have five thousand welcomes ?

A SHOTTEN herring, is a herring which has Cast or Thrown forth its spawn.

A SHOOT of a tree (In Italian SCHIATTA,¹ which is the same participle), is—That which the tree has Cast forth, or Thrown forth.

"Quhare stude ane wod, with SCHOUTAND bewis schene."

Douglas, boke 6. p. 189.

A SHOUT ("a word," says Johnson, "of which no etymology is known,") is no other than the same participle differently spelled, and applied to sound Thrown forth from the mouth.

"The nobles bended as to Ioue's statue, and the commons made a shower and thunder, with their caps and SHOWTS."—Coriolanus, p. 11.

"You SHOOT me forth in acclamations hyperbolical,
As if I lou'd my little should be dieted
In prayses."—Ibid. p. 7.

"————— They threw their caps
As they would hang them on the hornes o' th' moone,
SHOOTING their emulation."—Ibid. p. 2.

"UNSHOOT the noise that banish'd Martius ; Repeale him."—Ibid. p. 29.

SHUT and SHIT are also the past tense (and therefore past participle) of the verb To Shite. And though, according to the modern fashion, we now write—To Shut the door—the common people generally pronounce it more properly and nearly to the original verb, and say—To Shet the door : Which means to Throw or Cast the door to. But formerly it was otherwise written and pronounced; nor had a false delicacy proscribed a very innocent and decent word, till affectation made it otherwise.

¹ Ferrari derives SCHIATTA from "Caudex, Caudico, Ciocco, Caudicata, Schiatta :" or from "Scaturiendo :" or from "Scapus."—Menage disapproves these, and says—"Crederei piuttosto derivasse da Planta, Exsplanata, Schianta, Schiatta." And, upon second thoughts, is so well satisfied with this latter derivation from Planta ; that his "Crederei piuttosto" is converted into—" Ne viene al sicuro."

“Forsothe bifore the faith cam, we weren kepte undur the lawe SHIT togidir in to that faith that was to be shewid. And so the lawe was oure litel mastir in Crist.”—Galathies, ch. ii. (v. 23, 24.)

“These han power of SHITTYNG heuen, that yt reyne not in the daies of her prophecie.”—Apocalips, ch. xi. (v. 6.)

“There Christ is in kingedome to close and to SHIT,
And to open it to hem, and heuens blisse shewe.”

Vis. of P. Ploughman, pass. 1. fol. 2. p. 2.

“Marchaunts meten with him and made him abide
And SHITTE hym in her shoppes to shewen her ware.”

Ibid. pass. 3. fol. 11. p. 1.

“For there is none so lytel thyng
So hyd ne closed with SHYTTYNG
That it ne is sene.”—Rom. of the Rose, fol. 127. p. 2. col. 1.

“And the sothfast garner of the holy grayne,
As sayth Guydo, was a mayde swete,
In whome was SHYTTE, sothely for to sayne,
The sacred store.”—Lydgate, Lyfe of our Lady, p. 128.

“For of her wombe the cloyster virginall
Was euer eliche bothe firste and laste
Closed and SHYTTE, as castell pryncipall,
For the holy ghoste deuised it and caste,
And at bothe tymes SHYTTE as lyke faste
In her chyldyng no more through grace ybroke
Than at her conceuyng than it was unloke.”—Ibid. p. 210.

“Fader Joseph, ye knowe well that ye buryed the body of Jhesu and, fader, ye knowe well that we SHYTTE you in prison, and we coude not fynde you therin, and therefore tell us what befell there. Then Joseph answered and sayd, Whan ye dyde SHYTTE me in the close pryson,” &c.—Nychodemus Gospell, ch. 13.

“Than they lad them in to theyr synagoge, and whan they had SHYTTE the dores surely they toke theyr lawes,” &c.—Ibid. ch. 15.

“SHYTTE myghtely your gates with yren barres.”—Ibid. ch. 15.

“All the gates and SHYTTYNGES with yren barres and boltes all to braste in his holy comyng.”—Ibid. ch. 16.

“Whan man or woman sholde pray, they sholde go in to theyr chambre and SHYTTE the dore to them. The dore that we sholde SHYTTE ben our fyue wyttes outwarde, to flee dystraccioun.”

Diues and Pauper, fyrste Comm. cap. 54.

"She saye, that she hadde leuer to SHYTTE herselfe all quyck in the graue, than to harme eny soule that God made to his lykenesse."

Diues and Pauper, 10th Comm. cap. 4.

"The yates of this cyto shall neuer be SHYTTE."—Ibid. ch. 11.

"Sometymes the mouth of the matrice is so large and ample that it cannot conueniently SHYTTE itselke together, nether contayne the feture or conception."—Byrth of Mankynde, fol. 41. p. 1.

"And holding out her fyngers, SHYTTING together her hand," &c.

Ibid. fol. 51. p. 1.

"The woman scaleth her matrice verye fastelye enclosed and SHYTTE in so muche," &c.—Ibid. fol. 84. p. 2.

"The foure sayde bishoppes denounced kynge Ihon with his realme of Englando accursed, and SHITTE faste the doores of the churches."

Fabian, p. 28.

"That boke whiche as saint Iohan saith in the Apocalyps is so SHYT with vii clapses, that it cannot be opened but by the lambe, that whan he SHYTTETH, then can no man open it; and whan he openeth it, than can no man SHYT it."

Sir T. Mores Workes, A Dialogue, &c., 1st boke, p. 111.

"The temple of Christ is mans harte, and God is not included nor SHIT¹ in any place."—Ibid. p. 122.

["Syr Thomas More being SHIT up so close in prison."—Letters of Sir Thomas More to his Daughter, Feb. 1. 1532. p. 142.]

"Goddess determinacions be hydden frome us, and euery wyndowe SHYT up, where we myghte pere into them."

Gardeners Declaration against Ioye, fol. 45. p. 2.

"His disciples knew not how he entryd, the doores being SHIT."

A Declaration of Christe. By Iohan Hoper, cap. 8.

["Ne is there place for any gentle wit,
Unlesse, to please, it selfe it can applie;
But shouldred is, or out of doors quite SHIT."

Spenser, Colin Clouts come home againe.]

I do not know that it is worth while; but it can do no harm to notice, that the expression of—getting SHUT of a thing—means—to get a thing THROWN off or Cast from us.² And

¹ [See the Rev. R. Forby's Vocabulary of East Anglia, ii. p. 297, v. SHET, and SHITTEN SATURDAY, the Saturday in Passion Week.—ED.]

² [—"This outward sainted deputie,
Whose settled visage, and deliberate worl
Nips youth i' th' head, and follies doth emmew
As falcon doth the fowle, is yet a divell:

that a Weaver's SHUTTLE or SHITTLE (Shut-del, Shit-del) means a small instrument SHOT, i. e. Thrown or Cast.

"An honest weaver, and as good a workman

As e'er SHOT SHUTTLE."—B. and Fletcher, The Coxcombe, p. 334.

A SHUTTLE-cork or SHITTLE-cork has the same meaning. i. e. A cork Thrown or Cast (backward and forward).

SHEET (whether a SHEET for a bed, a SHEET of water, a SHEET of lightning, a SHEET anchor, &c.) is also the same participle ρεατ.

What we now write SHEET anchor was formerly written SHOT anchor.

"Certaine praiers shoulde ther be sayd : and thys was against the stone the very SHOTE anker."

Sir T. More's Workes, A Dialogue, &c., 2nd booke, p. 195.

"Thei runne to the heresie of the Donatistes as to a SHOOTR anker."

Traictise of the pretended Marriage of Priestes, ch. 2.

But, besides the above different ways of writing and pronouncing this same participle, as with other verbs; we have, with this verb, another source of variation. The Anglo-Saxon ρe was pronounced both as sh and as sk. The participle therefore of ρετtan, upon that account, assumes another apparently different form: and this different pronunciation (and consequently different writing) has given us scot, scout, scate, and skit.¹

Scot and shot are mutually interchangeable. They are merely one and the same word, viz. the Anglo-Saxon ρεατ, the past participle of ρετtan; the ρe being differently pronounced. Scot free, scot and lot, Rome-scot, &c., are the same as shot free, shot and lot, Rome-shot, &c.

His filth within being CAST, he would appeare
A pond, as deepe as hell."

Measure for Measure, 1st folio, act 3. sc. 1. p. 71.

See Malone's edition, volume 2; and Johnson's foolish note. "To CAST a pond is to empty it of mud."

Aristophanes, in the first scene of his comedy intitled 'Peace,' speaks of Διὸς Καραϊβαίου. The epithet has exceedingly puzzled the commentators. It means merely Jupiter the SHITTER.]

¹ See the Plutus of Aristophanes, act 3. sc. 2.

Ξαρο-φαιος, merdi-vorus.

See also Ξαρος, merda; and Ξαταλαί, in Aristophanes.]

The Italians have (from us) this same word scotto, applied and used by them for the same purpose as by us. Dante uses it in his Purgatory:¹ and is censured for the use of it by those who, ignorant of its meaning, supposed it to be only a low, tavern expression; and applicable only to a tavern reckoning. And from this Italian scotto, the French have their Escot, Écot, employed by them for the same purpose.

This word has extremely puzzled both the Italian and French etymologists. Its use and application they well knew: they could not but know: it was—"L'argent *jetté*² sur la table de l'hôte, pour prix du repas qu'on a pris chez lui."—But its etymology, or the real signification of the word, taken by itself, (which alone could afford the reason why the word was so used and applied,) intirely escaped them. Some considered that, in a tavern, people usually pay for what they have eaten: these therefore imagined that scotto might come from Excoctus of Coquere; and that it was used for the payment of Excoctus cibus. Excocto, Escotto, Scotto.

Others considered that men did not always eat in a tavern; and that their payment, though only for wine, was still called scotto. These therefore fixed upon a common circumstance, viz. that, whether eating or drinking, men were equally forced or compelled to pay the reckoning: they therefore sought for the etymology in Cogere and Excogere. Coacto, Excoacto, Excocto, Excotto, Scotto.

Indeed, if the derivation must necessarily have been found in the Latin, I do not know where else they could better have gone for it. But it is a great mistake, into which both the Italian and Latin etymologists have fallen, to suppose that all the Italian must be found in the Latin, and all the Latin in the Greek: for the fact is otherwise. The bulk and foundation of the Latin language is Greek; but great part of the Latin is the language of our Northern ancestors, grafted upon the

¹ ["L'alto fato di Dio sarebbe rotto
Se Lete si passasse, e tal vivanda
Fosse gustata senza leuno scotto
Di pentimento, che lagrime spanda."

Il Purgatorio di Dante, cant. 30.]

² [Ital Gittare. French Jetter.]

Greek. And to our Northern language the etymologist must go, for that part of the Latin which the Greek will not furnish : and there, without any twisting or turning or ridiculous forcing and torturing of words, he will easily and clearly find it. We want therefore the testimony of no historians to conclude that the founders of the Roman state and of the Latin tongue came not from Asia, but from the North of Europe. For the language cannot lye. And from the language of every nation we may with certainty collect its origin. In the same manner ; even though no history of the fact had remained ; and though another Virgil and another Dionysius had again, in verse and prose, brought another Æneas from another Troy to settle modern Italy, after the destruction of the Roman government ; yet, in spite of such false history, or silence of history, we should be able, from the modern language of the country (which cannot possibly lye), to conclude with certainty that our Northern ancestors had again made another successful irruption into Italy, and again grafted their own language upon the Latin, as before upon the Greek. For, all the Italian which cannot be easily shown to be Latin, can be easily shown to be our Northern language.

It would therefore, I believe, have been in some degree useful to the learned world ; if the present system of this country had not, by a¹ [shameful persecution and a most unconstitutional, illegal, and cruel sentence, destroyed] that virtuous and harmless good man, Mr. Gilbert Wakefield. For he had, shortly before his death, agreed with me to undertake, in conjunction, a division and separation of the Latin tongue into two parts : placing together in one division all that could be clearly shown to be Greek ; and in the other division, all that could be clearly shown to be of Northern extraction. And I cannot forbear mentioning to you this circumstance ; not to revive your grief for the loss of a valuable man who deserved [reward rather than punishment ; but because, he being dead and I speedily to follow him, you may perhaps excite and encourage some other persons more capable to execute a plan, which would be so useful to your favourite etymological amusement. I say, you must encourage them: for there appears no encouragement in this country at present [but for the invention of new taxes and new penalties, for spies and informers ;] which swarm amongst us as numerously as our volunteers [in this our present state of siege ;] with this advantage, that none of the former [neither taxes, nor penalties, nor spies] are ever rejected on account of their principles.

¹ [The words in brackets were omitted in the first edition. Mr. Wakefield left Dorchester gaol on the 29th of May 1801, having been imprisoned there for two years ; and died on the 9th of September in the same year.—ED.]

Good God ! This country [in a state of siege] !——What cannot an [obstinate system of despotism and corruption] achieve ! America, [Ireland,] Corsica, Hanover, with all our ancient dependents, friends and allies, [All lost, All gone !] And in how short a time ! And the inhabitants of this little [persecuted and plundered] island (the only remaining spot) [now in a state of siege !] Besieged collectively by France from without : [and each individual at home, more disgracefully and daily besieged] in his house by swarms of [tax collectors, assessors, and supervisors, armed with degrading lists, to be signed under precipitated and ensnaring penalties ;] whilst his growing rents, like the goods of an insolvent trader, are [prematurely attached] in the hands of his [harassed tenants,] who now suddenly find that they too have a new and additional rent, beyond their agreement, to pay to a new and unforeseen landlord.

F.—Turn your thoughts from this subject. Get out of the way of this vast rolling mass, which might easily have been stopped at the verge of the precipice ; but must now roll to the bottom. Why should it crush you unprofitably in its course ? [The die is certainly cast, although we had not a foreign enemy in the world.]

H.—“ Ever right, Menenius. Ever, Ever.”

A SCOUT has been supposed, in some manner (but it is not attempted to be shown in what manner) to belong to the verb Ecouter, Escouter, auscultare, To Listen : and this, merely because of a resemblance in the sound and letters of that verb. But is listening the usual business of a scout ? Are his ears all, and his eyes nothing ? Is he no good scout who returns with intelligence of what he has seen¹ of the enemy, unless he has likewise overheard their deliberations? Is an Out-scout at Cricket sent to a distance, that he may the better listen to what is passing? A scout means (subaud. some one, any one) SENT out, Say before an army, to collect intelligence by any means: but, I suppose, by his eyes rather than by his ears; and to give notice of the neighbourhood or position, &c., of an enemy. SENT out, (which I have here employed, because it is the word most used in modern discourse,) is equivalent to Thrown or Cast. The Anglo-Saxon Sendan was used indifferently for Scitan: and SEND, in Old English, for Thrown or Cast. In the ninth chapter of St. Mark, verse 22, our modern translation says—"Oft times it hath Cast him into the fire and into the waters." Which our Old English translation renders—"Ofte he hath SENTE him bothe in to fier and in to watir." And the Anglo-Saxon has it—"Ðe hyne gelomlice on fȳp and on pæteþ renðe." But the plainest instance I can recollect of the indifferent use of SEND and Cast or Thrown, is in the 12th chapter of Mark—"And Ihesu sittinge ayens the tresorie bihelde hou the cumpany Castide money into the tresorie: and many riche men Castiden manye thingis. Sotheli whanne a pore widewe hadde come, she SENTE twey mynutis, that is, a ferthing. And he clepinge togidre hise disciplis, seide to hem; treuly I seie to you, for this pore widewe SENTE more than alle men that SENTEN in to the tresorie: for alle SENTEN of that thing that was plenteuouse to hem: sotheli this SENTE of hir pouert, alle thingis that she hadde, al hir lyfode."

"And Jesus sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people CAST money into the treasury; and many that were rich CAST in much. And there came a certain poor widow, and she THREW in two mites, which make a farthing. And he called unto him his disciples, and saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, that this poor widow hath CAST more in, than all they which have CAST into the treasury. For all they did CAST in of their abundance; but she of her want did CAST in all that she had, even all her living."

¹ ["Caliga, in Roman antiquity, was the proper soldier's shoe, made in the sandal fashion, without upper leather to cover the superior part of the foot, tho' otherwise reaching to the middle of the leg, and fastened with thongs. The sole of the caliga was of wood, like the sabot of the French peasants, and its bottom stuck full of nails; which clavi are supposed to have been very long in the shoes of the scouts and sentinels; whence these were called by way of distinction caligæ speculatoriæ; as if by mounting the wearer to a higher pitch, they gave a greater advantage to the sight."

Encyclopædia Britannica, vol. 4. p. 42.]

As a WRIT, the past participle of To Write, means (subaud. something) Written; ¹ so a SKIT, the past participle of scitan, means (subaud. something) Cast or Thrown. The word is now used for some jeer or jibe or covered imputation Thrown or Cast upon any one. The same thing in jesting conversation is also called a Fling.² But, as the practice itself has long been banished from all liberal society, so the word is not easily to be found in liberal writings: and I really cannot recollect an instance of its use. But the adjective SKITTISH, applied to a horse or jade of any kind, is common enough.³

The Dutch Scheet, peditus, is the same participle, and means merely (subaud. Wind) Cast out.

Our English word Sketch, the Dutch Schets, the Italian

¹ ["With flying speede, and seeming great pretence,
Came running in, much like a man dismayd,
A messenger with letters, which his message sayd."]

"Then to his handes that WRITT he did betake,
Which he disclosing, read thus, as the paper spake."

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 12. st. 24, 25.

"O cursed Eld, the canker-worme of WRITS!
How may these rimes, so rude as doth appeare,
Hope to endure, sith workes of heavenly wits
Are quite devourd?"

Ibid. book 4. cant. 2. st. 33.

"Ne may this homely verse, of many meanest,
Hope to escape his venomous despite,
More than my former WRITS, all were they cleanest
From blamefull blot."

Ibid. book 6. cant. 12. st. 41.]

² ["Plantagenet I see must hold his tongue,
Least it be said, Speake Sirha when you should:
Must your bold verdict enter talke with lords?
Else would I have a FLING at Winchester."]

1st Part of Henry VI. p. 106.]

³ ["For such as I am, all true louers are,
Unstaid and SKITTISH in all motions else,
Saue in the constant image of the creature
'That is belou'd."]

Twelfth Night, p. 262. col. 1.]

Schizzo, and (though further removed) the French Esquisse, are all the same participle. And, besides the application still common to all those languages, viz. “spezie di disegno non terminato,” the Italians likewise apply Schizzo very properly to—“Quella macchia di fango, d’acqua, o d’ altro liquore che viene dallo Schizzare :” any spot of dirt, or water, or other liquor spirted out upon us.

The Latin Sagitta (pronounce Saghitta) is likewise this same participle SKIT, with the Latin terminating article A: and it means (subaud. something) Cast, Thrown, i. e. Shot, Skit, Skita, Sakita, Sagita: (The earlier Romans never doubled their letters.) And Sagitta comes not (as Isidorus, C. Scaliger, Caninius, Nunnesius and Vossius dreamed) from sagaci ictu, or σαγμα, or ακιδος, or σαγη.¹

[SHOE, in Anglo-Saxon Scoe, and Scoh, and Le-rcý, means sub-position. It is the past participle of Scýan, Le-rcýan, To place under. S. Johnson, with his usual good luck, calls it—“the Cover of the foot.” It means merely—Underplaced. See page 346.—“ealde gercý.” Le-rcod, Shod, calceatus.]

SOP	}	—are the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon and English verb Sipan, To Sip , sorbere, macerare.
SOUP
SUP
SIP
KNOT	}	—are the past participle of Lnyttan, To Knit , nectere, alligare, attacher .
KNIGHT
NET

“To by a bell of brasse or of bryght syluer
And KNYT it on hys collar.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 3. p. 2.

“I would he had continued to his country
As he began, and not UNKNITTE himselfe
The noble KNOT he made.”

Coriolanus, p. 20.

¹ “SAGITTAM, a sagaci ictu, hoc est, veloci ictu, ita appellari scribit Isidorus. Cæsar Scaliger putat a σαγμα, eliso M, fieri saga; unde Sagitta. Angelus Caninius et Petrus Nunnesius aiunt venire ab obliquo ακιδος, præmisso s. Sane vel hoc verum est; vel est Sagitta a Σαγη. Ut omnino σαγης nomine contineantur Omnia armorum genera.” —Vossius.

"Ile have this KNOT KNIT up tomorrow morning."

Romeo and Juliet, p. 71.

"So often shall the KNOT of us be call'd
The men that gaue their country Liberty."

Julius Cæsar, p. 119.

["The KNOT was KNIT by faith, and must onely be UNKNIT of death."—Galathea (by Lily), act 4. sc. 2.

"His owne two hands the holy KNOTTS did KNITT."

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 12. st. 37.

"Then thinke not long in taking litle paine
To KNIT the KNOT that ever shall remaine."—Spenser, sonnet 6.]

KNIGHT—is Lnyȝt, Un attaché.

"And KNITTE, upon conclusion,
His argument in suche a forme
Whiche maie the pleyne trouth enforme."

Gower, lib. 7. fol. 149. p. 2. col. 1.

"Ye knowe eke howe it is your owne KNIGHT."

Troylus, boke 3. fol. 177. p. 2. col. 1.

"Yf it were lefull to syngell man and syngell woman to medle togydre and gendre, God hadde made matrymonye in vayne, and ther wolde no man KNITTE hym undepartably to ony woman."

Dives and Pauper, 6th Comm. cap. 3.

"In all places I shall bee my lady your daughters seruant and KNIGHT in right and in wrong."

Historie of Prince Arthur, 2nd part, chap. 12.

"O, find him, giue this ring to my true KNIGHT."

Romeo and Juliet, p. 66.

NET—is (subaud. something) Knitted.

"Thei ben to gether KNET."—Gower, lib. 7. fol. 142 p. 1. col. 1.

"The goodlyhede or beaute which that kynde
In any other lady had ysette
Cannot the mounenance of a gnat unbynde
About his hert, of al Crescydes nette
He was so narowe ymashed and YKNETTE."

Troylus, boke 3. fol. 181. p. 2. col. 2.

SLOP

SLOPE

SLIP

SLIT

SLOT

} —are the past participle of Slipan, To Slip.

{ —Fissura pedis cervini, is the past participle of Slitan, findere, To Slit.

"Here's Little John bath harbour'd you a Deer,
I see by his tackling. And a hart of ten,
I trow he be, Madam, or blame your men :
For by his SLOT, his entrics, and his port,
His frayings, fewmets, he doth promise sport
And standing 'fore the dogs." Sad Shepherd, act 1. sc. 1.

"Where harbor'd is the hart ; there often from his feed
The dogs of him do find ; or thorough skilful heed,
The huntsman by his SLOT, or breaking earth, perceives
Where he had gone to lodge." Poly-olbion, song 13.

WHORE—is the past participle of Wyran, To Hire. The word means simply (subaud. some one, any one) Hired. It was formerly written without the w. How, or when, or by whom, the w was first absurdly prefixed, I know not.

"Treuli I sey to you, for pupplicans and HOORIS shulen go bifore you in to the rewme of God. For John came to you in the wey of rightfulnessse, and ye bileuyde not to hym ; but pupplicans and HOORIS bileuiden to him."—Mattheu, ch. 21.

"This thi sone whiche deuouride his substaunce with HOORIS."
Luk. ch. 15.

"Takyng members of Crist, shal I make members of an HOORE ?"
1 Corinthians, ch. 6.

"Bi feith Raib HOOR perishide not."—Hebrewes, ch. 11.

"Also forsothe and Raib HOORE, wher she was not iustified of werkis."—James, ch. 2.

"I shal shewe to thee the dampnacion of the great HOORE."
Apocalips, ch. 16.

"The wattris that thou hast seyn where the HOORE sittith, ben pupplis, folkis and tungis or langagia. Thene shulen hate the fornycarie or HOORE"—Apocalips, ch. 17.

"Shal I make the membres of Christ, partes of the HOORES bodye ?"
Detection of the Devils Sophistrie, fol. 96. p. 2.

In confirmation of this explanation of the word, (though it needs none, for it is in the regular and usual course of the whole language,) we have the practice of other languages : which, on the same score, give the same denomination to the same thing. Thus, as Vossius has well observed, Meretrix in Latin is so denominated a Merendo ; and Πορνῆς, Πορνῆς, in Greek, a Πιπῶν (quod a Πιπῶν) vendo.

F.—Am I then to understand that all the other words of reproach (so numerous and dissimilar) which are cast upon unchaste women, have a similar etymology? And that all those denominations (Harlot, Prostitute, Concubine, Wench, Trull, Punk, Drab, Strumpet) have also a reference to Sale and Hire?

H.—Not so. In one respect they have all a resemblance; inasmuch as they are all past participles; but they do not all relate to the circumstance of Sale or Hire, as WHORE and HARLOT do.

HARLOT—I believe with Dr. Th. Hickes, is merely Horelet, the diminutive of HORE. The word was formerly applied (and commonly) to a very different sort of Hireling, for that is all which it means, to Males as well as Females. In Troilus and Cressida, Thersites tells Patroclus, “Thou art thought to be Achilles’ male VARLOT.

P. Male VARLOT, you rogue, What’s that?

Th. Why his masculine WHORE.”

VARLET } The antient *VARLET*¹ and the modern VALET
VALET } for Hireling, I believe to be the same word as HARLOT; the aspirate only changed to v, and the r, by effeminate and slovenly speech, suppressed in the latter: as Lord, by affectation, is now frequently pronounced Lod or Lud.

F.—You do not surely produce to me these words of Thersites, to show that HARLOT was applied to males as well as to females: for they contain an infamous charge against Patroclus, and intended to give him a female appellation and office.

H.—Agreed. But they show that VARLOT and WHORE were synonymous terms. For the common application of HARLOT to men, merely as persons receiving wages or hire, I must produce other instances.

“He was a gentel HARLOT and a kynde,

A better felowe shulde a man nat fynde.”

Chaucer, Prologues. The Sompnour.

¹ [Mr. Todd, in a note to Spenser’s Faerie Queene, book 1, canto 8, stanza 13, tells us, that—“the word VARLET, in old French signifies a Youth.” But Mr. Todd knew as little as heart can wish, concerning the signification of any words.]

“Ye: false HARLOT (quod the Miller) haste.

A false traytour, false clerke (quod he).”

Reues Tale, fol. 17. p. 1. col. 2.

“A sturdy HARLOT went hem ay behynde,
That was her hostes man, and bare a sacke.”

Sompners Tale, fol. 42. p. 2. col. 1.

“Suche HARLOTES shul men disclaunder.”

Plowmans Tale, fol. 94. p. 2. col. 2.

“False Semblant (quod Loue) in thys wyse

I take the here to my seruyce, &c.

My kyng of HARLOTES shalt thou be.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 149. p. 1. col. 1.

“The bissy knapis and VERLOTIS of his stabil

About thaym stude.”

Douglas, booke 12. p. 409.

“This day (great duke) she shut the doores upon me,

While she with HARLOTS feasted in my house.”

Comedy of Errors, p. 98.

“The HARLOT-king is quite beyond mine arme.”

Winters Tale, p. 284.

V. “Let not your too much wealth, Sir, make you furious.

Corb. Away, thou VARLET.”

V. Why, Sir?

Corb. Dost thou mock me?

V. You mock the world, Sir. Did you not change wills?

Corb. Out, HARLOT.”

Volpone, The Fox, act 2. sc. 6.

“It is written in Solinus De mirabilibus mundi, that in the Island of Sardinia there is a well; whereof if a true man doe drinke, his eie sight straight waie waxeth cleere; but if a false HARLOT doe but sup of it, hee waxeth starke blinde out of hande, although hee did see neuer so well before.”—Wilson upon Usurie, fol. 186.

PROSTITUTE } need no explanation.
CONCUBINE }

WENCH—is the past participle of Wincian, To Wink; i. e. One that is Winked at; and, by implication, who may be had by a nod or a Wink. Observe, that great numbers of words in English are written and pronounced indifferently with CH or K. As Speak and Speech, Break and Breach, Seek and Seech, Dike and Ditch, Drink and Drench, Poke and Pouch, Stink and Stench, Thack and Thatch, Stark and Starch, Wake and Watch, Kirk and Church, &c.

[K. Yet they doe WINKE and yeeld, as loue is blind and enforces.

B. They are then excus'd, my lord, when they see not what they doe.

K. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent WINKING.

B. I will WINKE on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning."—Henry fift, p. 94.

"If some alluring girl, in gliding by,
Shall tip the WINK, with a lascivious eye,¹
And thou, with a consenting glance, reply."

Dryden's translation of the 4th Sat. of Persius.

"I pray God that neuer dawe that day
That I ne sterue, as foule as woman may,
Yf euer I do to my kynne that shame
Or els that I empayre so my name
That I be false; and if I do that lacke,
Do stripe me, and put me in a sacke
And in the next ryuer do me drenche;
I am a gentyl woman, and no WENCHE."

Marchauntes Tale, fol. 33. p. 1. col. 1.

"But for the gentyl is in estate aboue
She shal be called his lady and his loue,
And for that tother is a poore woman
She shal be called his WENCHE, or his lemman."

Manciples Tale, fol. 92. p. 1. col. 2.

"But to weake WENCH did yield his martiall might:
So easie was to quench his flamed minde
With one sweete drop of sensuall delight."

Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 6. st. 8.]

TRULL.

"I scar'd the dolphin and his TRULL."

1st Part Henry 6, p. 102.

"Only th' adulterous Anthony, most large
In his abominations turnes you off,
And giues his potent regiment to a TRULL."

Anthony and Cleopatra, p. 354.

"Amyddis Itale, under the hillis law,
Thare standis ane famous stede wele beknaw,
That for his brute is namyt in mony laud,
The vale Amsanctus hate, on ather hand

¹ [— "Wanton looks
And privy Becks, savouring incontinence."

Heywood's Rape of Lucrece (1630)

Qnham the sydis of ane thik wod of tre
 Closis all derne with skuggy bewis hie :
 Ane routand burn amydwart therof rynnis,
 Rumland and soundand on the craggy quhynniss :
 And eik forgane the brokin brow of the mont
 Ane horribill caue with brade and large front
 Thare may be sene ane THROLL, or aynding stede
 Of terribill Pluto fader of hel and dede,
 Ane rift or swelth so grislie for to se,
 To Acheron reuin doun that hellis sye,
 Gapand with his pestiferus goule full wyde."

Douglas, boke 7. p. 227.

"Est locus, Italiæ in medio sub montibus altis,
 Nobilis, et fama multis memoratus in oris,
 Amsancti valles : densis hunc frondibus atrum
 Urget utrinque latus nemoris, medioque fragosus
 Dat sonitum saxis et torto vortice torrens :
 Hic specus horrendum, et saevi spiracula Ditis
 Monstrantur : ruptoque ingens Acheronte vorago
 Pestiferas aperit fauces."

Virg. Æn. lib. 7. line 563.

TRULL, applied to a woman, means perforata. ðýpel, ðýpl; the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb ðýplian, perforare. And as ðýplian or ðiplian, by a very common transposition of R, is in English Thrill; so the regular past participle of ðiplian, viz. ðýpl or ðupl, is become the English THROLL, Thrul, or TRULL.¹

"All were they sore hurte, and namely one
 That with a spere was THROULED his brest bone."
Knyghtes Tale, fol. 9. p. 2. col. 2.

"He coude hys comynge not forbeare,
 Thoughe he him THRYLLED with a speare."
Rom. of the Rose, fol. 156. p. 2. col. 2.

"So THYRLED with the poynt of remembraunce
 The swerde of sorowe."
Complaynt of Annelyda, fol. 272. p. 2. col. 1.

¹ ["Già veggia, per mezzul perdere, o lulla,
 Com' io vidi un, così non si pertugia,
 Rotto dal mento insin dove si TRULLA."

Dante, L'Inferno, cant. 28.

"TRULLO (says Menage) Peto, Coreggia. TRULLARE, Lat. pedere, sonitum ventris emittere. Forse da Peto, Peditus, Peditulus, Tulus, Tullus, Trullus, TRULLO"!!—Menage, Orig. Ital.]

"Howe that Arcite, Annelyda so sore Hath THRILLED with the poynt of remembraunce."

Complaynt of Annelyda, fol. 273. p. 1. col. 2.

"The speare, alas, that was so sharpe withal,
So THRILLED my herte."

Mary Magdaleyne, fol. 336. p. 1. col. 2.

"But wel I wot the speare with eucry nayle THIRLED my soule."

Ibid. fol. 336. p. 2. col. 1.

"The knight his THRILLANT speare again assayd."

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 11. st. 20.

"For she was hable with her wordes to kill,
And rayse againe to life the hart that she did THRILL."

Ibid. cant. 10. st. 19.

"How ill-beseeming is it in thy sex
To triumph like an Amazonian TRULL."

3d Part of Henry 6, p. 151. col. 2.

"Tho' yet you no illustrious act have done,
To make the world distinguish Julia's son
From the vile offspring of a TRULL, who sits
By the town-wall."

Dryden's Juvenal, by G. Stepney, sat. 8.

PUNK.

"She may be a PUNCKE : for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife."—Measure for Measure, p. 81.

"Squiring PUNCK and Puncklings up and down the city."

B. and Fletcher, Martial Maid.

PUNK is the regular past participle of Pýngan, pungere : and it means (subaud. a female) Pung or Punc, i. e. Puncta.

"Lo, he cometh with cloudis, and ech ige shal see him, and thei PUNGIDEN or prickiden hym."—Apocalips, ch. 1.

"Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which Pierced him."—Revelations, ch. 1. v. 7.

DRAB—is the past participle of ΔΡΕΙΒΑΝ, ejicere, expellere.

"They say he keepes a Trojan DRAB, and uses the traitour Chalcas his tent."—Troylus and Cressida.

Thersites here gives Cressida the appellation of DRAB, with peculiar propriety : for, according to his slanderous speech, who never omitted a circumstance of reproach, she was so in more senses than one. She was Dpabhe, as fæces (for so our ancestors applied this participle): and she was Dnab and Trojan Dnab, as being expelled and an Out-cast from Troy.

STRUMPET—i. e. Stronpöt; ¹ a compound of two Dutch participles. Which, being Dutch, let Cassander and his associate explain.

F.—Speaking of Varlets, you mentioned the word LORD. That word is not yet become quite an opprobrious term, whatever it may be hereafter; which will depend intirely upon the conduct of those who may bear that title, and the means by which it may usually be obtained. But what does the word mean? For I can never believe, with Skinner, that it proceeds from—“Ðlaḡ, panis, et Ford (pro Afford) suppeditare: quia scilicet multis panem largitur, i. e. multos alit.” ² For the animal we have lately known by that name is intirely of a different description.

H.—You know, it was antiently written Ðlaḡopḡ; and our etymologists were misled by Ðlaḡ, which, as they truly said, certainly means and is our modern LOAF. But when they had told us that LOAF came from Ðlaḡ, they thought their business with that word was compleated. And this is their usual practice with other words. But I do not so understand etymology. I could as well be contented to stop at LOAF in the English, as at Ðlaḡ in the Anglo-Saxon: for such a derivation affords no additional nor ultimate meaning. The question with me is still, why Ðlaḡ in the Anglo-Saxon? I want a meaning, as the cause of the appellation; and not merely a similar word in another language.

Had they considered that we use the different terms BREAD and DOUGH and LOAF for the same material substance in different states; they would probably have sought for the etymology, or different meanings of those words, in the circumstances of the different states. And had they so sought, they probably would have found: and the meaning of the word Blaf would have saved them from the absurdity of their derivation of LORD.

¹ [Strontpot, lasanum : Skinner.—Ed.]

² “LORD, ab A.-S. Ðlaḡopḡ, postea Loveḡ, Dominus: hoc a Ðlaḡ, panis, et Ford pro Afford, suppeditare. Quia sc. dominus, i. e. nobilis multis panem largitur, i. e. multos alit.”—Skinner.

Junius and Verstegan concur with this derivation; though Junius acknowledges a difficulty—“quoniam nusquam adhuc incideram in vocabulum A.-Saxonicum quod responderet Angl. Afford.”

BREAD we have already explained: It is Brayed grain. After breaking or pounding the grain, the next state in the process towards LOAF is DOUGH. And DOUGH—is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Deapian, To moisten or To wet. DOUGH therefore or DOW means Wetted.

You will not fail to observe en passant, that DEW—(A.-S. Deap) though differently spelled and pronounced, is the same participle with the same meaning.

“Ane hate fyry power, warme and DEW,
Heuinly begynnyng and original
Bene in thay sedis quhilkis we saulis cal.”

Douglas, lib. 6. p. 191.

“Of Paradise the well in sothfastnes
Foyson that floweth in to sondry royames
The soyle to ADEWE with his swete streames.”

Lyfe of oure Lady, p. 165.

“Wherefore his mother of very tender herte
Out Braste on teres and might herselfe nat Stere,
That all BYDEWED were her eyen clere.”—Ibid. p. 167.

“And let my breste, benigne lorde, be DEWED Downe with somme drope from thy mageste.”—Ibid. p. 182.

“With teares augmenting the fresh mornings DEAW.”

Romeo and Juliet, p. 54.

“Her costly bosom strew’d with precious orient pearl,
Bred in her shining shells, which to the DEAW doth yawn,
Which DEAW they sucking in, conceive that lusty spawn.”

Poly-olbion, song 30.

[“The drouping night thus creepeth on them fast :
And the sad humor loading their eye-liddes,
As messenger of Morpheus, on them cast
Sweet slombring DEAW, the which to sleep them biddes.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 1. st. 36.

—————“There Tethys his wet bed
Doth ever wash, and Cynthia still doth steepe
In silver DEAW his ever-drouping hed.”—Ibid. st. 39.

“Now when the rosy-fingred morning faire,
Weary of aged Tithones saffron bed,
Had spread her purple robe through DEAWY aire.”

Ibid. cant. 2. st. 7.

"From that first tree forth flow'd as from a well,
A trickling streame of balme, most soveraine
And dainty deare, which on the ground still fell,
And overflowed all the fertile plaine,
As it had DEAWED bene with timely raine."

Faerie Queene, cant. 11. st. 48.

"The ioyous day gan early to appeare;
And fayre Aurora from the DEAWY bed
Of aged Tithone gan herselfe to reare."

Ibid. book 1. cant. 11. st. 51.

"As fresh as flowres in meadow greene doe grow,
When morning DEAW upon their leaves doth light."

Ibid. cant. 12. st. 6.

"She alway smyld, and in her hand did hold
An holy-water-sprinkle, dipt in DEOWE."

Ibid. book 3. cant. 12. st. 13.

"And all the day it standeth full of DEOW,
Which is the teares that from her eyes did flow."—Spenser.

"Like as a tender rose in open plaine,
That with untimely drough nigh withered was,
And hung the head, soone as few drops of raine
Thereon distill and DEAW her daintie face,
Gins to look up."—Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 12. st. 13.

"Now sucking of the sap of herbe most meet,
Or of the DEAW, which yet on them does lie."

Spenser's Muirpothnos, st. 23.

"Whose beaultie shyneth as the morning cleare,
With silver DEAW upon the roses pearling."

Spenser, Colin Clouts come home again.]

After the BREAD has been wetted (by which it becomes DOUGH) then comes the Leaven (which in the Anglo-Saxon is termed Dæfe and Dafen); by which it becomes LOAF.

LOAF—(in Anglo-Saxon Blaf, a broad) is the past participle of Blifian, To raise; and means merely Raised. So in the Mæso-Gothic, hlaifs is LOAF; which is the past participle of hlaifigan, To raise, or To lift up.

In the old English translation we read—"He hauynge mynde of his mercy Took up Israel his child." In the modern version—"He hath holpen his servant Israel in remembrance of his mercy." Luke, chap. 1. ver. 54. But in the Gothic it is hlaifida iskrafa. He hath raised or lifted up Israel.

When the etymologist had thus discovered that Ḥlap meant Raised; I think he must instantly have perceived that Ḥlaponb was a compound word of Ḥlap (raised or exalted) and Onb, Ortus, source, origin, birth.

LORD—therefore means High-born, or of an Exalted Origin. With this explanation of the word, you will perceive, that [kings] can no more make a LORD, than they can make a Traitor. They may indeed place a Thief and a Traitor amongst LORDS; and destroy an innocent and meritorious man as a Traitor. But the theft and treachery of the one, and the innocence and merits of the other, together with the infamy of thus mal-assorting them, are far beyond the reach and power of any [kings] to do away.

F.—If Ḥlaponb, i. e. LORD, does not mean (as I before suspected, and you have since satisfied me it does not mean) an Afforder of Bread; neither can Ḥlapdig, i. e. LADY, mean a Distributor or Server out of that Bread;¹ as (still misled by ¹ Verstegan, in his Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, edit. 1634, p. 316, gives us the following account of LORD and LADY.

“LORD.

“I finde that our ancestors used for LORD the name of Laford, which (as it should seeme) for some aspiration in the pronouncing, they wrot Hlaford and Hlafurd. Afterward it grew to be written Loverd: and by receiving like abridgment as other our ancient appellations have done, it is in one syllable become LORD.

“To deliver therefore the true etymology, the reader shall understand, that albeit wee have our name of Bread from Breod, as our ancestors were wont to call it, yet used they also, and that most commonly, to call Bread by the name of Hlaf; from whence we now only retaine the name of the forme or fashion wherein Bread is usually made, calling it a Loaf; whereas Loaf comming of Hlaf or Laf, is rightly also Bread it selfe, and was not of our ancestors taken for the forme only, as now we use it.

“Now was it usuall in long foregoing ages, that such as were endued with great wealth and meanes above others, were chiefly renowned (especially in these Northerne regions) for their housekeeping and good hospitality; that is, for being able and using to feed and sustaine many men; and therefore were they particularly honoured with the name and title of Hlaford, which is as much to say as An Aforder of Laf, that is a Bread-giver: intending (as it seemeth) by Bread, the sustenance of man; that being the substance of our food, the most agreeable to nature, and that which in our daily prayers we especially desire at the hands of God.

Ḥlaf) the same etymologists have supposed. Yet in Ḥlafḏig there is no Opḏ, nor any equivalent word to make her name signify High-born.

II.—Nor does it so signify. Ḥlafḏig signifies and is merely Lofty, i. e. Raised or Exalted: her birth being intirely out of the question; the wife following the condition of the husband. But I wish you here to observe, that the past participle of the verb Ḥlifian, besides LOAF, LORD, and LADY, has furnished us with two other supposed substantives; viz. LIFT (Lýft) and LOFT.

“ And if we duly obserue it, wee shall finde that our nobility of England, which generally doe beare the name of LORD, have alwaies, and as it were of a successive custome (rightly according unto that honourable name), maintayned and fed more people, to wit, of their servants, retayners, dependants, tenants. as also the poore, than the nobility of any country in the continent, which surely is a thing very honourable and laudable, and most well befitting noblemen and right noble minds.

“ LADY.

“ The name or title of Lady, our honourable appellation generally for all principall women, extendeth so farre, as that it not only mounteth up from the wife of the knight to the wife of the king, but remaineth to some women whose husbands are no knights, such as having bin Lord Majors are afterward only called Masters, as namely the Aldermen of York.

“ It was anciently written Hleafdian or Leafdian, from whence it came to be Lafily, and lastly Lady. I have shewed here last before how Hlaf or Laf was sometime our name of Bread, as also the reason why our noble and principall men came to be honoured in the name of Laford, which now is LORD, and even the like in corespondence of reason must appeare in this name of Leafdian, the feminine of Laford: the first syllable whercof being anciently written Hleaf and not Hluf, must not therefore alienate it from the like nature and sense; for that only seemeth to have bin the feminine sound; and we see that of Leafdian we have not retained Leady but Lady. Well then both Hlaf and Hleaf we must here understand to signifie one thing, which is Bread: Dian is as much to say as Serve; and so is Leafdian, a Bread-server. Whereby it appeareth that as the Laford did allow food and sustenance, so the Leafdian did see it served and disposed to the guests. And our ancient and yet continued custome that our Ladies and Gentlewomen doe use to carue and serve their guests at the table, which in other countries is altogether strange and unusuall, doth for prooffe hereof well accord and corespond with this our ancient and honourable feminine appellation.”

The former of these, LIFT, is not used at present in England ; but, I am told, is still common in Scotland.

“ ————— With that the dow
Heich in the LIFT full glaide he gan behald.”

Douglas, booke 5. p. 144.

“ Under the LIFT the maist gentyl riucere.”—Ibid. booke 8. p. 241.

“ Nane uthir wyse, than as sum tyme we se
The schynand brokin thunderis lichtyng fle,
Peirsand the wattry cloudis in the LIFT.”—Ibid. p. 255.

“ For suddanlie thay se, or thay be war,
The fyre flaucht beting from the LIFT on fer,
Cum with the thunderis hidduous rumbling blast.”—Ibid. p. 261.

“ And on that part quhar the LIFT was maist clere Towart the left hand maid ane thundering.”—Ibid. booke 9. p. 300.

“ Wyth stormy tempestis and the northin blastis, Quhilk cloudis skatteris, and al the LIFT ouercastis.”—Ibid. p. 302.

“ Ane huge clamour thay rasit and womenting, Beting thare breistis, quhil all the LIFT did ryng.”
Ibid. booke 11. p. 360.

“ The sparrow chirmis in the wallis clyft
Goldspink and lintquhite fordynnand the LYFT.”
Ibid. Prol. to booke 12. p. 403.

“ Belive ouer al the LIFT upsemyt rise
The fell tempest.”—Ibid. booke 12. p. 418.

“ But lo ane sworl of fyre blesis up thraw Lemand towart the LIFT the flamb he saw.”—Ibid. p. 435.

“ And as I lukit on the LIFT me by,
All birnand rede gan waxin the euin sky.”
Ibid. Prol. to booke 13. p. 449.

LIFT—is the past participle 𐐰𐐺𐐹𐐸 or LIFED; obtained, in the usual manner, by adding the participial termination od or ED to 𐐰𐐺𐐹 or Lif, Lifed, Lif'd, List. Seeing the signification of the word LIFT, you will not wonder that it is perfectly equivalent to HEAVEN; and that in all the foregoing passages you may, if you please, substitute Heaven for Lift: One being the past participle of 𐐰𐐺𐐹𐐸𐐰, and the other of 𐐰𐐺𐐹𐐸𐐰.

LOFT (our common name for a Raised, Elevated or High room or chamber)—is likewise the past participle of 𐐰𐐺𐐹𐐸𐐰; obtained in the same manner, by adding the participial termination ED to the past tense 𐐰𐐺𐐹𐐸 or Lawf.

Lafed (A broad) Laf'd, Laft—or LOFT.

“A heart where dread was neuer so imprest,
To hide the thought that might the truth aduance,
In neither fortune LOFT, nor yet repest,
To swell in wealth, or yeeld unto mischaunce.”

Songes and Sonets. By the Earle of Surrey, fol. 16. p. 2.

“Absence, my friende, workes wonders oft,
Now brings full low, that lay full LOFT.”—Ibid. fol. 87. p. 1.

Being thus in possession of the supposed substantive LOFT, the language proceeded in its usual way of forming an adjective by adding iz to it; which our modern language uniformly, in all cases, changes to y. Hence the Adjective LOFTY.

LOFTY } are the same word, the same participle, the same and { adjective; and mean merely Raised, Elevated, LADY } Exalted.

F.—I cannot take this leap with you at once from LOFTY to LADY: They are too distant for me. I must have some station or some steps between, or I shall never reach it. I do not boggle at the difference between O and A, or, as it was pronounced, Aw. That change is perpetually made. But the FT in the one, instead of D in the other, I cannot so easily get over. Besides, we use the one as a substantive, and the other as an adjective.

H.—It is the F alone which, being retained in the one and suppressed in the other, causes all your difficulty, and all the difference between the words.

plaf, plafod, plafð, plafð-iz
omitting the incipient H, is in our modern character,

Laf, Lafed, Laf'd, Lafd-y.
if the F is retained in the word, the immediately subsequent D is, as usual, changed to T: and the word will be Lafty (A broad) or LOFTY.

If the F is suppressed, no cause remains for changing the D, and the word will be LADY.

It is not necessary, I suppose, to say one word to explain why LADY is used as a substantive. Their frequent recurrence causes the same to numberless other adjectives which are now considered as substantives.

F.—It seems rather extraordinary to me, that you should derive from one common stock so many different words, which in their common use and application do not, at first sight, appear to have any the smallest relation to each other. That Lord and Lady, however, might have a common origin, and be derived from the same source, I could very well suppose. But how their meaning should be connected with the Lift, a Loft, and a Loaf, I confess I had not imagined. I do see at present the common link which holds them together. But, though you did the same thing before with the verbs Neapan and Scitan, yet, I suppose, such coincidences are rare.

H.—No. It is the necessary condition of all languages. It is the lot of man, as of all other animals, to have few different ideas (and there is a good physical reason for it) though we have many words: and yet, even of them, by no means so many as we are supposed to have. I mean, of words with different significations. What you now notice would have happened often before, if I had not been careful to keep it out of sight till you should be ripe for it.

At first, if you remember, we were led to a discovery of these hidden participles only by the participial terminations ED, EN, and T. But we have now proceeded a little further, and have discovered another set of participles which we obtain by a change of the characteristic letter of the verb. We may now therefore look back to those participles we at first noticed; and add to them those which are derived from the same common stock, and which I forbore at that time to mention. Thus

BROWN } as well as BRAND,¹ are the past participle of the and } verb To Bren, or To Brin. The French and BRUNT } Italians have in their languages this same participle; written by them Brun and Bruno. BROWN means Burned, (subaud. colour.) It is that colour which things have that have been Burned.

[“Come procede innanzi dall’ardore
Per lo papiro suso un color BRUNO,
Che non è nero ancora e’l bianco muore.”

L’Inferno di Dante, cant. 25.]

“Newe grene chese of smalle clammynes comfortethe a hotte stomake, as Rasis sayth, it repressethe his BROWNES and heate.”

Regiment of Helthe. By T. Paynel, (1541.) fol. 61. p. 1.

“It BOURNETH ouer moche.”—Ibid. fol. 62. p. 1.

¹ In BRANDY (German, Brand-wein), Brand is the same participle.

(Hence also the Italians have their Bronzo: from which the French and English have their Bronze.)

Nor is this peculiar to our language alone; nor to this colour only. All colours in all languages must have their denomination from some common object, or from some circumstances which produce those colours. So Vossius well derives FUSCUS—"παρά το φωσκεῖν, quod Hippocrati est Ustulare. Nam quæ ustulantur Fusca reddunt." In the same manner,

YELLOW—(Geælged, Ge-ælg) is the past participle of Ge-ælan,¹ accendere. The Italian Giallo and the French (Ge-ælgan) Gialne, Jaune, are the same participle. So the Latin words Flammeus and Flavus, from Φλεγω, Φλεγμα, Flamma.

GREEN—is the past participle of Grenian, virescere: as Viridis of virere, and Prasinus from Πρασον.

WHITE—is the past participle of ΘΑΦΓΑΝ, spumare.

GREY—of Gepeznan, inficere, &c.

BRUNT—(Brun-ed, Brun'd, Brunt) i. e. Burnt, is the same participle as BROWN or Brun. In speaking of a battle, To bear the BRUNT of the day—is to bear the Heat, the Hot or Burnt part of it.

[Skinner says—"BRUNT, To bear the BRUNT of the day: maximum prælii impetum sustinere. Procul dubio a Teut. et Belg. BRUNST, ardor, fervor, calor, æstus, i. e. The Heat of the day."]

"Enceladus body with thunder lyis half BRUNT."

Douglas, booke 3. p. 87.

"I report me unto the kynges maiestye that ded is, whiche at the fyrst BROUNT, as sone as he toke Godes cause in hand, that leopard and dragon of Rome, did not only sollicitat thole forene worold against him, but, &c."—Declaracion of Christe. By Johan Hoper, (1547.)

"With what reason could ye thinke, that if ye bode the hote BRUNT of battaile, but ye must needs feele the smart?"

The Hurt of Sedition. By Sir John Cheke.

LOG } as well as LAW—are also the past participle of and } ΛΑΓΓΑΝ, Leczan, ponere, To Lay. Laz (Λ LOAD } broad, and retaining the sound of the γ) LOG, from the Anglo-Saxon, corresponds with post from the Latin. We say indifferently—"To stand like a POST," or "To stand like a LOG" in our way. Lag-ed, or Lag'd (dismissing the sound of the g) becomes Lad (A broad) or LOAD. And you will not fail to observe, that, though Weight is subaud. and therefore implied in the word LOAD; yet Weight is not LOAD, until cuivis Impositum.

¹ [Ale; Yellow; Yelk, Yolk; Gold.]

SHEER SHERD, SHRED
SHORE and SCORE
SHORT
SHORN SHOWER
SHARE and SCAR
SHARD
SHIRE
SHIRT and SKIRT

All these, so variously written and pronounced; and now so differently and distinctly applied; are yet merely the past participle of Scipan, To Shear, To cut, To divide, To separate. And they were formerly used indifferently.

Nor have we any occasion to travel for their etymology (I cannot say with Dr. Johnson, for he himself never advanced a single footstep towards any of them, but by his ignorant direction) to the Dutch, the Swedish, the Islandic, the French, or the Frisick. It is true that all these languages, as well as the German, the Danish, and even the Italian and the Spanish, share this participle in common with ourselves: and if that be Etymology, barely to find out a similar word in some other language, the business of the etymologist is perfectly idle and ridiculous. For they might all refer each to the other, without any one of them ever arriving at a meaning. But the Italian, the French, and the Spanish have this participle from our Northern ancestors: and in our own language the etymology of all these words is to be found: and from a Northern language only can they be rationally explained. The Italian and French etymologists are therefore in some sort excusable for the trash they have written on the Northern words in their language: If I was not afraid of being condemned by my own sentence, I should add, an Englishman has no excuse.

To exemplify and confirm what I have said, I will give you a few instances; your own reading will furnish you with as many more as you please.

"Bot thare was na dynt mycht thare federis SCHER."

Douglas, booke 3. p. 75.

"And thay that with scharp cultir Teils or SCHERE
Of Rutuly the hilly knollis hie."—Ibid. book 7. p. 237.

"Than the reuthful Eneas kest his spere, Qubilk throw Mezentius armour dyd all SCHERE."

Ibid. booke 10. p. 347.

"And bad thay auld with ane scharp knyfe that tyde SCHERE down the wound and mak it large and wyde."

Ibid. booke 12. p. 423.

"And with that word his SCHERAND sword als tyte Hynt out of scyth."—Ibid. booke 4. p. 120.

"And with full flude flowing fra toun to toun Throw fertil feildis SCHERING thare and here."

Ibid. booke 8. p. 241.

"But with no craft of combes brode,
Thei might hir hore lockes shode,
And she ne wolde not be SHORE."

Gower, lib. 1. fol. 17. p. 2 col. 1.

"Like as the Nazareans, as sone as euer they had vowed, thei SHORE of streight ways their heare."

Dr. Martin, Of Priestes unlawful Mariages, ch. 8. p. 117.

"——— I am glad thy father's dead.

Thy match was mortal to him : and pure greefe
SHORE his old thred in twaine."—Othello, p. 337.

"O sisters three, come, come to mee,

With hands as pale as milke,

Lay them in gore, since you haue SCHORE

With SHEERES his thred of silke."—Mids. Night's Dreame, p. 161.

["Eftsoones her shallow ship away did slide,
More swift than swallow SHERES the liquid skye."

Faerie Queens, book 2, cant. 6. st. 5.

"With rugged beard, and hoarie shagged heare,
The which he never wont to combe, or comely SHARE."

Ibid. book 4. cant. 5. st. 34.

"For with his trenchant blade at the next blow Haffe of her shield he SHARED quite away."

Ibid. book 5. cant. 5. st. 9.

"So soone as fates their vitall thred haue SHORNE,"

Spenser's Ruines of Time:

"His snowy front, curled with golden heares,
Like Phoebus face adorn'd with sunny rayes,

Divinely shone ; and two sharpe winged SHEARES,
 Decked with diverse plumes, like painted jayes,
 Were fixed at his backe to cut his ayery wayes."

Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 8. st. 5.]

"On cais thare stude ane meikle schip that tyde, Hir wail joned til ane SCHORE rolkis syde."

Douglas, booke 10. p. 342.

"And fra hir hie windois can espy
 With bent sail caryand furth the nauy,
 The coistis and the SCHORE all desolate."—Ibid. booke 4. p. 120.

"Smate with sic fard, the airis in flendris lap, Hir forschyp hang, and sum dele SCHORIT throw."

Ibid. booke 5. p. 134.

"With mantil rent and SCHORNE men nicht hir se."

Ibid. booke 8. p. 269.

"His berdles chekis or his chaftis round
 In sunder SCHORNE has with ane greslie wound."

Ibid. booke 9. p. 305.

"Syne smate he Lycas, and him has al to lorne,
 That of his dede moderis wame furth was SCHORNE."

Ibid. booke 10. p. 326.

"And lyke as sum tyme cloudis bristis attanis,
 The SCHOURE furth yettand of hoppand halestanys."

Douglas, booke 10. p. 348.

"His feris has this pray ressauit raith,
 And to thare meat addressis it to graith,
Hynt of the hydis, made the boukis bare,
 Rent furth the entrellis, sum into talyeis SCHARE."

Ibid. booke 1. p. 19.

"The god of loue, whiche al to SCHARE
 Myn herte with his arowes kene."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 128. p. 2. col. 2.

"I had my feather shot SHAER away."

B. and Fletcher, Knight of the Burning Pestle.

"And eke full ofte a littel SKARE
 Upon a banke, or men be ware,
 Let in the streme, whiche with gret peine
 If any man it shal restreine."—Gower, Prol. fol. 3. p. 2. col. 2.

"I dare aduenture mee for to keepe her from an harder SHOURE than euer I kept her."—Hist. of Prince Arthur, 3d part, ch. 155.

"Yet Lug, whose longer course doth grace the goodly SHEERE."

Poly-olbion, song 6.

“Which manly Malvern sees from furthest of the SHEER.”

Poly-olbion, song 7.

“Yet both of good account are reckned in the SHIERE.”

Ibid. song 7.

SHERD and SHRED have been already explained, (p. 330.) SHEER, as we now use it, means separated from every thing else. As when we say—“SHEER ignorance,” i. e. separated from any the smallest mixture of information; or, separated from any other motive. So in the instance from Beaumont and Fletcher (who write it SHAER) it means, that the feather was so separated by the shot, as not to leave the smallest particle behind.

SHORE, as the sea-shore or shore of a river (which latter expression Dr. Johnson, without any reason, calls “a licentious use” of the word), is the place where the continuity of the land is interrupted or separated by the sea or the river. Observe, that SHORE is not any determined spot, it is of no size, shape, nor dimensions; but relates merely to the separation of land from land.

Shored, Shor'd, SHORT (or, as Douglas has written it, SCHORIT), cut off; is opposed to LONG, which means Extended: LONG being also a past participle of Lenzian, To extend, or To stretch out.

SHIRT and SKIRT (i. e. rcipeð) is the same participle, differently pronounced, written, and applied.

SHOWER (in Anglo-Saxon rcyup and rcup) means merely broken, divided, separated: (subaud. clouds). Junius and Skinner had some notion of the meaning of this word; Johnson none.

SCORE, when used for the number Twenty, has been well and rationally accounted for, by supposing that our unlearned ancestors, to avoid the embarrassment of large numbers, when they had made twice ten notches, cut off the piece or Talley (Taglié) containing them; and afterwards counted the SCORES or pieces cut off; and reckoned by the number of separated pieces, or by SCORES.

SCORE, for account or reckoning, is well explained, and in the same manner; from the time when divisions, marks, or notches, cut in pieces of stick or wood, were used instead of those Arabian figures we now employ. This antient manner of reckoning is humourously noted by Shakespeare.

“Thou hast most traiterously corrupted the youth of the realme, in erecting a Grammer Schoole ; and whereas before our forefathers had no other bookes but the SCORE and the TALLY, thou hast caused printing to be used.”—2d part Henry 6. p. 141.

[“And on his brest a bloodie crosse he bore,
The deare remembrance of his dying Lord,
Upon his shield the like was also SCOR'D.”

Spenser's Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 1. st. 2.]

SHARE, SHIRE, SCAR, one and the same past participle, mean separated, divided. SHARE, any separated part or portion. SHIRE, a separated part or portion of this realm. And though we now apply SCAR only to a cicatrix, or the remaining mark of a separation, it was formerly applied to any separated part.¹

[“——Stay, Sir King,
This man is better than the man he slew,
As well descended as thyselfe, and hath
More of thee merited, then a band of Clotens
Had euer SCARRE for.”—Cymbeline, p. 397. col. 2.

“Tho him she brought aboard, and her swift bote
Forthwith directed to that further strand :
Upon that SHORE he spyed Atin stand,
There by his maister left, when late he far'd
In Phædrias flitt barck over that perlous SHARD.”

Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 6. st. 38.]

In the instance I produced to you from Gower, he calls it—“a littel SKARE upon a banke that lets in the streame.” So you will find in Ray's North-country words (p. 52), that what we now call Pot-sherds, or Pot-shards, are likewise called

¹ [Skinner says,—“A SCAR, a Fr. G. Escare, Escarre, cicatrix, utr. detorto sensu, a Gr. Εσχαρα, Crusta post adustionem relicta. Medicis Escara, vel, ut Minsh. vult, a Belg. Schorre, Schoore, ruptura ; sed prius præfero : Escara enim cicatrici propter duritiem affinis est. Verum si Camdeno credendum sit, Scap, A.-S. cautem signare, longe optimum esset ab isto Scap deducere : nam instar cautis dura est. V. Camden, in agro Ebor. reddentem etymon portûs Scarborough.”] [So in Yorkshire and Westmoreland there are Hardraw Scar, Thornton Scar, Knype Scar, &c.—ED.]

Pot-SCARS or Pot-SHREDS.¹ You will find, too, that where we now use SCAR, was formerly used SCORE, with the same meaning: as in Ray's Proverbs (p. 19.)—"Slander leaves a SCORE behind it."—So the "cliffe of a rocke" (i. e. the cleaved part of it) as Ray informs us, is still called a "SCARRE." Douglas, we have seen, calls it—"ane SCHORE rolkis syde."

"And northward from her springs haps SCARDALE forth to find,
Which like her mistress Peake, is naturally inclin'd
To thrust forth ragged CLEEVES, with which she scattered lies,
As busy nature here could not herself suffice,
Of this oft-alt'ring earth the sundry shapes to show,
That from my entrance here doth rough and rougher grow,
Which of a lowly dale although the name it bear,
You, by the rocks, might think that it a mountain were,
From which it takes the name of SCARDALE."

Poly-olbion, song 26.

"As first without herself at sea to make her strong,
And fence her farthest point from that rough Neptune's rage,
The isle of Walney lies; whose longitude doth swage
His fury, when his waves on Furnesse seems to war,
Whose crooked back is arm'd with many a rugged SCAR
Against his boist'rous shocks."—Ibid. song 27.

The SHARE-BONE is so called, because it is placed where the body is separated or divided. So Douglas, booke 3, p. 82, says,

"Ane fair virginis body doune to hir SCHERE."

PLOUGH-SHARE is a Plough-sheerer, contracted to avoid the repetition ER, ER.

A pair of SHEERS, a pair of SHEERERS.

"Quhais woll or fleis was neuer clepit with SCHERE."

Douglas, booke 12. p. 413.

The Italian Scerre, Sciarrare, and Schiera; and the French à l'Ecart and Déchirer, sufficiently speak the same Northern ¹ ["They hew'd their helmes, and plates asunder brake,

As they had POTSHARES bene."

Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 1. st. 37.]

["The shard-borne beetle;" "sharded beetle;" "They are his shards, and he their beetle."—Shakespeare. ED.]

origin; and none other has been or can be found for them.¹

BLUNT—As BLIND has been shown to be Blin-ed; so BLUNT is Blon-ed, the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Blinnan, To Blin, To stop. Blon is the regular Anglo-Saxon past tense; to which, by adding ED, we have Blon-ed, Blon'd, Blont or BLUNT: i. e. Stopped in its decreasing progress towards a point or an edge.

["For God he often saw from heavens hight,
All were his earthly eien both BLUNT and bad,
And through great age had lost their kindly sight."

Fuerie Queene, book 1. cant. 10. st. 47.]

FOE } Upon a former occasion, you may remember, I FOH! } considered the adverb or interjection FIE! as the FAUGH! } Imperative of the verb Fian, To Hate: and I have very lately shown FIEND, ƿianð, to be the present participle of the same verb. Now that we have noticed the usual and regular change of the characteristic letter of the verbs, I suppose that you are at once aware that FOE, ƿa, is the past tense, and therefore past participle, of the same verb ƿian; and means (subaud. any one) Hated.

I think you must at the same time perceive, that the nauseating (Interjection, as it is called) FOH! or FAUGH! is merely the same past participle.²

"FOH! one may smel in such, a will most ranke, Foule disproportions, thoughts unnaturall."—Othello, p. 324.

¹ Scerrie Menage derives from Eligere.

Sciarrare from the French Escarter.

Schiera from the Latin Spira.

E'cart from Ex parte.

And Déchirer from Dilacerare.

["Or ecco Draghinazza a fare SCIARRA."

Orlundo Innam. (di Berni), lib. 1. cant. 5. st. 44.

"Impon, che 'l di seguente in un gran campo

Tutto si mostri à lui SCHIERATO il campo."

Gierusalemme Liberata, cant. 1. st. 34.]

² "Μη γενοιο, in Greake, sygnyfyeth detestacyon, as we speake wyth one syllable in Englyshe, FYE."—Detection of the Devils Sophistrie. By Steuen Gardiner, Bp. of Winchester, fol. 64. p. 1.

FEN } In the explanation of Fenowed, Vinewed, or FAINT } Whinid, the past participle of fynizean; I mentioned FEN and FAINT as past participles of the same verb. But I forbore at that time to consider them more particularly, because no mention had then been made of the change of the characteristic letter. [See p. 346.]

FAN or FEN is the past tense, and therefore past participle, of fynizean; and means corrupted, spoiled, decayed, withered. In modern speech we apply FEN only to stagnated or corrupted water; but it was formerly applied to any corrupted, or decayed, or spoiled substance.

“Quhen that Nisus fallis unhappely
 Apoun the glouit blude, quhar as fast by
 The stirkis for the sacrifyce per case
 War newly brytnit, quhareof all the place
 And the grene gers bedewit was and wet:
 As this younghere hereon tredeand fute set,
 Ioly and blyith, wening him victour round,
 He slaid and stummerit on the sliddry ground,
 And fell at erd grufelingis amid the FEN,
 Or beistis blude of sacrifyce.”—Douglas, booke 5. p. 138.

FAINT is Faned, Fand, Fant, or Fened, Fend, Fent. The French participle Fané, of the verb Faner or Fener, is also from Fynizean.

“La rose est ainsi appelée pour ce qu'elle jette un grand flux d'odeur, aussi est ce pourquoy elle se FENE et se passe bientost.”

Amyot: Morales de Plutarque, 3 liv. Des propos de table.

[“E come donna onesta, che permene
 Di se sicura, e per l'altrui fallanza,
 Pure ascoltando timida, si FANE;
 Così Beatrice trasmutò sembianza.”

Il Paradiso di Dante, cant. 27.

“C'est comme dans un jardin où les roses FANEES font place aux roses nouvelles.”—Jacques le Fataliste et son Maître: par Diderot, tom. 2. p. 10.

Fynizean.

English. Fen. Faint.

Fenowed. Vinewed. Whinid. Vinny.¹

¹ See p. 343 et seq.

Latin. Vanus. Vanesco.

Italian. Fango. Affanno. Affannare.

French. Faner. Se Fener. Fange. Evanouir.]

RAFT—As RIFT (Riv'd) was shown to be the past participle of To Rive; so RAFT (Rafed) is the past participle of Refan, Reafian, rapere, To Rive, To Reave or Bereave, To Tear away.

ROUGH (poſ) and RIFF-RAFF are the same participle.

“What gylte of me? what fel experience
Hath me RAFTE, alas, thyne aduertence?
O trust, O faythe, O depe assuraunce
Who hath me RAFTE Creseyde.”

Troylus, boke 5. fol. 197. p. 1. col. 2.

“But priuely she cought forth a knyfe,
And therwithal she RAFTE herselfe her lyfe.”

Lucrece, fol. 216. p. 1. col. 1.

[“Mischiefe ought to that mischaunce befall,
That so hath RAFT us of our merriment.”

Shepheards Calender: August.

“And stroke at her with more than manly force,
That from her body, full of filthie sin,
He RAFT her hatefull heade without remorse.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 1. st. 24.]

CLOUGH } as well as Cleere, Cleft, Cliff, Clift, and Cloven,
CLOUT } are the past participle of Lhopian, findere, To Cleave.

“She fayned her, as that she must gon
There as ye wote, that enery wight hathe nede,
And whan she of this byl hath taken hede,
She rent it al to CLOUTES, and at last
Into the preuy sothly she it cast.”

Marchaunts Tale, fol. 31. p. 2. col. 2.

“She ne had on but a strayte olde sacke,
And many a CLOUTE on it there stacke.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 122. p. 1. col. 1.

“And cast on my clothes CLOUTED and hole.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 31. p. 2.

["Then as you like this, I will instruct you in all our secrets : for there is not a CLOWTE nor corde, nor boord, nor post, that hath not a speciall name, or singular nature."—Galathea (by Lily), act 1. sc. 4.

"His garment, nought but many ragged CLOUTS,
With thornes together pind and patched was."

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 9. st. 36.]

Clouve, Clough, cleaved or divided—into small pieces.
Clouved, Clouv'd, Clout.

"Indeede a must shoote nearer, or heele ne're hit the CLOUT."

Loue's Labour Lost, act. 4.

Clouted cream is so called for the same reason.

WOOF—as WEFT, before noticed, is the past participle of Wefan, To Weave.

"And yet the spacious bredth of this diuision

Admits no orifex for a point as subtle

As Ariachne's broken WOOF to enter." Troilus and Cressida.

TAG—as well as TIGHT, is the past participle of Tian, vincire.

FORD—S. Johnson says, most untruly, that this word—"sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness."¹

As FART, so FORD is the past participle of Fapan, To Go; and always, without exception, means Gone, i. e. a place Gone over or through.

WANE } are all (as well as WANT and GAUNT before-WAN } mentioned) the past participle of Wanian, To WAND } Wane, To decrease, To fall away; and mean De-

¹ "FORD," says Junius, "Vadum, qualiscunque via aut transitus per flumen : A.-S. forð, a fapan, ire, transire : quam originem tradit Guntherus Ligurini sui lib. primo :

"Sede satis nota, rapido quæ proxima Mogo
Clara situ, populoque frequens, muroque decora est,
Sed rude nomen habet : nam Teutonus incola dixit
Franconefurt ; nobis liceat sermone Latino
Francorum dixisse Vadum ; quia Carolus illic
Saxonas, indomita nimium feritate rebelles
Oppugnans, rapidi latissima flumina Mogi
Ignoto fregisse vado, mediumque per amnem
Transmisisse suas neglecto ponte, cohortes
Creditur, inde locis mansurum nomen inhæsit."

creased, or fallen away. The moon in the WANE, is the moon in a decreased state. Skelton, p. 167, Edit. 1736, says—
“The waters were WAN,” i. e. decreased.

[“—————All the charmes of loue,
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy WAND lip !
Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both ;
Tye up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keepe his braine fuming.”—Antony and Cleopatra, p. 345. col. 1.

S. Johnson supposes a Fond or Warm lip. WAND here means thin or delicate.

“Eftsoones she cast by force and tortious might
Her to displace, and to herselfe t’ have gained
The kingdome of the night, and waters by her WAINED.”
Faerie Queene, Two Cantos of Mutabilitie, cant. 6. st. 10.]

“His spear, to equal which the tallest pine
Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast
Of some great ammiral, were but a WAND.”

Paradise Lost, book 1. verse 294.

TALL	}	All these words, as well as TILT , which we have already explained, however different they may at first sight appear, are all one word, with one meaning ; and are the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Tilian To Lift up, To Till .
TOLL
TOOL
TOIL TAILLE

TALL, and the French word Taille (as applied to stature), i. e. raised, lifted up ; require, I suppose, no explanation.

[“Buona è la gente, e non può da più dotta
O’ da più forte guida esser condotta.”

Gierusalemme Liberata, cant. 1. st. 61.

“TALL were the men, and led they could not be
By one more strong, or better skil’d than he.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, translated by R. C.

N.B. For this use of the word TALL, see B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, and elsewhere.]

TOLL, and the French word Taille (which is taken of Goods) differ only in pronunciation and consequent writing of them. It is a part lifted off or taken away. Nor will this use of the word appear extraordinary, when we consider the common expressions of—To raise taxes—To Levy taxes—Lever des impots.—A Levy upon any persons—Une Levée.

The TOLL of a bell, is, its being Lifted up, which causes that sound we call its TOLL.

TOOL is (some instrument, any instrument) Lifted up, or taken up, to work with.

TOIL (for labour), applied perhaps at first principally to having Tilled (or lifted up) the earth; afterwards to other sorts of labour. The verb was formerly written in English Tueil and Tuail.

“Biholde ye the lilies of the feeld hou thei wexen : thei TUEILEN not, nether spinnen.”—Matheu, ch. 6.

“Greteth well Marie : the whiche hath TUAILED myche in us.”

Romans, ch. 16.

TOIL (for a snare) is any thing Lifted up or raised, for the purpose of ensnaring any animal. As, A spider's web is a TOIL (something Lifted up) to catch flies : springes and nets, TOILS for other animals.

BATCH—as well as BACON (before explained) is the past participle of Bacan, To Bake. The indifferent pronunciation of ch or k, ought not to cause any difficulty for it prevails throughout the whole language. As Link and Linch, Rick and Rich, &c.

A BATCH of bread, is, the bread Baked at one time.

I have already said that BARREN is the past participle of the verb To Bar : and that, when we apply this word Barren either to land or to females, we assert the passage, either from the womb or the earth, to be Barr-en or Barr-ed from bearing any thing into the world or into life.

Our English verb To Bar is the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon verb BAIKTAN, Beorgan, Borgan, Býrgan ; which means, To Defend, To Keep safe, To Protect, To Arm, To Guard, To Secure, To Fortify, To Strengthen. And the past participle of this verb has furnished our language with the following supposed substantives :

[BAIKTAN. Býrgan.

A BAR

A BARRIER

A BARGAIN

A BARGE

The BARK of a dog

The BARK of a tree

A BARK—a ship

A BARKEN

A BARRACK

A BARN

A BARON	GUARANTEE
A BOROWE ¹	WAR
A BOROUGH	WARRIOR
The BOROUGH of Southwark	GUARD
A BURGESS	WARD
A BURGH	A HAUBERK
A BURGHER	USBERGO Ital.
BURIAL	HAUBERG Fr.
A BARROW ²	A BARBICAN
A BURROW, or WARREN	BARBARITY ³
WARRANTY	BARBAROUS
GUARANTY	BARMEKIN
WARRANT

A BAR, in all its uses is a Defence: that by which any thing is fortified, strengthened, or defended.

A BARN (Bar-en, Bar'n) is a covered inclosure, in which the grain, &c. is protected or defended from the weather, from depredation, &c.

A BARON is an armed, defenceful, or powerful man.

A BARGE is a strong boat.

A BARGAIN is a confirmed, strengthened agreement. After two persons have agreed upon a subject, it is usual to conclude with asking—Is it a BARGAIN? Is it confirmed?

A BARK is a stout vessel.

The BARK of a tree is its defence: that by which the tree is defended from the weather, &c.

“The cause is, for that trees last according to the strength and quantity of their sap and juice; being well munit by their BARK against the injuries of the air.”—Bacon's Natural History, cent. 6.

The BARK of a dog is that by which we are defended by that animal.

A BARKEN, according to Skinner—“Vox in comitatu Wilts

[¹ See Borseholder, in the Encyclopædia Britannica, vol. 3. p. 405.]
—[Borhs-older; See Schultes's Inquiry into the Elective Franchise of the Citizens of London, 1822.—ED.]

² [In Dorsetshire and in Cornwall sepulchral hillocks are called BARROWS.]

³ [Βαρυς.—BARBARUS, i. e. Bar-bar-us, reduplication of Bar, for very strong. Seneca, lib. 1. de Ira, describes them—‘BARBAROS tanto robustiores corporibus.’—4ta Edit. Lipsii, p. 8.]

usitatissima, Atrium, a Yard of a house, vel a verbo To Barr; vel a Germ. Bergen, abscondere; A.-S. Beorgan, munire, q. d. locus clausus, respectu sc. agrorum."

A HAUBERK. Vossius, Wachter and Caseneuve concur in its etymology.—"Halsberga vel Halsperga, vox est Saxonica, proprieque signat thoracem ferreum, sive armaturam colli et pectoris: ab Hals, collum, et Bergen, tegere, protegere, munire. Quomodo et in Legg. Ripuariis, cap. 36. §. 11, Bainberga, pro ocrea,¹ sive crurum armatura."—Vossius, De vitiis sermonis, lib. 2. cap. 9.

The French, in their accustomed manner changing the L in Halr to U, made the word HAUBERG: and the Italians, in their manner, made it USBERGO.

A BURGH OR BOROUGH meant formerly a fortified Town.²

[Spenser says unadvisedly: ³—

"By that which I have read of a BOROUGH, it signifieth a Free Towne, which had a principall officer, called a Headborough, to become ruler, and undertake for all the dwellers under him."

Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

¹ [The Boot was much used by the ancients, by the foot as well as the horsemen. It was called by the ancient Romans ocrea; in middle-age writers, greva, gambera, benberga, bainbarga, and bemberga. The boot is said to have been the invention of the Carians. It was at first made of leather, afterwards of brass or iron, and was proof both against cuts and thrusts. It was from this that Homer calls the Greeks brazen-booted. The boot only covered half the leg; some say the right leg, which was more advanced than the left, it being advanced forward in an attack with the sword; but in reality it appears to have been used on either leg, and sometimes on both. Those who fought with darts or other missile weapons, advanced the left leg foremost, so that this only was booted.—Encyclopædia Britannica, vol. 3. p. 393.]

² [Bourguignons or Burgundians, one of the Northern nations who overran the Roman empire and settled in Gaul. They were of a great stature, and very warlike; for which reason the Emperor Valentinian the Great engaged them in his service against the Germans. They lived in tents which were close to each other, that they might the more readily unite in arms on any unforeseen attack. These conjunctions of tents they called burgs; and they were to them what towns are to us.

Encyclopædia Britannica, vol. 8. p. 486.]

³ [Perhaps Spenser's grounds for making this distinction are better than Mr. Tooke seems to have thought. But there appears to have been a confusion in the use of the word Franciplegium for Frid-borg, which is pledge for the peace, and not free borough.—See Schultes's Inquiry. BURY, designating a town, should perhaps be traced to Buan, To abide. See Additional Notes.—Ep.]

Again—

“A BOROUGH, as I here use it, and as the old lawes still use it, is not a BOROUGH towne, as they now call it, that is, a franchised towne, but a main pledge of 100 free persons, therefore called a free BOROUGH or (as you say) Franci-plegium : for BORH in old Saxon signifieth a pledge or surety, and yet it is so used with us in some speeches, as Chaucer saith :—‘ St. John to BORROW ;’ that is, for assurance and Warranty.”

Spenser, View of the State of Ireland

For BERIA, see Encyclopædia Britannica, where I think the Encyclopedist is, without and against all reason, misled by Du Fresne, who is himself misled.]

A BURROW for rabbits, &c. is a defended or protected place : to which a WARREN is synonymous, meaning the same thing : for WARREN is the past participle of ſerian, defendere, protegere, tueri.

“Foxis han BORWIS or dennes, and Briddis of the eir han nestis ; but mannes sone hath not where he shal reste his hede.”

Mattheu, ch. 8. v. 20.

[WAR.—On þijum bocum ur jezð þæt Saul pær gecopen ærejt to cýninge on Ippahela þEODE. for þanþe hig poldon gumne ÞERIEND habban þe hi zeheolde wið þæt hæþene folc. Ðpæt þa Samuel jæde þæt Eode. and Eod him GEþAFODE ðat hig jetton him to kininge Saul Eijer runu. and he wiððan nixode feoþeriz geara fæc. and þæt folc BEÞERODE.

Ælfric. de Veteri Testamento, p. 13.

Ðe hig folc zeheold butan ælcum LEFEOHTE.

Id. p. 14.]

A BOROWE was formerly used for what we now call a Security, any person or thing by which repayment is secured; and by which the Lender is defended or guarded from the loss of his loan.

“Thou broughtest me BOROWES my biddings to fulfyll.”

Vis. of P. Ploughman, fol. 5. p. 2.

“For I dare be his bold BOROWE that do bet will he neuer.”

Ibid. fol. 47. p. 2.

“And I will be your BOROW ye shall haue bred and cloth.”

Ibid. fol. 115. p. 1.

“We fynde in the lyfe of saynt Nycholas, that a Iewe lente a crysten man a grete somme of golde unto a certayne daye, and toke no syker- nesse of him, but his fayth and saynt Nycholas to BOROWE.”

Dives and Pauper, 2d. Comm. cap. 9.

“ I praye God and saynt Nycholas that was thy BOROWE, that harde vengeance come to the.”—Diues and Pauper, 2d Comm. cap. 9.

“ Yf the Borower upon usure fayle of his daye of payment, he that is his BOROWE may paye that moneye with the usure to the Lener, and do his dettour for whome he is BOROWE paye to hym ayen that moneye with the usure. For it is to the BOROWE none usure.”

Ibid. 7th Comm. cap. 25.

[“ St. John to BORROW.”

Chaucer.

“ This was the first sourse shepheards sorrow,
That now nill be quitt with baile nor BOROW.”

Shepheards Calender : May.

“ Nay, say I thereto, by my dear BOROWE,
If I may rest, I nill live in sorrowe.”

Ibid.

“ They boast they han the devill at commaund,
But aske hem therefare what they han paund :
Marrie ! that great Pan bought with deare BORROW,
To quite it from the blacke bowre of sorrow.”—Ibid. September.

“ Like valiant champions aduance forth your standardes, and assay whether your enemies can decide and try the title of battaile by dint of sword ; auauce, I say again, forward, my captaines,—Now Saint George to BORROW let us set forward.”

Holinshed (after Hall), Richard 3d.

“ He made it strange, and swore, so God him saue,
Lasse then a thousand ponde wold he not haue,
Ne gladly for that somme nolde he it don.
Aurelyus with blissfull herte anon
Answerde thus : fye on a thousand ponde.
This wyde world, which men say is rounde,
I wolde it yeue, if I were lorde of it.
Thys bargayne is ful driue, for we be knit ;
Ye shal be payde truely by my trouthe,
But loke now for no neglygence or slouthe,
Ye taryen us here no langer than to morowe.
Nay (qd this clerk) here my trouthe to BOROW.”

Frankleyns Tale, fol. 54. p. 1. col. 2.

“ Her loue of frendshyp haue I to the won,
And therefore hath she laid her faith to BORROW.”

Troilus, boke 2. fol. 168. p. 1. col. 2.

“ Sir, put you in that auenture,
For though ye BOROWES take of me,
The sykerer shal ye neuer be
For hostages, ne sykernesse,
Or chartres, for to beare wytnesse.

* * * * *

And Loue answerde, I trust the Without BOBOWE, for I wol none."

Romaunt of the Rose, fol. 155. p. 1. col. 1 & 2.

BURIAL, Bynzel, is the diminutive of Bynz or Burgh; a defended or fortified place. To Bury, Bynzan, sepelire, means To Defend: as Gray in his Elegy expresses it—"These bones from insult to protect." It cannot escape you, that the Latin sepelire has the same meaning: for seps or sepes "notat id, quod objectum, prohibet introitum in agrum vel hortum."

STERN, in its different applications, has already been shown to be the past participle of the verb Stipan, To Stir, To Steer, To Move. This participle also gives us the following substantives.

STORE	}	A store is the collective term for any quantity or number of things stirred or moved into some one place together.
STOUR,
STURT
START
STIR	}	STOUR (A.-S. stūp), formerly in much use, means moved , stirred : and was applied equally to dust, to water, and to men; all of them things easily moved.
STURDY E'TOURDI

"Besely our folkis gan to pingil and strife,
Swepand the flude with lang routhis belife,
And up thai welt the STOURE of fomy see."

Douglas, booke 3. p. 77.

"Upsprang the clamour, and the rerd furth went
Hie in the skyis of mony marinere,
The fomy STOURE of seyis rays thare and here."

Ibid. booke 5. p. 132.

"Bot we that bene of nature derf and doure Cummin of kynde as kene men in ane STOURE."

Ibid. booke 9. p. 299.

"Be this the Troianis in thare new ciete
Ane dusty sop uprisand gan do se,
Full thik of STOURE upthryngand in the are."—Ibid. p. 274.

"The STOURE encressis furius and wod."—Ibid. booke 11. p. 387.

"And not forsoith the lakkest weriour,
Bot forcy man and richt stalwart in STOURE."—Ibid. p. 389.

"The siluer scalit fyschis on the grete,
Ouer thwort clere stremes sprinkilland for the hete,

With fynns echinand broun as synopare,
And chesal talis, STOURAND here and thare."

Douglas, Prol. to booke 12. p. 400.

"The knyght was fayre and styffe in stour."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 126. p. 1. col. 1.

"They fight, and bringen horse and man to grounde,
And with her axes out the braynes quel,
But in the laste STOURE, sothe to tel,
The folke of Troy hem seluen so misleden
That with the worse at night home they fleden."

Troilus, boke 4. fol. 182. p. 2. col. 1.

"Lo a greet STYRYNG was maid in the see, so that the litil ship was hilid with wawys."—Mattheu, ch. 8. v. 24.

"There found Sir Bors more greater defence in that knight then hee wend, for that Sir Priden was a full good knight, and hee wounded Sir Bors full euill and hee him agaiue. But euer this Sir Priden held the STOURE in like hard."—Hist. of Prince Arthur, 3d part, ch. 72.

"Then began a great STURRE, and much people was there slaine."

Ibid. ch. 154.

"He in the midst of all this STURRE and route,
Can bend his browe, and moue himselfe about."

Songes, &c. By the Earle of Surrey, &c. fol. 89. p. 2.

"And after those braue spirits in all those baleful stowms
That with Duke Robert went against the pagan powers."

Poly olbion, song 16.

"Such strange tumultuous STIRS upon this strife ensue."

Ibid. song 4.

"———Who with the same pretence

In Norfolk rais'd such STIRS, as but with great expence
Of blood was not appeas'd."

Ibid. song 22.

"Better redresse was entended, then your USTIRRES and unquiet-nesse coulede obtaine."—Hurt of Sedition. By Sir J. Cheke.

"Your pretended cause of this monstrous STURRE, is to encrease mens welth."—Ibid.

"How dangerous it is to make STURRES at home, when they doe not only make ourselues weake, but also our enimies stronge."—Ibid.

["In religion and libertie were sayd to be of many men the very cause of all these STURNES."—R. Ascham, in a Letter to I. Astely, p. 7.]

STURT is formed in the usual manner from STOUR, jtup.
Stur-ed, Stur'd, Sturt.

“Dolorus my lyfe I led in STURT and pane.”

Douglas, booke 2. p. 41.

“Hyr moder, quham sa sone full desolate
Yone fals se reuer wyl leif in STURT, God wate.”

Ibid. booke 7. p. 219.

“Suffir me swelt, and end this cruel lyffe,
Quhil doutsum is yit all syc STURT and striffe.”

Ibid. booke 8. p. 263.

A START and a STIR require neither instance nor explanation.

By the accustomed addition of iz or y, to STOUR or ſtur, we have also the adjective STURDY, and the French Estourdi, Etourdi.

STORM—the past participle of Stýpmian, agitare, furere.

DAY—is the past participle Daz, of the Anglo-Saxon Dægian, lucescere. By adding the participial termination EN to Daz, we have Dagen or DAWN, already mentioned.

I told you some time since that a CHURN is the past participle Lýpen, of the Anglo-Saxon verb Lýpan, Ācýpan, vertere, revertere; and that it means Turned, Turned about, or Turned backwards and forwards. This same verb Lýpan, gives us also the following.

[Lýpan.

CHAR	CART
CHAIR, CHAIR	CHAR-WOMAN, CHARCOAL
CHEWR	CHAIR-MAN
CHUR-WORM	CHARIOT, CHARIOTEER
CAR	A-JAR
CARDINAL	TO JAR
Latin, CARRUS, CARDO, CARBO.]

“A woman, and commanded

By such poore passion as the maid that milkes

And does the meanest CHARES.”¹—Antony and Cleopatra, p. 364.

“And when thou hast done this CHARE, Ile giue thee leaue

To play till doomesday.”

Ibid. p. 367.

¹ Mr. Steevens, at this passage, cites Heywood's Rape of Lucrece:

“She, like a good wife, is teaching her servants sundry CHARES.”
And Promos and Cassandra:

“Well, I must trudge to do a certain CHARE.”

“That CHAR is CHAR'D ; as the good wife said, when she hang'd her husband.”—Ray's Proverbs, p. 182.

“Here's two CHEWRES CHEWR'D : when wisdom is employ'd
'Tis ever thus.”—Beaumont and Fletcher, Martial Maid.

“All 's CHARD when he is gone.”—Ibid. Two Noble Kinsmen.

“Lyke as ane bull dois rummesing and rare,
Quhen he eschapis hurt one the altare,
And CHARRIS by the ax with his nek wycht,
Gif on the forehede the dynt hittis not richt.”

Douglas, booke 2. p. 46.

“The witches of Lapland are the Diuel's CHARE-women.”

Beaumont and Fletcher, Fair Maid of the Inn.

“CHARRE folks are never paid.”—Ray's Proverbs, p. 87.

“The pyping wind blaw up the dure ON CHAR.”

Douglas, booke 3. p. 83.

“Ane Schot windo unschet ane litel ON CHAR.”

Ibid. Prol. to booke 7. p. 202.

Menage, Minshew, Junius, Skinner, &c., have no resource for the derivation of CHAIR, but the Greek $\kappa\alpha\theta\epsilon\delta\rho\alpha$; in which they all agree. But, though they travel so far for it, none of them has attempted to show by what steps they proceed from $\kappa\alpha\theta\epsilon\delta\rho\alpha$ to CHAIR. The process would be curious upon paper. But $\kappa\alpha\theta\epsilon\delta\rho\alpha$, though a Seat, is not a CHAIR ; nor does it convey the same meaning. CHAIR is a species of Seat. It is not a fixed, but a moveable seat ; Turned about and Returned at pleasure : and from that circumstance it has its denomination : It is a CHAIR-seat.

CAR,¹ CART, CHARIOT, &c., and the Latin CARRUS, are the

¹[A remarkable floating island in this country.—Adjoining Eastwaite-water, near Hawkshead, Lancashire, there is a tarn (or small lake) called Priestpot, upon which is an island, containing about a rood of land, mostly covered with willows ; some of them eighteen or twenty feet high. This island is distinguished by the name of The Car. At the breaking up of the severe frost in the year 1795, a boy ran into the house of the proprietor of this island, who lived within view of it, and told him that “his Car was coming up the Tarn.” The proprietor and his family soon proved the truth of the boy's report, and beheld with astonishment, not “Birnam-wood removed to Dunsinane!” but the woody island approaching them with slow and majestic motion. It rested, however, before it reached the edge of the tarn, and afterwards same participle. This word was first introduced into the Roman language by Cæsar, who learned it in his war with the Germans. Vossius mistakingly supposes it derived from Currus.

So CHAR-coal is wood Turned coal by fire.¹ We borrow nothing here from Carbone; but the Latin etymologists must come to us for its meaning, which they² cannot find elsewhere. As they must likewise for Cardo; ³ that on which the door is Turned and Returned.

“This is the station of the cause, the argument and material of all Paules pistels, even the treadsole or grundsole whereupon, as the dore is Turned and Returned, so are all his argumentes and proces therupon treated and retreated.”—Declaration, &c., against Ioye, fol. 25. p. 1.

frequently changed its position as the wind directed; being sometimes seen at one side of the lake, which is about two hundred yards across, and sometimes in the centre. It is conjectured to have been long separated from the bed of the lake, and only fastened by some of the roots of the trees, which were probably broken by the extraordinary rise of the water on the melting of the ice.

Charrue, the French name for a plough. A carpenter, in French Charpentier. Charta, Lat.

Charterparty. “The present Boyer says the word comes from hence, that per medium charta incidebatur, et sic fiebat charta partita; because, in the time when notaries were less common, there was only one instrument made for both parties: this they cut in two, and gave each his portion; joining them together at their return, to know if each had done his part.”—Encyclopædia Britannica, Edit. 3d. 1797. vol. 4. p. 360.]

¹ [“I no longer see the human heart CHAR'D in the flame of its own vile and paltry passions.”

Mr. Curran's Speech for Owen Kirwan, Edit. 1805.]

² CARBO, say the Latin etymologists, from Careo; quia caret flamma. Or from καρφω, arefacio. Or from the Chaldaic.

³ “CARDO unde sit, docere conatus Servius ad 1 Æn.: Cardo inquit, dictus, quasi cor januæ, quo movetur, απο της καρδιας. Et Isidorus, lib. xv. cap. vii. Cardo, inquit, est locus in quo ostium vertitur et semper movetur, dictus απο της καρδιας; quod, quasi Cor hominem totum, ita ille cuneus januam regat ac moveat. Unde et proverbiale est, In cardine rem esse.

“De etymo longe verisimiliora sunt quæ Martinius adfert: nempe ut κατα μεταθεσιν sit a καρδη, hoc est, hamus, vel aliud ex quo quid suspenditur. Vel a καρδαω, hoc est agito: in cardinibus enim janua agitur vertiturque. Horum alterum malim quam ut vel sit a καρτω, firmiter teneo; quia januam retinet. Vel a καρτος pro κατος, hoc est, robur, firmitas, quam janua in solis cardinibus habet.”—G. J. Vossius.

A CHUR-worm is so called, because it is Turned about with great celerity.

To set the door or the window ACHAR, which we now write AJAR (or, as Douglas writes it, ON CHAR) is to put it neither quite open nor quite shut, but on the TURN or RETURN to either.

A CHAR-woman is one who does not abide in the house where she works, as a constant servant, but Returns home to her own place of abode, and Returns again to her work when she is required.

A CHAR, when used alone, means some single separate act, such as we likewise call a Turn, or a Bout, not any unintermitted coherent business or employment of long continuance. And in the same sense as CHAR was formerly used, we now use the word Turn.—I'll have a Bout with him.—I'll take a Turn at it.—That Turn is served—(Which is equivalent to—That CHAR is CHAR'D; though not so quaintly expressed, as it would be by saying—That Turn is Turned.)—One good Turn deserves another. All these are common phrases.

“——Doe my lord of Canterbury
A shrewd Turne; and hee's your friend for euer.”

Henry 8. p. 230.

“——False gelden, gang thy gait,
And du thy Turns betimes: or I'is gar take Thy new breikes fra' thee, and thy dublet tu.”—Sad Shepherd.

“Gi' me my tankard there, hough. It's six a clock: I should ha' carried two Turns, by this.”—Every Man in his Humour, act 1. sc. 4.

F.—What is the name of that fish which one of your friends——

H.—Oh! you mean my gentle and amiable friend, Michael Pearson: forty long years my steady and uniform accomplice and comforter in all my treasons; equally devoted with myself to the rights and happiness of our countrymen and fellow-creatures; which, for the last forty years, in this country has by some persons been accounted the worst of treason. Yes: It was CHAR that he sent us: and I believe with Skinner, that it is so called—“quia hic piscis rapide et celeriter se in aqua vertit.”

YARE } are the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb YARD } Lȳppan, Lȳpian, To Prepare: and it is formed in the accustomed manner, by changing the characteristic letter ȳ to A. YARE means Prepared.

“The winde was good, the ship was YARE,
Thei toke her leue, and forth thei fare.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 101. p. 2. col. 1.

“In all hast made hir YARE

Towarde hir suster for to fare.”—Ibid. fol. 114. p. 1. col. 2.

“And bad the maister make hym YARE,
Tofore the wynde for he wolde fare.”

Ibid. lib. 8. fol. 184. p. 1. col. 1.

“This Tereus let make his shyppes YARE,
And into Greece himselfe is forth yfare.”

Chaucer, Phylomene, fol. 218.

“I do desire to learne, Sir: and I hope, if you haue occasion to use me for your own Turne, you shall find me YARE. For truly, Sir, for your kindnesse, I owe you a good Turne.”

Measure for Measure, p. 76.

A YARD, to mete, or to measure with (before any certain extent was designated by the word) was called a Met-geapð or Mete-gȳpð, or Mete-yard, i. e. something Prepared to mete or to measure with. This was its general name: and that prepared extension might be formed of any proper materials.
When it was of wood, it was formerly called a YARDWAND,
i. e. a Wand prepared for the purpose. By common use, when we talk of mensuration, we now omit the preceding word
Mete, and the subsequent Wand; and say singly a YARD.

Yar-en, Yar'n, Yarn, has been already explained (p. 357.)

To those participles noticed by me in the beginning of our conversation, and which terminated in ED, T, and EN, I have now added those which are also formed from the same verbs by a change of the characteristic letter. And I may now proceed to other verbs which, by a change of the characteristic
I or ȳ, have furnished the language with many other supposed
Nouns, which are really Participles.

DOT.—Skinner says “Muci globus vel grumus, fort. a Teut.
Dotter, ovi vitellus, i. e. Muci crassioris globus vitello ovi incrassato similis.” Johnson says—“It seems rather corrupted from Jot.”

DOT is merely the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dȳttan, occludere, obturare, To Stop up, To Shut in. It has the same meaning as Dȳtted, Ditted, occlusum. It is not "made to mark any place in a writing;" but is, what we call, a full stop. The verb To Dit, To Stop up, is used, in its participle, by Douglas:

"The riuaris DITTIT with dede corpsis wox rede
Under bodyis bullerand; for sic multitude
Of slauchter he maid, quhil Exanthus the flude Mycht fynd no way to rin unto the see." Booke 5. p. 155.

"———gemerentque repleti
Amnes, nec reperire viam atque evolvere posset
In mare se Xanthus."

LID } These words, though seemingly of such different
LOT } significations, have all but one meaning: viz.
BLOT } Covered, Hidden. And the only difference is GLADE } in their modern distinct application or different
CLOUD } subaudition.

LID and LOT were in the Anglo-Saxon written ȝlid and ȝlot; and these, by the change of the characteristic letter ȝ to i short and to o (as Writ, Wrote, Wroot, Wrat, Wrate, of ȝritan To Write)¹ are the regular past tense, and therefore past participle of ȝlidan, tegere, operire, To Cover. The Anglo-Saxon participle ȝlid, suppressing the aspirate, is the English LID, i. e. that by which any thing (vessel, box, &c.) is Covered.

The Anglo-Saxon participle ȝlob or ȝlot, suppressing the aspirate, is the English LOT, i. e. (something) Covered or Hidden.

"Playeng at the dyce standeth in LOTTE and auenture of the dyce."
Diues and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 38.

¹ [Puttenham in his Arte of English Poesie, speaking of Thomas Chaloner, says—"that other gentleman who WRATE the late Shepheardes Calender."

"And, her before, the vile Enchaunter sate,
Figuring straunge characters of his art:
With living blood he those characters WRATE."

Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 12. st. 31.]

So we say—To draw LOTS. And To put any thing to the LOT.

Indifferently with hl̥dan our ancestors used Be-hl̥dan and Le-hl̥dan, with the same meaning.

Be-hlob or Be-hlot is the regular past tense and past participle of Be-hl̥dan, tegere; which is become our English BLOT: and you cannot fail to observe that a BLOT upon any thing extends just as far as that thing is Covered, and no further.

Le-hl̥yð, Le-hl̥ð, Le-hlob, Le-hlab, is the regular past tense and past participle of Le-hl̥dan: and Le-hlab, is become the English GLADE; applied to a spot Covered or Hidden with trees or boughs.

[“ ——— the ioyous shade
Which shielded them against the boyling heat,
And with greene boughes decking a gloomy GLADE,
About the fountaine like a girloud made.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 7. st. 4.

“ At last he came unto a gloomy GLADE, Cover’d with boughes and shrubs from heavens light.”

Ibid. book 2. cant. 7. st. 3.

“ Upon our way to which we weren bent,
We chaunst to come foreby a covert GLADE.”

Ibid. book 6. cant. 2. st. 16.

“ Farre in the forrest, by a hollow GLADE
Covered with mossie shrubs, which spredding brode
Did underneath them make a gloomy shade.”—Ibid. cant. 4. st. 13.

“ Till that at length unto a woody GLADE
He came, whose covert stopt his further sight.”

Ibid. cant. 5. st. 17.

“ For noon-day’s heat are closer arbours made,
And for fresh ev’ning air the op’ner GLADE.”

Dryden’s Fall of Man, act 2. sc. 1.

“ Within that wood there was a covert GLADE.”

Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 5. st. 17.

“ Into that forest farre they thence him led,
Where was their dwelling ; in a pleasant GLADE
With mountaines rownd about environed
And mightie woodes, which did the valley shade.”—Ibid. st. 39.

"——As doth an eger hound Thrust to an hynd within some covert GLADE."

Fasric Queens, book 4. cant. 6. st. 12.

"Unto those woods he turned backe againe,
Full of sad anguish and in heavy case :
And finding there fit solitary place
For wofull wight, chose out a gloomy GLADE,
Where hardly eye mote see bright heavens face."

Ibid. cant. 7. st. 38.]

From the same participle, I suppose, is formed our English word CLOUD.¹ Gehlod, Gehloud, Gloud, Cloud. For the same reason the Latin word Nubes was formed from Nubere; which means To Cover.—"Quia cœlum Nubit, i. e. operit;" says Varro. And therefore Nupta, (i. e. Nubita, Nubta) is Femme Couverte.

In the same manner,

LOCK } in the Anglo-Saxon Loc, Beloc, are the regular BLOCK } past participles of Lýcan, Be-lýcan, obserare, claudere.

So

LAST } in the Anglo-Saxon hlærte and Be-hlærte,
BALLAST } are the past participles of hlærtan and Be-hlærtran, onernare. The French Lester is the same word, dismissing the aspirate, and changing the Anglo-Saxon infinitive termination AN for the French infinitive termination ER.

¹ "CLOUD videtur esse a κλ.υδαν, fluctus, unda; quod nubes undatim veluti fluctuant in media aeris regione: vel quod imbres nubibus fusos horridus undarum de montibus decidantium fragor et minax exæstuantium consurgentiumque torrentium facies consequi soleat."—Junius.

"CLOUD, Nubes, Minshew deflectit a Claudo; quia percludit et intercipit nobis solem. Somner a Clod et Cloddid; quia sc. est vapor concretus: sed utr. violentum est. Mer. Casaub. tamen longe violentius deducit a Gr. αχλυσ. Quid si deducerem ab A.-S. Lluc, Pannus, nobis Clout; quia, instar panni, solem obtegere videtur? Sed nihil horum satisfacit. Mallem igitur a Belg. Kladde, macula, litura; Klad-den, maculare, fœdare; et sane omnino ut maculæ seu lituræ chartarum puram, ita nubes aerem fœdant et deturpant: hoc tandem ab alt. Klot, Klotte, nobis Clod, grumus. formare fortean non abs re esset."—Skinner.

BLAZE } A BLAZE or Blase is the past tense (used as a BLAST } participle) of Blæjan, flare: By adding to Blase, the participial termination ED, we have Blased, Blas'd, BLAST.

FROST—is the past participle of Fpyjan, To Freeze. By the change of the characteristic Y, the regular past tense is fproje, which we now write Froze: adding the participial termination ED, we have Frosed, Fros'd, Frost.

[DRUM—is the past participle of Dpeman, Dpyman, “To make a joyful noise.” for so the word is used in Psalms xlv. 1; lxxxi. 1; xcv. 1, 2; &c.

TRUMP and TRUMPET—in Dutch TROMP, TROMPET Italian, TROMBA, says Menage, “Da Tuba, Truba, Trumba, TROMBA, è derivazione indubitata.”—And perhaps TRIUMPH-US.

German, TROMPE, TROMPETTE, TROMMETTE; Danish, TROMPETTE; German, DROMMETEN, or TROMPETEN, To Trumpet; Swedish, TRUMPET. In Dutch, TROM.]

NOD—is the past participle of Hnigan, caput inclinare. The past tense of Hnigan is Hnah. By adding to Hnah or Nah the participial termination ED, we have Nahed, Nah'd, Nad (A broad) or NOD.

OAK—A.-S. Æac. of Ican.

YOKE—is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Le-ican. Ican, addere, adjicere, augere, jungere, gives us the English verb To Ich, (now commonly written To Eke.)

“I speake too long, but 'tis to peize the time,
To ICH it, and to draw it out in length.”

Merchant of Venice, p. 173.

Le-ican, by the change of the characteristic I to o, gives us the past tense and past participle Leoc: which (by our accustomed substitution of Y for L) we now write YOK or YOKE.

“It is fulle good to a man whan he hath borne the YOK of our Lorde from his youthe.”—Diues and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 21.

This same participle gives the Latin JUG-um, and the Italian Giogo.

OLD } by the change of the characteristic I or Y, is the ELD } past tense and past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Ylðan, Ildan, To Remain, To Stay, To Continue, To Last, To Endure, To Delay, To Defer, morari, cunctari, tardare, differre. And this verb (though now lost to the language) was commonly used in the Anglo-Saxon with that meaning, without any denotation of long antiquity. As we now say—A week OLD, Two days OLD, But a minute OLD.

“As youth passeth, so passeth their beaute. And as they OLDE, so they fade.”—Diues and Pauper, 4th Comm. cap. 27.

“The tyme that ELDETH our auncestours
And ELDTEN kynges and emperours,
The tyme that hath all in welde
To ELDEN folke.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 121. p. 2. col. 2.

OPE	}	OPE (by the change of the characteristic γ to o) is the regular past tense of Yppan, aperire, pandere. By adding to which the participial termination EN, we have the past participle OPEN.
OPEN
GAP
GAPE
CHAP
CHAPS

A GAP and a GAPE, are the regular past tense and past participle of Ge-yppan, by the change of the characteristic γ to A.

A CHAP and CHAPS vary from the foregoing only by pronouncing CH instead of G. But the meaning and etymology are the same.

POKE	}	POKE and POCK (by the change of the characteristic γ to o) is the regular past tense and past participle of the Anglo-Saxon Pýcan, To Pyke , or To Peck .
POCK
POCKS
or
POX

“Than cometh the Pye or the rauene and PYKETH out the one eye. Than cometh the fende and PYKETH out ther ryght eye, and maketh them lese consyence anent God. After he PYKETH out theyr lyfte eye.”—Diues and Pauper, 9th Comm. cap. 7.

“Heretikes shall not thereby PIKE any matter of cauillation against us.”—Dr. Martin, Of Priestes unlauful Mariages, ch. 10. p. 145.

POCK is so applied as we use it; because where the pustules have been, the face is usually marked as if it had been picked or pecked. We therefore say pitted with the small POCKS (or POX). And the French—picoté de la petite vérole. The French Piquer and Picoter are both from the Anglo-Saxon Pýcan.

Menage says—" Picote. On appelle ainsi en Poitou la petite vérole. Ce mot se trouve dans Rabelais, 4, 52." "L'un y avoit la Picote, l'autre le tac, l'autre la vérole." "De piquer à cause que le visage en est souvent marqué."

SMOKE—is the regular past tense and past participle of Smican, fumare.

PIT } are the past tense and past participle of the verb
 POT } To Pit, i. e. To Excavate, To Sink into a hollow.

"Deip in the sorowful grisle hellis POT."—Douglas, booke 4. p. 108.

"First fayre and wele

Therof much dele

He dygged it in a POT."

Sir T. More's Workes.

TOWN } Notwithstanding their seeming difference, these TUN } three (TOWN, TUN, TEN) are but one word, with TEN } one meaning; viz. Inclosed, Encompassed, Shut in:
 and they only differ (besides their spelling) in their modern different application and subaudition. It is the past tense and therefore past participle (ton, tone, tun, tyne, tene) of the Anglo-Saxon verb Týnan, To Inclose, To Encompass, To Tyne.

F.—To Tyne!

H.—Nay, I will not warrant that use of the word in modern English. "To TYNE (Skinner says) adhuc pro Sepire in quibusdam Angliæ partibus usurpatur: si Verstegano fides sit." Whether the word be now so used, I know not, nor shall I give myself the trouble to inquire.¹ I think it probable; but it is sufficient for my purpose that this verb was commonly so used in that period of our language which we call Anglo-Saxon.

The modern subaudition, when we use the word TOWN, is restricted to—any number of houses—Inclosed together.

¹ ["The priest with holy hands was seen to TINE
 The cloven wood, and pour the ruddy wine."

Dryden's Translation of the First Book of Homer's Ilias.]

Formerly the English subaudition was more extensive, and embraced also any inclosure—any quantity of land, &c., inclosed.¹

“Sotheli thei dispisiden, and thei wenten awei, another in to his TOUN, for sothe another to his marchaundie.”

“But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his Farm, another to his merchandise.”—Matthew, ch. 22. v. 5.

“Whiche thing as thei that lesewiden hadden seyn don, thei fledden, and telden in to the citee and in TOUNES.”

“When they that fed them saw what was done, they fled, and went and told it in the city and in the Country.”—Luke, ch. 8. v. 34.

“And alle bigunnen togidre to excuse, the firste seide, I haue bought a TOUN, and I haue nede to go out and se yt.”

“And they all with one consent began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a Piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it.”—Ibid. ch. 14. v. 18.

“And he wente and cleuide to oon of the burgeys of that cuntre, and he sente him in to his TOUN that he shulde fede hoggis.”

“And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him into his Fields to feed swine.”—Ibid. ch. 15. v. 15.

“And whanne thei led den him, thei token sum man Symont of Syrenen, comynge fro the TOUN and thei puttiden to him a cross, to bere aftir Ihesu.”

“And as they led him away, they laid hold upon one Simon a Cyreanean, coming out of the Country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus.”—Ibid. ch. 23. v. 26.

A TUN (tunne) and its diminutive Tunnel tænel, tenel) is the same participle, with the same meaning; though now usually applied to an inclosure for fluids.²

¹ [Dr. Beddoes, in a letter to me (H. Tooke) Nov. 25, 1805, says—“Have you not heard, or did not you choose to mention, that in the W. of Cornwall, every cluster of trees is called a TOWN of trees—first no doubt from the inclosure, then simply as a group? To TYNE is still a provincialism. To TYNE a gap in a hedge, means at present, to fill it up.”—Extract of a letter to me from Dr. Beddoes, Nov 25, 1805.]

² [“TONNA vel TUNNA, vas, ex Germanico et Belgico TONNE; quo notatur vas vinarium, reive similis. Auctor vitæ Philiberti: ‘Rogans eum cellarium ingredi, et vas vinarium, quod TONNA dicitur, benedicere.’ Hinc diminutivum TONNELLA, vel TUNNELLA, vasculum. M. Ioannes

“Certain persons of London brake up the TUNNE in the warde of Cornhill, and tooke oute certayne persons that thither were committed by Sir Ihon Briton, then custos or gardeyn of the citie.”

Fabian, Edwarde 1. p. 142.

F.—In this derivation of TUN, I suppose you know that you have only all the etymologists of all the languages of Europe against you: for all of them use this word: and they seem to agree that it comes from the Latin Tina, and Tina from the Greek Δεινος.

H.—Do Δεινος or Tina afford us any shadow of a meaning to the word TUN? If they do not, such derivation is at least nugatory. But Tina has no connection with this doubtful Δεινος. Tina is itself from Týnan: as heaps of other Latin words, referred to by our etymologists, shall in due time be shown evidently to come from us, and not our words from them.

F.—When different languages have the same word, who shall decide which of the two is original?

H.—This circumstance—Its meaning—shall decide. The word is always sufficiently original for me in that language where its meaning, which is the cause of its application, can be found. And seeking only meaning, when I have found it, there I stop: the rest is a curiosity whose usefulness I cannot discover.

de Thwroc in chronicis Hungaricis, secundæ partis cap. xcvi. : ‘De vino expensæ sunt centum et octoginta TUNNELLÆ.’ Imo et virili genere TONELLUS dixere: forte ob diminutionem extrita consona, ut a signum, sigillum, a mamma, mamilla. Petrus Cellensis, lib. ix. Epist. v. ‘Habes vinum de vite vera expressum de torculari crucis et attractum aperto ostio lateris. Sicut enim TONELLUS foratur, ut vinum habeatur: sic latus Christi lancea militis apertum est, ut exiret aqua baptismatis, et sanguis nostræ redemptionis.’ TONNÆ vel TUNNÆ vocabulo vicium est TINA: quod legas in Actis Thyrsi et sociorum ad xxviii. Jan. ‘Tum Sylvanus jussit impleri TINAM aqua, et merso capite ligari pedes ejus sursum, et mediam partem corporis, quæ super aqua esset, flagellis cædi.’ Imo et Varro usurpat in iv. de L.L. et in l. de vita populi Romani, ut quidem utrobique in Conjectaneis corrigit Scaliger; quæ et apud Festum legit TINA; ubi vulgo, TINIA, vasa rinaria. Utcunque hoc, plane videntur TONNÆ vel TUNNÆ et TINÆ vel TINIÆ, vocabula esse cognata, et ab eadem origine profecta.”

Vossii de Vit. Serm. lib. 2. cap. 18. p. 100.}

But to proceed in our course.

However strange it may, at first mention, appear to you, TEN (in the Anglo-Saxon¹ tyñ, tin, ten) is likewise the past participle of Tynan.

You have already seen that the names of Colours have a meaning, as a cause of their denomination; and now you will find that the names of Numerals have also a meaning. So have the Winds, &c. In fact, all General terms must have a meaning, as the cause of their imposition: for there is nothing strictly arbitrary in language.

It is in the highest degree probable that all numeration was originally performed by the fingers, the actual resort of the ignorant: for the number of the fingers is still the utmost extent of numeration. The hands doubled, closed, or shut in, include and conclude all number: and might therefore well be denominated tyñ or TEN. For therein you have closed all numeration:² and if you want more, must begin again, TEN and one, TEN and two, &c. to Twain-tens: when you again recommence, Twain-tens and one, &c.

KNOLL } In the Anglo-Saxon Lnoll, Lnýll, is the past
KNELL } participle of Lnýllan, To strike a bell.

CHOICE— was formerly written CHOSE; and is the past participle of Lijan, eligere, To Chese, as it was formerly written.

¹ [TEN—þa TYN beboda.—id est—The TEN commandments.

Ioreph leofode on þam lande mæplice hund teontig geara and TIN to eacan.—Ælfric. de Veteri Testamento.

Seo oþer boc yf Exoduſ gehaten. ðe Moyses AÞRAT be þam miclum tacnum and be þam TYN ritum þe purdon þa gefremode oþer Phapao.—Ibid.]

Decem, Δεκα, has also been well derived from Δεχομαι, comprehendo—παρα το δεχεσθαι και συγκεχωρηκεναι τα γενη παντα των αριθμων.—"Sed hæc (says Vossius) allusio verius quam origination."

I do not concur with him in this censure.

[See Juvenal, Sat. 10. And Cælius Rhodiginus, lib. 23. cap. 12. et sequ.—To count on the right hand, when the number exceeds a hundred.]

“Frely paye the tythe neyther worste ne besta, but as they come to honde without CHOSE.”—Diues and Pauper, 7th Comm. cap. 13.

“————Now thou might CHESE

How thou couetist to cal me, now thou knowst al mi names.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 16. fol. 77. p. 2.

“Then sayd Pilate to the maysters of the lawe: CHESE you of the moost myghty men amonge you, and let them holde these maces.”

Nichodemus Gospell, ch. 1. (1511.)

“I haue sette byfore you lyfe and dethe, good and euyll, blessinge and curse, and therfore CHESE the lyfe.”

Diues and Pauper, 8th Comm. cap. 13.

MINT } are the past participle of Mýnegian, Mýngian,
MONEY } notare, To Mark, or To Coin. Mineyed, Minyed, Min'd, Mint: and MONEY, merely by changing the characteristic y to o.—The Latin *Moneta*¹ is the past participle of the same Anglo-Saxon verb.

THONG } are the past participle of Ðþinan, Dþinan, de-THIN } crescere, minui. THONG (in the Anglo-Saxon Ðþong, Ðþanz) was still written THIWONG, long after our language ceased to be called Anglo-Saxon.

“Forsothe a stronger than I shal come aftir me, whos I am not worth to unbynde the THIWONG of hise shoon.”—Luke, ch. 3. v. 16.

“He it is that is to comynge aftir me, whiche is maid bifore me, of whom I am not worthi that I unbynde the THIWONG of his shoo.”

Iohn, ch. 1. v. 27.

“He axed of the kynge so myche grounde as the hyde of a bull or other beste wolde compace, which the kynge to hym graunted. After whiche graunt, the sayde Hengyste to the ende to winne a large grounde, causyd the sayd bestes skyn to be cut into a small and slender THONG.”—Fabian, parte 5. ch. 83.

THIN, as well as THONG, appears to have been formerly written with a w.

“And then hee sickned more and more, and dried and DWINED away.”

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 3d part, ch. 175.

¹ Vossius tells us that MONETA is from Moneo: “quod ideo MONETA vocatur; quia nota inscripta monet nos auctoris et valoris.”

SORROW } are one word differently spelled, and in modern SORBY } English somewhat differently applied; but have SORE } all one meaning: and, by the change of the cha-[SOUR] } racteristic letter r to o, are the past participle
 SHREWD } of the Anglo-Saxon verb Syppan, Sýnepan, SUREW } Sýnepian, To Ver, To Molest, To cause mis- chief to.

This participle was written in the Anglo-Saxon ropp, roppe, roph, rophz, ropz, rape, rap. And, long after that time, in English SORWE, SOREWE, SOOR, &c. And was, and is, the general name for any malady or disease, or mischief, or suffering; any thing generally by which one is molested, vexed, grieved, or mischieved. And whoever attempts to pronounce the Anglo-Saxon participle sonw, will not wonder that it should have been so variously written.¹

"And Ihesu enuyrownede al Galilee, techynge in the synagogis of hem the gospel of the rewme, and healinge al sorewe, ether ache, and sikenesse in the peple. And his fame wente in to al Sirie, and thei offriden to him alle men hauynge yuel, takun with dyuerse sooris and tormentis."

"And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of diseases among the people. And his fame went throughout all Syria; and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments."

Matthew, ch. 4. v. 23, 24.

¹ The same change in the written signs has taken place in the modern manner of representing similar sounds.

Arwe	} are become }	Arrow
Narwe		Narrow
Sparwe		Sparrow
Hurwe		Harrow
Falwe		Fallow
Halwe		Hallow
Salwe		Sallow
Walwe		Willow
Yelwe		Yellow
Borwe		Borrow
Holwe		Hollow
Morwe		Morrow.

“ Marye Magdaleyn anoynted the blysfyl fete of our Lorde Ihesu with a precyous oynement. Judas was SOROWE therof and grutched.”

Diues and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 53.

[“ —I am SORROW for thee :

By thine owne tongue thou art condemu’d.”

Cymbeline, p. 397. col. 2

Malone ignorantly says—“ This obvious error of the press adds support to Mr. Steevens’s emendation of a passage in Much Ado about Nothing.”—(i. e. Sorry wag.)]

In the same meaning we say—a SORRY tale, a SORRY case or condition.

[“ The hearde out of their foldes were loosed quight,
And he emongst the rest crept forth in SORRY plight.”

Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 10. st. 52.

“ Here in this bottle, sayd the SORRY mayd,
I put the tears of my contrition.”—Ibid. book 6. cant. 8. st. 24.

“ Her bleeding brest and riven bowels gor’d,
Was closed up, as it had not beene SOR’D.”

Ibid. book 3. cant. 12. st. 38.]

Junius says—“ SORE, A.-S. ȝap. Forte est a σωρος, cumulus; ut proprie olim accepta sit vox de tumore in quem ingens purulentæ materiæ copia confluit ac coacervatur. Rectius tamen videri potest desumptum ex ψωρα, scabies late diffusa et alte defixa. Vel a συρειν, trahere.

Skinner thinks SORE is a contraction from the Latin SEVERUS. And the Latin etymologists give us the satisfaction of informing us, that Severus is either satis verus—or secus, hoc est, juxta verum—or semper verus—or σεβηρος, venerabilis.

[“ There also those two Pandionian maides,
Calling on Itis, Itis evermore,
Whom, wretched boy, they slew with guiltie blades ;
For whom the Thracian lamenting SORE,
Turn’d to a lapwing, fowlie them upbraydes,
And fluttering round about them still does SORE.”

Spenser : Virgil’s Gnat.]

SHREWD—the past participle of the same verb Synpan, rynepan ; not by a change of the characteristic letter, but by adding ED to the indicative. It is rynped, ryneped ; which,

I doubt not, is our modern SHREWED, or SHREWD. And rype, rypepe, is our modern SHREWE, or SHREW:¹ which I believe to be the indicative of rypepan; and to mean—one who vexes or molests.

SHREW was formerly applied indifferently to Males as well as to Females.

“The old SHREW Sir Launcelot smote me downe.”

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 2d part, ch. 133.

“Nay, not so, said Sir Tristram, for that knight seemeth a SHREW.”

Ibid. ch. 143.

“Jacob was a good man, Ezau a SHREWE.”

Diues and Pauper, 1st. Comm. cap. 20.

“Be ye subgettes for Goddes sake, not only to good lordes and well ruled, but also to SHREWES and tyrautes.”

Ibid. 4th Comm. cap. 15.

“But Vulcanus, of whom I spake,
He was a SHREWE in all his youth.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 88. p. 2. col. 2.

“As our Saviour sayd by the wicked baily, which though he played the false SHREWE for his master, prouided yet wilily somewhat for himselfe.”—Sir T. More, Confutacion of Tyndale, p. 461.

BE-SHREW thee! (Be-rypepe, the imperative of Be-rypepian) i. e. Be thou rype, rypepe, i. e. vexed—or, May'st thou be vexed, molested, mischieved, or grieved, in some manner.

[“Now much BESHREW my manners and my pride.”

Midsummer Nights Dreame, p. 180. vol. 2.]²

MORROW	}	Mer. Casaubon says—“Quis ad Græcorum verborum sonos aures habet vel tantillum imbutas, qui, cum audit solemne illud in omnium
MORN
MORNING

¹ By a similar easy corruption of y to h, Syrop becomes Shrop, Shrup, Shrub.

² [Mr. Steevens says—“This word, of which the etymology is not exactly known, implies a sinister wish, and means the same as if she had said—Now ill befall my manners, &c.” Tollet says—“See Minshew's etymology of it, which seems to be an imprecation or wish of such evil to one, as the venomous biting of the SHREW mouse.”

See also S. Johnson's nonsense.]

ore—Good morrow—non Græcos audire se putet—'γαθην ἡμεραν—dicentes ? ”

Junius says—“Ego A.-S. mæpigen olim suspicabar desumptum ex Mæn and Mæppe, amplius. Quoniam dies crastinus nihil est aliud quam spatium vitæ ulterius adhuc, eoque lucro apponendum.”

Skinner's good sense does not attempt any explanation.

If we cannot believe with Casaubon (and I think we cannot) that Good morrow is merely the Greek αγαθην ἡμεραν; or with Junius, that it means a Day MORE; you will perhaps be induced to examine the equivalent words of other languages; in hopes of receiving some assistance, hints at least, from the manner in which the equivalent words of other languages are explained by their etymologists. You may be tempted perhaps to inquire after the Greek αὔριον, the Latin Cras, or the Italian and French Dimane and Demain. But spare yourself the trouble. From the numerous labourers in those vineyards, instead of the grapes you look for, you will gather nothing but thorns.

Let us then trace backward the use of the word in our own language; and try whether we cannot find at home the meaning of this common, useful, and almost necessary word; which our ancestors surely could not have waited for, till the Greeks, or some other nation, were pleased to furnish them with it.

“Shorten my dayes thou canst with sudden sorow

And plucke nights from me; but not lend a MORROW.”

Richard 2d. fol. 27.

“They sped theym to a place or towne called Antoygnye and there lodged that nyghte, and uppon the MOROWE tooke their journey toward Normandy.”—Fabian's Chronicle, p. 253, 254.

“Right so in the MORNING, afore day, he mette with his man and his horse. And so king Arthur rode but a soft pace till it was day.”

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 1st part, ch. 21.

“Well, said Queene Gueneuer, ye may depart when ye will. So early on the MORROW, or it was day, she tooke her horse.”—Ibid. ch. 73.

“This night abide and washe your feete;

And, or the day begin,

You shall rise earely in the MORNE

And so departe againe.”—Genesis, ch. 19. fol. 37. p. 1.

“Then Abraham rose early up

In MORNE before the sunne.”—Genesis, ch. 22. fol. 45. p. 2.

“Woo be to you that thynke unproffitable thyng, and werke wycked thyng in your beddes in the MOROWE whan ye may not slepe.”

Diues and Pauper, 9th Comm. cap. 1.

“The nyght is passed, lo the MOROWE graye,

The fresshe Aurora so fayre in apparence

Her lyght Dawith, to voyde all offence

Of wynter nyghtes.”

Lyfe of our Lady, p. 7.

“Lorde, in relese of our wo

In hygh heuenes thy mercy make enclyne

And downe discendo, and let thy grace shyne

Upon us wretches in the vale of sorowe,

And Lorde, do Dawe thy holy glade MOROWE.”—Ibid. p. 120.

“And anoon in the MOREWENDE the heigeste preistis makinge counseil, &c.”—Mark, ch. 15. v. 1.

“In that nigt thei token no thyng, forsothe the MOREWN maad, Ihesu stood in the brynk.”—Iohn, ch. 21. v. 3, 4.

“Thei leiden hondis in to hem, and puttiden hem to kepyng til in to the MOREWE, sotheli it was now euen.”—Dedis, ch. 4. v. 3.

“He expownede witnessynge the kyngdom of God, fro the MOREWE til to euentide.”—Ibid. ch. 28. v. 23.

From MORROW, MORN and MORNING, we have traced the words back as far as we can go in what is called English, to Morew, Morewn, and Morewende. In the next stage backward of the same language, called Anglo-Saxon, they were written ƿepien, ƿepgen, ƿepne; or ƿapgene, ƿapne; or ƿopn, ƿopgen, ƿopn. And I believe them to be the past tense and past participle of the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon verb MEKGAN, ƿepjan, ƿippan, ƿýppan, To Dissipate, To Disperse, To Spread abroad, To Scatter.

The regular past tense of ƿýppan (by the accustomed change of y to o) is MORR; which (in order to express the latter R) might well be pronounced and written Morew, as we have seen it was; and afterwards Morowe, and MORROW. By adding the participial termination EN to the past tense, we have ƿepgen, ƿepien, ƿep'n; ƿapgen, ƿap'n; ƿopgen, ƿopn; or Morewen, Morew'n, MOR'N: according to the accustomed contraction of all other participles in our language.¹

MORROW therefore, and MORN (the former being the past tense of Ōypnan, without the participial termination EN; and the latter being the same past tense, with the addition of the participial termination EN) have both the same meaning, viz. Dissipated, Dispersed. And whenever either of those words is used by us, Clouds or Darkness are subaud. Whose *dispersion*² (or the time when they are dispersed) it expresses.

“Dileguate intorno s’eran le nubi.”—It was the MORROW or the MORN.

Darkness was antiently supposed to be something positive; and therefore in the first chapter of Genesis we are told—“þeortpu pæron ofen þære nipelnyre bpadnyre. Lōb cpæð þa. Gepceorðe leoht. and he toðælde þat leoht fram þam þeortpum. and hæc þat leoht dæg. and þa þeortpa milt. þa pær geporðen æfen and morgen an dæg.”

“Darkness was upon the face of the deep. God said, Let there be light. And God divided the light from the darkness. And God called the light, day; and the darkness he called night. The evening and the morning (Morgen) was the first day.”

Ōyppende is the regular present participle of Ōypnan; for which we had formerly Morewende. The present participial termination ende is, in modern English, always converted to ing. Hence Morewing, Morwing (and by an easy corruption) MORNING.

POND
POUND
PEN PIN
BINN

} To Pin or To Pen, is a common English verb.

¹ [So the Latin CRAS may be from Κραιζω, dissipo.]

² [“ ——— and if the night

Have gather’d aught of evil or conceal’d,

Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark!”—Milton, P. L. b. 5.

“ ———the cock, with lively din,

Scatters the rear of darkness thin.”

L’Allegro.—Ed.]

“ And made Peace porter to PINNE the gates.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 21. fol. 116. p. 1.

“ PENT up in Utica.”

Cato.

“ ———Hearke, our drummes

Are bringing forth our youth : wee'l breake our walles

Rather than they shall POUND us up : our gates

Which yet seeme shut, we haue but PIN'D with rushes,

They 'll open of themselues.”

Coriolanus, p. 5.

[“ O thou hast a sweet life, mariner, to be PIND in a few boords, and to be within an inch of a thing bottomlesse.”

Galathea, (by John Lily,) act 1. sc. 4.]

This modern English verb To Pin or To Pen is the Anglo-Saxon verb Pýndan, includere; whose past participle is POND, POUND, PENN, PIN, BIN; and the old Latin BENNA, a close carriage.

Skinner says—“POND Minsh. dictum putat quasi BOND, quoniam ibi ligata est (i. e. stagnat) aqua. Doct. Th. H. observat antiquis dictum esse PAND, q. d. patella.” He adds, “Mallem deflectere ab A.-S. Pýndan, includere: tum quia in eo pisces, tanquam in carcere, includuntur; tum quia vivarium agro vel horto includitur.” Skinner is perfectly right in his derivation; and would have expressed himself more positively than mallem, if he had been aware of that change of the characteristic letter of the verb, which runs throughout our whole language: nor would he have needed to use the vague and general word Deflectere, when he might have shown what part of the verb it was.

Lye concurs with Skinner—“POND, stagnum, idem credo habere etymon ac POUND. In hoc differunt, quod alterum bestias terrenas, alterum aquaticas includit.”

- DOTARD } I believe to be DODER'D (i. e. Befooled), the DOTTEREL } regular past participle of Dýðerian, Dýð- rian, illudere, To Delude.¹ DOTTEREL is its diminutive.

¹ [Skinner says—“To DORR, confundere, obstupefacere; a Teut. Thor, stultus, q. d. stupidum vel stultum facere. Alludit Lat. terreo et Gr. τερρω; sed proculdubio verius etymon est a nostro Dorr, A.-S. Dopa, fucus; q. d. fucum, i. e. ignavum et aculei expertem reddere. Vir rev. deflectit a verbo To Dare, q. d. minaciter provocare.”

[" And if some old DOTTERELL trees, with standing over nie them."
R. Ascham, p. 318.]

" The DOTTERELL, which we think a very dainty dish,
 Whose taking makes such sport, as man no more can wish ;
 For as you creep, or cower, or lie, or stoop, or go,
 So marking you with care the apish bird doth do,
 And acting every thing, doth never mark the net,
 Till he be in the snare, which men for him have set."

Poly-olbion, song 25.

This Dotterel-catching (except treacherously shedding the blood of his most virtuous subjects) was the favourite diversion of Charles the second.

Bow } This word (for it is but one word differently BOUGH } spelled) whether applied to the inclination of the BAY } body in reverence ; or to an engine of war ; or an BUXOM } instrument of music ; or a particular kind of knot ; or the curved part of a saddle, or of a ship ; or to the Arc-enciel ; or to bended legs ; or to the branches of trees ; or to any recess of the sea shore ; or in buildings, in barns or windows ; always means one and the same thing : viz. Bended or Curved : and is the past tense and therefore past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Bygan, flectere, incurvare. It will not at all surprize you, that this word should now appear amongst us so differently written as BOW, BOUGH and BAY ; when you consider that in the Anglo-Saxon, the past tense of Bygan was written Bogh, Bug, and Beah.

" I se it by ensample in sommer time on trees,
 There some Bowes bene leued, and some bere none."

Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 78. p. 2.

" The tabernacles were made of the fayrest braunches and BOWES that myght be founde."—Diues and Pauper, 3d Comm. cap. 4.

" It is our purpose, Crites, to correct
 And punish, with our laughter, this night's sport ;
 Which our court DORS so heartily intend."

Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, act 5. sc. 1.

" Do it, on pæne of the DOR.

Why, what is 't, say you ?

Lo, you have given yourself the DOR. But I will remonstrate to you the third DOR ; which is not, as the two former DORS, indicative ; but deliberative."—Ibid. act 5. sc. 2.]

"God badde the childern of Israell take braunches and BOWES of palme trees."—Diues and Pauper, 3d Comm. cap. 18.

"All they BOWED awaye from goddes lawe."

Ibid. 4th Comm. cap. 13.

"In tyme of tempest the BOWES of the tree bete themself togydre and all to breste and fall downe."—Ibid. cap. 27.

["As in thicke forrests heard are soft whistlings,
When through the BOWES the wind breathes calmly out."

Godfrey of Bulloigne, Translated by R. C., Esq.
1594. p. 101. cant. 3. st. 6.

"Wheroat the prince, full wrath, his strong right hand
In full avengement heaved up on hie,
And stroke the pagan with his steely brand
So sore, that to his SADDLE-BOW thereby
He BOWED low."—Faerie Queene, book 4. cant. 8. st. 43.]

"He lept out at a BAY window euen ouer the head where king Marke sate playing at the chesse."

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 2d part, ch. 58.

"They stoode talking at a BAY window of that castle."

Ibid. ch. 68.

"They led la beale Isoud where shee should stand, and behould all the iusts in a BAY window."—Ibid. ch. 154.

"Queene Gueneuer was in a BAY window waiting with her ladies, and espied an armed knight."—Ibid. 3d part, ch. 132.

"These ceremonies that partly supersticion, partly anarce, partly tyranny, hath brought into the church ar to be eschuyed, as the sayng of priuat masses, blessing of water, BOWGH bread."

Declaration of Christe. By Iohan Hoper, cap. 11.

"———Or with earth

By nature made to till, that by the yearly birth
The large-BAY'D barn doth fill."—Poly-olbion, song 3.

"Adorn'd with many harb'rous BAYS."—Ibid. song 23.

["If this law hold in Vienna ten years, ile rent the fairest in it, after three pence a BAY."¹—Measure for Measure, p. 66. col. 2.]

¹ [To which S. Johnson gives the following note :

"A BAY of building is, in many parts of England, a common term ; of which the best conception that I could ever attain, is, that it is the space between the main beams of the roof ; so that a barn crossed twice with a beam, is a barn of three BAYS."]

BUXOM, in the Anglo-Saxon Bog-jum, Boc-jum, Bu-jum; in old English Bough-some, i. e. easily Bended or Bowed to one's will, or obedient.

"Yf ther were ony UNBUXOM childe that wold not obeye to his fader and moder, &c. God badde that all the people of the cyte or of the towne sholde slee that UNBUXOM childe with stones in example of another."—Diues and Pauper, 4th Comm. cap. 2.

"I praye you all that ye be BUXUM and meke to fader and moder."
Ibid. cap. 1.

["Hee did treade downe and disgrace all the English, and set up a countenance the Irish all that hee could, whether thinking thereby to make them more tractable and BUXOME to his government."

Spenser's View of the State of Ireland
Todd's edit. 1805. p. 437.

"But they had be better come at their call;
For many han unto mischiefe fall,
And bene of ravenous wolves yrent,
All for they nould be BUXOME and Bent."

Shepherd's Calendar, September.

"So wilde a beast so tame ytaught to bee,
And BUXOME to his bands, is ioy to see."

Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

"The crew with merry shouts their anchors weigh,
Then ply their oars, and brush the BUXOM sea."

Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia.

STOCK	}	All these (viz. ȝtoc, ȝtac, ȝticce ; stoc, stok-en, stuk, stak, stik, stich) so variously written, and with such apparently different meanings, are merely the same past tense and past participle (differently spelled, pronounced, and applied,) of the Anglo-Saxon verb Stican, ȝtician, To Stick, punge figere : although our modern fashion acknowledges only STUCK as the past tense and past participle of the verb To Stick , and considers all the others as so many distinct and unconnected substantives.
STOCKS
STOCKING
STUCK
STUCCO
STAKE
STEAK
STICK
STITCH

We have in modern use (considered as words of different meaning)

STOCK—Truncus, stipes, i. e. Stuck: as Log and Post and Block, before explained.—"To stand like a stock."

STOCK—metaph. A stupid or blockish person.

STOCK—of a tree, itself Stuck in the ground, from which branches proceed.

STOCK—metaph. Stirps, family, race.

“ Ony man born of the STROKE of Adam.”

Declaracion of Christe. By Iohan Hoper, cap. 7.

STOCK—Fixed quantity or store of any thing.

STOCK—in trade: fixed sum of money, or goods, capital, fund.

STOCK—Lock; not affixed, but STUCK in.

“ The chambre dore anone was STROKE

Er thei haue ought unto hir spoke.”

Gower, lib. 7. fol. 171. p. 1. col. 2.

STOCK—of a gun; that in which the barrel is fixed, or stuck.

STOCK—Handle; that in which any tool or instrument is fixed.

STOCK—Article of dress for the neck or legs.—(See STOCK-ING.)

STOCKS—A place of punishment; in which the hands and legs are stuck or fixed.

“ There to abyde STOCKED in pryson.” Lyfe of our Lady, p. 35.

STOCKS—in which ships are stuck or fixed.

STOCKS—The public Funds; where the money of [unhappy] persons is now fixed.—[Thence never to return.]

STOCKING—for the leg: corruptly written for STOCKEN, (i. e. Stok, with the addition of the participial termination EN) because it was Stuck or made with sticking pins, (now called knitting needles.)

STUCCO—for houses, &c. A composition stuck or fixed upon walls, &c.

STAKE—in a hedge; Stak or Stuck there.

[“ Whose voice so soone as he did undertake,

Eftsoones he stood as still as any STAKE.”

Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 3. st. 39.]

STAKE—to which beasts are fastened to be baited—i. e. any thing stuck or fixed in the ground for that purpose.

STAKE—A Deposit; paid down or fixed to answer the event.

STAKE—metaph. Risque; any thing fixed or engaged to answer an event.

STEAK—a piece or portion of flesh so small as that it may be taken up and carried, stuck upon a fork, or any slender sticking instrument. Hence, I believe, the German and Dutch Stuck, Stuk, to have been transferred to mean any small piece of any thing.

STICK—(formerly written stoc) carried in the hand or otherwise; but sufficiently slender to be Stuck or thrust into the ground or other soft substance.

STICK—A thrust.

STITCH—in needle work (pronounced ch instead of ck) a thrust or push with a needle: also that which is performed by a thrust or push of a needle.

STITCH—metaph. A pain, resembling the sensation produced by being stuck or pierced by any pointed instrument.

The abovementioned are the common uses to which this participle is applied in modern discourse; but formerly (and not long since) were used

STOCK—for the leg; instead of stocken (Stocking.)

STOCK—A sword or rapier, or any weapon that might be thrust or stuck.

STOCK—A thrust or push.

STUCK—A thrust or push.

The abovementioned modern uses of this participle stand not in need of any instances or further explanation. For the obsolete use of it, a very few will be sufficient.

"Speed. Item, she can knit.

"Launce. What neede a man care for a stock with a wench, when she can knit him a stocke?"—Two Gentlemen of Verona, p. 31.

"I did thinke by the excellent constitution of thy legge, it was form'd under the starre of a galliard.

I, 'tis strong; and it does indifferent well in a dam'd colour'd stocke."—Twelfth Night, p. 257.

"Which our plain fathers erst would have accounted sin, Before the costly coach and silken stock came in."

Poly-olbion, song 16.

"To see thee fight, to see thee foigne, to see thee trauesse, to see thee heere, to see thee there, to see thee passe thy puncto, thy stock, thy reuerse, thy distance, thy montant."

Merry Wiues of Windsor, p. 47.

"I hadde a passe with him, rapier, scabberd, and all : and he giues me the STUCKE in with such a mortall motion, that it is ineuitable."

Twelve Night, p. 269.

"When in your motion you are hot and dry,
And that he calls for drinke ; Ile haue prepar'd him
A chalice for the nonce ; whereon but sipping,
If he by chance escape your venom'd STUCK,
Our purpose may hold there."

Hamlet, p. 276.

"The fere affrayit my mind astonit als, Upstert my hare, the word STAKE in my hals."

Douglas, booke 3. p. 68.

Though I have no doubt of my explanation of STUCCO ; yet, standing alone, I ought to give you Menage's account of it. He says, that the French du Stuc is from the Italian Stucco ; and Stucco—"forse dal Tedesco Stuk, che vale Frammento : essendo composto lo Stucco di frammenti di marmo.—Il S^r Ferrari da Stipare."

The Italian stocco and stoccata and the French estoc are the same participle.

F.—Before you quit this word, I wish to know what you will do with Dryden's Stitch-fall'n cheek ?

["Mistaken blessing which old age they call,
'Tis a long, nasty, darksome hospital ;
A ropy chain of rheums, a visage rough ;
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff ; [jaw ;—
A STITCH-FALN cheek, (pendentesque genas) that hangs below the
Such wrinkles, as a skilful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape, when, with a grace,
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face."

Dryden's Translat. of the Tenth Sat. of Juvenal.]

Johnson says—"that perhaps it means furrows or ridges," and that "otherwise he does not understand it."

H.—The woman who knitted his stockings could have told him, and explained the figure by her own mishap.

DRY } These words, though differently spelled, and DRONE } differently applied, are the same past tense and DRAIN } past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dryȝan, excutere, expellere, and therefore siccare.

DRY, siccus, in the Anglo-Saxon Dryȝ, is manifestly the past tense of Dryȝan, used participially.

DRONE, excussus, expulsus (subaud. BEE), is written in the Anglo-Saxon Dpan, Dpane, Dpæn. Dpaȝ (ȝ in Dpȝan being changed into a broad) is the regular past tense of Dpȝan: by adding to it the participial termination EN, we have Dpaȝen, Dpaȝ'n, Dpan (the a broad) pronounced, by us in the South, DRONE.

DRAIN is evidently the same participle differently pronounced, as Dpæn: being applied to that by which any fluid (or other thing) is excussum or expulsum.

ROGUE¹

ROCK

ROCHE

ROCHET

ROCKET

RUG

RUCK

ARRAY

RAIL

RAILS

RIG

RIGGING

RIGEL

RILLING

RAY

All these are the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Ppȝan, tegere, To Wrine, To Wrie, To cover, To cloak.

To Wrine, or To Wrie was formerly a common English verb.

¹ [ROGUE, vulgari usu prodigatissimus nebulo, trifurcifer, επιμαστιγίας, trico, scelus: in legibus nostris erro, mendicus. Sunt qui deflectunt a Fr. G. Rogue, arrogans, impudens, q. d. a bold or sturdy beggar. Doct. Th. H. declinat a Fr. G. Roder, vagari. Non incommode etiam deduci posset a rogando: quia stipem corrogat: Rogator autem pro mendico apud Martialem reperitur, lib. 4. Epigr. 30. Et Roga in Græco-Romano imperio pro donativo vel eleemosyna, præsertim ab imperatore collata, usurpata est olim apud Codinum et alios passim Orientalis imperii scriptores. Minsh. declinat ab A.-S. Roazh, malignasari, et Germ. Roggen, nebulonem agere: sed hæ voces nusquam gentium comparent. Melius a Gr. ῥακ; et Heb. Rong, malus. Potest et formari a Belg. Wræghen. A.-S. ppeȝan, accusare, deferre, prodere.]—Skinner.

Junius says—"Erro, scurra, vagus. Græcis ῥακ; est homo nihili," &c. S. Johnson, in a note to The Merry Wives of Windsor, says: "A

“The goode folke that Poule to preched
 Profred hym ofte, whan he hem teched,
 Some of her good in charite,
 But ther of ryght nothyng toke he,
 But of hys honde wolde he gette
 Clothes to WRINE hym and hys mete.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 152. p. 1. col. 1.

“I haue wel leuer, sothe to say,
 Before the people patter and pray,
 And WRYE me in my foxerye
 Under a cope of papelardye.”

Ibid. p. 2. col. 1.

“And aye of loues seruantes euery whyle
 Himselfe to WRYE, at hem he gan to smyle.”

Ibid. fol. 159. p. 1. col. 1.

“For who so lyste haue healyng of his leche
 To him byhoueth fyrst UNWRIE hys wounde.”

Ibid. fol. 161. p. 2. col. 2.

“And WRIE you in that mantel euermo.”

Troilus, boke 2. fol. 165. p. 1. col. 1.

“But O fortune, executrice of Wyperdes,
 O influences of heuens hye,
 Soth is, that under God ye ben our hierdes,
 Though to us beestes ben the causes WRIE.”

Ibid. boke 3. fol. 175. p. 2. col. 2.

“——— Up embossed hygh
 Sate Dido al in golde and perrey WRIGH.”

Dido, fol. 212. p. 2. col. 2.

“WRIE the glede, and hotter is the fyre,
 Forbyd a loue, and it is ten tymes so wode.”

Tysbe, fol. 210. p. 2. col. 1.

The disuse of this verb Wrizan, To Wrine, or To Wrie, has, I believe, caused the darkness and difficulty of all our etymologists concerning the branches of this word which are left in our language.¹ And yet, I think, this should not have ROGUE is a wanderer, or vagabond ; and, in its consequential signification, a cheat.”—Malone's Edition, vol. 1. part 2. p. 226.

In his Dictionary he says—“ROGUE, of uncertain etymology.”]

¹ [“Ford. Ile Prat her : out of my doore, you witch, you RAGGE, you baggage, you poul-cat, you runnion, out, out : Ile conjure you, Ile fortune-tell you.”

Merry Wives of Windsor, (First Folio.) p. 55. act 4. sc. 2.

See in Malone's edition the note on the same passage.]

happened to them: for the verb Þpızan is not so intirely lost to the language, but that it has still left behind it the verb To Rig, with the same meaning. Which Johnson (with his wonted sagacity) derives from Ridge, the back. Because, forsooth,—“Cloaths are proverbially said to be for the back, and victuals for the belly.”

ROGUE (according to the usual change of the characteristic i) is the past tense and therefore past participle of Þpızan, and means Covered, Cloaked; most aptly applied to the character designated by that term.

It happens to this verb, as to the others, that the change of the characteristic i was not only to o, but also to u. What we call ROGUE, Douglas therefore calls RAY (z being softened to y.)

“Thir Romanis ar bot ridlis, quod I to that RAY, Lede, lere me ane uthir lessoun, this I ne like.”

Douglas, Prol. of the 8th booke, fol. 239. p. 2.

Upon this passage, the Glossarist to Douglas says—“RAY seems to signify some name of reproach, as Rogue, Knave, or such like: Or perhaps it may be taken for a Rymer or poet-aster, and so allied to the word Ray in Chaucer exp. Songs, Roundels: Or lastly, perhaps it may denote a wild or rude fellow, from the A.-S. Reoh, asper, whence Skinner derives the old English word Ray, mentioned in some of their statutes, explained by Cowel Cloth never dyed: or from the S. Rea (for Roe) as we commonly say, as wild as a Rea. But after all I am not satisfied.”

The same word, with the same meaning, is also used in Pierce Ploughman.

“To Wy and to Wynchester I wente to the fayre,
With mani maner merchandise as mi master me hight,
Ne had the grace of Gyle igoo amongst my chaffer,
It had bene unsolde thys seuen yere, so me God helpe
Than draue I me among drapers, my donet to lerne,
To drawe the lyser a longe the lenger it semed;
Amonge the riche RAYES I rendred a lesson,
To broche them with a packnedle and plitte hem togithers,
And put hem in a presse and pynned them therin,
Til ten yardes or twelue had tolled owte xiii.”

Vis. of P. Ploughman, fol. 23. p. 2.

A ROCK (K instead of G) is the covered part of the machine which spinsters use ; I mean covered by the wool to be spun. It was formerly well written ROK, c before K being always superfluous.

"As sche that has nane uthir rent nor hyre,
Bot wyth hyr ROK and spynnyng for to thryffe,
And therwyth to sustene her empty lyffe."

Douglas, booke 8. p. 256.

["The wyfe came yet
And with her fete
She holpe to kepe him downe,
And with her ROCKE
Many a knoeke
She gaue hym on the crowne."

Sir T. More's Workes, p. 4.

"Sad Clotho held the ROCKE, the whiles the thrid
By griesly Lachesis was spun with paine."

Faerie Queene, booke 4. cant. 2. st. 48.]

ROCKET or ROCHET, part of the dress of a bishop, and formerly of women, is the diminutive of the Anglo-Saxon roc, exterior vestis (the same participle), or that with which a person is covered.

"For there nys no clothe sytteth bette
On damosel, than doth ROKETTE
A woman wel more fetyse is
In ROKETTE, than in cote ywis :
The white ROKETTE ryddeled fayre
Betokeneth that ful debonayre
And swete was she that it bere."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 125. p. 2. col. 2.

"For al so wel wol loue be sette
Under ragges as ryche ROCHETTE."

Ibid. fol. 142. p. 2. col. 2.

RUG, in the Anglo-Saxon, Rooc, indumentum, is also the same past participle of ƿrigan ; the characteristic i, as usual, being changed also to oo and u.

"Horror assumes her seat, from whose abiding flies Thick vapours, that like ruos still hang the troubled air."

Poly-dibion, song 23.

RUCK also (a very common English word, especially amongst females, though I find it not in any English collection) is the same participle as rooc, and means covered. It is commonly used when some part of silk, linen, &c. is folded over, or covers some other part, when the whole should lye smooth or even.

We may notice in passing, that the old English words To Rouk and To Ruck, are likewise formed from the past tense of ȝrigan ; and mean, not (as Junius supposes) to lye quiet or in ambush, but simply to lye covered.

“ What is mankynde more unto you yholde
Than is the shepe that ROUKETH in the folde ? ”

Knyghtes Tale, fol. 3. p. 1. col. 2.

“ Now ryse, my dere brother Troylus,
For certes it non honour is to the
To wepe, and in thy bed to ROUKEN thus.”

Troylus, boke 5. fol. 193. p. 2. col. 2.

“ Waytyng his tyme on Chaunticlere to fall,
As gladly done these homicides all,
That in a wayte lye to murdre men,
O false murdrer, RUCKYNG in thy den.”

Tale of Nonnes Priest, fol. 90. p. 1. col. 1.

We have seen RAY (the past tense of ȝrigan) used by Douglas for ROGUE. It is likewise used with the same propriety for ARRAY.

“ The thirde the kynge of nacions was
And Tidnall was his name,
These foure did marche in battel RAYE
By armes to trye the same.”

Genesis, ch. 14. fol. 25. p. 2.

“ And such as yet were left behinde
Made speede to scape awaie :
And to the mountaynes fledde for life
Forgettinge battel RAIE.”

Ibid. ch. 14. fol. 26. p. 2.

[“ Like as a ship, whom cruell tempest drives
Upon a rocke with horrible dismay,
Her shattered ribs in thousand peeces rives,
And spoyling all her geares and goodly RAY,
Does make herselfe misfortunes piteous pray.”

Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 2. st. 50.

“ I heard a voyce that called farre away,
And her awaking bad her quickly dight,
For lo! her bridegrome was in readie RAY,
To come to her ; and seeke her loves delight.”

Spenser, Ruines of Time.]

By the addition of the participial termination ED to RAY or RAIE, we have RAYED, RAIED, or RAIDE.

“What one art thou, thus in torne weed iclad?

Vertue. In price whom auncient sages had.

Why poorely RAIDE?”—(i. e. poorly RIGGED.)

Songes, &c. By the Earle of Surrey, &c. fol. 107. p. 1.

ARRAY is the same past tense, with A the usual prefix to the præterit of the Anglo-Saxon verbs; and means Covered, Dressed; and is applied by us both to the dressing of the body of an individual, and to the dressing of a body of armed men.

ARAYNE is the foresaid past tense ARAY with the addition of the participial termination EN: Arayen, Aray'n, clothed, dressed, covered.

“Eftir thame mydlit samín went ARAYNE

The uthir Troyanis and folkis Italiane.”

Douglas, booke 13. p. 470.

A woman's Night-RAIL, in the Anglo-Saxon Rægel, is the diminutive of Ræz or RAY, the past tense of Þrigan.

As ROCHET so RAIL means thinly or slenderly covered. And we have not this word from the Latin Ralla or Regilla, to which our etymologists refer us, without obtaining any meaning by their reference; but Ralla and Regilla are themselves from our northern pægel: nor is there found for them any other rational reference.

RAILS, by which any area, court-yard, or other place is thinly (i. e. not closely, but with small intervals) covered, is the same word pægel.

“Furth of the sey with this the dawing springis

As Phebus rais, fast to the yettis thringis

The chois gallandis, and huntmen thaym besyde,

With RALIS and with nettis strang and wyde,

And hunting speris stif with hedis brade.”

Douglas, booke 4. p. 104.

“———The bustuous swyne

Quhen that he is betrappit fra hys feris

Amyd the hunting RALIS and the nettys.” Ibid. booke 10. p. 344.

Of the same meaning and family is the word RILLING (for Rillen, as RAILING for RAILEN) for that with which the feet are covered.

“Thare left fute and al thare leg was bare,
Ane rouch RILLING of raw hyde and of hare
The tothir fute couerit wele and knyht.” Douglas, booke 7. p. 238.

A RIG, RIGEL, RIGIL, or RIGSIE, is a male (horse or other animal) who has escaped with a partial castration, because some portion of his testicle was covered, and so hidden from the operator's view.

RIGGING (written, I suppose, corruptly for RIGGEN, i. e. Ṗṛizzen) is that with which a ship, or anything else, is RIGGED (i. e. Ṗṛizged) or covered.

I fear I have detained you too long upon this verb Ṗṛizan. And, for our present purpose, it is not necessary to show you what I think of a ROCK in the sea;¹ or of a sky-ROCKET; or of RAIMENT, ARRAIMENT, To Rail, and To Rally; the real meaning of all which, I believe, the etymologist will find nowhere but in Ṗṛizan.

DROSS—is the past participle of AKINSA, Dneoran, dejicere, præcipitare.

HOARD } HOARD, hAnka, ḥopð, is the past par-
HERD }
HURDLE } ticiple of ḥýpðan, custodire.

HERD is the same participle; and is applied both to that which is guarded or kept, and to him by whom it is guarded or kept. We useit both for Grege and Pastor.

HURDLE, ḥýpðel, is the diminutive of the same participle ḥýpð: for (as usual with the change of the characteristic letter) the past tense of ḥýpðan was written either ḥopð, ḥýpð, or ḥepð.

¹ [“With rich treasures this gay ship freighted was
But sudden storme did so turmoyle the aire,
And tumbled up the sea, that she (alas)
Strake on a ROCK, that under water lay.”

Spenser, Visions of Petrarch.]

SKILL
SCALE
SCALD
SHALE
SHELL
SHOAL¹
SCOWL
SCULL
SHOULDER
SHILLING
SLATE
SCALA
SCAGLIA ESCHELLE
ESCAILLE
ESCHALOTTE
SCALOGNA.

At first sight, these words may seem to have nothing in common with each other; little at least in the sound, less in the meaning. Yet are they all the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Scýlan, To Divide, To Separate, To make a difference, To Discern, To Skill: and have all one common meaning.

This English verb, To Skill, though now obsolete, has not been long lost to the language; but continued in good and common use down to the reign of Charles the First.

“Shall she worke stories or poetries?

It SKILLETH not which.”—Endimion, (by John Lily,) act 3. sc. 1.

[“We shall either beg together, or hang together.

It SKILS not so we be together.”

Galathea. By John Lily, act 1. sc. 4.]

“And now we three have spoke it,

It SKILLS not greatly who impugneth our doome.”

Henry VI. part 2. p. 132.

“It’s no matter, give him what thou hast; though it lack a shilling or two, it SKILLS not.”—B. Jonson, Poetaster, act 3. sc. 4.

“I am sick, methinks, but the disease I feel

Pleaseth and punisheth: I warrant Love

Is very like this, that folks talk of so:

I SKILL not what it is.”

B. and Fletcher, Martial Maid.

“Now see the blindnes of us worldye folk, how precisely we presume to shoote our folish bolte, in those matters most in whiche we least can SKILL.”—Sir T. More, De Quatuor nouissimis, p. 73.

¹ [Quære.

“But this Molanna, were she not so SHOLE,
Were no lesse faire and beautifull then she.”

Faerie Queene, Two Cantos of Mutabilitie, cant. 6. st. 40.]

SKILL, as now commonly used, is manifestly Discernment: that faculty by which things are properly divided and separated one from another.

“ Into vii partes I haue this boke dyuyded,
So that the reder may chose where he wyll.
The fyrste conteyneth how the Brytons guyded
This lande from Brute, Moliuncius untill.
And from Moliuncius I haue sette for SKYLL
To the nynthe yere of kynge Cassibelan
The seconde parte.”

Fabian, Prologue.

“ I thought that fortitude had been a mean
’Twixt fear and rashness ; not a lust obscene
Or appetite of offending ; but a SKILL
And nice discernment between good and ill.”

B. Jonson, Underwood.

As we have in English Writ, Wrote, Wroten, Wroot, Wrat, Wrate, and Written, for the past participle of ƿritan, To Write ; so the characteristic letter i or y of the verb ƿcylan, in order to form the past tense, is changed to i short, or to a, or to e, or to o, or to oa, or to oo, or to ou, or to ow, or to u. And here again, as before in ƿcpan and ƿcitan (and in all Anglo-Saxon words) ƿc become indifferently either sh or sk.

SCALE, therefore, in all its various applications, as well as SHALE, SHELL, SHOAL or SHOLE, SCOWL, and SCULL, will be found to be merely the past participle of ƿcylan.

[“ ——— You have found,
SKALING his present bearing with his past,
That hee’s your fixedemie.” Coriolanus, p. 14. col. 1.]

“ The cormorant then comes, by his devouring kind,
Which flying o’er the fen immediately doth find
The fleet best stor’d of fish, when from his wings at full,
As though he shot himself into the thicken’d SKULL,
He under water goes, and so the SHOAL pursues.”

Poly-olbion, song 25.

[“ Let us seeke out Mydas whom we lost in the chase.
Ile warrant he hath by this started a couey of bucks,
Or roused a SCUL of phesants.”

Mydas, (by John Lily,) act 4. sc. 3.]

“Now here he fights on Galathea his horse,
 And there lacks work : anon he 's there a foote,
 And there they flye or dye, like SCALED SCULS
 Before the belching whale.”

Troilus and Cressida, (p. 103, if paged.)

On this passage of Shakespeare, Mr. Steevens (whose notes are almost always useful and judicious; as Mr. [Malone's] are as constantly insipid and ridiculous) gives us the following note :

SCULLS are great numbers of fishes swimming together. The modern editors, not being acquainted with the term, changed it into Shoals. My knowledge of this word is derived from a little book called The English Expositor, London, printed by John Legatt, 1616. Again, in the 26th Song of Drayton's Poly-olbion ;

‘ My silver-scaled SCULS about my streams do sweep.’ ”

I forbear to repeat to you the tedious nonsense of [Malone] which he has added to this note : for I think you do not wish to hear (nor, when heard, would you believe) that the Cachalot was—“ the species of whale alluded to by Shakespeare.”

“ By this is your brother saued, your honour untainted, the poore Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy SCALED.”—Measure for Measure, p. 72.

On this passage Mr. Steevens mistakingly says—“ To SCALE, as may be learn'd from a note to Coriolanus, act 1. sc. 1., most certainly means, To Disorder, To Disconcert, To put to flight. An army routed, is called by Hollinshed, an army SCALED. The word sometimes signifies To Diffuse or Disperse ; at others, as I suppose in the present instance, To put into confusion.”

“ ——— I shall tell you

A pretty tale, it may be you haue heard it,

But, since it serues my purpose, I will venture

To SCALE 'T a little more.”

Coriolanus, act 1. sc. 1.

On this passage Mr. Steevens says,

“ To SCALE is To Disperse.¹ The word is still used in the ¹ [“ May be you placed haue your hope alone

 In bandes, of which this circuit maketh shoue,

North. The sense is—Though some of you have heard the story, I will spread it wider, and diffuse it among the rest.

“A measure of wine spilt, is called—a SCALED pottle of wine—in Decker’s comedy of the Honest Whore: 1635. So, in the Historie of Clyomen, Knight of the Golden Shield, &c., a play published in 1599.

‘The hugie heapes of cares that lodged in my minde,
Are SKALED from their nestling place, and pleasure’s passage find.’

“In the North they say—SCALE the corn, i. e. Scatter it. SCALE the muck well, i. e. Spread the dung well.

“The two foregoing instances are taken from Mr. Lambe’s notes on the old metrical history of Floddon Field. Again, Holinshed, vol. 2. p. 499, speaking of the retreat of the Welchmen, during the absence of Richard 2, says—They would no longer abide, but SCALED and departed away.

“In the Glossary to Gawin Douglas’s translation of Virgil, the following account of the word is given—SKAIL, SKALE, To scatter, To spread, perhaps from the Fr. Escheveler. Ital. Scapigliare, crines passos seu sparsos habere. All from the Latin Capillus. Thus—Escheveler, Scheval, Skail—but of a more general signification.” Steevens.

To these instances from Shakespeare, and those adduced by Mr. Steevens, may be added the following:

“Ane bub of weddir followit in the taill
Thik schour of rane mydlit full of hail.
The Tyriane menye SKALIS wyde quhare,
And all the gallandis of Troy fled here and thare.”

Douglas, booke 4. p. 105.

And whom disperst you vanquisht, knit in one
Now eke assoone to ouercome you troue,
Though of your troopes that store is SCALD and gone
Through wars and want, yourselfe do see and knowe.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, translated by R. C., Esq.
p. 85. cant. 2. st. 73. -

“Ma forse hai tu riposta ogni tua speme
In queste squadre, ond’ hora cinto siedi.
Quei che sparsi vincesti, uniti insieme
Di vincer anco agevolmente credi :
Se ben son le tue schiere hor molto SCEME,
Tra le guerre, e i disagi, e tu te ’l vedi.”

Gierusalemme Liberata.]

“An old seck is aye SKAILING.” Ray's Scottish Proverbs, p. 280.

Shakespeare in King Lear, p. 288, mentions—“a SHEAL'D peascod.”

“All is not worth a couple of nut SHALIS.”

Shelton, p. 4. Edit. 1736.

“Al is but nut SHALES
That any other sayth,
He hath in him such faith.”

Ibid. p. 154.

“They may garlicke pill,
Cary sakes to the mil,
Or pescodes they may SHIL.”

Ibid. p. 145.

And Ray, in his North Country Words, p. 53, tells us—

“To SHEAL, to separate: most used of milk. To SHEAL milk, is to curdle it, to separate the parts of it.”

“Coughes and cardiacles, crampes and toth aches, Reumes and radgondes, and raynous SCALLES.”

Vision of P. Ploughman pass. 21. fol. 112. p. 2.

You laugh at the derivation from Scapigliare, Escheveler and Capillus, as introduced to account for the antient but now obsolete use of the word SCALE. How much more ridiculous would it appear, if attempted to be applied in explanation of the word SCALE in all its modern uses!

We have—SCALE—a ladder.¹ And thence

SCALE—of a besieged place.

A pair of SCALES.

A SCALE of degrees.

SCALE of a fish, or of our own diseased skin.

SCALE of a bone.

SCALL, and SCALED (or SCALD) head.

We have also—SHALE of a nut, &c.

SHELL of a fish, &c.

SHOAL, SHOLE, or SKUL of fishes.

SCULL of the head.

SCOWL of the eyes.

¹ [“Tu vuoi udir quant' è che Dio mi pose
Nell' eccelso giardino, ove costei
A così lunga SCALA ti dispose.”—Il Paradiso di Dante, cant. 26.]

SHOULDER.

And finally—SKILL,
SHILLING,
And—SLATE.

Now in every one of these, as well as in each of the instances produced of the antient use of the word SCALE; one common meaning (and only one common meaning) presents itself immediately to our notice: viz. Divided, Separated.

Let us look back upon the instances produced.

The fishes come in SHOALS, SHOLES, or SCULS¹ (which is the same participle, rc being differently pronounced as SH or SK); that is, They come in separate divisions or parts divided from the main body: and any one of these divisions, (SHOALS or SCULS) may very well again be SCALED, i. e. divided or separated by the belching whale.

The corrupt deputy was SCALED (or SHALED, if you please) by separating from him, or stripping off his covering of hypocrisy.

The tale of Menenius was “SCALED a little more;” by being divided more into particulars and degrees; told more circumstantially and at length. That I take to be Shakespeare’s meaning by the expression: and not the staling or diffusing of the tale; which, if they had heard it before, could not have been done by his repetition. For Menenius does not say that some of them had heard it before: that word some is introduced by Mr. Steevens in his note; merely to give a colour to his explanation of “diffusing it amongst the rest.”

Holinshed’s army of Welchmen “SCALED (i. e. separated) and departed.”

Clyomen’s cares were SCALED (i. e. separated) from their nestling place.

The Tyrian menyc, in Douglas, SKALIT (i. e. separated) themselves wide quhare.

An old sack (as old men best know) is always SKAILING; i. e. parting, dividing, separating, breaking.

A “raynous (i. e. roynous, from ronger, rogner, royner: whence also AROYNT) SCALL,” is a separation or discontinuity of the skin or flesh, by a gnawing, eating forward, malady : As is also a SCALL or Scaled head, called a SCALD head.

¹ [In Cornwall they say “a skool of pilchards.”—ED.]

[" Her crafty head was altogether bald,
And, as in hate of honorable eld,
Was overgrowne with scurfe and filthy SCALD."

Fuerie Queene, book 1. cant. 8. st. 47.]

But I need not, I suppose, apply this same explanation individually to each of the other words mentioned. It applies itself: unless perhaps to SCOWL, i. e. separated eyes, or eyes looking different ways; which our ancestors termed ꝛccoleage. We say only ꝛceol: i. e. SCOWL; subaud. Eyes.

"Than scripture scornid me and A SKILE loked."

Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 53. p. 1. pass. 11.

(The Germans use Schal for the same.)

In the same manner their name for the testicles, was ꝛcallan, i. e. Divided, separated.

SHOULDER, which formerly was, and should still be, written SHOULDE, is also the past participle of this verb ꝛcýlan.

"The due fashion of byrthe is this, fyrste the head cometh forward, then foloweth the necke and SHOULDES."—Byrth of Mankynde, fol. 13. p. 2. (1540.)

The Latin, Italian, and French words Scala, Scaglia, Eschelle, Echelon,¹ Escaille, &c. referred to by some of our etymologists as originals, are themselves no other than this same Northern participle. Hence also the French Eschalotte and the Italian Scalogna.

I think it probable that SHILLING (Dutch, Schelling) may be corruptly written for SHILLEN, or ꝛcýlen, an aliquot part of a pound. And I doubt not in the least that SLATE is the past participle of the same verb ꝛcýlan.

¹ Besides its modern uses, the French formerly employed the word Echelles for certain divisions of their army: and the modern very useful military position is well called Echelon: as Captain James (to whom, for his valuable publications at this time, our [besieged] country is so deeply indebted) informs us in his Military Dictionary.

"President Fauchet in his book De la Milice et des Armées, tells us, that by this word (Echelles) were meant several troops of horse: so that Echelle in antient times signified what is now called a Troop."

"Echelon, a position in military tactics, where each division follows the preceding one, like the steps of a ladder," &c.

F.—This is singular. What you mention as a bare probability, appears to me doubtless. And where you have not the least doubt, I have the most. The meaning indeed of the past participle of rcýlan would apply very well to SLATES, which are thin flakes of stone separated or SCALED from each other. But the words themselves seem too far asunder.

H.—We must bring them nearer together. What we now call SLATE, was formerly SCLAT.

“And thei not fyndinge in what parti thei shulden bere hym in, for the cumpany of peple, steigeden up on the roof: and bi the SCLATTIS thei senten him doun with the bedde in to the myddil.”—Luke, ch. 5. v. 19.

“He buylded a royall mynster of lyme and stone, and couueryd it with plates of syluer in stede of SCLATE or leade.”—Fabian, parte 5. ch. 131.

I suppose the word to have proceeded thus—SKALIT, SKLAIT, SKLATE, SLATE. And I am the more confirmed in this supposition, because our ancestors called SLATES, SKΛAGG; the Scotch (as I am told by the Glossarist of Douglas) SKELLYIS; and the Dutch call them SCHALIEN.¹

The French Chaloir, Nonchalance, the Italian Non cale,

(“E pien di fe, di zelo; ogni mortale

Gloria, imperio, tesor, mette in Non cale.”—(i. e. It skills not.)

Gierusalemme Liberata.)

and the Latin Callidus; are all from this same northern verb rcýlan. And it is not unentertaining to observe how the French, Italian, and Latin etymologists twist and turn and writhe under the words. If you have the curiosity to know, you may consult Menage's Orig. Ital. Article CALERE: and his Orig. Franc. Articles NONCHALANT and CHALOIR; and Vossius, Art. CALLIS.

SHOP	}	The past tense, and therefore past participle, of the Anglo-Saxon verb Scýppan , To Fashion , To Form , To Prepare , To Adapt .
SHAPE
SHIP

A SHOP—formatum aliquid (in contradistinction from a

¹ [Shale (Germ. schalen, to peel), slaty clay.—Roberts's Dict. of Geology.—ED.]

stall) for the purpose of containing merchandise for sale, protected from the weather.

A SHIP—formatum aliquid (in contradistinction from a Raft) for the purpose of conveying merchandise, &c. by water, protected from the water and the weather.

SHAPE requires no explanation.

“At whiche the god of loue gan loken rowe
Right for dispite, and SHOPE him to be wroken.”

Troylus, boke 1. fol. 168. p. 1. col. 2.

“———— We ben SHAPE
Somtyme lyke a man or lyke an ape.”

Freres Tale, fol. 41. p. 1. col. 1.

“He was goodly of SHAPPE and of vysage, but that was mynged wyth lechery and cruelty.”—Fabian, fol. 120. p. 2. col. 2.

“Of dyuerse SHAPPE and of dyuerse colours.”

Diues and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 28.

“Atyre to costful or to straunge in SHAP.”

Ibid. 6th Comm. cap. 13.

“The gloryous vyrgyn Mary came out of the chapell in rayment and SHAPPE lyke the knyghtes wyfe.”—Myracles of our Lady, p. 14..

SHROUD } SHROUD, in Anglo-Saxon Scrub, vestitus, SHROWDS } though now applied only to that with which the dead are clothed, is the past participle of Scruban, vestire:
and was formerly a general term for any sort of clothing whatever.¹

“In somer season whan softe was the sonn,
I shope me in to a SCHROUD, as I a schepeherde wer.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 1.

Thus Athelstane commands,

“Æþelstane cýning. eallum minum geƿerum binnon mine ƿic gecýþe. þat ic ƿille þat ge feðað ealle ƿæga an earm Engliscman (gif ge him habbað. oþþe oþerne geƿindað) fram tƿam minra feorra agýfe mon hine

¹ [“———— There is neither buske nor hay

In Mey that it n’ill shroudid bene,
And it with newè levis wrene.”

Rom. of the Rose, line 55.

“———— Than becometh the grounde so proude

That it wol have a newè shroude,
And make so queint his robe.”

Ibid. line 65.—Ed.]

elce monað ane ambpa meleþ. and an ꝛconc ꝛp opþe an ꝛam peopþe iiii peningar and 8cꝛuð ꝛoꝛ t monþa ælc ȝear."

You see here that ꝛcꝛuð, SHROUD, means any sort clothing generally.

F.—Yes. I see the meaning of SHROUD; but I see so thing besides, worth more than the meaning of any word—ȝe him habbað!—What, Doubt whether an English could be found so poor as to accept this bounty! Good G Were Englishmen ever such a people as this? Had they such kings? And had their kings such counsellors? And this the manner of providing (not out of any taxes, but ou the king's own estate) for a poor Englishman, if one could found, who would accept such provision? Was this my co try? And is this my country?¹

II.—Oh, this was many ages ago. Long before the re of Messrs. [Pitt] and [Dundas]. Long before the doct was in vogue or dreamed of, which has made so many s men great (small in every sense of the word:) I mean [traitorous doctrine of giving up our last guinea, to secur remaining sixpence; and the most precious of our rights, order to secure the miserable rest:] Like pulling out the sto of an arch (and the key-stone amongst them) to render edifice the stronger: or surrendering all our strong-holds an enemy, that the rest of the country may enjoy the grea security.

But a truce with Politics, if you please. The business this country, believe me, is settled. We have no more to g up: until some [Chancellor of the Exchequer] shall find that grand desideratum of a substitute for bread, as he already discovered a substitute for money. Till that per arrives, let us pursue the more harmless investigation into meaning of words.

The SHROWDS are any things with which the masts of ship are dressed or clothed.

¹ ["Ego illud locupletissimum mortalium genus dixerim, in c pauperem invenire non posses."—Seneca, Ep. 90. ed. 4to. Lips. p. 58

“————— Such a noyse arose,
As the SHROWDES make at sea in a stiffe tempest,
As lowd, and to as many tunes.”—Henry VIII. p. 224.

[“ With glance so swift the subtle lightning past,
As split the sail-yards.
The flaming SHROWDS so dreadful did appear.”

Dryden's Juvenal, sat. 12. By Thomas Powis.

“ Oh cozen, thou art come to set mine eye :
The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burnt,
And all the SHROWDS wherewith my life should saile
Are turned to one thred, one little haire.”¹—King John, p. 22.]

FLOUT—is the past participle of Flutan, jurgari, contendere.

“ Here stand I, ladie, dart thy skill at me ;
Bruise me with scorne, confound me with a FLOUT.”
Loues Labours Lost, p. 140.

FOUL—the past participle of Fylan, aþylan, beþylan, To File; which we now write To Defile.

[“ Where feeling one close couched by her side,
She lightly lept out of her FILED bed.”
Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 1. st. 62.]

“ For Banquo's issue have I FIL'D my mind,
For them the gracious Duncan haue I murther'd.”
Macbeth, p. 139.

“ Sirrah, I scorn my finger should be FIL'D with thee.”
B. and Fletcher, Pilgrim.

“ A scabbit sheep FILES all the flock.”—Ray's Scottish Proverbs.

SPROUT } A.-S. Sppnote, jppnaut. SPROUT is the past SPRUT } participle of Spputan, jppnytān, germinare, To Shoot out, To Cast forth. SPURT is the same word, by a customary metathesis.

¹ [On this passage Malone says,

“ Shakespeare here uses the word SHROUDS in its true sense. The SHROUDS are the great ropes, which come from each side of the mast. In modern poetry the word frequently signifies the sails of a ship.” !!

It signifies the same here : “ SHROWDS wherewith my life should saile.” He could not saile with the great ropes alone.]

TRouble—Is the past participle of Tribulan, tundere, conterere, pinsere, To Bruise, To Pound, To Vex. The Latin Tribulare is the same word; differing only by a different infinitive termination: Tribul-an, Tribul-are. As many other Latin verbs differ from the Anglo-Saxon verbs only by the different infinitive terminations an or re.

BROOK	}	All these words are merely the same past participle (differently pronounced and written) of the verb BRICAN , Brecan , bræcan , To Break .
BROACH
BRACK
BREAK
BREACH
BREECH	}	BROOK (in the Anglo-Saxon Broc) approaches most nearly to our modern past tense BROKE : and indeed this supposed noun was formerly so written.
BREECHES
BRACCA
BRACHIUM

“ And so boweth furth bi a BROKE, beeth buxome of spech
Tyll you fynden a forde, your fathers honourable,
Wade in that water and wash you wel there.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 6. fol. 29. p. 2.

“ And helde the way down by a BROKE syde.”

Cuckowe and Nyghtyngale, fol. 351. p. 1. col. 1.

“ He lept ouer a BROKE for to fight with the giaunt.”

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 3d part, ch. 79.

“ The eye that scorneth his fader, and despyseth the byrth of his moder, rauyns of the BROKES, that is to saye, fendes of helle BROKES, shall delue out and pyke out that eye.”

Diues and Pauper, 4th Comm. cap. 1.

“ With knyghtly force and violence he entred the sayde cytye (London) and slewe the fore namyd Liuius Gallus nere unto a BROKE there at that daye rynnynge, and hym threwe into the sayd BROKE. By reason wherof long after yt was called Gallus or Wallus BROKE. And at this day the strete where some tyme ranne the sayde BROKE is nowe called Walbroke.”—Fabian's Chronicle, 4th parte, ch. 65.

Doctor Th. Hickes was aware that BROOK must be in some manner derived from Bræcan: and gives this reason for it—“quia rivus exiliens terram perrumpit.” And this is very aptly described in Beaumont and Fletcher's Faithful Shepherdess.

"——— Underneath the ground,
In a long hollow the clear spring is bound,
Till on yon side where the morn's sun doth look,
The struggling water breaks out in a BROOK."

ABROACH is Abpæc, the regular past tense of bpæcan, by the customary addition of the præfix A.

"Hewe fire at the flynt four hundred wynter,
But thou haue towe to take it, with tinder or BROCHES.
All thy labour is loste."

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 18. fol. 95. p. 1.

BRACK is not far removed from our modern past tense Brake, which is still in use with us as well as Broke; and it approaches still nearer to the past tense as it was formerly written Brak.

"He biholdinge in to heuene, blesside and BRAK, and gaf looues to disciplis."—Mattheu, ch. 14. v. 19.

"Hee feutred his speare and ranne agains Sir Trian, and there either BRACKE their speares all to peecees,"

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 2d part, ch. 94.

"So he ranne to his sword, and when he saw it naked, he praised it much, and then he shooke it, and therewith he BRACKE it in the middes."—Ibid. 3d part, ch. 79.

Though BRACK (as a noun) is not much in fashion at present, it was formerly in good and common use.

"Let not a BRACK i' th' stuff, or here and there
The fading gloss, a general loss appear."

B. and Fletcher, Epilogue to Valentinian.

"You may find time out in eternity,
Deceit and violence in heavenly justice,
Life in the grave, and death among the blessed,
Ere stain or BRACK in her sweet reputation."

Ibid. A Wife for a Month.

A BREACH (bpic) or BREAK, the same word as the former, with the accustomed variation of CH for CK.

"Is it no BREAKE of duetie to withstande your king?"

Hurt of Sedition. By Sir John Cheke.

"The contrarie partie neyther could by justice, neither would by boldnesse haue enterprised the BREAKE thereof."—Ibid.

Of BREECH (the same participle) Skinner says well—
 “Verum etymon vocis BREECH commodius deduci potest ab
 A.-S. bryce, ruptio, ruptura: quia sc. in ano corpus in formen quasi dirumpi videtur.”——And BREECHES, which cover those parts where the body is Broken into two parts. Hence also assuredly the Latin Bracca; ¹ and, I believe, the Greek and Latin Βραχιων, Brachium.

¹ “BRACA (pro quo vulgo bracca, vel brachia, minus recte scribunt)
 Isidoro, lib. xix. cap. xxii. videtur dici, quod sit brevis, nempe a Græco βραχυς. Aliis placet, esse a βραχος, quod a βρῆσσω seu βρῆγνυμι, unde ab Eustathio esse dicitur διεγρώγος ἱματίον, vestis disrupta. Æoles (quos Romani maxime imitantur) literam β literæ ρ præmittunt, quando post ρ sequitur κ, τ, vel δ, ut, ἐντηρ, βρυτηρ, ἐροδον, βροδον, ἐρακος, βρακος, &c.
 Sed sane bracæ vox est a Gallis Belgis. Quippe hodieque Belgæ, sive Germani inferiores, eam broeck appellant, ut Cimbri, brog, Britanni, breache. At braca esse a Gallis clare docet Diodorus Siculus, cujus illud de Gallis, χρωνται δε αναξυρισιν, ἃς ἐκεῖνοι βρακας καλουσιν. Simi-liter Hesychius, olimque Galliæ pars ab harum usu dicta bracata. Idem confirmant versus isti apud Sueton. in Julio, cap. lxxx:

‘Gallos Cæsar in triumphum ducit: iidem in curia

Galli bracas deposuerunt, latum clavum sumserunt.’

Sed et bracarum Gallicarum liquido meminere Vopiscus in Aureliano, Lampridius in Alexandro Severo, pluresque alii. Bracatos quoque milites Gallicos appellat Ammianus, lib. xvi. Quare et bracæ vocem Gal-licam putamus: vel, si origo est Græca, vocem eam acceperint Galli a Massiliensibus, qui Græce loquebantur. Non soli autem bracis usi
 Galli; sed et Persæ, quibus eas tribuit Ovidius v. Trist. el. x. item Sarmatæ, sive Scythæ, ut ex eodem, item Mela, et Valerii v. Argon. constat.”—G. J. Vossius.

“BRACHIUM, βραχιων, απο της βραχυτητος. Festus: Brachium nos, Græci βραχιων, dicunt: quod deducitur a βραχυ, hoc est, breve; eo quod ab humeris ad manus breviora sint, quam a coxis plantæ. Sed videtur obstare Festo, quod brachium, ac βραχιων, proprie dicatur de osse, quod inter scapularum et cubiti articulos interjacet. Eoque potius brachium sic dici censeo, quia os id, quod dixi, breve sit, imprimis si conferetur cum osse femoris, cui αναλογον est. Nam ut pedibus manus, lacertus tibię, genui cubitus, sic femori brachia respondent. Ac quia de hac vocis proprietate aliquis litem movere possit, addo την ὅλην χειρα (in-telligo per χειρα totum illud ab humero usque ad extremos digitos, quo modo hac voce etiam usi Homerus et Hippocrates) dividi a Galeno in partes tres; βραχιονα, πηχιον, et ακροχειρον, quæ ipsa etiam complexus Naso, cum, l Met. ait:

‘—————Laudat digitosque manusque

Brachiaque et nudos media plus parte lacertos.’

SNOW—In the Anglo-Saxon Snap, and the same in Douglas.

“His schulderis heildit with new falliu SNAW.”

Douglas, booke 4. p. 108.

“And tharwithal attanis on enery sydis

The dartis thik and ffeand takillis glidis,

As dois the schoure of SNAW.”—Ibid. booke 11. p. 386.

It is the regular past tense and therefore past participle of Snipan, which Gower and Chaucer write To Snew.

“And as a busshe, whiche is BESNEWED,

Their berdes weren hore and white.”

Gower, lib. 1. fol. 19. p. 1. col. 2.

“The presentes euery daie bene newed,

He was with yestes all BESNEWED.”

Ibid. lib. 6. fol. 135. p. 2. col. 1.

“A better viended man was nowhere none,

Without bake meate was neuer hys house

Quare, cum tres sint brachii partes, os illud totius brachii maximum, quod est inter humerum et cubitum, proprie βραχιων, seu brachium appellabitur. Os alterum inter brachium et manum Latinis fuerit lacertus, Græcis πηχυς, quanquam hæc vox et angustius interdum sumatur. Nam cum os illud duobus constet ossibus; uno inferiori et grandiori, altero superinsidente et minori; illud quidem eodem nomine cum toto dicitur πηχυς, sive ulna; hoc vero, quia parvarum rotarum radios refert, κερκίς sive radius nominatur. Quod superest ἀγρὰ χειρ, et una voce ἀγροχειρον, ac κατ' ἐξοχην, χεῖρ, Latinis manus dicitur. Ex his igitur liquet, quid proprie brachii nomine sit intelligendum. At Celsus, lib. viii. cap. I. quemadmodum pro brachio humerum dixit, ita per brachium intelligit omne illud a scapulis dependens usque ad extremam manum. Qui similiter βραχιονος vocem usurpat Aristoteles, lib. 1. Histor. Animal. cap. xv. ubi hæc a philosopho statuuntur partes βραχιονος: ὤμος, ἀγκων, ὠλεκρανον, πηχυς, χεῖρ. Ὦμος ei est articulus brachii cum ὠμοπλατῃ, sive scapula. Ἀγκων est, quod interjacet inter dictum articulum et eum cui innitimur. Is articulus Aristoteli est ὠλεκρανον, quibusdam cubitus, aliis gibber brachii, nominatur. Πηχυς est quod inter manum et acutam gibberamque brachii partem, situm est. Χεῖρ palma et digitis constat. Quædam tamen ex hisce vocabulis aliter ab Hippocrate et aliis accipi, non ignoramus: et qui nescit, discere possit ex definitionibus medicis doctissimi Gorræi. Isidorus autem plane audiri non meretur, cum lib. xi. cap. 1. hoc pacto scribit: Brachia a fortitudine nominata: Βαρυ enim Græce grave et forte significat, in brachiis enim tori lacertorum sunt, et insigne musculorum robur existit.—G. J. Vossius.

Of fyshe and fleshe, and that so plenteouse
It SNEWED in hys house of meate and drinke."

Prologues, The Frankelays.

SNOW, is simply—that which is SNIWED or SNEWED.¹

Loss } The past participle of AnsAN, Lýran, amittere, Loose } dimittere.²

"Their arrows finely pair'd, for timber and for feather,
With birch and brazil piec'd, to fly in any weather;
And shot they with the round, the square, or forket pile,
The LOOSE gave such a twang, as might be heard a mile."

Poly-olbion, song 26.

KNEE } I believe the Gothic hnaiygan, hnei- NECK } gan, and the Anglo-Saxon þnigan (which KNUCKLE } have all the same meaning, viz. incurvare, incli- NOD } nare, To Bow, To Bend, To Incline) to be the same verb; though something differently pronounced: And I suppose KNIV, Lneop, and our English KNEE, to be the past tense of this verb.

NECK, in the Anglo-Saxon þnecc (or þnezz) may perhaps also be the past tense of þnigan.

KNUCKLE, in Anglo-Saxon Lnucl (perhaps formerly þnuzel) I suppose to be the diminutive of þnuz; which may likewise have been the regular past tense of þnigan.

I offer the foregoing to you barely as conjecture. But we know that þnah is perpetually used in the Anglo-Saxon as the past tense of þnigan: by adding to it the participial termination ED, we have þnaheb, þnah'd (Δ broad); from which, I doubt not, we have our English NOD, i. e. An inclination of the head.

¹ [In Norfolk Snew is used as the præterite; and Shew as the præterite of Show, which is also found in Shakespeare.—ED.]

² [There is no authority for rendering this word by dimittere: it should have been perdere. AnsAN answers to our Lose, but AnsGAN to our Loose or Loosen. (See above, p. 85, 91.)
Richardson makes strange confusion, by erroneously deriving Loose from liusan, and stating that loose and lose "are the same word, somewhat differently applied;" which he labours to support by a forced explanation of the latter word. See Additional Notes.—ED.]

NOTCH }
 NOCK¹ } Which vary respectively in sound only by the im-
 NOOK } material difference of CH or CK, have all one com-
 NICHE } mon meaning: and I believe them to be the past
 NICK } participle of the verb To Nick, incidere.

“All ruffe of haire, my nailes UNNOCKT, as of such seemeth best,
That wander by their wits, deformed so to be.”

Songes, &c. By the Earle of Surrey, &c. fol. 61. p. 2.

“Like the good fleacher that mended his bolte with cuttinge of the NOCKE.”—Dr. Martin, Of Priestes unlauful Mariages, ch. 13. p. 250.

“The rough Hibernian sea I proudly overlook
Amongst the scatter'd rocks, and there is not a NOOK
But from my glorious height into its depth I pry.”

Poly-olbion, song 30.

[“—— Or did his genius
Know mine the stronger dæmon, fear'd the grapple,
And looking round him, found this NOOK of fate
To skulk behind my sword.”—Dryden, Don Sebastian, act 1. sc. 1.]

The Italian and French languages have many words,
Nicchio, Nicchia, Niche, &c. of the same origin.

WROTH }
 WRATH } All these are the past tense and therefore the past WREATH } participle of Þriðan, torquere, To Writhe. The RADDLE } two former are applied to the mind; and together
 WRY } with WREATH (or WRITH), speak themselves.
 RIDDLE }

A RADDLE² hedge, is a hedge of pleached or plashed or twisted or wreathed twigs or boughs. I suppose RADDLE to be so pronounced for Þraðel, the diminutive of Þrað.

So RIDDLE metaphorically.

WRY I suppose to be so pronounced for Þrið.

¹ [“NOCKE.”—R. Ascham, p. 130.

² “With the help of these tools they were so very handy, that they came at last to build up their huts or houses very handsomely: RAD-DLING, or working it up like basket-work all the way round, which was a very extraordinary piece of ingenuity, and looked very odd.”

Robinson Crusoe, vol. 2. p. 119. edit. 1790.

DEAL	}	These are the past tense and past participle of the verb ΔΙΑΓΓΑΝ , Dælan, dividere, partiri, To Deal , To divide, To distribute.
DELL
DOLE
DOULE
DOLWE

"My wife shal haue of that I wau with truth and no more,
And DEALE among my daughters and my dear children."

Vision of P. Floughman, pass. 7. fol. 32. p. 2.

"Thylke that God geueth moste, leest good they DELETH."

Ibid. pass. 11. fol. 45. p. 2.

"If he be pore, she helpeth hym to swynke,
She kepeth his good, wasteth neuer a DELL."

Marchauntes Tale, fol. 28. p. 2. col. 2.

"I consent, and conferme euery DELL,
Your wordes all and your opinyon."

Ibid. fol. 29. p. 2. col. 2.

"Al this sentence me lyketh euery DELL."

Wife of Bathes Prol. fol. 34. p. 2. col. 2.

"I shall tell you a part now, and the other DEALE to morrow."

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 3d part ch. 75.

["He ceast, and vanisht flew to th' upper DEALE,
And purest portion of the heavenly seat."

Godfrey of Bulloigne, Translated by R. C. p. 10.]¹

"And that night a DOALE, and al they that would come had as much flesh and fish, wine and ale as they might eate and drinke, and euery man and woman had twelue pence, come who would. Thus with his owne hands DEALED he his money."

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 3d part, ch. 171.

["Clients of old were feasted ; now a poor Divided DOLE is dealt at th' outward door."

Dryden's Juvenal, sat. 1.

"And slaves, now manumiz'd, on their dead master wait :
They hoist him on the bier, and deal the DOLE."

Dryden's Third Sat. of Persius.]

¹ ["Tacque, e sparito rivolò del cielo
A le parti più eccelse, e più serene."

Gierusalemme Liberata, cant. 1.]

“We rede in holy wryte, Deut. xxvii., Cursed be he that flytteth the boundes and the DOLES or termes of his neyghbour, and putteth hym out of his ryght.”—Diues and Pauper, 10th Comm. cap. 7.

In this last passage, DOLE is applied to a Land-mark, by which the lands of different occupants are divided and apportioned.¹

“—— It was your presurmize,
That in the DOLE of blowes your son might drop.”

Henry 4, 2d. part, p. 76.

Mr. Steevens, on this passage, says—“The DOLE of blows is the distribution of blows. DOLE originally signifies the portion of Alms (consisting either of meat or money) that was given away at the door of a nobleman.”

“Now my masters, happy man be his DOLE, say I: Euery man to his business.”—Henry 4, 1st. part, p. 54.

Sir J. Hawkins says—“The portion of Alms distributed at Lambeth palace gate, is at this day called the DOLE.”

“If it be my luck, so : if not, happy man be his DOLE.”

Merry Wives of Windsor, p. 116.

In all the above passages, and wherever the word is used, DOLE is merely the Anglo-Saxon past participle dal; and has not in itself the smallest reference to Alms, or to the nobleman's gate, or to Lambeth palace; if indeed those places have any distinguished connection with Alms. But DOLE (i. e. Dal) might very well be applied to any things divided, distributed, or Dealt out: and therefore to land-marks, and to blows in a battle, &c.²

¹ [“Fon þan þe þu dælar find ge dælebe þurh hig. Aþra on earde rice þam ylðstan funa. Aþra on ruð dæle þær Chamer cýnne. and Europa on norð dæle Iapheþer ofspringe.”

Ælfric. de Veteri Testamento, p. 8.]

² [“He with their multitude was nought dismay'd,
But with stout courage turn'd upon them all,
And with his brond-iron round about him layd;
Of which he DEALT large almes.”

Faerie Queene, book 4. cant. 4. st. 32.

In the following passage from Chaucer, there is no allusion to any of these.

“ And for thou trewe to loue shalt be,
I wyl, and eke commaunde the,
That in one place thou set al hole
Thine hert, without halfin DOLE.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 131. p. 1. col. 2.

As it has happened in the interpretation of DOLE; so does it with DOWLE: and so will it usually happen, when the interpreters seek the meaning of a word (or rather endeavour to collect it) singly from the passages in which the word is found: for they usually connect, with the unknown word, the meaning of some other word or words in the sentence. A little regard to the individual etymology of the word whose meaning is sought, would secure them from this perpetually repeated error; and conduct them to the intrinsic meaning of the word.

“ ——— The elements
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud windes, or with bemockt-at stabs
Kill the still-closing waters, as diminish
One DOWLE that 's in my plumbe.” (plume.)—Tempest, p. 12.

Mr. Steevens here tells us, that—“ Bailey, in his Dictionary, says that DOWLE is a Feather; or rather the single particles of the Down.”

To which Mr. Malone adds—“ Cole, in his Latin Dictionary, 1670, interprets—young DOWLE—by Lanugo.”

But ðal, ðæl, DOLE, DOULE, DOWLE, DEAL, DELL, are all but one word differently pronounced and differently written; and mean merely a part, piece, or portion, without any designation of Feather, or Down, or Alms, or any other thing. And when the cards are Dealed or Dealt round to the company within doors; each person may as properly be said to receive

See Milton.

“ DEALING DOLE among his foes.”—Sampson Agonistes, v. 1529.
See also Translation (1598) of Orlando Innamorato,

“ Thus Ferraw, brauo-like, doth DEALE his DOLE.”] his DOLE or DOWLE (i. e. that which is Dealed out, Distributed, or Dealt to him) as the attendant beggars at the gate.

Thus Chaucer, in the Plowman's Tale, fol. 99. p. 2. col. 2.

"The gryffon grynned as he were wood,
And loked lonely as an owle,
And swore by cokes hert bloode
He wolde him tere euery DOULE."

What think you is contained in this threat of the gryffon? That he will tear off the feathers, or the small particles of Down from the pelican? Surely not. But that he would tear him, as we say, piecemeal; tear every piece of him, tear him all to pieces.

Skinner is of opinion, and reasonably, that DOLLAR also belongs to dal, portio—"quia sc. est aurei, seu ducati dimidium."

HOWL	{	The past participle of Lýllan , Gíellan , ululare , To Yell .
OWL
YELL
ROOM	{	Are the past participle of Rýman , be-rýman , dilatare , amplificare , extendere .
RIM
BRIM

ROOM means dilatatum, Extended, Place, Space, Extent.

In the second chapter of Luke, verse 7. where our modern translation has it—"There was no room for them in the inn," the old English translation says—"There was not Place to hem in the comyn stable." Non erat eis Locus in diversorio. The Anglo-Saxon—Ðiŕ næfðon þum in cumena huj. The Gothic—NI VAS IM KUMIS IN STALLA FLAMMA

["At whose first entrie thearunto he made him Master of the Requests, having then no better roome voyde."

Life of Syr Thomas More. By Mr. Roper, p. 32.

"In the yere xiiij of his gracious raigne there was a parliament holden, whereof sir Thomas More was chosen speaker. Who being very lothe to take this roome uppon him, made an oracion."—Ibid. p. 34.

"The duke of Norfolk, in audience of all the people theare assembled, shewed, that he was from the kinge himselfe streightlie charged by speciall commission, theare openlie in presence of them all to make declaracion how muche all England was beholdinge to Sir Thomas More for his good service, and how worthie he was to have the highest ROOME in the realme.”—Lyfe of Syr Thomas More. By Mr. Roper, p. 55.

“Yet nevertheles he must for his owne part needes confesse that in all things by his grace alleadged he had donne no more then was his dutie: and farther disabled himselfe to be unmeete for that ROOME.”

Ibid. p. 56.

“He made suite unto the duke of Norfolke, his singular good friend, to be a meane to the kinge that he might, with his grace’s favour, be discharged of that chardgeable ROOME of the chauncellorship, wherin, for certain infirmities of his body, he pretended himself unable anie longer to serve.”—Ibid. p. 65.

“Besides this, the manifold goodness of the king’s highnes himselfe, that hathe binne soe manie waies my singular good lord, and that hath soe deerlie loved and trusted me, even at my verie first comming into his honourable service with the dignity of his honourable Privie-Counsaile vouchsafinge to admit me, and to offices of great credit and worship most liberallie advanced me; and finally with that weightie ROOME of his grace’s high chauncellor.”—Ibid. p. 93.

“It may like your highness to cal to your gracious remembrance, that at such time as of the great weightie ROOME and office of your chauncellor (with which so farre above my merites or qualities able and mete therfore, your highnes had of your incomparable goodnes honoured and exalted me).”—Ibid. p. 107.]

RIM (of pyman) is the utmost Extent in breadth of any thing.

BRIM (of be-pyman) is also the Extent of the capacity of any vessel.

[“—— and ran at him amaine
With open mouth, that seemed to containe
A full good pecke within the utinost BRIM.”

Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 12. st. 26.

“Then by the edge he doth his mantle take,
He bowes it, plaies it, reacheth towards him
The plait, and to these farder speeches brake,
More then to fore of visage spiteful grim,
O thou that scorne of hardest brunts dost make,
I peace and warre bring in this plaited BRIM,
Thine be the choice.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, Translated by R. C., Esq.
Windet, 1594, p. 93. cant. 2. st. 89.]

“ Which from a large-BRIM'D lake
To hie her to the sea with greater haste doth make.”

Poly-olbion, song 30.

Large-BRIM'D (or be-nȳm'ð) is widely extended in breadth.

GROOM]—We apply this name to persons in various situations. There is a GROOM of the stables, a GROOM of the chambers, a GROOM of the stole, a GROOM porter, a Bride-GROOM, &c. But all of them denote attendance, observance, care, and custody; whether of horses, chambers, garments, bride, &c.

[“ The gentle lady, loose at random lefte,
The greene-wood long did walke, and wander wide,
At wilde adventure, like a forlorne wefte:
Till on a day the Satyres her espide,
Straying alone withouten GROOME or guide.
Her up they tooke, and with them home her ledd.”

Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 10. st. 36.

“ Ne wight with him for his assistance went,
But that great yron GROOME, his gard and government.”

Ibid. book 5. cant. 4. st. 3.]

“ He is about it, the doores are open:

And the surfeted GROOMES doe mock their charge

With snores.”

Macbeth, p. 136. col. 2.

GROOM therefore has always one meaning. It is applied to the person by whom something is attended. And, notwithstanding the introduction of the letter R into our modern word GROOM, (for which I cannot account,) I am persuaded that it is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Lȳman, curare, regere, custodire, cavere, attendere;¹ and that it should be written GOOM, without the R. And I think it a sufficient confirmation of my opinion, that what we now call Bride-GROOM, our ancestors called Bȳð-gum. And, at present, in the collateral languages there is no R;

The Germans calling him—Brauti-gam.

The Dutch . . . Bruide-gom.

The Danes . . . Brud-gom.

And the Swedes . . . Brud-gumme.

¹ [“ For þæra kininga zeleanfearde þe forleton heopa bȳhten and þær folcer LIMLEASTE þe ne LIMDE guber.”

Ælfric. de Veteri Testamento, p. 16.]

SWOOP } "——All my pretty ones !
 SWOP } Did you say All ? Oh Hell Kite ! All ?
 What, all my pretty chickens and their damme
 At one fell swoope ? " Macbeth, act iv.

Mr. Steevens on this passage, says—"SWOOP is the descent of a bird of prey on his quarry. It is frequently however used by Drayton in his Poly-olbion, to express the swift descent of rivers."

Drayton has used it in his Poly-olbion only three times: in his first, sixth, and twenty-eighth songs; but never as a substantive.

"Proud Tamer swoops along with such a lusty train,
 As fits so brave a flood." Song 1.

"Thus as she swoops along with all that goodly train." Song 6.

"And in her winding banks, along my bosom led,
 As she goes swooping by." Song 28.

In this use of the word by Drayton there is nothing antique, or unusual, or in the least different from the common, modern, every day's use of the word: if we except only the spelling of it. Put SWEEPS and SWEEPING instead of SWOOPS and SWOOPING, and no man would ask for an interpreter.

["Thus, as some fawning usurer does feed
 With present sums th' unwary spendthrift's need,
 You sold your kindness at a boundless rate ;
 And then o'erpaid the debt from his estate :
 Which, mould'ring piece-meal, in your hands did fall ;
 Till now at last you came to swoop it all."

Dryden's First Part of the Conquest of Granada, act 1. sc. 1.]

The Anglo-Saxon verb is Spipan, in modern English To Sweep. SWOOP and SWOP are (as we have already seen in so many other instances) its regular past participle, by the change of the characteristic i to o.

SWOOP has nothing to do with the descent of a bird; or with any descent or ascent; but it may be applied to either: for it has to do with a body in motion, either ascending, descending, or horizontal; and with a body removing all obstacles in its passage.

A SWOP between two persons, is where, by the consent of the parties, without any delay, any reckoning or counting, or other adjustment of proportion, something is Swept off at once by each of them.

SWOON—This word was formerly written, SWOUGH, SWOWE, SWOWNE, ASWOWNE, SWOND, SOWNE, and SOWND.

“That what for fere of slaunder, and dred of deth
She loste both at ones wit and breth
And in a SWOUGH she lay.”—Chaucer, Lucrece, fol. 215. p. 2. col. 2.

“I fel in suche a slomber and a SWOWE,
Nat al a slepe, ne fully wakyng,
And in that SWOWE methought I herde sing
The sorie byrde the leude cuckowe.

Cuckowe and Nyghtyngale, fol. 351. p. 1. col. 2.

“Whan she this herd, ASWOUNE down she falleth.”

Clerke of Oxenfordes Tale, fol. 51. p. 1. col. 1.

“ASWOUNE I fel, bothe deed and pale.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 128. p. 2. col. 1.

“Whan this woman sawe this sharte and redde the letter, she felle downe in SWOWNE.”—Dives and Pauper, 6th Comm. cap. 15.

“Hee tooke such a hartily sorrow at her words, that he fell downe to the floore in a SWOND. And when Sir Launcelot awaked of his SWOND hee lept out at a Bay window.”

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 3d part, ch. 8.

“Hee fell downe off his horse in a SOWNE.”—Ibid. 2d part, ch. 59.

“Hee fell ouer his horse mane in a SOWND.” Ibid. ch. 140.

SWOON, &c. is the past participle of Spigan, stupere; whose regular past tense is Swog, or Swoug, written by Chaucer Swough and Swowe: adding to which the participial termination EN, we have Swowen, Swowne; and with the customary præfix A, Aswowne.

CLOCK } The past participle of the verb To Click.
CLACK }

PUDDLE } PUDDLE was antiently written PODELL.
POOL }

“And all the contre whiche was byfore lykened to paradyse for fayrenesse and plente of the contre, tourned in to a foule styunkyng PODELL, that lasteth in to this daye, and is called the deed see.”

Dives and Pauper, 6th Comm. cap. 16.

It is the regular past tense and past participle of the verb To Piddle.

POOL is merely the contraction of Podel, Poodle, Pool.

F.—I hardly think the word Piddle to be of any long standing in the language ; as the word POOL (or Pul, as the Anglo-Saxons wrote it) certainly is. There is no antient authority, I believe, for the use of the word Piddle : and yet, to justify your derivation, it ought at least to be as antient in the language as the Anglo-Saxon Pul.

H.—I cannot produce any Anglo-Saxon or antient authority for it. Yet it cannot be of very modern introduction ; since it long ago furnished a name to one of our rivers.

“ Whilst Froom was troubled thus, where nought she hath to do,
The PIDDLE, that this while bestirr'd her nimble feet,
In falling to the POOL, her sister Froom to meet,
And having in her train two little slender rills,
Besides her proper spring, wherewith her banks she fills,
To whom since first the world this later name her lent,
(Who antiently was known to be instiled Trent)
Her small assistant brooks her second name have gain'd.”

Poly-olbion, song 2.

BEAD—The past participle of Biddan, orare, To BID, To invite, To solicit, To request, To pray.

BEAD (in the Anglo-Saxon Beade, oratio, something prayed) is so called, because one was dropped down a string every time a prayer was said, and thereby marked upon the string the number of times prayed.

[“ Silly old man, that lives in hidden cell,
Bidding his BEADES all day for his trespass.”

Fuerie Queene, book 1. cant. 1. st. 30.

“ All night she spent in bidding of her BEDES.”—Ibid. cant. 10. st. 3.]

GEWGAW } What we write GEWGAW is written, in the GAUD } Anglo-Saxon, Legar. It is the past participle of the verb Le-gifan : and means any such trifling thing as is given away or presented to any one.¹ Instead of GEWGAWES it is sometimes written GIGAWES and GEWGAUDES.

“ And of Holy Scriptures Sawes

He counteth them for GIGAWES.”—Skelton, p. 171. (Edit. 1736.)

¹ [I doubt this etymology. GAUD and GEWGAW, are rather Le-eb and Le-geah, from Eadian and Le-eadian.— H. T.]

[" Go back to what thy infancy began,
Thou who wert never meant to be a man,
Eat pap and spoonmeat : for thy GUGAWS cry."

Dryden's Third Sat. of Persius.

" Give to your boy, your Cæsar,
This rattle of a globe, to play withal,
This GU-GAU world." Dryden, All for Love, act 2. sc. 1.]

" May not Morose, with his gold,
His GEWGAUDES, and the hope she has to send him Quickly to dust, excite this ?"

B. and Fletcher, The Woman's Prize.

GAUD has the same meaning, and is the same as the foregoing word, with only the omission of the præfix GE, GI, or GEW. It is the past participle of Lġan; Gaved, Gav'd, Gaud, Gaud.

" Here is a mittayne eke, that ye may se,
He that his hande wol put in this mittayne
He shal haue multiplyeng of his grayne, &c.
By this GAUDE haue I wonne euery yere
An hundred marke sythen I was Pardonere."

Prol. of the Pardoners Tule, fol. 65. p. 2. col. 2.

" And also thynke wel, that this is no GAUDE."

Troilus, boke 2. fol. 165. p. 1. col. 1.

" Quhat God amouit him with sic ane GAUDE
In his dedis to use sic slicht and fraude."

Douglas, booke 10. p. 315.

" And stolne the impression of her fantasie,
With bracelets of thy haire, rings, GAWDES, conceits, Knackes, trifles, noseгаies, sweetmeats."

Mids. Nights Dreame, p. 145.

" ————My loue to Hermia
(Melted as is the snow)
Seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle GAUDE,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon."

Ibid. act 4. sc. 2. p. 158.

" Sweeting mine, if thou mine own wilt be,
I've many a pretty GAUD, I keep in store for thee ;
A nest of broad-fac'd owls, and goodly urchins too."

Poly-olbion, song 21.

LAUGH—Is the regular past tense and past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb hlahan, ridere; viz. hlah, which we write LAUGH. “Vox hlahan (says Skinner) licet apud Somnerum non occurrit, non dubito quin olim in usu fuerit.” Had Skinner been aware of the regular change of the characteristic letter in all the Anglo-Saxon verbs, he would have been well contented with hlahan; but certainly there remained for him the Gothic hlaħgan, though not the Anglo-Saxon hlahan.

WHARF } Are the past participles of hƿyrpan, ƿyrpan:
WARP } ambire, projicere.

WALL.—Is the past participle of ƿilan, connectere, copulare, To Join together, To Consolidate, To Cement. And its meaning is singly, consolidated, cemented, or joined firmly together. The Anglo-Saxon ƿeal is sometimes applied by them in the same manner in which alone we now use it; viz. for any materials, brick, stone, mud, clay, wood, &c. consolidated, cemented, or fastened together: but it is also sometimes used by them for the cement itself, or that by which the materials are connected.

“ƿiħ hæfðon tȳgelan fop ſtan. and tȳrpan fop ƿeallum.”

“They had brick for stone, and slime had they for Mortar.”

Genesis, ch., 11. v. 3.

Our etymologists derive WALL from the Latin Vallum:¹ and ¹ “VALLUM dicebatur—Murus e terra ad fossæ oram aggestus, crebris sudibus sive palis munitus—Itaque duæ ejus partes, agger sive terra, et pali sive sudes. De etymo sic Varro, lib. iv. de L. L.:—Vallum, vel quod ea varicare nemo possit:—vel quod singula ibi extrema bacilla furcillata habent figuram literæ v. Quæ lectio si recta est, varicare hic erit ὑπερβαίνειν sive transgredi: quomodo varicare in vett. Glossis exponitur. De etymo plane assentio. Quamvis enim, quia valli agger iactu aut aggestione terræ fieret, vallum et vallure non inepte deduci queant a Græco βαλλω; tamen cum non omnis agger sit vallum, sed tum demum id nomen adipiscatur, cum munitus est vallis sive sudibus: quin a vallus VALLUM dicatur, dubitandum minime censeo. Idem esse vallus, quod palus, sive sudis, ostendimus superius. Vallos autem aggeri imponi solere, clare docet hic Vegetii locus, lib. 3. cap. viii.:—‘Primum in unius noctis transitum, et itineris occupatione leviores, cum sublatis cespites ordinantur, et aggerem faciunt, supra quem valli, hoc est, sudes, vel tribuli lignei, per ordinem digeruntur.’—Hinc Ammianus, lib. 31.—Vallo sudibus fossaque firmato.—Quemadmodum autem vallum a vallus, ita vallus ὑποκοριστικῶς a varus, quo furcillas notari ostensum suo loco.”—Vossius.

not only the English word, but the Anglo-Saxon Peal also from the same. They seem to forget that the Latin is a mere modern language, compared with the Anglo-Saxon. The Roman beginning (even their fable) is not, comparatively, at a great distance. The beginning of the Roman language we know; and can trace its formation step by step. But the Northern origin is totally out of sight; is intirely and completely lost in its deep antiquity. Besides, in deriving WALL from Pilan, we follow the regular course of our whole language, without the least contortion; and we arrive at once at a full and perfect meaning, and a clear cause of the application of the word to the thing. But, if we refer WALL to Val-lum, what have we obtained? We must seek for the meaning of Vallum, and the cause of its application: and that we shall never find but in our own language: none of the Greek or Latin etymologists can help us to it: for Vallum itself is no other than our word Wal, with the addition of their Article UM (or the Greek ov) tacked to it.

TART (reapt, asper) is the past participle of Tynan, exacerbare, irritare, exasperare. To Tar. Tar-ed, Tar'd, Tart.

"Ye faderis nyle ye TERRE youre soncs to wraththe."

Ephesica, cap. 6. v. 4.

"Faderis nyle ye TERRE youre soncs to indignacioun."

Colocensis, cap. 3. v. 21.

"And like a dogge that is compelli'd to fight

Snatch at his master that doth TARRE him on."

King John, act 4. sc. 1. p. 14.

"Two curres shal tame each other, pride alone

Must TARRE the mastiffes on, as 'twere their bone."

Troilus and Cressida, end of act 1.

"Faith there has bene much to do on both sides: and the nation holds it no sinne, to TARRE them to controuersie."—Hamlet, p. 263.

SPAN.—For the etymology and meaning of this word, you may, if you chuse it, travel with others¹ to the German, the

¹ Vossius de Vit. Serm. lib. 2. cap. 17. "Spannum et spanna habemus in Legibus Frisonum. Tit. xxii. de Dolg. lxx. : 'Vulnus, quod longitudinem habeat quantum inter pollicem et complicati indicis ar-

French, the Italian, the Latin, or the Greek. But you may find them more readily at home: for the German Spanne, the old French Espan mentioned by Cotgrave, the Italian Spanna, and the Low Latin Spannum, together with the Dutch, the Danish, the Swedish, and the Islandic, are all, as well as the English word, merely the past tense and therefore past participle rpan, rpon, of the Anglo-Saxon verb Spman, To Spin, extendere, protrahere.

“And eik his coit of goldin thredis bricht, Quhilk his moder him SPAN.” Douglas, booke 10. p. 349.

“He will not give an inch of his will for a SPAN of his thrift.”
Ray's Scot. Prov. p. 291.

NARROW } Napp, Neapp, Neappe. The past participle
NEAR } of Nyppian, coarctare, comprimere, contrahere,
To Draw together, To Compress, To Contract.

ticulum, spannum non impleat, iv. solid. componatur. Quod integræ spannæ longitudinem habuerit, hoc est, quantum index et pollex extendi possunt, vi. solidis componatur.’ Et cap. lxvi.: ‘Quod inter pollicem et medii digiti spannum longum fuerit, xiii. solidis componatur.’ Item Fris. addit. Tit. iii. lvi.: ‘Si unius spannæ longitudinem habuerit.’ Est vero spannus et spanna, id quod spithama antiquis: estque a Germanico spanne, quod a spannen, tendere: nisi malis esse ab Italico spandere pro Latino expandere. Nam pro ex sæpe initio ponunt s.”

Menage.—“SPANNA. La lunghezza della mano aperta e distesa dalla estremità del dito mignolo a quella del grosso. Lat. palmus major. Gr. σπιθαμη. Gall. empan. Dal Tedesco spann, che vale il palmo maggiore, che è costituito di dodici dita Geometriche. Ovvero dal Latino expalmus, expanmus, expanmus, expannus, spannus; onde l’antico Francese espan. Così da impalmus, il Francese empan: da impalmare, enpanmer. La prima opinione par la vera. S’inganna il Monosini diducendo spanna da σπιθαμη. Lo seguita però il Sr. Ferrari.”

Junius.—“SPAN, Spithama, dodrans, palmus major, intervallum inter pollicem et minimum digitum diductos; estque duodenûm digitorum, sive palmorum trium. A.-S. Span, rponn. It. Spanna. G. Espan. D. Spand. B. Span. Isl. Span vel Spon. Su. Span. Fr. Span. Spanna. M. Casaubonus petita vult ex σπιθαμη, Spithama. V. eum p. 337. opusculi de Vet. Ling. Angl. Sed omnino videntur promanasse ex Teut. Spannen, tendere, extendere. Ipsum vero Spannen affine est Gr. σταν, trahere: quod attrahendo res extendantur.”

Skinner.—“Span, &c. Omnia per contractionem, et conversionem m in n, et ejus reduplicationem immediate, a Lat. et Gr. Spithama. Vel, si a Germanica origine petere inalles, a Teut. et Belg. Spannen, tendere, extendere. Martinius autem Teut. Spannen a Lat. Expandere deducit. Alludit Gr. σταν.”

["To kerke the NARRE, from God more farre,
Has bene an olde-said sawe." Shepheards Calender, July.]

SHARP—The past participle of Scýnpan, acucere.

RACK	}	A RACK of hay, and a RICK of hay, are the past participle of RICKAN , congerere, colligere, To Collect, To Draw together, To RAKE together.
RAKE
RICK
RICH
RICHES

A RAKE, the same participle; it being the tool or instrument by which the Hay is collected.

["The sonnes must bee masters, the fathers, gaffers; what we get together with a RAKE, they cast abroad with a forke."

Mother Bombie (By John Lily), act 1. sc. 3.]

RICH and RICHES are the same participle. Throughout the language the different pronunciation of CH and CK is not to be regarded. Thus, what we pronounce RICH and RICHES (tch), the French pronounce RICHE and RICHESSE (sh), and the Italians RICCO and RICHEZZA (k). But it is the same word in the three languages: and it applies equally to any things, collected, accumulated, heaped, or (as we frequently express it) RAKED together; whether to money, cattle, lands, knowledge, &c.

SALE } is the past participle of Sýlan, dare, tradere, HANDSEL } To Sell. In our modern use of the word a condition is understood. HANDSEL is something given in hand.

HARANGUE—In Italian Aringa, in French Harangue; both from our language.

This word has been exceedingly laboured by a very numerous band of etymologists; and upon no occasion have their labours been more unsuccessfully employed. S. Johnson, as might be expected, has improved upon all his predecessors: and as he is the last in order of time, so is he the first in fatuity. He says—"Perhaps it comes from Orare, or Orationare, Oraner, 'Aranger, Haranguer.'"

I will not trouble you with a repetition of the childish conjectures of others, nor with the tedious gossiping tale of Junius.

Skinner briefly mentions a conjecture of Menage; and he spells the word properly, in the old English fashion, HARANG; and not (à la Française) HARANGUE.

The word itself is merely the pure and regular past participle Hƿrang, of the Anglo-Saxon verb Hƿringan, To Sound, or To make a great sound. (As Hƿino is also used.) And M. Caseneuve alone is right in his description of the word, when he says—"HARANGUE est un discours prononcé avec CONTENTION DE VOIX."

So far has the manner of pronunciation changed with us, that, if the commencing aspirate before R was to be preserved, it was necessary to introduce an A between H and R; and instead of HRANG, to pronounce and write the word HARANG."

"By theyr aduyse the kyng Agamemnowne
For a trewse sent unto the towne
For thirty dayes, and Priamus the kinge
Without abode graunted his ARYNGE."

Lydgate, Auncient Historie, &c.

YARD } YARD, in the Anglo-Sax. Leapð, is the past
GARDEN| } tense and therefore past participle of the verb
Lȳpðan, cingere, To Gird, To Surround, To Inclose: and it is therefore applicable to any inclosed place; as Court-YARD, Church-YARD, &c.

GARDEN is the same past tense, with the addition of the participial termination EN. I say, it is the same; because the Anglo-Saxon L is pronounced indifferently either as our G or Y.

Though it is not immediately to our present purpose, you will not be displeased, if I notice here, that a Girth is that which Girdeth or Gird'th any thing: that a Garter is a Girder; that we have in Anglo-Saxon the diminutive Lȳpðel, or Girdle; and that I suppose the verb Lȳpðelan, whose present participle would be Lȳpðelanð, encircling, surrounding; and (for which we now employ ing) being the Anglo-Saxon and old English termination of the participles present: and that I doubt not that Lȳpðelanð, Lȳpðland, Lȳpland, has become our modern Garland.

The Italian Giardino and Ghirlanda,¹ and the French Jardin and Guirlande have no other origin.

STAGE	}	Certainly these words do not, at first sight, appear to have the least connection with each other. And, till the clew is furnished, you may perhaps wonder why I have thus assembled them together.
STAG
STACK
STALK

STAY	}	The verb στῖγαν , ascendere , to which we owe these words, is at present lost to the language; but has not been long lost. For it survived that period of the language which we call Anglo-Saxon; and descended in very good and frequent use to that period of the language which we now call Old English: a name hereafter perhaps to be given by our successors to the language which we talk at present.
STAIRS
STORY
STYE
STILE
STIRRUP
ETAGE

English: a name hereafter perhaps to be given by our successors to the language which we talk at present.

Instances enough may be found of the use of this verb στῖγαν, from the time of Edward the third down even to the end of the fifteenth century. And though it has itself most strangely disappeared for the last two hundred years, it has still left behind it these its surviving members.

In that old translation of the New Testament which was very much, though surreptitiously, circulated in the reign of Edward the third and afterwards, (and of which many other manuscripts remain, beside the curious one which you have given to me,) we have seen the word perpetually employed in Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, in the Epistles, in the Acts, and in the Revelations. Let us turn to a few instances.

“Anoon Ihesu constreynide the disciplis to STEIGE in to a boot.”—Mattheu, ch. 14. v. 22.

“The whiche seyden by spirit to Poul, that he shulde not STIE to Ierusalem.”—Dedis, ch. 21. v. 4.

“We preiden, and thei that weren of that place, that he shulde not STYE to Ierusalem.”—Dedis, ch. 21. v. 12.

¹ “GHIRLANDA (says Menage) è voce presa peravventura dal partefice futuro passivo del verbo ghirlare, non usato, che venga da girare, dice il Castelvetro. E cosa certissima. Da gyrus, girus, girulus, ghirlare, ghirlare, ghirlare, ghirlandus, ghirlanda.”—Cosa certissima!—Ut plane homines non, quod dicitur, λογίζα ζῶα; sed ludicra et ridenda quædam neurospasmata esse videantur.

“ But whanne thou shalt be bedun to feest, go and sitte down in the laste place, that whanne he shal come that bad thee to feest, he seie to thee, frende STEIGE heiger.”—Luke, ch. 14. v. 10.

“ The firste vois that I herde, as of a trumpe, spekyng with me, seiynge STY up hidur.”—Apocalips, ch. 4. v. 1.

“ Forsoth Ihesu took twelue disciplys, and seide to hem, lo we STIES to Ierusalem.”—Luke, ch. 18. v. 31.

“ To ech of us grace is goun up the mesure of the gyuyng of Crist, for whiche thing he seith, he STEIGYNGE in to heig, led caitifte caitif.”—Ephesyes, ch. 4. v. 7, 8.

“ Ihesu was baptisid of Iohn in Iordan, and anoon he STIYNGE up of the watir.”—Mark, ch. 1. v. 9, 10.

“ Lo we STEIGEN to Ierusalem.”—Mattheu, ch. 20. v. 18.

“ Ihesu forsothe seyng companyes STEIGIDE in to an hil.”—Mattheu, ch. 5. v. 16.

“ And the thornes STEIGEDEN up and strangliden it.”—Mark, ch. 4. v. 7.

“ And whanne it is sowun it STEIGETH in to a tree.”—Ibid. v. 32.

“ What ben ye troblid, and thoughtis STEIGEN up in to youre hertis?”—Luke, ch. 24. v. 38.

“ STIEGE up at this feest dai, but I shal not STIE up at this feest day, for my tyme is not yit fillid. Whan he had seide these thingis he dwelte in Galile. Forsothe as hise britheren STIEDEN up, thanne and he STEIEDE up at the feest dai.”—Iohn, ch. 7. v. 8, 9, 10.

“ Nyle thou touche me, for I haue not yit STIED to my fadir. Forsothe go to my britheren and seie to hem, I STIE to my fadir.”—Ibid. ch. 20. v. 17.

“ And whanne he STEIG into a litil ship, hise disciplis sieden him.”—Mattheu, ch. 8. v. 23.

But we need not turn to any more places in this little book; where the word is used at least ninety times.

The same word is constantly employed by Gower, Chaucer, Lydgate, Fabian, Sir T. More, &c. &c.

“ And up she STIGHE, and faire and welle
She drofe forth by chare and whelle
Aboue in the ayre amonge the skies.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 105. p. 1. col. 2.

“ And or Christ went out of this erthe here
And STIGHED to heuyn, he made his testament.”

Balade to K. Henry 4. fol. 349. p. 1. col. 2.

“ Beryne clepid a maryner, and bad him stv on loft,
And weyte aftir our four shippis aftir us doith dryue;
For it is but grace of God, yf they be alyue.
A maryner anoon wyth that, right as Beryn bad,
STYED into the top castell, and brought hym tydings glad.”

Merchaunts 2d Tale, Urry's Edit. p. 607.

“ ——— Joseph might se
The Angell STYE aboue the sonne beme.”

Lyfe of our Lady. By Lydgate, p. 103.

“ Then king Philip seing the boldnesse of the Flemminges, and how little they feared him, tooke counsayle of his lordes, how he might cause them to descende the hylle, for so longe as they kepe the hyl, it was icoperdous and perelous to STIE towarde them.”—Fabian's Chronicle, vol. 2. p. 265.

“ But like the hell hounde thou waxed full furious, expressyng thy malice when thou to honour STIED.”—Ibid. p. 522.

“ And so he toke Adam by the ryght hande and STYED out of hell up in to the ayre.”—Nichodemus Gospell, ch. 16.

“ The ayre is so thycke and heuy of moysture that the smoke may not STYE up.”—Dives and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 27.

“ But lord how he doth thynk hym self full wele
That may set once his hande uppon her whele.
He holdeth fast: but upwarde as he STIETH
She whippeth her whele about, and there he lyeth.”

Sir T. More's Works, (1557.)

[“ But when my muse, whose fethers, nothing flitt,
Doe yet but flagg and lowly learne to fly,
With bolder wing shall dare alofte to stv
To the last praises of this Faery Queene.”

Spenser's Verses to the Earle of Essex.

“ The beast, impatient of his smarting wound,
And of so fierce and forcible despight,
Thought with his winges to STYE above the ground,
But his late wounded wing unserviceable found.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 2. st. 25.

“ ————— And though no reason may apply
 Salve to your sore, yet love can higher STYE
 Then reasons reach.” Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 2. st. 36.

“ For he so swift and nimble was of flight,
 That from this lower tract he dar’d to STIE
 Up to the clowdes.” Spenser’s Muirpotmos, st. 6.

“ A bird all white, well feathered on each wing,
 Hereout up to the throne of gods did flie,
 And all the way most pleasant notes did sing,
 Whilst in the smoake she unto heaven did STIE.”
Spenser, Visions of Bellay.

“ That was ambition, rash desire to STY,
 And every linck thereof a step of dignity.”
Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 7. st. 46.]¹

If more were necessary to confirm the claim of stigan to a place in our language, much more might be drawn from a variety of quarters ; but I suppose the foregoing instances to be amply sufficient : and you may perhaps think them too many.

Being now in possession of this verb, let us proceed to its application. And first for STAGE.

1. We apply STAGE to any elevated place, where comedians or mountebanks, or any other performers exhibit ; and to many other scaffoldings or buildings raised for many other purposes. As,

“ At the said standarde in Chepe was ordeyned a sumptuose STAGE, in the whiche were sette dyuers personages in rych apparell.”—Fabian, vol. 2. p. 334.

2. We apply STAGE to corporeal progress. As,—At this Stage of my journey—(Observe, that travelling was formerly

¹ [On this passage, T. Warton says ;—“ The lexicographers inform us, that STY signifies to soar, to ascend. STY occurs often. This word occurs in Chaucer’s Test. of Love, p. 480. edit. Urry—‘ Ne steys to STEY one is none : ’—where it is used actively, to lift one up.”

Mr. Warton mistakes the passage ; being misled by Chaucer’s spelling. STEY is not here used actively. One is here thus written for on or upon.

Chaucer does not mean—There are no stairs to STY one ; but—there are no stairs to STY on, to ascend upon.]

termed "STEIGING;" to Jerusalem, or any other place)—At this Stage of the business.—At this Stage of my life.—As,

"And O thou young and wourshipful child, quhais age
Is to my youthede in the nerrest STAGE."

Douglas, booke 9. p. 285.

3. We apply STAGE to degrees of mental advancement in or towards any knowledge, talent, or excellence. As,

"Bot Turnus stalwart hardy hys curage,
For all this fere dymynist neuir ane STAGE."

Douglas, booke 10. p. 325.

4. And besides the above manners of applying this word STAGE, our ancestors likewise employed it where the French still continue to use it: for their word Estage, Etage, is merely our English word STAGE; though, instead of it, upon this occasion we now use STORY.

"Architriclynus, that is, prince in the hous of thre STAGIS."

Idon, ch. 2. v. 8.

"Sotheli sum yong man, Euticus bi name, sittynge on the wyndow, whanne he was dreynt with a grenous sleep, Poul disputyng long, he led bi sleep felde down fro the thridde STAGE or sopyng place."

Dedis, ch. 20. v. 9.

For STAGE, in this last passage, the modern translation puts LOFT; which (as we have already seen) is an equivalent participle.

Now I suppose that in all these applications of it, you at once perceive that ASCENT (real or metaphorical) is always conveyed by the word STAGE: which is well calculated to convey that meaning; being itself the regular past participle of stigan.

STAG is the same past participle. And the name is well applied to the animal that bears it;¹ his raised and lofty ¹ ["Cervus, or Deer, &c. The species of this genus are seven, enumerated by Linneus, &c.

"1. The Camelopardalis, or Giraffe, &c. The fore legs are not much longer than the hind legs; but the shoulders are of a vast length, which gives the disproportionate height between the fore and hind parts: &c. The latest and best description of this extraordinary quahead being the most striking circumstance at the first sight of him.¹ Thence the poet's well-chosen description :—

“ When as those fallow deer, and huge-hauncht STAGS that graz'd
Upon her shaggy heaths, the passenger amaz'd,
To see t'heir mighty herds with high-palm'd head to threat
The woods of o'ergrown oaks ; as though they meant to set
Their horns to th' others heights.” Poly-olbion, song 12.

“ E cervi con la fronte alta e superba.”

Orlando Fur. cant. 6. st. 22.

The swiftness of these animals ; the order which they are said to observe in swimming ; and the sharpness of their horns ; these three distinct properties have induced Minshew, Junius, druped is given in the 16th number of a work intituled, ‘ A Description of the uncommon Animals and Productions in the Cabinet and Menagerie of His Serene Highness the Prince of Orange, by Mr. Vosmæ, &c.’ All the accounts we have of the giraffe agree in representing its hind quarters as about $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet lower than its withers, &c. . . . The giraffe here described, which Mr. Gordon, who dissected it, says was the largest he had ever seen, was 15 feet 4 inches Rhinland measure (about 15 feet 10 inches English) from the ground to the top of its head, &c. M. Vaillant asserts that he has seen several which were at least 17 feet high : and M. Vosmæ declares, that he has been assured by some very respectable inhabitants of the Cape, that they had seen and killed giraffes which, including the horns, were 22 Rhinland feet in height, &c. &c.

“ 2. The Elk, Alces, or Moose Deer, &c. This is the bulkiest animal of the deer kind, being sometimes 17 hands high, &c. In Siberia they are of a monstrous size, particularly among the mountains, &c.

“ 3. The Elaphus or Stag, &c. : when pursued they easily clear a hedge or a pale fence of six feet high, &c.”

Encyclopædia Britannica, Edit. 1797. vol. 4. p. 300.]

¹ [A HORSE is so denominated from his obedience and tractableness. In the Anglo-Saxon hepan and heopan is To Hear and To Obey. (In the same manner Audire and Ακουειν, signify both To Hear, and To Obey.)

Deþungman means obedient : so do heþrum, and hþrume, and hþrum.

Dþrumian, hþrian, and hþrumian, and heoprumian mean To Obey. Dþrumnerre, obedience.

Dþrlice means obediently.

Deopþ and hoþþ (Anglice HORSE) is the past participle of Dþrian, To Obey.] [But see Ross in Meidenger's Wörterbuch. Outzen considers Horse and Ross as words of distinct origin.—Glossar. der Friesischen Sprache. Yet Alfred calls the Walross Dþþ-hpæl.—Ed.]

and Skinner to attempt respectively three different derivations of STAG. In which I think they fail.¹

STACK is the same past participle (pronouncing K for G). Junius supposes it to be the same word as STAKE.—"Stacar A.-Saxonibus erant stipites: atque inde fortasse cumulus fœni, aliarumque rerum, STACK dictus est: Quod perticam longam acuminatamque alte satis terra infigebant, circa quam fœnum undiquaque congestum in metam æqualiter assurgeret."

But how would this notion of the word do for a STACK of chimnies? I fear he was a worse farmer than etymologist: for I do not believe that a STACK of hay or of wood was ever so Raised by any one, in any country, at any time.

STALK, applied by us at present only to plants, I believe to be the same participle;² and perhaps it should be written STAWK (as we pronounce it) or STAK (the A, as formerly, broad): and indeed the L may have been introduced to give the broad sound to our modern A. This however is only my conjecture, being unable otherwise to account for the introduction of L into this word, whose meaning is evident. This etymology, I think, is strengthened by the antient application

¹ Junius says—"STAGG. Cervus. Fortasse est a Στεῖχω, ordine incedo. In cervis certe gregatim prodeuntibus mirum ordinem deprehendunt quibus ea res curæ. Præcipue tamen admirabilis est ordo, quem tenent maria transnatantes. Maria tranant gregatim nantes porrecto ordine (inquit Plin. N. H. viii. 32.) et capita imponentes præcedentium clunibus, vicibusque ad terga redeuntēs. Hoc maxime notatur a Cilicia Cyprum trajicientibus. Nec vident terras, sed in odorem earum natant."

Skinner says—"STAG Minsh. deflectit a Στεῖχω, curro: sed Στεῖχω nusquam curro; sed Eo ordine, et Eo exponitur.—Nescio an ab A.-S. Stican. Teut. Stechen, Stecken, pungere.—Quia sc. Cornua acuta habet quibus pungere aptus natus est."

² ["Like as the seeded field greene grasse first shoves,
Then from greene grasse into a STALKE doth spring,
And from a STALKE into an eare forth growes,
Which eare the frutefull graine doth shortly bring;
And as in season due the husband mowes
The waving lockes of those faire yeallow heares,
Which bound in sheaves, and layd in comely rowes,
Upon the naked fields in STALKES he reares."

Spenser, Ruines of Rome.]

of the word STALK to the rounds, or steps, or STAIRS of a ladder.

“He made him ladders three
To clymben by the ronges, and the STALKES
Into the tubbes hongyng by the balkes.”

Myllers Tale, fol. 14. p. 1. col. 2.

It is not impossible that the L may have been introduced here, for the sake of the rime to balkes: it certainly is a liberty often taken both by Gower and Chaucer, and by our other antient rimers.

As the verb ȝȝan was variously pronounced and variously written, STEIG, STYE, STIE; some sounding and writing the G; some changing it to Y; and some sinking it altogether; so consequently did its participles vary.

We have already noticed STAG, STAGE, STACK, STALK; in which the G hard, or the G soft, or its substitute K, is retained: and we must now observe the same past participle of ȝȝan, without either G or K; viz. STAY.

“Ane port thare is, quham the Est fludis has
In manere of ane bow maid boule or bay,
With rochis set forgane the streme full STAY
To brek the salt fame of the seyis stoure.”

Douglas, booke 3. p. 86.

“Portus ab Eoo fluctu curvatur in arcum,
Objectæ salsa spumant aspergine cautes.
Ipse latet: gemino demittunt brachia muro
TURRITI scopuli, refugitque a littore templum.”

The Glossarist of Douglas, in explanation, says—“STAY, steep: as we say, Scot.—A STAY brae, i. e. a high bank of difficult ascent: from the verb Stay, to stop or hinder; because the steepness retards those who climb it; as the L. say, iter impeditum, loca impedita.—Or, from the Belg. Stegigh, præruptus.”

I think the Glossarist wanders.—“Rochis full STAY,” are—very HIGH rocks. And a “STAY brae,” is a HIGH bank. Without any allusion to, or adsignification of, the difficulty of ascent. Nor is there any word, either in the original or in the translation, which alludes to delay or iter impeditum. Nor does it appear that they were præruptæ cautes. But these objectæ cautes are afterwards called Turriti scopuli. And the purpose of this description is barely to account for the port itself being hidden: ipse latet: for which purpose their height was important. But the Glossarist was at a loss for the meaning of the epithet STAY; and therefore he introduces difficult ascent, and præruptus; giving us our choice of two derivations; viz. either from our English verb To Stay, i. e. to delay; or from the Dutch Stegigh. But neither of these circumstances are intended here to be conveyed by the poet: and Douglas knew too well both his author and his duty, to introduce a foreign and impertinent idea, merely to suit his measure or his rhyme.—STAY means merely raised, high, lofty.

STAIR, in the Anglo-Saxon stægen, and still in the Dutch Steiger, I must not at present call a participle (whatever I may venture to do hereafter;) for fear of exciting a premature discussion. STAIR means merely an Ascender. The change from stægen to STAIR, has been in the usual course of the language. First the g gave place to the softer y, and has since been totally omitted. Chaucer wrote it STEYER; and the verb To Steig he wrote To Stey.

“Depe in thys pynyng pytte with wo I lygge ystocked, with chaynes lynked of care and tene. It is so hye from thens I lye and the comune erth, ther ne is cable in no lande maked, that myght stretch to me, to drawe me into blysse, no STEYERS to STEY is none.”

Testament of Loue, fol. 203. p. 2. col. 2.

Fabian, in the reign of Henry 7. continues to write it in the same manner.

“Then the saied 11 dead corpes were drawen downe the STEYERS without pitie.”—Chronicle, vol. 2. p. 294.

“At Bedforde this yere at the keping of a Shire daie, by the fallyng of a STEYER, wer xviii murdered and slaine.”—Ibid. p. 434.

[“Others number their yeares, their houres, their minutes, and step to age by STAIRES: thou onely hast thy yeares and times in a cluster, being olde before thou remembrest thou wast young.”

Endimion (by John Lily) act 4. sc. 3.]

STORY, which the French denominate Estage, E'TAGE,¹

¹ “Nicot dans son Dictionnaire, et Caninius dans son Canon des Dialectes, le dérivent très véritablement de στειν. Στειν, στεινα, stegagium, Etage. Ou bien: stega, Estege, Estage.” Menage.

and which (as we have seen in a foregoing instance) was formerly in England also called a STAGE, is merely—Stagery, Stayery (the A broad), Stawry or Story, i. e. A set of Stairs. As Shrubbery, Rookery, &c. a number or collection of shrubs; a number or collection of rooks, &c. The termination ERY, for this purpose, to any word, is a modern adoption of our language, and the term therefore comparatively modern: but the meaning is clear; and the derivation at least unrivalled.¹

STRY, on the eye. Skinner says well—"tumor palpebræ phlegmonodes, vel ab A.-S. Strigan, ascendere; quia sc. continuo crescit, nisi per medicamenta cohibeatur." He adds injudiciously—"vel a Gr. στρια, lapillus, propter duritiem, ut auguratur Mer. Cas."—The name of this complaint in the Anglo-Saxon is strigend or strigand, ascendens, rising up; the present participle of the verb strigan. Our ancestors therefore wanted not, and were not likely to borrow from the Greeks the name of a malady so common amongst themselves.

STRY for hogs, in the Anglo-Saxon strige, is the past participle of strigan. It denotes a Raised pen for those filthy animals, who even with that advantage can scarcely be kept in tolerable cleanliness. The Italian Stia is the same word; of which Menage was aware; though he knew not its meaning.—"E vocabol Gottico. Steyra dicono gli Suezzezi per significare stalla da porci; et Hogstie, gli Inghilesi." Which makes it the more extraordinary, that, with his good understanding, Skinner should imagine that it might be derived—"a stipando; quia sc. in eo quasi stipantur."

A STILE, in Anglo-Saxon strigel, the diminutive of Sty.

STIRRUP, in Anglo-Saxon, strig-pap. In the derivation of this word our etymologists (with the exception of Minshew) could not avoid concurrence. It is a mounting-rope; a rope by which to mount.

¹ "A STORY, contignatio, nescio an a Tent. Stewer, fulcrum; vel a nostro Store, q. d. locus ubi supellex et reliqua omnia bona asservantur; vel a Belg. Schuere, horreum, granarium; vel fort. quasi Stower vel Stowry ab A.-S. Stop, locus."—Skinner.

["The STIRRUP was called so in scorne, as it were a STAY to get up, being derived of the old English word STY, which is to get up, or mounte."

Spenser's View of the State of Ireland, edit. 1805. vol. 8. p. 391.]

The Low-Latin words Astraba and Strepa, and the Spanish Estríbo, are manifestly taken from our language by a corrupt pronunciation of $\text{ȝ} \text{t} \text{i} \text{g} \text{n} \text{a} \text{p}$ or $\text{ȝ} \text{t} \text{i} \text{p} \text{a} \text{p}$.¹

GAIN—i. e. Any thing acquired. It is the past participle of $\text{ȝ} \text{e} \text{p} \text{a} \text{n}$, of the verb $\text{L} \text{e} \text{-p} \text{i} \text{n} \text{n} \text{a} \text{n}$, acquirere. This word has been adopted from us into the French, Italian and Spanish languages : of which circumstance Menage and Juuius were aware ; Skinner not concurring.

PAIN—We need not have recourse to Pœna and $\Pi \text{o} \text{i} \text{n} \eta$. It is the past participle of our own Anglo-Saxon verb $\text{P} \text{i} \text{n} \text{a} \text{n}$, cruciare.

RAIN—In the Anglo-Saxon $\text{R} \text{æ} \text{g} \text{n}$, is the past participle of $\text{R} \text{i} \text{f} \text{n} \text{g} \text{a} \text{n}$, pluere. As the Latin Pluvia is the unsuspected past participle formed from Pluvi, the antient past tense of Pluere.

"In Helies time heauen was closed

That no raine ne RONNE."—Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 72. p. 2.

STRAIN	}	STRAIN is the past tense and therefore past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb $\text{S} \text{-} \text{ȝ} \text{p} \text{i} \text{n} \text{a} \text{n}$, gignere , procreare , acquirere .
STRIDE
YESTER-day
HESTERN-us

[" $\text{H} \text{u}$ he $\text{l} \text{e} \text{o} \text{f} \text{o} \text{d} \text{e}$ $\text{n} \text{i} \text{g} \text{a} \text{n}$ $\text{h} \text{u} \text{n} \text{d}$ $\text{ȝ} \text{e} \text{a} \text{p} \text{a}$ $\text{o} \text{n}$ $\text{þ} \text{æ} \text{p} \text{e}$ $\text{f} \text{o} \text{p} \text{m} \text{a} \text{n}$ $\text{ȝ} \text{l} \text{d} \text{e}$ $\text{þ} \text{i} \text{ȝ} \text{r} \text{e} \text{p} \text{e}$ $\text{p} \text{o} \text{p} \text{u} \text{l} \text{d} \text{e}$, and $\text{b} \text{e} \text{a} \text{p} \text{n}$ $\text{L} \text{E} \text{S} \text{T} \text{R} \text{I} \text{N} \text{D} \text{E}$ $\text{b} \text{e}$ $\text{h} \text{i} \text{ȝ}$

¹ "Etiam inter illa, ubi non solum forma exterior, sed res ipsa veteribus fuit incognita, reponi debet instrumentum illud ferreum ab equilateralibus utrimque dependens, cui innituntur atque insistent equitantium pedes. Ea enim veteribus fuisse incognita, recte jam ante duo secula monitum Johanni Tortellio Aretino. Novo igitur huic invento novum quærendum nomen fuit.

"STREPA dicitur ferreum illud instrumentum cui insistent pedes equitantium. A Strepa est Hispanicum Estríbo : E , more ejus gentis et Gallicæ, præmisso. Ac inde etiam Astraba."

Vossius de Vit. Serm. lib. 1. cap. 7. and lib. 2, cap. 17.

gebebban Euan."—Ælfric. de Veteri Testamento, in L'Iale's Saxon Monuments, p. 5.

"Ac Adam geSTRINDE æfter Abeles þlege oðerne runu."—Ibid. p. 6.

"Of þam STRENLE com þæt þ cucu be lap."—Ibid.

"Nu þeƷð uƷ Ʒeo boc be NoeƷ oƷƷƷunƷe þæt hƷ Ʒuna geSTRINDON tƷa anb hund ƷeoƷontƷ Ʒuna."—Ibid. p. 7.

"IƷaac þa geSTRYNDE EƷau anb Iacob."—Ibid. p. 9.]

"I hate the whole STRAIN."

B. and Fletcher, Maid's Tragedy, act 4.

"Does this become our STRAIN."

Ibid. act 5.

"As William by descent come of the conqueror's STRAIN."

Poly-olbion, song 24.

"Thus farre can I praise him ; hee is of a noble STRAIN, of approved valour, and confirm'd honesty."—Much Ado about Nothing, p. 107.

["The STRAINE of maus bred out into baboon and monkey."

Timon of Athens, p. 82. col. 2.]

Chaucer uses the same word in the same meaning, writing it STREEN and STRENE.

"For Gode it wote, that children ofte been Unlyke her worthy elders, hem before :
Bounte cometh all of God, and not of the STREEN
Of which they ben engendred and ibore."

Clarke of Oxenfordes Tale, fol. 46. p. 1. col. 1.

"For bycause al is corruptable,
And sayle shulde successyon,
Ne were their generacioun
Our sectes STRENE for to saue
Whan father or mother arno in graue."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 143. p. 1. col. 2.

["And them amongst, her glorie to commend,
Sate goodly Temperance in garments clene,
And sacred Reverence yborne of heavenly STRENE."

Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 9. st. 32.

"For that same beast was bred of hellish STRENE,
And long in darksome Stygian den upbrought."

Ibid. book 6. cant. 6. st. 9.]

Douglas, instead of the past tense as a participle, uses the past participle with the participial termination ED; STRYNED, STRYN'D, STRYND.

"My fader than reuoluing in his mynd
The discent of fore faderis of our STRYND."

Douglas, books 3. p. 70.

"My son Pallas, this young lusty syre
Exhort I wald to tak the stere on hand,
Ne war that of the blude of this ilk land
Admyxt standis he, takand sum STRYND
Apoun his moderis syde, of Sabyne kynd."

Douglas, books 8. p. 260.

"But an an hýpa hýlc beapn . hæbbe. þonne is me leofast þæt hit gange on þæt STRYNED ou þa þæpneb healpe."—Alfred's Will.

There is nothing extraordinary in this use of the participle STRAIN or STRYND as a substantive. The past participle GET, i. e. Begotten, is used in the same manner.

"And I thy blude, thy GET, and dochter schene."

Douglas, books 10. p. 313.

"Quhare that his doughter, amang buskis ronk,
In derue stadis and mony sloggy slonk,
Wyth milk he nurist of the beistis wilde,
And wyth the pappys fosterit he hys chyld :
Of sauage kynd stude meris in that forest,
Oft tymes he thare breistis mylkit and prest
Within the tendir lippis of his GET."—Ibid. books 11. p. 384.

And though we do not at present use GET as a past participle, for Begotten; it was so used formerly.

"For of all creatures that euer were GET and borne
This wote ye wel, a woman was the best."

— Chaucer, Praise of Women, fol. 292. p. 1. col. 1.

What is commonly called a Cock's STRIDE is corruptly so pronounced, instead of a cock's STRYND.

Skinner says well—"A cock's STRIDE, vel, ut melius in agro Linc. efferunt, a cock's STRINE: ab A.-S. Strimb."

Yester-day, Yester-night, Yester-even: and Dryden, with great propriety, says also "Yester-sun."

["To love an enemy, the only one
 Remaining too, whom YESTER-sun beheld
 Must'ring her charms, and rolling, as she pas.
 By every squadron, her alluring eyes ;
 To edge her champions' swords, and urge my ruin."

Don Sebastian, act 2. sc. 1.]

YESTER-day is in the Anglo-Saxon Geſtran dæg. Geſtran is the past tense and past participle of Ge-ſtranan, To Acquire, To Get, To Obtain. But a day is not gotten or obtained, till it is passed: therefore geſtran dæg is equivalent to the passed day. Geſtran, Yestran, Yestern,¹ Yester.

The Latin Etymologists and Menage, with whom Junius and Skinner concur, would persuade us that HESTERN-us is derived from χθες or χθες*. And some of them from Hæreo—"nempe quia dies hesternus hæret hodierno." But this reason would suit as well the subsequent as the preceding day: and therefore the term, leaving no distinction between them, would not be qualified for the office assigned to it. The Latin HESTERN-us is also of our Northern origin: Ghestern, Hestern.

BRUISE—according to the constant practice of the language, by the change of the characteristic letter, is the past tense and past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Bryſan, conterere; according to our antient English, To Brise, [French, Briser.]

"Then they rashed together as it had beene thunder, and Sir Hemisson BRISED his speare upon Sir Tristram."

Historie of Prince Arthur, 2d part, ch. 83.

"Whan a tree is newly sette men water it, and sette stakes and poles about to strength it ayenst the wyndes blastes and for stormes, it sholde ellys BRYSE it or breke it and felle it adowne."

Diues and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 61.

"The asse sawe the angell and fledde asyde for drede of the angels swerde, and bare Balaam ayenst the walle, and BROSKED his fote."

Ibid. 5th Comm. cap. 15.

BRUIT—means (something) spread abroad, divulged, di-

¹ In German, Gestern: in Dutch, Gisteren. [Wachter says, "Gothis gistradugis est cras, Matth. vi. 30: quod miratur Junius."—Ed.]

spersed.¹ It is the past tense and past participle, formed in the accustomed manner, of the Anglo-Saxon verb Bryttian, Bryttian, distribuere, dispensare: In English also To Brit.

“To BRIT, apud Salopienses, to divulge and spread abroad.”

Ray's Preface to North Country Words.

TRUCE—is formed in the usual manner. It is the regular past tense and therefore past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Triprian, fidem dare, To pledge one's Faith, To plight one's Troth. The French Trêve (formerly written Tresves) is the same word.

“He therfore sent hym in ambassade to the sayd Rollo to requyre a TREWE or TREWSE for thre monethes.”—Fabian, parte 6. ch. 131.

“Under coloure of a fayned TREWCE they were taken and caste the moste parte of theym in pryson.”—Ibid. parte 7. ch. 241.

“Was proclaimed throughe the citee and also the hooste, a daie of lenger TREWES.”

“The daie of expiration of the TRUEWES approched.”

Fabian, Lewes XI. p. 484.

FULL—is the past tense, used as a past participle, of the verb Fyllan, To Fill. And may at all times have its place supplied by Filled.²

¹ [“Brother, we will proclaime you out of hand,
The BRUIT thereof will bring you many friends.”

3d Part of Henry 6, p. 167. col. 1.

Malone says—“The word BRUIT is found in Bullokar's English Expositor, 8vo, 1616, and is defined—‘A reporte spread abroad.’”

So (says Steevens) in Preston's Cambyses;

“—— Whose many acts do fly
By BRUIT of fame.”

“The French word BRUIT (says Mr. Whalley) was very early made a denizen of our language.

“‘Behold the noise of the BRUIT is come.’—Jeremiah, 10. 22.”]

² [The Italian FOLLA; whence the French FOULLE.

Menage says—“FOLLA, dal Lat. inusitato FALLA, originato da FULLUS, detto per Fullo, Fullonis. Quindi deriva il Francese FOULLE. Vedi Fouller nelle Origini Francesi.”—Where may be seen the foolish derivations of Caseneuve and Menage.]

· STUM—is the past tense and past participle of Styman, fumare, To Steam. It means fumigated, steamed.¹

“STUM, in the wine trade, denotes the unfermented juice of the grape, after it has been several times racked off and separated from its sediment. The casks are, for this purpose, well matched or fumigated with brims'one every time, to prevent the liquor from fermenting, as it would otherwise readily do, and become wine.”

Encyclop. Britannica. Art. STUM.

LUST—The past tense and past participle of the verb Lýrtan, cupere, To List. It was not formerly, as now, confined only to a desire of one kind; but was applied generally to any thing wished, or desired, or liked.

“And of the myracles of these crownes twey, Saynt Ambrose in his preface LUSTE to sey.”

Seconde Nonnes Tale, fol. 57. p. 2. col. 2.

“Faire Sir, said Sir Tristram, to drinke of that water haue I a LUST.”

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 2d part, ch. 87.

DUNG (or, as it was formerly written, DONG) by the change of the characteristic letter y to o, or to u, is the past tense and therefore past participle of the verb Dýngan, dejcere, To Cast down.

“And Dowel shal DING him down,” and distroi his might.”

Vision of Pierce Ploughman, pass. 11. fol. 50. p. 2.

¹ “STUM of wine, Sic appellatur, ni fallor, Mustum statim quam primum expressum est, validissimo dolio circulis ferreis munito usque ad summum, nullo spiritibus loco vacuo relicto, inditum seu potius infartum, ne sc. posset effervescere et defæcari: hoc vinis fere vietis et evanidis immissum novum ipsis vigorem et spiritum, instar fermenti, conciliat; et, modo confestim bibantur, palata apprime commendat. Nescio an a Belg. Stom, Teut. Stumm, mutus, q. d. vinum mutum; quia nunquam efferbuit. Vel potius a Belg. Stomp, Teut. Stumpff, hebes, obtusus (i. e.) vinum obtusum; quia sc. quoniam nulla fermentatione depuratum est, spiritus, non ut vina ætate defæcata, puros vivos et expeditos, sed hebetes et languidos habet.”—Skinner.

Lye says—“STUM, vox œnopolis satis nota, Su. Stum. Detruncatum volunt ex Lat. Mustum.”

² [In Malone's edition of Shakespeare are inserted Poems on Shakespeare, and in the 200th page of the 1st part of the 1st volume it is thus written :—

[" My fore grandsyr, hecht Fyn Mac Cowl,
That DANG the deuil and gart him yowll,
The skyis rained whan he wald scowll,
And trublit all the air."

Interlude of the Droichis, Scotch Poem about the time of James the 4th.

"Many strong eddies, gusts, and counterblasts: whereby we are hoisted sometime to heaven with a billow of presumption, and DUNG downe againe with abysses of despaire to helward."

Divers Ancient Monuments in the Saxon Tongue: Published by William I'Isle of Wilburgham, Esquire to the King's body.
Printed by E. G. for Francis Eglesfield, 1638. Preface, p. 3.]

DUNG, or DONG, therefore means Dejectum, and in that meaning only is applied to Stercus.

"And at the west gate of the toun (quod he)
A carte ful of DONGE there shalt thou se."

Tale of the Nonnes Priest, fol. 99. p. 1. col. 1.

"All other thynges in respecte of it, I repute (as saint P'aule saith) for DONG."—Sir T. More, Lyfe of Pycus, p. 20.

[" ——— Who shall let me now
On this vile body from to wreak my wrong,
And make his carkas as the outcast DONG."

Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 8. st. 28.]

TURD (or, as it was formerly written, Topd and TOORD) is the past tense and past participle of the verb Tīpan, To Feed upon.

[" Then hath she an haukes eye.
O that I were a partridge head.

"His (meaning Marlowe's Hero and Leander, was published in quarto, 1598, by Edward Blount, as an imperfect work. The fragment ended with this line—

'DANG'D down to hell her loathsome carriage.'

Chapman completed the Poem, and published it as it now appears, in 1600."

"Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:

Hark, now I hear them,—DING—DONG, bell.

(Burden, DING—DONG, bell.)"

In Malone's edition of Shakespeare, vol. 1. part 2. The Tempest,
p. 27.]

To what end ?

That she might TIRE with her eyes on my countenance."

Mydas (by John Lily), act 1. sc. 2.

"Thou dotard, thou art woman-TYE'D, unroosted

By thy dame Partlet here."

Winter's Tale, act 2. sc. 3.

"——— And like an emptie eagle

TYRE on the flesh of me and of my sonne."

3d Part of Henry 6, p. 149. col. 2.

"——— I greeve myselfe,

To thinke, when thou shalt be disedg'd by her

That now thou TYREST on, how thy memory

Will then be pang'd by me."—Cymbeline, p. 383. col. 1.

"——— And now doth ghostly death

With greedy tallents gripe my bleeding heart,

And like a harper TYERS on my life."

One of Malone's Notes, vol. 1. part 2. p. 211.]

"Euen as an empty eagle, sharp by fast,

TIRES with her beak on feather, flesh and bone,

Shaking her wings, deuouring all in haste,

Till either gorge be stuff'd, or prey be gone."—Venus and Adonis.

"I thinke this honorable lord did but try us this other day. Upon that were my thoughts TYRING when we encountred."

Timon of Athens, p. 89.¹

"——— This man,

If all our fire were out, would fetch down new

Out of the hand of Jove, and rivet him

To Caucasus, should he but frown ; and let

His own gaunt eagle fly at him to TIRE."

B. Jonson, Catiline, act 3.

TURD and DUNG may therefore be well applied to the same thing ; although each word has intrinsically a very different meaning : for TURD, i. e. that which has been fed upon, been ¹ [Upon this passage Dr. Johnson says—"A hawk, I think, is said to TIRE, when she amuses herself with pecking a pheasant's wing, or any thing that puts her in mind of prey. To TIRE upon a thing, is, therefore, to be idly employed upon it."] !

Upon this note, Malone sagaciously remarks—"I believe Dr. Johnson is mistaken. TIRING means here, I think, Fixed, Fastened ; as the hawk fastens its beak eagerly on its prey." !]

eaten, must, by the course of nature, be afterwards Dejectum from the body; and thereby becomes DUNG.

“Sum man hadde a fige tree plauntid in his vyner, and he cam sekinge fruyt in it, and fonde not. sotheli he seide to the tilier of the vyner, lo thre yeris ben, sithen I come sekyng fruyt in this litil fyge tree: and I fynde not. therfor kitte it doun, wherto occupieth it the erthe? And he answeringe seide to him, Lord, suffre also this yeer: til the while I delue aboute it, and sende TOORDIS. And if it shal make fruyt: ellis in tyme to comyng thou shalt kitte it doun.”

Luke, ch. 13. v. 6, 7, 8, 9.

“Natheles I gesse alle thingis for to be peyrment for the clear science of Ihesu Crist, for whom I made alle thinges peirement, and I deme as TOORDIS, that I wyne Crist.”—Philippensys, ch. 3. v. 8.

MUCK } These two words are improperly confounded by MIXEN } Junius and Skinner. They do not mean the same thing.

MUCK is the past tense and therefore past participle of Mcizan, mciere, mingere, To Piss. And it means (any thing, something) pissed upon. Hence the common saying—“As wet as MUCK,” i. e. As wet as if pissed upon. So the hay and straw, &c. which have been staled on by the cattle, make the MUCK heap, or heap of materials which have been staled upon by the cattle.

MIXEN means the same as Mixed, and is equivalent to Compost.—“Quia est (as Skinner truly says) miscela omnium alimentorum.”

“The operation of the stomake is, to make a good MYXYON of thynges there in, and to digeste them well.”

Regiment of Helth. By Tho. Paynel, fol. 48. p. 1.

What we call a MIXEN was indifferently termed in the Anglo-Saxon either Meox or Mixen: that is, they either (in their accustomed manner) used the regular past tense as a past participle; or they added the participial termination EN to the verb, and so obtained a past participle. Our English verb To Mix is no other than the Anglo-Saxon verb Myrcan, miscere. By casting off the Anglo-Saxon infinitive termination AN, and, according to our custom, prefixing our infinitive sign To, we had the verb To Misc. And this, by a transposition common to all people and languages, became To Mics,

i. e. To Mix. Meocj or Meox is the past tense of Micjan or Micran, used participially: and Miccen, Micren, or Mixen is the past participle.

I cannot help noticing to you as we pass (though I have often forborne a similar remark) that the Latin verbs Miscere and Meiere, for which Junius and Vossius would send us in vain to the Hebrew, are evidently from our own Northern language; with no other difference than the Latin infinitive termination ERE instead of the Anglo-Saxon infinitive termination AN.

Anglo-Saxon	Mic-an	A.-S.	Mic-an.
Latin	. . Misc-ere	Lat.	{ Mej Ming } -ere.

F.—You have touched upon this subject before. And what you threw out has not been lost upon me. I do spy great relief to the difficulties of the Latin etymologist, by directing his view to the North rather than to the East, when all his labour and toil are frustrate in the Greek. And I agree with you, that, dismissing the common terminations, which are mere common adjuncts to the different words, it is impossible not to discover at once the derivation of many of them.

Besides those Latin words you have already noticed: the following,

hab-an	}	—— Hab-ere
habb-an
hnac-an		—— Nec-are
sec-an		—— Sequ-i ——qu equivalent to c.
mic-an		—— Ir-e —The aspirate suppressed.
hent-an		—— Hend-ere — { Which the Latin has only in composition.
suc-an		—— Sug-ere
pad-an		—— Vad-ere
pealop-ian		—— Volv-ere
per-an		—— Vast-are
fleup-an		—— Flu-ere
spir-ian		—— Spir-are
speop-ian		—— Spu-ere
spit-an		—— Sput-are
milejc-ian		—— Mulc-ere

meole-ian	— Mulg-ere	{ Observe, Lac , is the Latin substantive; whilst we retain the past participle of our own verb.
Grønn-ian	— Grunn-ire
Pın-an	— Pun-ire
Pȳng-an	— Pung-ere
Feg-an	— Fig-ere
Dilȳ-ian	— Del-ere
Kap-ian	— Cur-are
MLA-AN	— Mol-ere
En-ian	— Ar-are
Til-ian	— Toll-ere	{ antiently written with only one L.
Enitt-an	{ — Nect-ere
or
Niet-an	— Cres-cere
Kepp-an	— Crisp-are
Lipp-an	— Pecc-are
Pæc-an	— Irasc-i
Ipp-ian	— Tang-ere	— antiently Tag-ere
TEK-AN	— Damn-are
Dem-an	— Prob-are
Pıop-ian	{ — Quass-are
Lpac-ian
Reap-ian	— Quat-ere
Sæg-ian	— Rap-ere
Bıdd-an	— Suad-ere
&c.	— Pet-ere
	&c.

are plainly of Northern origin: and the Latin etymologist struggles in vain to discover any other source.

But, in my opinion, the most decisive fact in your favour, is, that we find in the Latin (as Nouns) many of our past participles; which cannot receive any rational explanation in the Latin or Greek languages; because they have either not adopted the verbs to which those participles belong; or did not from those verbs form their past participles in the Anglo-Saxon manner. I mean, for instance, such words as,

[Gaudi-um	—— Γε-εαδιζ-αν.]
Nod-us	—— Knot , of Λυτταν , nectere .
Stult-us	—— of δτυλταν , obstupescere .
Long-us	—— Long , of Λενζιαν , extendere .
Fœd-us	—— Fægeb , of Fæζαν , pangere .
Jug-um	—— Ioc. Yoke , of Ικαν , jungere .
Dir-us	—— Dear , of Διριαν , nocere .
Spoli-um	—— Spoil , of δπιλλαν , privare .
Laus	—— Ἡλορ , of Ἡλιαν , celebrare .
Hestern-us	—— Yester , of Γεστριναν , acquirere .
Ror-is	} —— Ἡρον , of Ἡριγαν , cadere , prolabere
Ros
Mort-is	} —— { Μορδ , of Μοριαν , dissipare , abstra-
Mors
Aur-a	—— Οραδ , of Ορεδιαν , spirare .
Di-es	—— Dæg , of Dægian , illucescere .
Ocul-us ¹	—— ΛηΓα , of ΛηΓαν , ostendera .
&c.	&c.

Of all which words the serious and elaborate accounts given by the Latin etymologists, will cause to those who consult them, either great disgust or great entertainment, according to the disposition and humour of the inquirer.

But I beg pardon for this interruption, which yourself however occasioned : We shall have time enough hereafter to canvass this matter : and I entreat you at present to proceed in your course.

H.—Loos, though now and long since obsolete, was formerly in common use in the language : and your mention of the Latin word LAUS has brought it to my recollection.

“ It is a carefull knight, and of kaytife kynges making,

That hath no land ne linage riche ne good LOOS of hys handes.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 57.p. 2.

“ And felle, that Ariadne tho,

Whiche was the doughter of Minos,

And had herde the worthye LOS

Of Theseus.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 112. p. 2. col. 1.

“ Great LOOS hath largesse, and great prise

For both wyse folke and unwyse.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 125. p. 2. col. 1.

¹ [Aksha, Sanskrit.—ED.]

“She knewe by the folke that in his shippes be,
That it was Iason ful of renomee,
And Hercules, that had the great LOOS.”

Hypsiphile, fol. 214. p. 1. col. 2.

“Ye shal haue a shrewde name
And wicked LOOS, and worse fame,
Thoughe ye good LOOS haue wel deserued.”

3d Boke of Fame, fol. 300. p. 1. col. 1.

“And yet ye shal haue better LOOS Ryght in dispyte of al your foos.”

Ibid.

“And he gan blowe her LOOS so clere
In hys golden clarioun,
Through the worlde went the soun.”

Ibid. col. 2.

“In heuen to bene LOSED with God hath none ende.”

Testament of Loue, boke 1. fol. 310. p. 2. col. 2.

“Sir priest, he said, I kepe for to haue no LOOS
Of my crafte, for I wold it were kept cloos,
And as you loue me, kepith it secre.”

Tale of Chanons Yeman, fol. 63. p. 1. col. 2.

[“That much he feared least reproachfull blame
With foule dishonour him mote blot therefore ;
Besides the losse of so much LOOS and fame,
As through the world thereby should glorifie his name.”

Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 12. st. 12.]

This word was also antiently in common use with the French. Menage endeavoured to revive it. He says—“Ce mot étoit un beau mot. Je souhaiterois fort qu’on le rémît en usage : et pour cela, j’ai dit dans mon épître à M. Pelisson :

‘Fais-tu raisonner le LOS
De Fouquet, ton grand héros.’”

LOOS or LOS is evidently the past participle of the verb Ųlyan, celebrare.¹ As LAUS also is. Of which had the Latin etymologists been aware ; they never would, by such childish allusions, have endeavoured to derive it from Λαος, populus—“ut LAUS proprie sit sermo populi de virtute alicujus testantis.”

“Vel a Λαω, id est, eloquor.”

[“Þiſ þLYSA iſ ful CUD on geleafullum bocum.”

Ælfric. de Veteri Testamento, p. 13.

Vel ab antiquo Λαυω, id est, fruor.—“Quia nullus virtutis major est fructus, quam LAUS.”

BUSY, i. e. Occupatus, is the past participle of Byrgan, occupare.

STUNT, i. e. Stopped in the growth: the past participle of Stuntan, To Stop.¹

NUMB } [Swedish, Dumbskalle.] This word was for-NUMSCULL } merly written NUM. How, or why, or when the B was added to it, I know not.

“She fel, as she that was throug NOME
Of loue, and so forth ouercome.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 103. p. 1. col. 2.

“He maie neither go ne come,
But all to gether he is BENOME
The power both of honde and fete.”

Ibid, lib. 6. fol. 127. p. 2. col. 1.

[“Or hath the crampe thy ioynts BENOMD with ache.”

Spenser, Shepheards Calender, August.]

“_____ If this law

Of nature be eorrupted through affection,
And that great mindes, of partiall indulgence
To their BENUMMED wills, resist the same,
There is a law in each well-ordred nation
To curbe those raging appetites.”

Troilus and Cressida.

“Bedlam beggars, who with roaring voices
Strike in their NUM'D and mortified armes Pins, &c.”

Lear, p. 293.

“These feet whose strengthlesse stay is NUMME.”

1st Part of Henry 6. p. 104.

[“It was such bitter weather that the foote had waded almost to the middle in snow as they came, and were so NUMMED with cold, when they came into the towne, that they were faine to be rubbed to get life in them.”—Life of Col. Hutchinson, p. 181.]

NUM is the past tense and past participle of Niman, capere eripere, To Nim. Skinner says truly—“Eodem fere sensu quo Lat. dicitur membris captus, i. e. membrorum usu, sc. motu et sensu privatus.

¹ Skinner says—“STUNT, vox agro Linc. familiaris, Ferox, iracundus, contumax, ab A.-S. Stunta stunte, stultus, fatuus; fort. quia stulti, præferoces sunt: vel a verbo To Stand, ut Resty, a restando; metaphora ab equis contumacibus sumpta.” Lye says—“STUNT, alicujus rei incrementum impedire: manifeste venit ab Isl. Stunta, abbreviare; in decursu, sensu aliquantulum mutato.”

- NUMSCULL, in Ital. Mentecatto, Animo captus.
So Seneca. Hercules Furens.

“ Ut possit animo captus Alcides agi,
Magno furore percitus ; vobis prius
Insaniendum est.”

HURT—The past participle of Vÿnpian, injuria afficere, vexare.

HUNGER—The past participle of Vÿngpian, esurire.

DIN }
DINT } The past participle of Dÿnan, strepere, To Din.
DUN }

“ They hurled together and brake their speares and all to sheuered them, that all the castle rang of their DINTS.”

Hist. of Prince Arthur, ch. 132.

A DUN is one who has DINNED another for money or any thing.

SNAKE } SNAKE, Anglo-Saxon Snac, is the past participle
SNAIL } of Snican, serpere, repere, To Creep, To Sneak ; SNUG } as Serpens in Latin is the present participle of Serpere.

Shakespeare very properly gives this name to a sneaking or creeping fellow.

“ I see Loue hath made thee a tame SNAKE.”

As You Like It, act 4. sc. 3. p. 202.

SNAIL, ꝛnægel (or Snakel) the diminutive of SNAKE : G being sounded and written instead of K in the Anglo-Saxon ; and both G and K dropped in the English.

SNUG (i. e. Snuc) is likewise the past participle of Snican ; the characteristic I changed to U, and G sounded for K.

SMUT—is the past participle of Smitan, be-ꝛmitan, polluere, inquinare, contaminare.¹

¹ [“ Then, all around with a wet sponge he wiped
His visage, and his arms and brawny neck
Purified, and his shaggy breast from SMUTCH.”

Cowper's Iliad, vol. 2. book 18. p. 235.

“ A cauldron of four measures, never SMIRCH'D
By smoke or flame.”

Ibid. book 23. p. 380.]

CRUM—Mica, is the past participle of Lpýmman, acpýmman, friare.

“The ryche man shal gyue answeere of euery threde in his clothe, of euery CROME of brede in his bredekepe, of euery droppe of drynke of his barell and in his Tonne.”—Diues and Pauper, 8th Comm. cap. 17.

[“Then art thou in a state of life which philosophers commend. A CRUM for thy supper, a hand for thy cup.”

Campaspe (by John Lily), act 1. sc. 2.]

“As the gold-finer will not out of the dust, threds, or shreds of gold, let pass the least CRUM; in respect of the excellency of the metall; so ought not the learned reader to let pass any syllable of this law, in respect of the excellency of the matter.”

Lord Coke's Exposit. of 29th chap. of Magna Charta.

GRUM } The past participle of Lpýmman, sævire, fre-
GRIM } mere.¹

GUN—formerly written GON, is the past participle of Lýnian, hiare.

“They dradde none assaut

Of gynne, GONNE, nor skaffaut.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 140. p. 1. col. 1.

SCUM—That which is Skimmed off; the past participle of the verb To Skim. Hence the Italian Schiuma and the French Escume, Ecume.

SNUFF—That which is Sniffed up the nose; the past participle of the verb To Sniff.

PUMP—An engine by which water, or any other fluid is obtained or procured. It is the past participle of the verb To Pimp, i. e. To procure, or obtain.

¹ [“Calati dunque nel cosco, e portati bene, sai? Che monel fra tanto andrà a canzonar co 'l GRIMO.”

Guarini, La Idroica, atto 3. sc. 10.

“GRIMA. Vecchia Grima,” says Menage, “Il Sig^r. Ferrari da Crinia. L'Eritreo, a Rimis: ‘quod ejus frons rugis arata sit.’ Sono da cercare altre derivazioni di questa voce. Grimace per Smorfia, diciamo in Francia.”

La Crusca says—“GRIMO: aggiunto che diamo a vecchio grinzo, senex rugosus.”

“The hearing this doth force the tyrant GRY.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, Translated by R. C. p. 61. cant. 2. st. 23.

“Hor, questo udendo, in minaccievol suono
Freme il tiranno.”]

STENCH—is the past participle of ſcincan, foetere; pronouncing CH for K. As Wench is the past participle of ƿincan; Drench of Dƿincan; and Wrench of ƿƿincan.

SNACK—Something Snatched, taken hastily, K for CH; it is the past participle of the verb To Snatch.

DITCH } The past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb
DYCHE } Dician, fodere, To Dig. As the Latin reputed
DIKE } substantive Fossa is the past participle of fodere.

In these words Dig, Dike, Dyche, Ditch, we see at one view how easily and almost indifferently we pronounce the same word either with G, K, or CH.

“ I DYKE and delue and do that truth hoteth,
Some tyme I sowe and some tyme I thresh.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 6. fol. 29. p. 1.

“ These labourers, deluers and DYKERS ben ful poore.”

Dives and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 46.

“ Two freres walkynge on a DYCHES brynke.”—Ibid. cap. 50.

DIM—the past participle of Dimnian, adimnian, obscurare. It was formerly in English written DIMN.¹

“ Ye elues, by whose ayde I haue BEDYMN'D
The noone tide sun.”

Tempest, p. 16.

“ With sad unhelpful teares, and with DIMN'D eyes.”

2d Part of Henry VI. p. 132.

TRIM—used adjectively or substantively, is the past participle of the verb Tryman, ordinare, disponere.

“ Young ladies, sir, are long and curious

In putting on their TRIMS.”—B. and Fletcher, Women Pleas'd.

“ In gallant TRIM the gilded vessel goes.”

Gray.

LIMB } In Anglo-Saxon written Lim² and Limb; B being LIMBO } written for P. It is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Limpian, pertinere. And it means—quod

¹ Junius derives this word from “ Δειμασθαι, quod Hesychio exp. φοβεισθαι, metuere; quandoquidem naturalis tenebrarum metus est.”

Skinner, from “ Teut. Demmen, Dammen, obturare; quia omnia obturata propter luminis exclusionem tenebricosa sunt.”

Lye from “ C. B. et Arm. Du, vel Dy; caliginosus, ater, niger.”
S. Johnson—from “ Doio, Erse.”

² Junius says—“ LIM, fortasse per inversionem factum e tribus initialibus literis Græci μελος, membrum.”

pertinet or quod pertinuit. What belongeth or hath belonged to something. LIMB of the body. LIMB of the law. LIMB of an argument, &c. Hence and hence only are derived the Latin words Limbus and Lembus:¹ which are sometimes translated περι-στρωμα, περι-πετασμα: but that is not precisely the meaning, unless the notion of pertinendi, i. e. of holding to, or belonging to, is included.

["He found himself unwist so ill bestad,
That LIM he could not wag."

Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 1. st. 22.

"And soothly sure she was full fayre of face,
And perfectly well shapt in every LIM."

Ibid. book 6. cant. 9. st. 9.]

IMP—Shakespeare, in Loues Labours Lost, p. 125, makes Don Armado say,

"Sadnesse is one and the selfe same thing, dear IMPE."

Upon this passage Dr. Johnson says:—"IMP was antiently a term of dignity. Lord Cromwel in his last letter to Henry VIII. prays for the IMP his son. It is now used only in contempt or abhorrence; perhaps in our author's time it was ambiguous, in which state it suits well with this dialogue."

In the 2d part of Henry IV. p. 99, we have IMP again,

"Saue thy grace, king Hall, my royall Hall.

The heauens thee guard and keepe, most royall IMPE of fame."

And again in Henry V. p. 83.

"The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold, a lad of life, an IMPE of fame, of parents good."

Mr. Steevens (very differently indeed from Dr. Johnson) sought industriously and judiciously for the meaning of Shakespeare's words, by the use which was made of the same terms by other antient authors: and nothing was wanting to Mr. Steevens to make him a most perfect editor of Shakespeare, but a knowledge of his own primitive language, the Anglo-Saxon. Mr. Steevens tells us,—“An IMP is a Shoot, in its primitive sense, but means a Son in Shakespeare. In Hollinshed, p. 951, the last words of Lord Cromwel are preserved, who says —‘And after him that his sonne prince Edward, that goodlie IMPE, may long reigne over you.’”——And again, “The word IMP is perpetually used by Ulpian Fulwell, and other antient writers, for progeny.

¹ LIMBUS—Non occurrit nunc unde verisimilius deducam, quam a λογος, quo τα αχρα παντα significari Hesychius et Suidas testantur."—Vossius.

‘And were it not thy royal IMPE
Did mitigate our pain.—’

Here Fulwell addresses Aune Bulleyne, and speaks of the young Elizabeth. Again, in the Battle of Alcazar, 1594:

‘Amurath, mighty emperor of the East,
That shall receive the IMP of royal race.—’

IMPYN is a Welch word, and primitively signifies a Sprout, a Sucker. In Newton’s Herbal to the Bible, 8vo. 1587, there is a chapter—on shrubs, shootes, slippe, young IMPS, sprays, and buds.”

Mr. Steevens needed not to have travelled to Wales, for that which he might have found at home. Our language has absolutely nothing from the Welch. IMP is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Impan, To Plant, To Graft.

“——I was continually a fryer
And the countes gardiner for to graft IMPES
On limitors and listers, lesynges I IMPED
Tyll they beare leaves of smowtho speech.”

Vision of Pierce Ploughman, pass. 6. fol. 22. p. 2.

“IMPE on an elderne, and if thyne apple be swete Muchel marvaile me thynketh.”—Ibid. pass. 10. fol. 44. p. 1.

“As it is in younge and tender YMPES, plantes, and twygges, the whiche euen as ye bowe them in theyr youthe, so wyll they euermore remain.”—Byrth of Mankynde, fol. 54. p. 2.

[“And also for the love which thou doest beare
To th’ Heliconian YMPs, and they to thee;
They unto thee, and thou to them, most deare.”

Spenser’s Verses to the Earle of Oxenford.

“And thou, most dreaded IMPE of highest Iove, Faire Venus sonne.” Faerie Queene, Prol. to 1st book.

“That detestable sight him much amazde,
To see th’ unkindly IMPES, of heaven accurst,
Devoure their dam.” Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 1. st. 24.

“For all he taught the tender YMP, was but
To banish cowardize and bastard feare.”—Ibid. cant. 6. st. 24.

“Well worthy IMPE, said then the lady gent,
And pupil fitt for such a tutor’s hand.”—Ibid. cant. 9. st. 6.

“And thou, faire YMP, sprong out from English race,
How ever now accounted Elfins sonne,
Well worthy doest thy service for her grace,
To aide a virgin desolate fordonne.”—Ibid. cant. 10. st. 60.

“Now, O thou sacred Muse, most learned dame, Fayre YMPE of Phœbus and his aged bryde.”
Ibid. cant. 11. st. 5.

“Fayre YMPES of beautie, whose bright shining beames Adorne the world with like to heavenly light.”
Ibid. book 3. cant. 5. st. 53.

“The first was Fansy, like a lovely boy
Of rare aspect and beautie without peare,
Matchable either to that YMPE of Troy,
Whom Jove did love and chose his cup to beare,
Or that same daintie lad, which was so deare
To great Alcides.” Ibid. cant. 12. st. 7.

“Fond dame ! that deem’st of things divine
As of humane, that they may altred bee,
And chaung’d at pleasure for those IMPES of thine.”
Ibid. book 4. cant. 2. st. 51.

“Helpe therefore, O thou sacred IMPE of Jove,
The noursling of dame Memorie his deare.”—Ibid. cant. 11. st. 10.

“——That faire city (Cambridge) wherein make abode
So many learned IMPES, that shoote abroad,
And with their braunches spred all Britany.” Ibid. st. 16.

“But Belgè with her sonnes prostrated low
Before his feete, in all that peoples sight ;
Mongst ioyes mixing some teares, mongst wele some wo,
Him thus bespake : O most redoubted knight,
The which hast me, of all most wretched wight,
That earst was dead, restor’d to life againe,
And these weake IMPES replanted by thy might.”
Ibid. book 5. cant. 11. st. 16.

“Ye sacred IMPS that on Parnasso dwell,
And there the keeping have of learnings treasures.”

Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 1. st. 2.

“The noble YMPE, of such new service fayne,
It gladly did accept.”

Ibid. cant. 2. st. 38.

“That of the like, whose lineage was unknowne,
More brave and noble knights have raysed beene
(As their victorious deedes have often shoven,
Being with fame through many nations blowen)
Then those which have bene dandled in the lap.
Therefore some thought that those brave IMPS were sowen
Here by the gods, and fed with heavenly sap,
That made them grow so high t’ all honorable hap.”

Ibid. book 6. cant. 4. st. 36.

“Brave IMPE of Bedford, grow apace in bountie,
And count of wisdom more than of thy countie.”

Spenser’s Ruines of Time.

“The sectaries of my celestially skill,
That wont to be the worlds chiefe ornament,
And learned IMPES that wont to shoote up still,
And grow to height of kingdomes government.”

Spenser, Teares of the Muses.

“The Norman, th’ English, and Dardaniene,
(O royall IMPE) are ioyned by thy sire ;
And thou fro mothers side draw’st blood of Dane.”

*To the Prince (Charles 1st) his highnes, Welcome home, &c.
Ancient Monuments, by William L’Isle of Wilburgham, Esquire to the King’s body. st. 6. Francis Eglefield, 1638.*

“Then shall we need no more to plant vs vines,
Nor them to prop, to spread, to prune, to rub ;
Nor send beyond seas for outlandish wines ;
But in our fields, about each humble shrub,
The selfe-set IMP shall winde, and load the same
With purple clusters, all of deerest name.”—Ibid. st. 21.]

GRIP—and its diminutive GRAPPLE, the past participle of Γῑpan, prehendere.

MIST—The past participle of Μῑτῑan, caligare.¹

¹ Minsheu derives MIST from the Latin Mistus. “Aer enim caligine et densis vaporibus Mistus.”

BLISS } The past participle of Blyſſian and Blyſſian, BLITH } letari.

QUICK—The past participle of ꝥpiccian, vivificare.

WIZEN—The past participle of ꝥiſnian, arescere.

STIFF—The past participle of ſtiſſian, rigere.

THICK } The past participle of ꝥiccian, densare, con-
 THICKET } densare.
 THIGH }

THICKET, for Thicked, i. e. with trees. THIGH (GH for CK) is sometimes in the Anglo-Saxon written ðeoh (for ðeoc) by change of the characteristic letter.

WITCH } Skinner inclines to suppose WICKED derived from WICKED } Vitiatus: and Johnson, that—"Perhaps it is a compound of ꝥic (vile, bad) and Head—Malum caput."—

According to which latter wise supposition, a WICKED action means—a malum caput action: but nothing is too ridiculous for this Undertaker. WITCH is the past tense, used as a participle, of the Anglo-Saxon verb ꝥiccian, incantare, veneficiis uti. And WICKED, i. e. WITCHED (K for CH) is the same past tense, with the participial termination ED. The word WITCH is therefore as applicable to men as to women.

"WITCHES, in foretime named Lot-tellers, now commonly called sorcerers."

Catalogue of English printed Bookes. 1595.

By Andrew Maunsell, p. 122.

Lot-teller; i. e. a teller of covered or hidden things.

"Wherof came the name of Symonye? Of Symon Magus, a grete WYTCHER."—Diues and Pauper, 7th Comm. cap. 16.

"Dauid was lyk wyce so intanglid in the snares of the deuill, that with mouche paine he coul'd quit hym self from the WYCCHYD coupe that the deuill had ons brought hym."

Decluracion of Christe. By Johan Hoper, cap. xi.

The notions of enchantment, sorcery and witchcraft were

Dr. Th. Hickes supposes it to be Moist.

And according to Junius—"Videtur esse a μείστον, quod Hesychio exp. ελαχιστόν, nihil enim aliud est nebula, quam tenuissima quædam ac subtilissima pluvia."

universally prevalent with our ancestors, who attributed all atrocious actions to this source: thus attempting to cover the depravity of human nature by its weakness, and the depravity of some other imaginary beings. So run our indictments to this day; in which the crime is attributed to the instigation of the Devil.

“Latini certe comici,” says Junius, “hominem aperte improbum atque omnibus invisum, pari prorsus ratione, dixerunt Veneficum.”

HILDING—(like Coward) is either the past participle of the verb Hýldan, inclinare, curvare, To Bend down, To Crouch, or To Cower; (and then it should be written HILDEN) or it is the present participle Hýlding (Hýldand) of the same verb.

[“Which when that squire beheld, he to them stept, Thinking to take them from that HYLDING hound.”

Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 5. st. 25.]

“A base slaue, a HILDING for a liuorie, a squires cloth, a pantler.”
Cymbeline, p. 378.

“’Tis positine against all exceptions, Lords,
That our superfluous lacquies, and our pesants,
Who in unnecessarie action swarme
About our squares of battaile, were enow
To purge this field of such a HILDING foe.”—Henry V. p. 86.

“He was some HIELDING fellow, that had stolne
The horse he rode on.” 2nd Part Henry IV. p. 75.

“Nay, good my lord, put him to’t; let him have his way. If your lordshippe finde him not a HILDING, hold me no more in your respect. Beleeue it my lord, in mine owne direct knowledge, he is a most notable coward.”
Alls Well that Ends Well, p. 243.

Some have supposed HILDING to mean Hinderling (if ever there was such an English word) and some Hilderling; which, Spelman says, is familiar in Devonshire. It is true that Hýldeþ is a term of reproach in the Anglo-Saxon, furnished by this same verb, and means—croucher or cowerer.¹

¹ S. Johnson, in a note, act 2. sc. 1. Taming of a Shrew, tells us that HILDING means—“a low wretch.” But in his Dictionary he has discovered that Þilb in the Anglo-Saxon means a Lord: and that “perhaps Hilding means originally a little Lord, in contempt for a man that has only the delicacy or bad qualities of high rank.”

RIPE—the past participle of Ripian, maturescere.

RHIME—of Rhuman, numerare.

. SPOIL—of Spillan, privare, consumere.

CRISP—In the Anglo-Saxon Lipp, of Lipprian, crispere, torquere.

DEED (like Actum and Factum) means—something, any thing—DONE. It is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Don, To Do. DO-ED, DID, DEED, is the same word differently spelled. It was formerly written DEDE, both for the past tense and past participle.

“I do nought as Ulysses DEDE.”—Gower, lib. 1. fol. 10. p. 2. col. 2

“Fy, upon a lorde that woll haue no mercy
But be a lyon, bothe in worde and DEDE.”

Knyghtes Tale, fol. 5. p. 2. col. 1.

NEED } Nyðde, the past tense and past participle of NEEDLE } Nyðian, cogere, compellere, adigere.¹

NEEDLE, (the diminutive of NEED) a small instrument, pushed, driven.

Observe, as we pass, that To Knead is merely Ge-nyðan, (Lnyðan) pronounced Lneðan—k for g.

DEEP } DEEP (which some derive from βυθος, fundum; DAB-chick } primis tribus literis inversis: and others from δυπτω) is merely the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dippan, mergere, To Dip, To Dive.

DEAPE linen clothes in to sundry waters, and after lay them to dry, and that whiche is sonest dry, the water wherein it was DEAPED, is most subtyl.”—Castel of Helth, fol. 31. p. 2.

“A sponge DEAPED in cold water.”—Ibid. fol. 34. p. 1.

In DAB-chick or DOB-chick; DAB or DOB (so pronounced for Dap or Dop), is also the past participle of Dippan; by the accustomed change of the characteristic I to A or O.

¹ Minshew derives NEED from the Hebrew Nadach, impulit.

Mer. Casaubon, from the Greek ενδεια, penuria.

Junius, from νυσσω, νυττω.

And NEEDLE, Mer. Cas. would derive from βελονη.

“So was he dight
That no man might
Hym for a frere deny,
He DOPPED and dooked
He spake and looked
So religiously.”—Sir T. More's Workes, fol. 11. p. 1.

“This officere
This fayned frere
Whan he was come aloft,
He DOPPED than
And grete this man
Religiously and oft.”—Ibid.

“The diving DOB-chick, here amongst the rest you see,
Now up, now down, that hard it is to proue,
Whether under water most it liveth, or above.”

Poly-olbion, song 25.

WEAK—The past participle of ȝican, labare, To Totter,
To Fail.

HELP—The past participle of ȝylpan, adjuvare: which Minshew derives from Ελπις; and Junius from “συλλαβειν, sibilo tantummodo in aspiratam commutato.”

WELL—Is the past participle of ȝillan, ebullire, effluere,
To Spring out, To Well.

It means (any or some place) where water, or other fluid, hath sprung out, or welled.

“And than WELLED water for wicked workes Egrely Ernynge out of mens eyen.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 20. fol. 109. p. 2.

“Where as the Poo, out of a WEL small
Taketh his first spring and his sours.”

Clerke of Oxenf. Prol. fol. 45. p. 1. col. 2.

“For which might she no lenger restrayne
Her teares, they gan so up to WELL.”

Troylus, boke 4. fol. 186. p. 1. col. 1.

“Mine eyen two in vayne, with which I se,
Of sorowful teares salte arn woxen WELLIS.”

Ibid. boke 5. fol. 197. p. 2. col. 2.

“ I can no more but here outcast of al welfare abyde the daye of my dethe, or els to se the syght that myght al my WELLYNG sorowes voyde, and of the flod make an ebbe.”

Testament of Loue, fol. 304. p. 1. col. 1.

“ The mother of the Soudon WEL of vices.”

Man of Lawes Tale, fol. 20. p. 1. col. 1.

“ But Christe that of perfeccion is WELL.”

Wife of Butes Prol. fol. 34. p. 2. col. 1.

“ There dwelt a terselet me fast by
That seemed WEL of all gentilnesse.

Squiers Tale, fol. 27. p. 1. col. 2.

“ The holy water of the sacrament of baptisme, the water that Welleth oute of holy church which stretcheth to two seas of synnes.”

Sir T. More's Works, p. 385.

[“ Thereby a christall streame did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountaine WELLED forth alway.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 1. st. 34.

“ ——— About the fountaine
Whose bubbling wave did ever freshly WELL.”

Ibid. cant. 7. st. 4.

“ All wallowd in his own yet luke-warne blood,
That from his wound yet WELLED fresh.”—Ibid. cant. 9. st. 36.

“ And with intrusive enmity to light,
WELLED like a spring, and dimmed the orbs of sight.”

The Maid of Snowdon. By Cumberland.
edit. 1810. p. 199.]

WELKIN } In the Winter's Tale, act 1. sc. 1. p. 278. We WHEEL } have—WHILE }

“ Come (Sir Page)
Looke on me with your WELKIN eye.”

On which passage S. Johnson says hardily, as usual;
“ WELKIN eye: Blue eye; an eye of the same colour with the WELKIN or sky.”

And this is accepted and repeated by Malone. I can only say, that this Note is worthy of them both; and they of each other.

WELKIN is the present participle Þilligenð, or Þealcynð

(i. e. volvens, quod volvit) of the Anglo-Saxon verb Pilligan, Pealcen, volvere, revolvere. Which is equally applicable to an eye of any colour—to what revolves or rolls over our heads—and to the waves of the sea. Pealcynbe ea. pealcende sæ.

A rolling or wandering eye is no uncommon epithet:

"Come hither, pretty maid, with the black and rolling eye."

Here is a black Pealcynb or WELKIN, eye: and indeed the WELKIN, or that which is rolled about over our heads, is sometimes black enough.¹

But Messrs. Johnson and Malone probably agree with Mr. Tyrwhitt, who, in the advertisement to his Glossary, p. iii. says—"Etymology is clearly not a necessary branch of the duty of a Glossarist!"

WHEEL, quod volvitur, In Anglo-Saxon ƿeoƿel, ƿeoehl, ƿeoepol, (by transposition, for ƿeolƿ or ƿeolƿ) is also the past participle of pilligan.

¹ ["As gentle shepherd in sweete eventide,
When ruddy Phebus gins to WELKE in west,
High on an hill, his focke to wewen wide,
Markes which doe byte their hasty supper best."
Faerie Queene, book I. cant. I. st. 23.

"No ought the WHELKY pearles esteemeth hee,
Which are from Indian seas brought far away."
Spenser, Virgil's Gnat.

On which Mr. Todd gives the following note:

"The WHLK or WELK is a shell-fish. Perhaps the poet introduced this adjective in the sense of wreathed, twisted, as that shell-fish appears. Or perhaps it may be considered in the sense of WHELKED, that is, rounded, or embossed; from WHELK, a protuberance, according to Fluellen's description of Bardolph's face. K. Hen. V. 'His face is all bubukles, and WHLKS, and knobs,' &c.—Where Mr. Steevens cites the word from Chaucer in the same sense."

"———Methought his eyes
Were two full moones: he had a thousand noses, Hornes WEALK'D and waved like the enraged sea."
Lear, p. 303. col. 1.

"There comes proud Phaeton tumbling thro' the clouds,
Cast by his palfreys that their reigns had broke,
And setting fire upon the WELKED shrouds."
Drayton, Barons Wars, book 6. st. 39.]

“Haile to thee, Ladie ; and the grace of heauen,
Before, behinde thee, and on euery hand
ENWHEELLE thee round.”

Othello, p. 316.

“Heaven’s grace INWHEEL ye :

And all good thoughts and prayers dwell about ye.”

B. and Fletcher, The Pilgrim, act 1. sc. 2.

WHILE—In the Anglo-Saxon Wile (for Wiol) is the same past participle. We say indifferently—Walk a While—or—Take a Turn.

[“And commonly he would not heare them WHILEST an hundred suters should come at once.”—R. Ascham, p. 19.]

CHAP	}	The past participle of Lýpan , mercari , To Traffick , To Bargain , To Buy or Sell .
CHEAP
CHOP

Good-CHEAP or Bad-CHEAP, i. e. Well or Ill bargained, bought or sold: such were formerly the modes of expression. The modern fashion uses the word only for GOOD CHEAP; and therefore omits the epithet Good, as unnecessary.

“By that it neghed to haruest, new corne came to CHEPING.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 35. p. 2.

“The sack that thou hast drunk me, would haue bought me lights as Good CHEAPE, at the dearest chandlers in Europe.”

1st Part Henry 4. act 3. sc. 3.

“To CHOP and change”—means To bargain and change.

“I am an Hebrew borne by byrth

And stolne away was I,

And CHOPT and changde as bondslaues bee

This wretched life to trye.”—Genesis, ch. xl. fol. 100. p. 2.

A CHAP or CHAPMAN.—Any one who has trafficked.

WRECK	}	WIKAN , ppican , persequi , affligere , punire , vindicare , ulcisci , lædere , perdere . The different pronunciation of CH or CK (common throughout the language) is the only difference in these words. They have all one meaning. And though, by the modern fashion, they are now differently applied and differently written; the same distinction was not antiently made.
WRETCH
WRETCHED
RACK

“Such WRECH on hem for fetching of Heleyne

Thare shal be take.”

Troilus, boke 5. fol. 195. p. 1. col. 2.

“Other thought cometh not in my mynde, but gladnesse to thynke on your goodnesse and your mery chere, frendes ; and sorowe to thynke on your WRECHE and your daunger.”

Testament of Loue, boke 1. fol. 303. p. 2. col. 2.

“My sprete for ire brynt in propir tene,

And all in greif thocht cruell vengeance tak,

Of my countre for this myscheuous WRAIK

With bitter panis to WREIK our harmes smert.”

Douglas, booke 2. p. 58.

“Vengeance tuke and WRAIK apoun our flote.”

Ibid. booke 11. p. 370.

“It was an open token of the grete offence to God with the people of Englonde, and that harde WRETCH was comyng but yf they wolde amend them.”—Diues and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 29.

“We sholde wepe and not be gladde for that we haue soo many martyrs, and nyght and daye crye mercy, to lett WRETCH.”

Ibid. cap. 60.

“By this commaundement he forbedeth us wrathe and WRETCH.”

Ibid. 5th Comm. cap. 6.

“You haue tresoured wrath and WRETCH to you in the laste dayes.”

Ibid. 8th Comm. cap. 18.

“There nis sicke ne sorye, ne none so much WRETCH

That he ne may loue, if him like.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 18. fol. 96. p. 2.

“The WRACHE walis and wryngis for this worldis WRAK.”

Douglas, Prol. to booke 8. p. 228.

“Na help unto thay WRACHIT folkis I socht

Na armour sekit, nor thy craft besocht.”—Ibid. booke 8. p. 255.

“Man may know hymselfe to be as he is a very WRBOCHID and damnable creature, were not the vertew of Christes deathe.”

Declaracion of Christe. By Iehan Hoper, cap. 12.

“So that cornes and frutis gois to WRAIK

Throw the corruptit are.”

Douglas, booke 3. p. 72.

We say—“go to RACK and ruin.”

SMEAR—The past participle of Smýrian, ungere, illinere.

SHEEN—The past participle of Scinan, splendere, fulgere.

HEARSE } The past participle of Hypertan, ornare, phalerare, HURST } decorare.¹ HEARSE is at present only applied to an ornamented carriage for a corpse.

“So many torches, so many tapers, so many black gownes, so many mery mourners laughyng under black hodes, and a gay HERS.”—*Sir T.
 More, De Quatuor Novissimis*, p. 79.

[“But leave these relicks of his living might
 To decke his HERCE, and trap his tomb-blacke steed.”
Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 8. st. 16.]

HURST is applied only to places ornamented by trees.

“———— The courteous forest show’d
 So just-conceived joy, that from each rising HURST,
 Where many a goodly oak had carefully been nurst,
 The sylvans in their songs their mirthful meeting tell.”
Poly-olbion, song 2.

WILE } Menage says—“GUILLE. C’est un vieux mot
 GUILLE } François, qui signifie tromperie. Les Anglois di-GUILT } sent encore à présent GILE et WILE, pour trompe-
 GULL } rie. Il est difficile de savoir s’ils ont emprunté ce mot de nous, ou si nous le tenons d’eux.” It is easily settled between them. Neither has borrowed this word from the other. They both hold it in common from their common Northern ancestors: though Mer. Casaubon would derive it from the Greek αἰολος. In the Anglo-Saxon, ƿiglian, Le-ƿiglian, Be-ƿiglian, means To conjure, To divine, consequently To practise cheat, imposture and enchantment.

WILE (from ƿiglian) and GUILLE (from Le-ƿiglian) is that by which any one is deceived.

GUILT is Le-ƿigled, Guiled, Guil’d, Guilt: the past participle of Le-ƿiglian: And to find GUILT in any one, is to find

¹ Minshew derives HEARSE from “Greek, αγοις, i. e. a lifting up: for the Hearse is a monument or emptie tombe erected or set up for the honourable memorie of the dead.”

Junius says—“Medii ævi scriptt. dicebatur Hersia, quod vulgo fortasse ita dictum ab A.-S. Ape, honor; vel ƿepian, laudare: quod in laudem honoremque defuncti erigatur.”

Skinner—“Nescio an a Teut. Hulse, siliqua: est enim cadaveris quasi exterior siliqua. Hoc Hulse, credo ortum ab A.-S. ƿelan, tegere, q. d. tegumentum.”

that he has been Guiled, or, as we now say, Be-guiled: as Wicked means Witched, or Be-witched. To pronounce GUILT is indeed to pronounce Wicked.

GULL is the past tense (formed in the usual manner, by the change of the characteristic letter) and means merely a person Guiled or Beguiled.

At this day, we make a wide distinction between GULL, the past tense, and GUILT, the past participle; because our modern notions of enchantment, sorcery, and witchcraft, are very different from the notions of those from whom we received the words. GULL therefore is used by us for Guiled or Beguiled (subaud. aliquem) without any allusion to witchcraft. But GUILT, being a technical Law-term, keeps its place in our legal proceedings, as the instigation of the Devil does; and with the same meaning.¹

F.—You seem to have confined yourself almost entirely to instances of the change of the characteristic letters I and Y. And in those you have abounded to satiety. But we know that the verbs with other characteristic letters change in the

¹ These words have exceedingly distressed our English Etymologists, —GUILTY, Minshew says, “a Belg. Gelden, i. e. luere, solve: ut Reus—Res enim Reorum petitur in iudicio.”

Junius—“Lýlban est reddere, solve. Atque ita gyltig vel giltie proprie dicetur, qui culpam commissam tenetur solve: vel ære vel in corpore.”

Skinner—“A verbo Lýlban, solve. Et hoc prorsus ex moribus priscorum Germanorum; qui quævis crimina, imo homicidium, et, quod vix credideris, etiam regum suorum cædem, multis pecuniariis expiabant.”

GULL—Mer. Casaubon derives, by a most far-fetched allusion, from γυλτος, pera militaris. Junius and Skinner repeat this; and have no other derivation to offer; except that Junius says—“Mihi tamen Angl. GULL non ita longe videtur abire a Scot. Culge: morari blando sermone, palpandoque demulcere.”

“Now him withhaldis the Phinitiane Dido
And culgeis him with slekit wordis sle.”

Douglas, booke 1. p. 34.

“And sche hir lang round nek bane bowand raith,
To gif thaym souck, can thaym culge bayth.”

Ibid., booke 8. p. 266.

“The cur or maists he haldis at smale auayle,
And culgeis spangeartis, to chace partrik or quale.”

same manner. Have not they also furnished the language with concealed participles, supposed to be substantives and adjectives?

H.—Surely. In great numbers.

FOOD } In Anglo-Saxon ƿod, ƿæt, are the past participle
FAT } of the verb Fedan, pascere, To Feed.

MILK } One and the same word differently pronounced MILCH } (either ch or k), is the past participle of the verb
Melcan, mulgere.

MEAT—In Anglo-Saxon Mæt (whatever is Eaten) is the past participle of the verb MATGAN, Merian, edere, To Eat.

MESS—Is the past participle of Merian, cibare, To furnish meat or food. In French Mets; In Italian Messo; from the same verb.

SCRAP—Is the past participle of Scpeopan, scalpere, radere, To Scrape. It means (any thing, something) scraped off.

OFFAL—The past participle of Feallan, Aƿeallan; as Skinner explains it—"quod decidit a mensa."

ORT—This word is commonly used in the plural; only because it is usually spoken of many vile things together. Shakespeare, with excellent propriety for his different purposes, uses it both in the singular and plural.

"Where should he haue this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender ORT of his remainder."—Timon of Athens, p. 94.

"The fractions of her faith, ORTS of her loue,
The fragments, Scraps, the Bits, and greazie Reliques
Of her ore-eaten faith, are bound to Diomed."

Troilus and Cressida, p. 102.

Where you may observe Orts, Scraps, Bits, Reliques, all participles.

Skinner says—"ORTS, parum deflexo sensu, a Teut. Ort, quadrans seu quarta pars: fort. olim quævis pars, seu portio."—Which derivation omits entirely the meaning of the word: for ORT is not applicable to every part or portion of a thing.

Lye says—"Vox est, agro Devonienſi, uſitatiffima: unde ſuſpicabar per pleroſque Angliæ comitatus diffuſam fuiſſe: et ex OUGHT (aliquid) corruptam, quod iis effertur ORT, GH in R pro more suo, mutato. At aliter sentire cœpi, cum incidissem in Hib. ORDA, fragmentum. Quod ut verum etymon non potui non amplecti."

This groundless derivation of Mr. Lye, which explains just nothing at all, and leaves us where we were, is by Johnson pronounced most reasonable: yet every fragment is not an ORT.

ORTS is, throughout all England, one of the most common words in our language; which has adopted nothing from the Irish, though we use two or three of their words, as Irish. ORTS is merely the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Opettan, turpare, vilefacere, deturpare. ORET, ORT means (any thing, something) made vile or worthless.

HEAT } In Anglo-Saxon Hæt, Hat, i. e. Heated; is the HOT } past participle of the verb Hætan, calefacere. HOT, as a participle, is sufficiently common: HEAT is rarely so used. Ben Johnson however so uses it in Sejanus, act 3.

"And fury ever boils more high and strong,
HEAT with ambition, than revenge of wrong."

WARM—Pæpm, Peapm, and Pypmed, i. e. Warmed, are the past tense and past participle of the verb Pypman, calefacere.

F.—What is LUKE-WARM or LEW-WARM? For I find it is spoken and written both ways. How does it differ from WARM?

"The beryes of iuniper or galbanum beaten to powder and dronke with LUKE WARMED wyne.—Byrth of Mankynde, fol. 29. p. 2.

"Ye maye use in the stede of wyne, LUKE WARME mylke."

Ibid. fol. 38. p. 2.

"Then shall ye geue it her with LUKE WARME water."

Ibid. fol. 50. p. 1.

"In the wynter with hote water, in the sommer with LUKE WARME water."—Ibid. fol. 55. p. 1.

"Quhare the vyle fleure euer LEW WARME was spred
With recent slauchter of the blude newlie schede."

Douglas, booke 8. p. 247.

"Besyde the altare blude sched and skalit newe Beand LEW WARME thare ful fast did reik."

Ibid. p. 243.

H.—LUKE WARM } The Anglo-Saxon Plæc, tepidus (which LEW WARM } we corruptly pronounce and write LUKE) is the past participle of Placian, tepere, tepescere. And LEW, in the Anglo-Saxon Plip and Plēop, is the past participle of Plipan, Plēopan, tepere, fovere. Nor need we travel with Skinner to the Greek λυω; “quia tepor humores resolvit et cutim aperit:” nor with Junius to χλιαρος from χλαινω.

To say LUKE or LEW WARM is merely saying WARM-WARM. And that it is a modern pleonasm, the following passage in the third chapter of the Apocalyps will, I think, convince you.

In the modern Version it stands:—

“I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then, because thou art LUKE-WARM, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth.”

In the old Version, which is called Wickliffe’s, it is thus given:—

“I woot thy werkis, for nether thou art cold nether thou art hote. I wolde thou were cold or hoot, but for thou art LEW, and nether cold nether hoot, I shal bigynne for to caste the out of my mouth.”

In the Version of Edward the sixth, it runs thus:—

“I know thy workes, that thou art nether colde nor hotte: I wolde thou were colde or hote. So then, because thou arte BETWENE BOTH, and nether cold nor hote, I wyll spewe thee out of my mouth.”

PLOUGH (A.-S. plōg and plou). Is the past participle of Plezzan, incumbere.

“No man sendinge his hond to the PLOUG, and biholdinge agen, is able to the rewme of God.”—Luke, cap. ix. v. 62.

Our English verb To Ply, is no other than plezzan.

“Ppeort ne beo hunta. ne hafecepe. ne tæflepe, ac plezze (incumbat) on his bocum.”—Canones sub Edgare, R. 64.

CHILL }
COOL } In Loues Labours Lost, p. 144. Shakespeare uses
COLD } the word To Keele.

“Then nightly sings the staring owle

To-whit, to-who,

A merie note,

While greasie Ione doth KEELE the pot.”

On this passage Dr. Farmer tells us—“To Kcale the pot, is, to cool; but in a particular manner: It is—To stir the pottage with the ladle, to prevent the boiling over.”

Mr. Steevens too thinks that Keele means cooling, in a particular manner. But his manner differs from Dr. Farmer’s.—He says—“Mr. Lambe observes, in his notes on the ancient metrical history of the battle of Flodden, that it is a common thing in the North, for a maid servant to take out of a boiling pot a wheen, i. e. a small quantity, viz. a porringer or two of broth, and then to fill up the pot with cold water. The broth thus taken out is called the Keeling wheen. In this manner greasy Ioan Keeled the pot.”

That Mr. Malone should repeat all this, is nothing wonderful; it is perfectly to his taste. But it is really lamentable, that two such intelligent men as Dr. Farmer and Mr. Steevens should expose themselves thus egregiously. Who, or what, informed them, that To Keele meant To stir with a ladle, or, To take out a porringer or two?

There are very numerous instances of the use of the word To Keel, without the least allusion to ladles or porringers.

“Sende Lazarus, that he dippe the laste part of his fynger in watir and KELE my tunge.”—Luke, cap. 16. v. 24.

“To the louers Onide wrote,
And taught, if loue be to hote,
In what maner it shulde AKELE”

Gower, lib. 4. fol. 77. p. 2. col. 2.

In the Castel of Helth, by Syr Thomas Elyot, book 3. fol. 73. he says—“Onyons, lekes, fynally all thynges whyche heateth to moche, KELETH to moch, or drieth to moche.” And Malone himself knew, that in Marston’s What you will, was the following passage,—“Faith, Doricus, thy braine boyles; Keel it, Keel it, or all the fat’s i’ the fire.”

So in the Vision of Pierce Ploughman,

“Vesture, from CHEYLE to saue.”

Pass. 2. fol. 4. p. 2.

“And the carfull may crye and carpen at the gate
Both a hungerd and a furste, and for CHELS quake.”

Pass. 11. fol. 46. p. 1.

“Bothe hungry and a CALE.”

Pass. 19. fol. 103. p. 1.

“And syth they chosen CHELE and cheitif pouertie

Let them chewe as they chosen.”

Pass. 21. fol. 115. p. 1.

“ Do almesse for them, and by almes dede, by masses syngynge, and holy prayers, refresshe them in theyr paynes, and KELE the fyre about theym.”—Diues and Pauper, 9th Comm. cap. 11.

“ To KELE somewhat theyr hygh courage.” Fabian, parte 5. ch. 140.

In the above instances can there be any employment for the ladle or porringer?

In truth, the verb To Keel, i. e. The Anglo-Saxon Lelan, refrigerare, is a general term; confined to and signifying no particular manner. And of this verb Lelan; CHILL [A.-S. Lele) and COOL (A.-S. Lol) are the past tense: and Loleð, Lol'd, COLD (A.-S. Lealð) is the past participle.

NESH } Minshew derives NICE from the Latin Nitidus: Junius
NICE } from the French Niais. It is merely the Anglo-Saxon þneꝛc, differently pronounced and written; and is the past participle of þneꝛcian, mollire.

“ Mine herte for joye doth bete
Him to beholde, so is he godely freshe,
It semeth for love his herte is tendre and NESSHE.”

Court of Love, in Urry's Edition of Chaucer.

“ So that no step of hym was sene in the NESSHE fenne or more that he passed thorough.”—Fabian, parte 6. ch. 172.

SLEET—Is the past participle ple-eð, pleeð, pleet; of plean, projicere; and has no connexion (as Johnson imagined) with the Danish Slet, which means smooth, polished.

“—— Flying, behind them, shot
Sharp SLEET of arrowy show'rs against the face
Of their pursuers.” Paradise Regained, book 3. v. 324.

HOAR—Anglo-Sax. þap, is the past tense and past participle of þapian, canescere.

“ They toke HORED brede in theyr scryppes, and soure wyne in theyr botels, and loded asses with olde HORED brede in olde sackes.”

Diues and Pauper, 2d Comm. cap. 20.

ADDLE } Though Mer. Casaubon and Junius would send us
AIL } for AIL, to αλυειν, mœrore affici, or to αλγειν do-
IDLE } lere; and for IDLE, to ιθλος, nugæ; and for ILL,
ILL } to the Greek ιλλος, strabo; or even to the Hebrew;
I am persuaded that these are only one word, differently pronounced and written: and that it is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Ȧidlian, ægrotare, exinanire, irritum facere, corrumpere.

“If you loue an ADDLE egge, as well as you loue an IDLE head, you would eate chickens i’ th’ shell.”—Troilus and Cressida.

ADDLE-pated, and ADDLE-brained, are common expressions.

“You said that IDLE weeds are fast in growth.” Richard 3rd. p. 186.

“ILL weids waxes weil.”—Ray’s Scottish Proverbs, p. 295.

ADDLE becomes AIL, as IDLE becomes ILL by sliding over the D in pronunciation.

DAM } The past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dæ-
DUMB } man, Demman, obturare, obstruere, To Dam.

“Now will I DAM up this thy yawning mouth
For swallowing the treasure of the realm.”

2nd Part Henry 6. p. 137. col. 2.

As we have already seen that Barren means Barred; and that Blind means Blinned or Stopped; so DUMB means obturatum, obstructum, Dammed. And therefore, when those who have been DUMB recover their speech, their mouths are said to be opened; the DAM being, as it were, removed.

Though these three words, Barren, Blind, and Dumb, are now by custom confined to their present respective application; i. e. to the womb, the eyes, and the mouth; they were originally general terms, and generally applicable; as all the other branches of those verbs, To Bar, To Blin, and To Dam, still are: and, having all one common meaning, viz. Obstruction, if custom had so pleased, they might, in their application, very fairly have changed places.

So when B. Jonson, in his Poetaster, act 1. sc. 2. says,—“Nay, this ’tis to have your ears Dam’d up to good counsell.”—He might have said—“This ’tis to have DUMB ears; or, ears Dumb to good counsell.”

In Antony and Cleopatra, p. 344. Shakespeare writes,

“———— So he nodded,
And soberly did mount an arme-gaunt steede,
Who neigh’d so hyc, that what I would haue spoke,
Was beastly DUMBE by him.”

Mr. Theobald here alters the text, and instead of DUMBE, reads DUMB'D. This reading Mr. Malone approves, adopts, and calls a correction. But there needs here no alteration. DUMBE is the past tense of Dæman, Demman, and means Dammed, i. e. Obstructed, or stopped.—“What I would have spoke, was, in a beastly manner, obstructed by him.”

DUMB was formerly written DOME and DUM; without the B.

“He became so confuse he cunneth not loke,
And as DOME as death.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 11. fol. 47. p. 2.

“I tell you that which you yourselues do know,
Shew you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor poor DUM mouths,
And bid them speake for me.” Julius Cæsar, p. 122. col. 2.

And Junius, whose authority may be much better relied on than his judgement, tells us, and bids us remark it—“Quod in Cantabrigiensis publicæ bibliothecæ codice MSto melioris notæ, Matth. xii. 22. Luc. i. 22. dum scribitur.”

DULL } DULL (or as it is in the Anglo-Saxon, ðol) hebes; is DOLT } derived by Mer. Casaubon from δουλος, servus. “Notissima (says he) est Aristotelis opinio, δουλους esse a natura, qui scilicet κοινωνουσι του λογου τοσουτον, όσον αισθανεσθαι, αλλα μη εχειν: quos etiam ad corporis ministeria natos a bestiis usu μικρον παραλλαττειν sancit.”

Skinner would derive DULL from ðolian, pati, sustinere, tolerare;—“Qui enim obtusi sensus sunt, injurias et quaslibet vexationes æquiore animo patiuntur.” But DULL, ðol, is the regular past tense of ðpelian, ðpolan, hebere, hebetare. And DOLT, i. e. Dulled (or ðol-ed, ðol'd, ðolt) is the past participle of the same verb.

“Oh gull, oh DOLT, as ignorant as durt.”—Othello, p. 337.

Though the verb, To Dull, is now out of fashion, it was formerly in good use.

“I DULLE under your disciplyne.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 143. p. 1. col. 1.

“For though the best harpoure on lyue
Wold on the best sowned ioly harpe
That euer was, with al his fyngers fyue
Touche aye o stryngge, or aye o warble harpe,
Were his nayles poynted neuer so sharpe,
It shulde make euery wight To DULLE.”

Troylus, boke 2. fol. 168. p. 1 col. 2.

“For elde, that in my spirite DULLETH me,
Hath of endyting al the subtelte
Welnigh berafte out of my remembraunce.”

Complaynt of Venus, fol. 344. p. 1. col. 2.

“Myrth and gladnesse conforteth men in Goddes seruyce, and heuynesse DULLETH and letteth all maner lykinges.”

Diues and Pauper, 3d Comm. cap. 18.

“Her syght sholde haue be derked, and her herynge sholde haue DULLED more and more.”

A Morning Remembraunce of Margarete Countesse of Rychemonde.
By J. Fysshier, Bishop of Rochester.

[“I demaund one thyng; whan myne understandyng is DULLED in that I haue to dooe, and whan my memory is troubled in that I haue to determyne, and whan my bodye is compassed with dolours, and whan my heart is charged with thoughtes, and whan I am without knowlege, and whan I am set about with perils; wher can I be better accompanied than with wise men, or els redyng among bokes?”

Marcus Aurelius, Printed by Berthelet.
London, 1559. sect. 30.]

“Sluggyshnes DULLETH the body.”

“Sorowe DULLETH the wylle.”

Castell of Helth, fol. 44. p. 2. and fol. 64. p. 2.

[“Who am myself attach’d with weariness,
To the DULLING of my spirits.”

The Tempest, Malone’s edit. vol. 1. part 2. p. 65.]

“As well his lord may stoope t’ advise with him,
And be prescribed by him, in affaires
Of highest consequence, when he is DULL’D
Or wearied with the lesse.”

B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady, act 1. sc. 7.

“—— — Cunning calamity,
That others gross wits uses to refine,
When I most need it, DULS the edge of mine.”

Beaumont and Fletcher, Honest Man’s Fortune.

[“Sir Martin. There’s five shillings for thee: What, we must encourage good wits sometimes.

Warner. Hang your white pelf: Sure, sir, by your largess, you mi-stake me for Martin Parker, the ballad-maker; your covetousness has offended my muse, and quite DULL’D her.”

Sir Martin Mar-all: By Dryden, act 5. sc. 1.]

GRUB (ΓΚΡΟΒ) The past tense and therefore past participle of ΓΚΛΩΒΑΝ, fodere.

GRUDGE, written by Chaucer GRUTCHE, GRUCHE, and in some copies GROCHE.

“ A lytel yre in his herte ylafte

He gan to GRUTCHEN and blamen it a lyte.”

Reues Prol. fol. 15. p. 1. col. 2.

“ At thende I had the best in eche degre

By sleight or force, or by some maner thing,

As by contynuall murmure or GRUTCHYNG.”

Wife of Bathes Prol. fol. 36. p. 1. col. 1.

“ What ayleth you to GRUTCHE thus and grone ? ”—Ibid. col. 2.

“ And sayne the Pope is not worth a pease

To make the people ayen him GRUCHE ”—or GROCHE.

Ploughmans Tale, fol. 99. p. 1. col. 2.

Mer. Casaubon derives this word from γογγυζω, murmuro.

Minshew, from the Latin grunnire.

Junius, from γρυζειν, hiscere, mutire.

Skinner, from the French Gruger, briser. And Gruger from cruciari: “ quia qui alicui invidet, aliena felicitate cruciatur.”

S. Johnson will have it either from the French Gruger, or from the Welch Grugnach, or from the Scotch Grunigh, or—rather from Grudgeons!—“ Grudgeons being (as he says) the part of corn that remains after the fine meal has passed the sieve.”

A GRUDGE is the past participle of Ὁπεοριαν (Γε-ἡπεοριαν) Ὁπεοριαν, Γε-ἡπεοριαν, dolere, ingemiscere, pœnitere.

DRUDGE—(Dpooz, Dpuze) The past tense and past participle of Dpeozan, Γε-δpeozan, agere, tolerare, pati, sufferre. Dpeozend, the present participle.

SMOOTH—(jmaëð) The past participle of jmeðian, polire, planare.

Junius derives this word from σμαω, σμειω, σμω: and Skinner from μαδος.

MAD } is merely Mætt, Mæð (D for T), the past tens MATTO } and past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb M e tan, somniare, To Mete, To Dream.

The verb, To Mete, was formerly in common use.

“ I fell eftsones a slepe, and sodainly me METTE.”¹

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 20. fol. 103. p. 2.

“ And eke I sayd, I METTE of him all nyght
 And al was fals, I Dremed of him right naught.”

Wife of Bathes Prol. fol. 36. p. 2. col. 2.

“ And whan that he in chambre was alone,
 He downe on his beddes fete him sette,
 And firste he gan to sike, and efte to grone,
 And thought aye on her so withouten lette,
 That as he satte and woke,² his spirite METE
 That he her saugh.”—Troylus, boke 1. fol. 159. p. 1. col. 1.

“ As he satte and woke, his spirite METE that he her saugh.”

—This I take to be a clear, though not a physiological, description of Madness.

This is not the place to enter into a physiological inquiry concerning the nature of madness and of dreaming; in order to shew the propriety of the name, as I have explained it. But I may give you a short extract from the ingenious observations on Insanity, by Mr. John Haslam, 1798.

“ Some who have perfectly recovered from this disease, and who are persons of good understanding and liberal education, describe the state they were in, as resembling a Dream.”

¹ [Mette is here used impersonally, as the case of the pronoun shows. See the instances in Lye, and the Additional Note on English Impersonal verbs.—ED.]

² [“ *Dubbio così s'aggira
 Da un torbido riposo
 Chi si destò talor :
 Che desto ancor delira
 Fra le sognate forme ;
 Che non sa ben se dorme,
 Non sa se veglia ancor.*”

Metastasio, La Clemenza di Tito, att. 2. sc. 7.

“ —gli amanti
 Sognano ad occhi aperti.”—Ibid. Zenobia, att. 2. sc. 1.]

And our valuable friend Mr. Rogers, in his beautiful poem, The Pleasures of Memory, has this note :

“ When sleep has suspended the organs of sense from their office, memory not only supplies the mind with images, but assists in their combination. And even in madness itself, when the soul is resigned over to the tyranny of a distempered imagination, she revives past perceptions, and awakens that train of thought which was formerly most familiar.”

The Italian MATTO, is this same Anglo-Saxon participle Mætt, with the Italian terminating vowel. The decided opinion of Menage and Junius, that MATTO is derived from the Greek ματαιος, is overruled in my mind, by the consideration of the time when the word MATTO was first introduced into the Italian language: for the Greek derivatives, in that language, proceed to it through the Latin. And in the Latin there is nothing which resembles MATTO.

SMUG¹—is the past participle of Smægan, jmeagan, deliberare, studere, considerare. Applied to the person or to dress, it means studied; that on which care and attention have been bestowed.

“ I will die brauely, like a SMUGGE bridegroom.”—Lear, p. 304.]

“ A beggar, that was us'd to come so SMUG upon the mart.”

Merchant of Venice, p. 173.

“ A young SMUG, handsome holiness has no fellow.”

B. and Fletcher, The Pilgrim.

“ Fie, Sir, so angry upon your wedding day !

Go, SMUG yourself, the maid will come anon.”

B. and Fletcher, Women Pleas'd.

“ Go in, and dress yourself SMUG, and leave the rest to me.”

Wycherly, Love in a Wood, act 4. sc. 1.

PROUD (Anglo-Saxon Ppūt) The past participle of Ppȳ-tian, superbire.

SAFE—formerly written SAFFE; The past participle of the verb To Save.

¹ “ E literis vocis κοσμος fieri potuit σμοχος; atque inde Smuck. Sed Italis Smoccare est emungere: quasi Exmucare. Ita nimirum solent uti s, tanquam præpositione inseparabili, ex Se Latino; quasi Semucare, mukum separare. Sed tam multis non est opus: cum facillima derivatione peti possit ex σμάω, σμεω, στω, σμηχω, abstergo, detergo.” —Junius. [See note on Snite, p. 395.—ED.]

"He hir wymple fonde blodie,
And woude a best had hir slayne,
Where as hym ought be right fayne,
For she was SAFFE right beside."

Gower, lib. 2. fol. 56. p. 2. col. 1.

"Than his dyscypos sayd to Cryste, Lorde, who may than be SAVE?"
Dives and Pauper, Of Holy Pouerte, cap. 5.

Low } Low (in Dutch Laag) is the past participle of the Lown } Anglo-Saxon verb Lacgan, jacere, cubare.
Lowt }

Of this past tense (according to their common custom) our ancestors made the verb To Low: or To make Low.

"Fortune hath euer be muable,
And maie no while stonde stable,
For nowe it bieth, nowe it LOWETH."

Gower, lib. 8. fol. 177. p. 1. col. 1.

"The god of Loue, ah benedicite,
Howe mighty and howe great a lorde is he!
For he can make of lowe hertes hye,
And of hye lowe.
He can make within a lytel stounde
Of sicke folke, hole, fresshe and sounde,
And of hole he can make seke.
Shortly al that euer he wol he may,
Agaynst hym dare no wyght say nay,
For he can glad and greue whom hym lyketh,
And who that he wol, he LOWETH or syketh."

Cuckowe and Nyghtyngale, fol. 350. p. 2. col. 2.

"The prayer of hym that LOWETH hym in his prayer, thyrleth the clowdes."—Dives and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 15.

"Whan he is waxen and roted in pryde and in mysuse of lyuynge, it is full harde to LOWE hym or to amende hym."

Ibid. 4th Comm. cap. 10.

"They lyue forth in pryde and not LOWE them to God, ne pray to God for helpe."—Ibid. 5th Comm. cap. 3.

"For al this Adam repented hym not, ne wolde axe mercy, ne LOWE him."—Ibid. 6th Comm. cap. 25.

Of this verb To Low, the past participle is indifferently either Low-en, Low'n, LOWN; or Low-ed, Low'd, LOWT, (T for D.)

"We should have both Lord and LOWN, if the peenish baggage would but giue way to customers."

Pericles Prince of Tyre, act 4. sc. 6.

"—— I haue belyed a lady,
The princeesse of this country, and the ayre on 't
Reuengingly enfeeble me, or could this carle,
A very drudge of natures, haue subdu'de me
In my profession? Knighthoods and Honors (borne
As I weare mine) are titles but of scorne.
If that thy gentry (Britaine) go before
This LOWT, as he exceeds our lords, the oddes
Is, that we scarce are men, and you are goddes."

Cymbeline, p. 392. col. 1.

You will observe that, of this participle LOWT, we have again made another verb, viz. To Lowt, To do or To bear one's self as the Lowed person, i. e. the LOWT, does.

SLACK	} (in the Anglo-Saxon plæc , pleac , plæg , pleap , pleap , plap) are all the same past tense and therefore past participle (differently pronounced and written) of the Anglo-Saxon verb pleacian , pleacyan , placian (a broad) tardare , remittere , relaxare , pigrescere .
SLOUCH
SLOUGH
SLUG
SLOW
SLOVEN
SLUT

"The noblest of the Greekes that there were
Upon her sholders caryed the bere
With SLAKE pace."—Knyghtes Tale, fol. 10. p. 2. col. 2.

SLOUCH, plæc—(CH for K) i. e. a slow (pace.)

SLOUGH, plæg—(GH for CH) i. e. slow (water.)

SLUG, plæg—(G for K) i. e. slow (reptile.)

SLOW, plap—(W for G)

Such changes of pronunciation are perpetual and uniform throughout the whole language.

SLOW-EN, SLOUEN, SLOVEN; and SLOW-ED, SLOW'D, SLOUD,

SLOUT, SLUT; are the past participles of the verb Slapan, To Slow, i. e. 'To make Slow, or cause to be Slow.¹ There is no reason, but the fashion, for the distinction which is at present made between SLOVEN and SLUT, by applying the former of these words to males only, and the latter only to females: and we are sure that distinction did not prevail formerly: for Gower and Chaucer apply SLUT to males.

“ Among these other of SLOUTES kinde
Which all labour set behinde,
And hateth all besines,
There is yet one, which Idelnes
Is cleped.
In wynter doth he nought for colde,
In somer maie he nought for hete;
So, whether that he frese or sweto,
Or be he in, or be he out,
He woll ben ydell all about:
For he ne woll no trauaile take
To ride for his ladies sake.” Gower, lib. 3. fol. 69. p. 1. col. 1.

“ Why is thy lorde so SLOTLYCHE,² I the pray,
And is of power better clothes to bey?”
Prol. of Chanons Yeman, fol. 59. p. 2. col. 2.

LORE—The past participle of Læpan, docere.

HOMÉ—The past participle of Þæman, coire.

HONE—(petrified wood) the past participle of Þænan, lapidescere.

[GOWN—from Þýnan, Le-hýnan, humiliare, To bring down to the ground. Past participle Lehon, Lehun. N.B. Anglo-Saxon substantive Þýnð, i. e. that which humbleth, or bringeth down to the ground.

¹ [“ Lookt on by ech the stately ladie goes,
But lookes on none, and to the king she came,
Nor, for he angry seemes, one steppe she SLOWES.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, Translated by R. C.
p. 58. cant. 2. st. 19.

“ Mirata da ciascun passa, e non mira
L' altera donna, e iunanzi al re se 'n viene.
Nè, perche irato il veggia, il piè ritira.”]

² Mr. Urry reads SLOTTISH; and Mr. Tyrwhitt, SLUTTISH.

Italian, GONNA. Menage says well—"Lo tengo d' origine Tedesca ; leggendosi in Luitprando Gunata, id est, pellicea Saxonia. L' ebbero gl' Italiani da' Longabardi ; e i Greci moderni da gl' Italiani."]

LOAN—The past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Þlænan, Lænan, To Lend, formerly written To Lene.

"Yf a man LENE awaye an other mannes good without assent of him."—"In the LENYNGE he useth an other mannes good ayenst his wyl."—Diucs and Pauper, 7th Comm. cap. 8.

"Yf wyunnyng come frely to the LENER for his LENYNGE without couenaunt."—"Yeue ye your LONE hopynge noo wyunnyng."—"The usurer selleth togydre the thyng that he LENETH."—Ibid. cap. 24.

FOAM—fæm ; the past participle of Fæman, spumare.¹

BROAD
BOARD
BRID
BIRD

} are the past tense and past participle of Bpædan, dilatare, propalare, dispalare, ampliare.

FOWL. As Bird, so FOWL, (A.-S. ƿugel), by a similar but not quite so easy and common a metathesis, is the past participle of FlioƷan, ƿioƷan, ƿioƷlan, volare.

SHOCK—The past participle of Scacan, To Shake.

"And after that himselfe he SHOKE Wherof that all the halle quake."

Gower, lib. 6. fol. 139. p. 1. col. 2.

"In the dyenge of Ihesu the erth groned and SHOKE."

Nycodemus Gospell, ch. 8.

"Whan I herde the commaundement of his worde, I trembled and SHOKE for drede."—Ibid. ch. 15.

"The erthe SHOKE so and trembled that they Sonke downe in to helle."—Diues and Pauper, 6th Comm. cap. 16.

"The sterry heuen me thought SHOKE with the shout."

Skelton, p. 57.

¹ "FOME, quibusdam videtur dicta quasi Vome ; quod sit quasi quidam vomitus aquæ violento motu concitatae ac veluti ferventis. Ubi notandum quod Chaucero in Angl. translatione Boethianæ Consolationis, Vomes sunt spumæ. 'Setiger spumis humeros notavit.' 'The bristled Bore marked with Vomes the shulders of Hercules.'"—Junius.

Skinner thinks fæm is from the Latin Fumus. "Spuma enim rarens instar fumi vel nebulae est ; certe proximum ei raritatis gradum obtinet."

“ The frere arose,
 But I suppose
 Amased was his hed,
 He SPOKE his eares,
 And from grete feares
 He thought hym well a fled.”

Sir T. More's Workes.

DOOM—The past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb De-man, judicare, censere, decernere, To Deem.

“ Whan I Deme DOMES, and do as trouth teacheth.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 16. fol. 77. p. 1.

“ Than sayd Pilate, Take hym in to your synagoge, and DEME thare on hym your lawe.”—Nycodemus Gospel, ch. 3.

“ God ruleth, DEMETH and gouverneth all mankynde, &c.—whoos DOMES and ordenaunces passee mannes wytte.”

Diues and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 19.

“ None of us can tel what deth we be DEMED to.”

Sir T. More, De Quatuor Novissimis, p. 84.

ROOF—In the Anglo-Saxon Ūrof, the past participle of Ūræfnan, sustinere.

Minshew, Junius and Skinner derive it from the Greek οὐροφος.

WOOF } are the past tense and past participle of Ŵefan, texere, WEFT } obvolvere, tegere. To Weave.

PROOF } The past tense and past participle of the verb
REPROOF } To Preve and To Repreve.

“ Euery scruaunt is bounden to warne his lorde of the harme that is done to his lorde in his offyce for good fayth and saluacyon of his owne persone, &c. yf he can PREUE them he is bounde to telle them to his lorde, yf his lord is pacyent and resonable and not to cruell, and yf he cannot PREUE them he is not bounde to telle them.”

Diues and Pauper, 2d Comm. cap. 13.

“ Commende vertues and despyse vyces, Chese truthe and lette falsehode, commende heuen blysse, and ghostly thynges and REPREUE pompe and pryde of this worlde.”—Ibid. 5th Comm. cap. 10.

BREED }
BROOD } The past participle of Bredan, fovere.
BRIDE }
BRAT }

SAW—(Any thing, something) SAID. The past tense and past participle of Sægan, reġan, reċgan, dicere, To Say.

“Experyence accordeth with this SAWE of the apostle.”

Diues and Pauper, Of Holy Pouerte, cap. 1.

“By comon SAWES of clerkes God in the fyrste commaundement forbedeth thre pryncypal synnes.”

Ibid. 1st Comm. cap. 37.

“Than they that shal be dampned shall saye a SAWE of sorowe that neuer shall haue ende.”—Ibid. 8th Comm. cap. 15.

“Some doctours of Law

Some learned in other SAW.”

Skelton, p. 203.

[“So Love is lord of all the world by right,
And rules their creatures by his powrfull SAW.”

Spenser, Colin Clouts come home againe.]

“Yea from the table of my memory
He wipe away all triviall fond records,
All SAWES of bookes.”

Hamlet, p. 258.

“When all aloud the winde doth blow,
And coffing drownes the parsons SAW.”

Loues Labours Lost, p. 144.

[So SUCH TALIS QUALIS	}	So (for SA) the past participle of reġan . So, i. e.
		in the SAID manner.
	}	SUCH—So EACH: i. e. in the said manner Each .

TALIS and QUALIS are compound words: the first part of these compounds are the Greek τε and και, which both signify And:—τε-illius—και-illius, i. e. and of this—and of that.]

TALE } A TALE, the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon
RE-TAIL } verb Tellan, something told. To sell by TALE,
i. e. by numeration, not by weight or measure, but by the number told.—RETAIL, told over again.

HAND } HINT, something taken. HAND, that limb by HINT } which things are taken. The past tense and past HANDLE } participle of Ĥentan, capere, To take hold of.

“And with that word, his scheland swerd als tyte HYNT out of scheith, the cabyll in tua gan smyte.”

Douglas, booke 4. p. 120.

“This sayand with richt hand has scho HYNT
The hare, and cuttis in tua or that scho stynt.”

Ibid. p. 124.

So HANDLE or Hand-del, is a small part taken hold of.

“He would gladly cathe holde of some small HANDELL to kepe hys money fast, rather then help his frendes in their necessitie.”

Sir T. More, Supplicacion of Soules, p. 330.

FANG } FANG, the past tense and past participle of Fen-
FINGER } gan, capere, prehendere.

FINGER, i. e. fengen, quod prehendit.

SPEECH—Any thing spoken, and the faculty by which any thing is spoken. The past tense and past participle rpæc, rpæce, of rpecan, To Speak. The indifferent pronunciation of CH or CK pervades the whole language.

FETCH, (A.-S. fæc) is the past tense and past participle of Feccan, fraude acquirere, adducere.

[“Yet since so obstinate grew their desire,
On a new FETCH (t'accord them) he relide.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, cant. 5. st. 72.]

THACK } (A.-S. ḥac) is the past tense and past participle
THATCH } of ḥecan, tegere.

“Thy turphie mountaines, where liue nibling sheepe,
And flat medes THETCHD with stouer, them to kepe.”

Tempest, act 4. sc. 1. p. 14.

“A well-built gentleman ; but poorly THATCHT.”

B. and Fletcher, Wit without Money, act 1. sc. 1.

LACE
LATCH
LATCHET
LUCK
CLUTCH
CLUTCHES

LACE and LATCH are the past tense and past participle of Læccan, Læcgan, Læccan, prehendere, apprehendere.

“A stronger than I shal come aftir me, of whom I, kneelinge, am not worthi to unbynde the LACE of hise shoon.”—Mark, ch. 1.

“There cometh one mightier than I after me, the LATCHET of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose.”—Ibid. v. 7.

“His hatte Hinge at hys backe by a LACE.”

Prol. to Chanons Yeoman, fol. 59. p. 1. col. 2.

[“Therewith in haste his helmet gan UNLACE.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 3. st. 37.

"There the fond lie, entangled, struggled long,
Himselfe to free thereout ; but all in vaine.
For, striving more, the more in LACES strong
Himselfe he tide, and wrapt his winges twaine
In lymie snares." Spenser's Muirpotmos, st. 54.]

The LATCH of a door, or that by which the door is caught, latched, or held, is often likewise called a catch.

"If thou wilt be gracious to do good as the gospel teachith,
And biloue the among low men, so shalt thou LATCH grace."
Vision of Pierce Ploughman, pass. 7. fol. 34. p. 2

"As who so layeth lynes for to LATCHE foules." Ibid. fol. 26. p. 1.

"The same I say forsoth, by al such priestes,
That haue nether cunning ne kynne, but a crowne one,
And a title a tale of nought, to liue by at his mischife ;
He hath more beleue, I leue, to LATCH through crown
Cure than for kennynge." Ibid. pass. 12. fol. 57. p. 2.

"And whan the find and the flesh forth with the worlde
Manacen behinde me my frute for to Fetche,
Than liberum arbitrium LATCHETH the first polante."
Ibid. pass. 17. fol. 87. p. 2.

"What shepe that is full of wulle
Upon his backe thei tose and pulle"
Whyle ther is any thyng to pille, &c.
Whiche is no good sheperdes dede,
And upon this also men sayn
That fro the Lease, whiche is plaine,
In to the breres thei forcatche,
Here of for that thei wolden LACHE
With suche duressa, and so bereue
That shal upon the thornes leue
Of wool, whiche the brere hath tore." Gower, Prol. fol. 3. p. 1.

"As Ouid in his boke recordeth
How Polyphemus whilom wrought,
When that he Galathe besought
Of loue, whiche he maie not LATCHE."
Ibid. lib. 2. fol. 27. p. 2. col. 2.

"Of love which he maie not LATCHE ; i. e." says Skinner,
"amoris quem dimittere non potest : amoris sc. inextinguibilis. a Fr. G. Lascher, laxare, remittere. Vir Rev. dictum putat pro Catch. Verum quoniam iste metaplasmus nusquam, quod sciam, in Germ. et recentioribus dialectis occurrit, mallem secundum etymon petere a Fr. G. Laisser, relinquere : i. e. Amor qui relinqui seu demitti nequit : vel a Teut. et Belg. Leschen, extinguere, delere : i. e. Amor, ut dictum est supra, inextinguibilis et indelebilis.

Skinner's mistake in the etymology of the word To Latch, caused his mistake in the meaning of the preceding lines ; in which Gower does not speak of the love of Polyphemus ; but of the love of Galathea, which he besought, and could not get, could not take hold of, could not Latch.

"Loue wyl none other byrde catche,
Though he set eyther nette or LACHE."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 127. p. 2. col. 2.

"Thre other thynges that great solace Doth to hem that be in my LACE." Ibid. fol. 133. p. 1. col. 2.

"So are they caught in lones LACE." Ibid. fol. 144. p. 1. col. 2.

"Loue that hath the so faste Knytte and bounden in his LACE." Ibid. p. 2. col. 2.

["The pumie stones I hastily hent,
And threw ; but nought awayled :
From bough to bough he lepped light,
And oft the pumies LATCHED."

Spenser : Shepherds Calender, March.

"Which when the kiddo stouped downe to catch,
He popt him in, and his basket did LATCH." Ibid. May.]

"——— I haue words
That would be howl'd out in the desert ayre,
Where hearing should not LATCH them."

Macbeth, act 4. sc. 3. p. 147.

Junius, concurring with Minsheu, says—"LATCH magnam videtur habere affinitatem cum B. Letse vel Litse, nexus, laqueolus, quo aliquid continetur ne excidat. • M. Casaubonus Angl. Latch per metathesin profluxisse putat ex αγκυλιον."

Skinner and Lye concur that it is—"satis manifeste a Lat. Laqueus."

"LAEQUEUS Nunnesio placet esse a λυγος, id est, vitex, salix ; ut mutetur u in a. Malim a Λατ, quod fraudem notat, Festo teste. Vel ab Hebræo."—G. I. Vossius.

Isaac Vossius dissents from his father, and says it is—"omnino a κλωος."—I am persuaded that the Latin La- queus itself (as well as the Italian Laccio) is this same past participle Lacc or Lac̃ of Læccean, Læc̃zan.

Luck is derived by Minshew, "a λαχες, i. e. Sors, fortuna." By Junius—"a B. Geluck, quod valde affine est Græco γλυκυ, dulce; quod nihil mortalibus videatur suavius, quam negotia sua bene feliciterque administrare." "Aliter de vocabuli etymologia M. Casaubon, 'λαρχανω, sortior, sortito obtineo. Το λαχων, quod sorte obtigit. Inde Luck et Luckie. Quamquam dubito utrum ex eadem sint origine, et non potius Luckie sit ex λευκος, candidus, albus.' "

But Luck (good or bad) is merely the same participle, and means (something, any thing) caught. Instead of saying that a person has had good Luck, it is not uncommon to say,—he has had a good catch.

CLUTCH is also the past participle of Le-læccean, capere, arripere.

"Is this a dagger which I see before me,

The handle toward my hand? Come, let me CLUTCH thee."

Macbeth, act 2. sc. 1. p. 136. col. 1.

"But age with his stealing steps

Hath caught me in his CLUTCH."

Hamlet, p. 277.

So CLUTCHES, i. e. Clutchers (Gelatchers): as Fangs and Fingers from Fengan, and Hand from Hentan. Though Junius would persuade us that they are—"Hamatō atque aduncæ ferarum volucrumque prædatricum unguis: a B. Klutsen, quater, concutere: item Kletsen, gravi ac resono ictu percutere."

["But all in vaine: his woman was too wise

Ever to come into his CLOUCH againe."

Færie Queene, book 3. cant. 10. st. 20.

"And in his hand an huge long staffe he held,

Whose top was arm'd with many an yron hook,

Fit to catch hold of all that he could weld,

Or in the compasse of his CLOUCHES tooke."

Ibid. book 5. cant. 9. st. 11.]

HANK	}	One and the same word, only with a different final pronunciation, common throughout the language, either of K, CH, or GE.
HAUNCH
HINGE

Minshew derives HAUNCH from αγκυλος. Junius from αγκων; “quod non modo cubitum, sed quemlibet flexum significat:” Skinner from αγκη: Menage, the Italian Anca, from αγκων: S. Johnson says—“HINGE or Hingle from Hangle or Hang.”—I believe no one ever before saw or heard of Hingle and Hangle. All the three words however are merely the past participle of the verb Hangan, pendere, To Hang.

To have a HANK upon any one, is, to have a hold upon him; or to have something Hank, Hankyd, Hanged, or Hung upon him.

The HAUNCH, the part by which the lower limbs are Hankyd or Hanged upon the body or trunk. Hence also the French Hanche, and the Italian and Spanish Anca.

HINGE—That upon which the door is Hung, Heng, Hyng, or Hynge; the verb being thus differently pronounced and written.

“He HANKYD not the picture of his body upon the crosse to teache them his deathe.”—Declaracion of Christe. By Iohan Hoper, cap. 5.

“The same body that HANKYD upon the crosse.”—Ibid. cap. 8.

“And therwithal he HYNG adowne hys heed
And fel on knees.”—Troylus, boke 3. fol. 178. p. 1. col. 2.

“Than Gesmas the thefe whiche HENGGE on the lefte syde of our Lorde sayd thus to our Lorde Ihesu. If thou be God, delyuer bothe the and us. Than Dysmas that HENGGE on the ryght syde of our Lorde Ihesu blamed hym for his wordes.”—Nycodemus Gospell, ch. 7.

“Absolon HENGGE styлле by his heer.”
Dives and Pauper, 4th Comm. cap. 2.

“Example of the theef that HYNGE on the ryght syde of Cryste.”
Ibid. 5th Comm. cap. 11.

“Thys mater HYNGE in argument before the spyrytual iudges by the space of xv dayes.”
Fabian, parte 7. ch. 243.

[“Then gin the blustering brethren boldly threat
To move the world from off his stedfast HENGGE.”
Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 11. st. 31.]

WAKE } are one and the same word, differently pro-
WATCH } nounced and therefore differently written. Though accounted substantives in construction, they are merely the past participle of the verb ſecan, ſeccean; vigilare, excitare, suscitare, expergiſci, solicitare.

In the old translation of the New Testament attributed to Wickliffe, we read,

“Aboute the fourthe WAKING of the nigt.”

In the modern translation,

“About the fourth WATCH of the night.”—Mark, ch. 6. v. 48.

“And comaundide the porter that he WAKE. Therefore WAKE ye, forsothe ye witen not whanne the lorde of the hous shall come.”

“And commaunded the porter to WATCH. WATCH ye therefore, for ye know not when the master of the house cometh.”—Ibid. ch. 13. v. 34, 35.

“And he cam and fonde hem slepinge, and he seide to Petir, Symount, slepist thou, migtest thou not WAKE oon hour with me? WAKE ye, and preie ye, that ye entre not in to temptacion.”

“And he cometh and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? Coudest not thou WATCH one hour? WATCH ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.”—Ibid. ch. 14. v. 37, 38.

“And if he shal come in the secounde WAKING, and if he shal come in the thridde WAKING, and shal fynde so, the seruauntis ben blessid. Forsothe wite ye this thing, for yf an husbande man wiste in what hour the theef shulde come, sotheli he shulde WAKE and not suffre his hous to be mynyd.”

“And if he shall come in the second WATCH, or come in the third WATCH, and find them so, blessed are those servants. And this know, that if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have WATCHED, and not have suffered his house to be broken through.”—Luke, ch. 12. v. 38, 39.

“The constable of the castell that kepith al the WACHE.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 10. fol. 42. p. 1.

“Ne how that Arcite is brent to ashen colde,
Ne how the lyche WAKE was holde
All that nyght, ne how the Grekes play
The WAKE playes, kepe I nat to say.”

Knyghtes Tale, fol. 11. p. 1.

“Al be it so, that no tonge may it deuise,
Though that I might a thousande winter tell
The paynes of that cursed house of hell;

But for to kepe us from that cursed place,
WAKE, and prayeth Iesu of his grace."—Freres Tale, fol. 42. p. 1.

"They nolde drinke in no maner wyse
No drinke, that dronke might hem make;
But there in abstynence pray and WAKE,
Lest that they deyden." Sompners Tale, fol. 43.

"Saynt Poule byddeth us WAKE in all manner besynesse of gode werkes."—Dives and Pauper, 10th Comm. cap. 6.

AWAKE is the same past participle of ƿecan, preceded by A; the usual Anglo-Saxon prefix to the past tense.

Hence too, I believe, the old Italian words Avaccio and Avacciare; which have so exceedingly distressed their etymologists. The Italians not having a w, and pronouncing c as we pronounce ch, have made Avaccio from Ἀπæc, or Awatch; which appears to me to be its meaning in all the passages where Avaccio is employed.¹

F.—Though it is not much to our present purpose, I cannot but notice a word in our own language, as little understood by us. I mean the common nautical term AVAST; which seems to supply the place of our antient Yare, Yare. Skinner says, it means—"Ocyus facesse, hinc te proripe, abi quam primum; vox nautis usitatissima: fort. a præp. Lat. Ab et Belg. Haesten, festinare; q. d. Hinc festines." This is given by Skinner only as a conjecture; but it is not a happy one: for this Latin and Dutch mixture makes but an ill-assorted English compound. Apothecaries often complain of the physician's want of skill in pharmacy. S. Johnson, without even a glimpse of the meaning of the word, says—"AVAST, adv. [from Basta, Ital. It is enough] Enough. Cease."

H.—Skinner and Johnson differing thus widely in the import of the word, as well as in its derivation, I may be permitted to differ from both, and to offer my conjecture. AVAST, when used by seamen, always precedes some orders or some conversation. It cannot therefore mean Abi quam primum. Hinc te proripe: neither can it mean Cease. Enough. AVAST answers the same purpose as—Hearkye, List, Attend, Take heed, Eala, Hola, or (as the French used to begin the exercise of their soldiers) Alerte. Like the Italian Avacci, I think it means—Be attentive, Be on the Watch, i. e. AWAKE. I do not undertake to shew the gradations of the corruption.

¹ [Qu. Bivouac, Be-wachten?—ED.]

PACK	}	Of these words S. Johnson says,
PATCH
PAGE		“PACK— pack , Dutch.”
PAGEANT
PISH		“PATCH— pezzo , Italian.”
PSHAW		“PAGE— page , French.”

This Dutch, this Italian, and this French derivation (which explain nothing; and in point of signification leave us just where we were without them) he takes from Skinner. He then proceeds upon his own bottom.

“PAGEANT. Of this word the etymologists give us no satisfactory account. It may perhaps be Payen Géant, a Pagan Giant; a representation of triumph used at return from holy wars;—as we have yet the Saracen’s head.”

Undoubtedly we have in London the sign of the Saracen’s head. Undoubtedly Payen is French, and Géant is French: but these words—Un Payen Géant—were never yet seen so coupled in French. He proceeds,

“PATCHERY, Botchery, Bungling work, Forgery. A word not in use.”

“PAGEANTRY, Pomp, Show.”

“PISH, interj. A contemptuous exclamation. This is sometimes spoken and written PSHAW. I know not their etymology, and imagine them formed by Chance.”

His Chance is not half so disgusting as his Payen Géant: and it would have been better for his readers; would have saved him a little trouble; and been no disgrace to his philosophy; if he had at once assigned Chance as the common cause of all the words in the language.

The word PATCH however having been formerly applied to men, and PATCHERY to their conduct; and these applications of those words being no longer in common use; the commentators of Shakespeare (in whose writings they are frequent) were compelled to inquire into the meaning of the words PATCH and PATCHERY.

“What a py’de ninnie’s this ! Thou scurvy PATCH.”

Tempest, p. 12. col. 1.

Mr. Steevens says—“It should be remembered that Trinculo is no sailor, but a Jester, and is so called in the ancient Dramatis Personæ. He therefore wears the parti-coloured dress of one of these characters.”

Mr. Malone says—“Dr. Johnson observes that Caliban could have no knowledge of the striped coat usually worn by fools ; and would therefore transfer this speech to Stephano. But though Caliban might not know this circumstance, Shakespeare did. Surely he who has given to all countries and all ages the manners of his own, might forget himself here, as well as in other places.”

“S. Dro. Mome, malthorse, capon, coxcombe, idiot, PATCH.”

“E. Dro. What PATCH is made our porter ?”

Comedy of Errors, p. 90. col. 1.

Mr. Steevens says—“PATCH, i. e. A fool. Alluding to the parti-coloured coats worn by the licensed fools or jesters of the age.”

“A crew of PATCHES, rude mechanicals,
That worke for bread upon Athenian stalls.”

Midsummer Nights Dreame, p. 151. col. 1.

What were the commentators to do here ? These were not licensed Jesters, in parti-coloured coats ; a crew of Jesters : but rude mechanicals, working for bread upon their stalls.

Johnson says—“PATCH was in old language used as a term of opprobry ; perhaps with much the same import as we use ragamuffin or tatterdemalion.¹”

T. Warton—“This common opprobrious term probably

¹ These explanatory words are themselves thus explained by Johnson :

“Ragamuffin—from Rag, and I know not what else.”

“Tatterdemalion—Tatter, and I know not what.”

took its rise from PATCH, Cardinal Wolsey's fool. In the Western Counties, Cross-patch is still used for perverse, ill-natured fool."

Steevens—"The name was rather taken from the patch'd or pyed coats worn by the fools or jesters of those times."

Tyrwhitt—"I should suppose PATCH to be merely a corruption of the Italian Pazzo, which signifies properly a Fool. So, in the Merchant of Venice, Shylock says of Launcelot—"The PATCH is kind enough"—after having just called him—"That fool of Hagar's offspring."

Malone—"This term should seem to have come into use from the name of a celebrated fool. This I learn from Wilson's Art of Rhetorique—"A word-making, called of the Grecians onomatopeia, is when we make words of our own mind, such as be derived from the nature of things; as to call one PATCHE¹ or COWLSON, whom we see to do a thing foolishly: because these two in their time were notable fools."—Probably the dress which the celebrated PATCHE wore, was, in allusion to his name, patched or parti-coloured. Hence the stage fool has ever since been exhibited in a motley coat. PATCHE, of whom Wilson speaks, was Cardinal Wolsey's fool."

"Serv. There is ten thousand—

Macb. Geese? villaine.

Serv. Souldiers, sir."

"Macb. What souldiers? PATCH."

"What souldiers? Whey-face."—Macbeth, p. 42.

Steevens again says—"An appellation of contempt, alluding to the py'd, patch'd or parti-coloured coats antiently worn by the fools belonging to noble families."

Johnson, Steevens, Warton, and Malone assume, for the purpose of their explanation, that Patched means the same as pyed or parti-coloured. But this assumption every huswife can contradict.

¹ [In two books in the Remembrancer's office in the Exchequer, containing an account of the daily expenses of King Henry the 7th, are the following articles, &c.

"Item, to Pachys the Fole for a rew 0.6.8."

See Malone's Edition of Shakespeare, vol.1. part 2. p. 53.]

In the following passages of Shakespeare can they find any pying or particolouring?

"And oftentimes, excusing of a fault
Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse:
As PATCHES, set upon a little breach,
Discredite more in hiding of the fault,
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd."

King John, p. 14. col. 2.

They who put patches on a little breach, to hide it, are careful that the colour shall as nearly as possible resemble that upon which they put it.

"Other diuels that suggest by treasons,
Do botch and bungle up damnation,
With PATCHES, colours, and with formes being fetch't
From glistering semblances of piety."—Henry V. p. 75. col. 1.

"Here is such Patcherie, such jugling and such knauerie: all the argument is a cuckold and a whore."—Troilus and Cressida, p. 87.

"Tim. There's neuer a one of you but trusts a knaue,
That mightily deceiues you.

Poet & Painter. Do we, my lord?

Tim. I, and you heare him cogge, see him dissemble,
Know his grosse PATCHERY, loue him, feede him,
Keeps in your bosome, yet remaine assur'd
That he's a made-up villaine."—Timon of Athens, p. 96. c. 1.

But beside the words PATCH and PATCHERY, Shakespeare applies the word PACK¹ in a manner now almost obsolete.

¹ ["Sought to nousel the common people in ignorance, least, being ouce acquainted with the truth of things, they would in time smell out the untruth of their PACKED pols and Masse-peny religion."

E. K.'s Glosse on Shepheards Calender: June.

"These were the arts, with which she could surprize
A thousand thousand soules by theeuish trade,
Rather the armes with which, in robbing wise,
To force of loue them humble slaues she made;
What maruaile then if fierce Achilles lyes,
Or Hercules or Theseus, to blade
Of Loue a pray; if who for Christ it draw,
The naughtie-PACKE sometimes do catch in paw."

Godfrey of Bulloigne, Translated by R. C., Esq.
cant. 4. st. 92.

“ ——— What hath bin seene
 Either in snuffes, and PACKINGS of the dukes,
 Or the hard reine which both of them hath borne
 Against the old kinde king.” Lear, p. 296. col. 1.

Upon this passage Mr. Steevens says—“PACKINGS are underhand contrivances. So, in Stanyhurst's Virgil, 1582 — ‘With two gods PACKING, one woman silly to cozen.’—We still talk of PACKING juries.”

“ ——— She, Eros, has PACKT cards with Cæsars, and false plaid my glory
 Unto an enemies triumph.”—Antony and Cleopatra, p. 362. col. 1.

To these instances from Shakespeare we may add some others, written before Shakespeare's time; one in the reign of Henry the seventh, before Wolsey was a Cardinal, or had a fool.

“ King Rycharde did preferre such byshops to byshoprykes, as could neyther teache nor preache, nor knewe any thinge of the Scripture of God, but onely to call for theyr tythes and duties, and to helpe to serue his lustes and pleasures; whiche in dede were not worthye the name of byshops, but rather of noughtye PACKES disguised in byshoppes apparell.”—Fabian, vol. 2. p. 343.

“ Some haue a name for thefte and bribery,
 Some be call'd crafty, that can pyke a purse,
 Some men be made of for their mockery,

“ Queste fur l'arti, onde mill'alme, e mille
 Prender furtivamente ella poteo;
 Anzi pur furon l'arme, onde rapille,
 Et à forza d' Amor serve le feo.
 Qual meraviglia hor fia, se'l fero Achille
 D' Amor fu preda, et Hercole, e Theseo,
 S' ancor chi per Giesu la spada cinge
 L'EMPIO ne' lacci suoi tal' hora stringe?” Tasso, cant. 4. st. 92.

“ ——— his lord of old
 Did hate all errant knights which there did haunt,
 Ne lodging would to any of them graunt:
 And therefore lightly ba'l him PACKE away,
 Not sparing him with bitter words to taunt.”
Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 6. st. 21.

“ Faire Cytheree, the mother of delight,
 And Queene of beauty, now thou maist go PACK;
 For lo! thy kingdome is defaced quight.”
Spenser, Teares of the Muses.]

Som careful cokolds, som haue their wiues curse,
Som famous witwoldes, and they moche wurse,
Som lidderous, som losels, som naughty PACKES,
Som facers, som bracers, som make gret cracks."

Skelton, p. 15. edit. 1736.

“ I tell you nothing nowe of many a noughtye PACKE, many a flecke and his make, that maketh their ymages metinges at these holsum hal-lowes.”—Sir T. Mores Workes, A Dialogue, &c. p. 140.

Now, if you have well considered the use and signification of the words PACK, PATCH and PACHERY in the above different passages; I think I shall not surprize you, when I affirm that PACK, PATCH (in both its applications, viz. to men or to clothes) and PAGE, are the same past participle PAC (differently pronounced and therefore differently written, with K, CH, or GE) of the Anglo-Saxon verb Pæcan, Pæccēan,¹ To

¹ [“ Ne let the PONKE, nor other evill sprights,
Ne let mischievous witches with theyr charmes,
Ne let hobgoblins, names whose sense we see not, deceive by false appearances, imitation, resemblance, semblance, or representation; To Counterfeit, To Delude, To Illude, To Dissemble, To impose upon. And that PAGEANT is (by a small variation of pronunciation) merely the present participle Pæceand, of the same verb.—Pacheand, Pacheant, Pageant.
FRAY us with things that be not.”—Spenser: Epithalamion.

“I will put on his presence ; let Patroclus make his demands to me ; You shall see the PAGEANT of Ajax.”—Troilus and Cressida.

“—— With him Patroclus

Upon a lazie bed, the liue-long day

Breakes scurril jests,

And with ridiculous and awkward action,

Which, slanderer, he imitation calls,

He PAGEANTS us.”

Ibid.

[“In Satyres shape Antiopa he snatcht :

And like a fire, when he Ægin’ assayd :

A shepeheard, when Mnemosyne he catcht :

And like a serpent, to the Thracian mayd.

Whyles thus on earth great Iove these PAGEAUNTS playd,

The winged boy did thrust into his throne.”

Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 11. st. 35.

“Before mine eies strange sights presented were,

Like tragicke PAGEANTS seeming to appeare.”

Spenser’s Ruines of Time.

“Of this worlds theatre in which we stay,

My Love, like the spectator, ydly sits ;

Beholding me, that all the PAGEANTS play,

Disguysing diversly my troubled wits.

Sometimes I ioy when glad occasion fits,

And mask in myrth lyke to a comedy :

Soone after, when my ioy to sorrow flits,

I waile, and make my woes a tragedy.”—Spenser : sonnet 54.]

The ejaculations PISH and PSHAW are the Anglo-Saxon Pæc, Pæca ; pronounced PESH, PESHA (A broad). And

Sometime for three-foot stoole mistaketh me,

Then slip I from her bum, downe topples she,

And Tailour cries, and fals into a coffe.

And then the whole quire hold their hips, and loffe,

And waxen in their mirth, and neeze, and sweare,

A merrier houre was neuer wasted there.”

A Midsommer Night’s Dreame, p. 148. col. 1, 2. act. 2.]

are equivalent to the ejaculation—Trumpery! i. e. Tromperie from Tromper.

As servants were contemptuously called Harlot, Varlet, Valet and Knave, so were they called Pack, Patch and Page. And from the same source is the French PAGE and the Italian PAGGIO.

But if you shall be pleased rather to suppose that the English word PAGE comes from the French, and the French from the Italian, because that is the order in which you learned those languages: What will you gain by such a supposition? You must still go on, and inquire the meaning of PAGGIO. And all the satisfaction you will obtain, will be; that some will tell you, it comes either from the Latin Pædagium, or from Fabeus, or from the Greek παῖς, or from the Turkish Peik, or from the Persian Bagoas. But still you will have made no progress: for the meaning of any one of these words (distinct from its application) they will not attempt to tell you.

F.—If the office of PAGE was an inferior station, your etymology would have more probability; but you know there is much dispute upon that subject; and that many contend, it was a post of honour and distinction, unlikely to receive so degrading an appellation.

H.—A page of honour, comparatively with other pages, was no doubt in a post of honour. But of the grandeur of the station you may judge by what follows.

“ Sir knight, I pray thee to tell me what thou art, and of thy being. I am no knight, said Sir Gawaine, I have been brought up many yeares in the gard-robe, with the noble prince king Arthur for to take heede to his armour and his other aray, and for to point his pauldoxes that belongeth to him selfe. At Christmas last hee made me Yeoman, and gaue me horse and harneis and an hundred pound in money, and if fortune be my friend, I doubt not but to be well aduanced and holpen by my liege lord. Ah, said Priamus, if his Knaves be so keene and fierce, then his knights be passing good. Now for the kinges loue of heauen, whether you be knight or knaue, tell me thy name. By god, said Sir Gawaine, now will I tel the truth; my name is Sir Gawaine, and knowen I am in his noble court and in his chamber, and on of the knights of the round table: he dubbed me a duke with his own hande, therefore grudge not if his grace is to me fortune and common, it is the goodnesse of God that lent to me my strength. Now am I better pleased, said Priamus, then if thou hadst giuen me all the prouince of Paris the rich, I had rather to be torne with wild horses then any Varlet should haue wonne such lots, or any PAGE or Pricker should haue had the price of me.”—Hist. of Prince Arthur, ch. 97.

“Our lyege lorde the kyng hath power and fredom, of a PAGE for to make a Yoman, of a Yoman a Gentylman, of a Gentylman a Knight, of a poore man a grete Lord, without leue or helpe of the planetes.”—Diues and Pauper, 1st Comm. cap. 17.

WREST } The past participle of the verb ƿræȝtan, tor-
WRIST } quere, intorquere, To Wrest.

“It causeth hertes no lenger to debate
That parted ben with the WRESTE of hate.”

Lyfe of our Lady, p. 176.

WRIST, which is the same participle, was formerly called Handpȝȝȝt, i. e. Handwrist, or Handwrest.

[“Their shining shieldes about their WRESTES they tye.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 5. st. 6.

“His sunbroad shield about his WREST he bond.”

Ibid. book 2. cant. 1. st. 21.

“His puissant armes about his noble brest,
And many-folded shield he bound about his WREST.”

Ibid. cant. 3. st. 1.

“And Guyons shield about his WREST he bond.”

Ibid. cant. 8. st. 22.]

GRIST—(Ġe-ȝiȝeð) the past participle of Ġe-ȝiȝan, Ġe-ħȝȝȝan, contundere, conterere, collidere, To Crush. To Crush comes from the same verb. As does also the French Escraser, Ecraser. ħKISĠAN, ĠA-ħKISĠAN, nS-ĠA-ħKISĠAN.

FRAME } The past participle of ƿreman, facere.
FORM }

The Latin Forma, by a common transposition, is likewise from the same verb: But if this derivation should not please you, see whether you will be better off with the Latin etymologists.

“FORMA ab antiquo Formus, id est, calidus; quia ex calore nativo provenit. Nonnullis placet, ut καλον juxta Platonem venit απο του καλειν, id est, vocare; quia pulcra hominem ad se alliciunt: ita Formam esse ab ὄμνη; quia impetu quodam homines ad Formæ amorem impellantur. Sane spiritus asper crebro abit in F. Atque idem locum habeat, si Forma deducatur ab ὄραμα, quod ab ὄραω, video. Et sane hoc prioribus impensius placuit. Quare vel istud verum erit: vel παραμταθισιν fuerit Forma ex Dorico μορφα pro μορφη, quod idem ac Forma. Indeque Ovidio Morpheus dictus somni vel filius vel minister; quod varias Formas in dormientium παρατασια gignat.”—Vossius.

FLAW—The past participle of Flean, excoriare, To Flay.

GLEAM } The past participle of A.-S. Leoman, Lioman, GLOOM } Le-leoman, Le-lioman, radiare, coruscare, lucere.

“This light and this LEEM shal Lucifer ablend.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 19. fol. 99. p. 1.

[“Of this faire fire the faire dispersed rays
Threw forth abrode a thousand shining LEAMES,
When sodain dropping of a golden shoure
Gan quench the glystering flame.”—Visions of Petrarch, st. 9.]

“O Cynthia, if thou shouldest continue at thy fulnesse, &c., but thou, thinking it sufficient if once in a moneth we enjoy a glimpse of thy majestie, thou doest decrease thy GLEMES.”

Endimion, by John Lilly, act 1. sc. 1.

[“Scarsely had Phœbus in the GLOOMING east
Yett harnessed his fyrie-footed teeme.”

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 12. st. 2.

“There by th’uncertaine GLIMS of starry night,
And by the twinkling of their sacred fire,
He mote perceive a little dawning sight
Of all which there was doing in that quire.”

Ibid. book 6. cant. 8. st. 48.]

“I have methinks a kind of fever upon me: a certain GLOOMINESS within me, doubting, as it were, betwixt two passions.”

B. and Fletcher: The Woman Hater.

“The field, all iron, cast a GLEAMING brown.”

Paradise Regained, book 3. v. 326.

The Latin Lumen is the past participle of L:oman.

LONG—The past participle of Lenzian, extendere, producere. Nor can any other derivation be found for the Latin Longus.¹

SLEEVE—A.-S. plȳf. Formerly called Capm-plȳe: that with which the arm is covered: The past participle of Slefan, induere.

Sleeveless means without a cover, or pretence.

BED—i. e. Stratum. The past participle of Beddian, sternere. Therefore we speak of a Garden-bed and a Bed of Gravel, &c. And in the Anglo-Saxon Bedd is sometimes used for a table.

PATH—The past tense and participle of Peððian, conculcare, pedibus obterere.²

¹ G. I. Vossius tells us—“LONGUS a Linea quæ porrecta est: Ita Isidorus. Vel potius a longa figura venabuli aut lanceæ, quam Græci λογχην vocant: Ita Cæsar Scaliger. Item Petrus Nunnesius.”

But Isaac Vossius tells us—“Est ex Græco ογκος, λαογκος, λογκος: nisi forsan ex δολιχος, Æol. λοδιχος.”

² [TRODE, TRADE, WENT.

“This rede is rife, that ostentime
Great clymbers fall unsoft.
In humble dales is footing fast,
The TRODE is not so tickle,
And though one fall through heedless hast,
Yet is his misse not mickle.”—Shepherd's Calender: July.

“They saye they con to heaven the high-way,
But by my soule I dare undersaye
They never sette foote in that same TROAD,
But balke the right way, and strayen abroad.”—Ibid. September.

“As shepheardes curre, that in darke eveninges shade Hath tracted forth some salvage beastes TRADE.”
Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 6. st. 39.

“Till that at length she found the TRODEN gras,
In which the tract of peoples footing was.”
Ibid. book 1. cant. 3. st. 10.

“————an island spacious and brode,
Found it the fittest soyle for their abode,
Fruitfull of all thinges fitt for living foode,
But wholly waste and void of peoples TRODE.”
Ibid. book 3. cant. 9. st. 49.

["That PATH he kept, which beaten was most plaine."

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 1. st. 28.]

NEST—The past participle of Nejan, visere, visitare, To Visit frequently, To Haunt.

["Sweete Loue deuoyd of villanie or ill

But pure and spotless, as at first he sprong

Out of th' Almighty's bosom, where he NESTS."

Spenser : Teares of the Muses.]

[Vide Pye Nest in Yorkshire. See also Dungeness, &c.]

GRASS—That which is grazed or fed upon by cattle : the past participle of Grasian, To Graze.

QUAG—The past participle of Grasian, tremere.

MEAD } A.-S. Mæb (i. e. Maped) Mowed, the past par-
MEADOW } ticipie of Mapan, metere.

"This Troilus is by a privy WENT Into my chamber come."—Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 786. See Junius.

"Farre under ground from tract of living WENT,

Downe in the bottome of the deepe abyasse

———— their dreadfull dwelling is."

Faerie Queene, book 4. cant. 2. st. 47.

"But here my wearie teemie, nigh over-spent,

Shall breath itselfe a while after so long a WENT."

Ibid. book 4. cant. 5. st. 46.]

"And, through the long experience of his dayes,

Which had in many fortunes tossed boene,

And past through many perillous assayes,

He knew the diverse WENT of mortall wayes,

And in the mindes of men had great insight."

Ibid. book 6. cant. 6. st. 3.

"He chaunst to come, far from all peoples TROAD,

Unto a place, whose pleasaunce did appere

To passe all others on the earth which were.

Ibid. cant. 10. st. 5.

"Said then the Foxe ;—Who hath the world not tride,

From the right way full eath may wander wide.

We are but novices, new come abroad,

We have not yet the tract of anie TROAD,

Nor on us taken anie state of life."

Spenser : Mother Hubbard's Tale.]

- CAGE. A place shut in and fastened, in which birds are confined. Also a place in which malefactors are confined.
- GAGE. By which a man is bound to certain fulfilments.
- WAGES. By which servants are bound to perform certain duties.
- GAG. By which the mouth is confined from speaking.
- KEG. In which fish or liquors are shut in and confined.
- KEY. By which doors, &c. are confined and fastened.
- QUAY. By which the water is confined and shut out [or in.]

All these I believe to be the past participle of the verb Læggian, obserare.

From the same Anglo-Saxon verb are the French Cage, Gage, Gages, Gageure, Engager, Quai; the Italian Gaggia, Gaggio, Gabbia; and the antient Latin Caiare: which have so much bewildered the different Etymologists.

GRAVE	} Grap and Græp serve equally in the Anglo-Saxon for GRAVE or GROVE. GRAVE, GROVE, GROOVE are the past tense and therefore past participle of Grapan , fodere , insculpere , excavare .
GROVE
GROOVE
GRAFT
GROT
GROTTO

“But o alas, the rhetorikes swete
 Of Petrake fraunces that coude so endyte,
 And Tullius, with all his wordes whyte
 Full longe agone, and full olde of date
 Is dede a las, and passed into fate,
 And eke my maister Chaucers now is GRAUE,
 The noble rethore, poete of Britaine.”

Lydgate's Lyfe of our Lady, p. 96.

“Eleyne and eke Policene
 Hester also and Dido with her chere
 And riche Candace of Ethiopie quene, Lygge they nat GRAUE under colours grene.”

Ibid. p. 197.

GRAFT (sometimes written GRAFF) is the same past tense Grap, with the participial termination ED. GRAF-ED, GRAF'D, GRAFT.

“Litle meruail it is though enuy be an ungracious GRAFE, for it cometh of an ungracious stocke.”—Sir T. More, De Quatuor Novissimis, p. 85.

In GROT, from GRAFT (A broad), the F is suppressed, and GROTO (or rather GROTTA)¹ is obliged to the Italians for its terminating vowel.

HELL
HEEL
HILL
HALE
WHOLE
HALL
HULL
HOLE
HOLT
HOLD

All these words, now so differently applied, are merely the same past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Delan, tegere: in Old English To Hele, To Heal, or To Hil.

“Nyl ye be bisy, seiynge what shulen we ete, ether what shulen we drynke, ether with what shulen we be HILID.”—Matheu, ch. 6. v. 31.

“The litil ship was HILID with wawys.”—Ibid. ch. 8. v. 24.

“I was herborles, and ye gederiden me, ether herbourden me, nakid and ye HILIDEN me.”—Ibid. ch. 25. v. 36.

“Iust men shulen answeere, whanne seigen we thee nakid and we HILIDEN thee.”—Ibid. ch. 25. v. 38.

“And thei eutringe in to the sepulcre sayen a yong oon HILID with a white stoole sittinge on the right half.”—Mark, ch. 16. v. 5.

“Forsothe no man ligtinge a lanterne HILITH it with a vessel, ether puttith under a bedde, but on a candilstik.”—Luke, ch. 8. v. 16.

“No man ligtneth a lanterne and puttith in HILIDIS, nether undir a busshel, but on a candilstik.”—Ibid. ch. 11. v. 33.

“Forsothe no thing is HILID whiche shal not be shewid, nether hid that shal not be wist.”—Ibid. ch. 12. v. 2.

“Thanne thei shulen bigynne to seie to mounteyns, falle ye doun on us; and to litil HILLIS, HILE ye us.”—Ibid. ch. 23. v. 30.²

¹ Menage derives GROTTA from κρυπτα.

² [Although the instance from Luke, ch. 23. v. 30., adduced by Mr. Tooke, may seem to countenance his referring HILL, a mount, to the verb Delan, yet, if, instead of an apparent resemblance, the cognate dialects are taken as our guides, we cannot overlook the Dutch Heuvel, Isl. Hvel, Germ. Hübel, which Wachter derives from heben, levare: and more especially the Swedish Hygel and German Hügel (from höhen,

"Seie thou not in thin herte, who shal stie in to heuene, that is to seie for to lede doun Crist? or who shal go doun in to depnesse, or HELLE, that is for to agen clepe Crist fro the dede spiritis."

Romayns, ch. 10. v. 6, 7.

"Eche man preyinge or propheciyng, the heed HILID, defoulith his heed, forsothe eche womman preiynge or propheciyng, the heed not HILID, defoulith her heed."—1 Corinthies, ch. 11. v. 4, 5.

"That in the name of Ihesu eche kne be bowid of heuenli thingis and erthly and HELLIS."—Philippensis, ch. 2. v. 10.

"And for he was of the same crafte, he dwellide at hem and wrougte, forsothe thei weren of tenefectorie craft, that is to make HILYNGIS to traueilyng men."—Dedis, ch. 18. v. 3.

"And al the houses bene Hyled haies and chambres."

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 6. fol. 30. p. 1.

"And yet me marueiled more howe many other birds Hydden and HYLDEN her egges full derne."

Ibid. pass. 12. fol. 58. p. 2.

"Kind kenned Adam to knowe his priuy membres,
And taught him and Eue to HYLL hem with leaues."

Ibid. pass. 13. fol. 63. p. 1.

"Lewed men many times masters they apposen
Why Adam ne HILLED not first his mouth that eat the apple
Rather than his licham alowe." Ibid. fol. 63. p. 2.

"What hightest thou, I pray the, HEALE not thy name."

Ibid. pass. 21. fol. 116. p. 2.

"As she that was not worthie here
To ben of loue a chambrere.
For she no counsaile couth HELE."

Gower, lib. 3. fol. 52. p. 1. col. 1.

"For I haue in you suche a triste
As ye that be my soule hele,
That ye fro me no thyng woll HELE."

Ibid. lib. 4. fol. 62. p. 2. col. 2.

extollere), of which Kilian and Schilter consider HILL to be a contraction. Elevation is more the essential character of HILL than covering. Richardson gives Germ. Huegel as the root, and then, confounding incompatible etymologies, refers that to A.-S. Delan, To cover. As to the passage he gives from R. Brunne, p. 224,

"He sped him thider in haste, with hilled hors of pris," and which he interprets "high horse;" it no doubt means "horse covered with trappings." So in the following page, "with hors and herneys."—ED.]

"She toke up turues of the londe
Without helpe of mans honde
And HELED with the grene grass."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 105. p. 2. col. 1.

"Murdre is walsome and abhominable
To God, that so juste is and reasonable
That he ne wol it suffre HEALED to be,
Though it abyde a yere, two or thre,
Murdre wol out." Tale of the Nonnes Priest, fol. 89. p. 1. col. 2.

"And some men sain, that great delyte haue we
For to ben holde stable and eke secre
And in o purpose stedfastly to dwell
And nat bewray thing that men us tell,
But that tale is not worth a rake stele,
Parde we women can no thyng HELE,
Witnesse of Midas, wol ye here the tale."

Wife of Bathes Tale, fol. 38. p. 2. col. 1.

"For which I wol not hyde in HOLDE
No priuete that me is tolde,
That I by worde or sygne ywis
Ne wol make hem knowe what it is,
And they wollen also tellen me,
They HELE fro me no priuyte."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 104. p. 1. col. 1.

"His brade schulderis wele cled and ouer HEILD
With ane young bullis hyde newly of hynt."

Douglas, booke 11. p. 388.

"Eneas houit stil the schot to byde,
Him schroudand under hys armour and his scheild, Bowand his hock, and stude a lytle on HEILD."

Ibid. booke 12. p. 427.

"And fyrie Phlegon his dym nyctis stede
Doukit sa depe his hede in fludis gray,
That Phebus rollis doun under HEL away :
And Hesperus in the West with bemes brycht
Upspringis, as fore rydare of the nyct."

Ibid. Prol. to booke 13. p. 449.

"Laye it in a troughe of stone, and HYLL it wyth lede close and juste, and after do bynde it wyth barres of iron in moste strongest and sure wise."—Fabian, parte 6. ch. 213.

Ray says—"To HEAL, To cover. Sussex. As—To HEAL the fire.—To HEAL a house.—To HEAL a person in bed, i. e.

To cover them, ab A.-S. Helan, To hide, To cover. Hence, in the West, he that covers a house with slates is called a HEALER or HELLIER."—Ray, South and East Country Words, p. 78.

HELL—any place, or some place covered over.¹

HEEL—that part of the foot which is covered by the leg.²

HILL—any heap of earth, or stone, &c. by which the plain or level surface of the earth is covered.³

HALE—i. e. HEALED, or WHOLE.

["There he remaind with them right well agreed,
Till of his wounds he wexed HOLE and strong."

Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 1. st. 47.]

WHOLE—the same as HALE, i. e. covered.—It was formerly written HOLE, without the w.—As, a wound or sore is HEALED or WHOLE, that is, covered over by the skin. Which manner of expression will not seem extraordinary, if we consider our use of the word Re-cover.

HALL—a covered building, where persons assemble, or where goods are protected from the weather.⁴

Les HALLES in French has the same signification:—

"Ce sont des places et lieux publics COUVERTS pour y vendre les denrées à l'abri."—"In quibus tempore pluviali omnes mercatores merces suas mundissime venderent."—"Le lieu auquel pour l'exercice du commerce on s'assemble de toutes parts, mesme es jours ordinaires de marché, et aussi pour conférer et communiquer."—"Domus quævis in qua merces plurimorum conservantur."

The French etymologists were all clear enough in the ap-

¹ Minsheu derives HELL from 'Ελος, lacus—palus.

² Minsheu derives HEEL from κηλη, tumor. Skinner from "ἥλος, clavus, et secundario, callosum illud tuberculum quod medici clavum dicunt; nos Angli, a Corn: fort. quia os hoc instar capitis clavi ferrei, vel potius clavi morbi, protuberat."

³ HILL, Junius says—"videri potest abscissum ex κολωνη vel κολωνος. Plures derivarunt ab High, altus."

⁴ HALL, say the etymologists, from the Latin Aula and the Greek αυλη. Junius thinks from "άλω, atrium; vel ab αυλων, quod significat oblongum locum."

plication of the word ; but trifled egregiously when they sought its derivation from the Latin Aula, or Area, or Hallus, “qui (say they) dans les loix barbares signifie Rameau.” Or from the Greek άλια, άλισαι, άλων, άλως.

HULL—of a nut, &c. That by which the nut is covered.

HULL—of a ship. That part which is covered in the water.

HOLE—some place covered over.¹

“You shall seek for HOLES to hide your heads in.”

HOLT.—Holed, Hoʼd, Holt.. A rising ground or knoll covered with trees.

HOLD—As the Hold of a ship: in which things are covered; or the covered part of a ship.²

F.—I cannot perceive that HOLE always means covered, though it may in the instance you have chosen to produce. Cannot I drill a HOLE in the centre of this shilling? And then where will be the covering?

H.—After you have so drilled it, break it diametrically: and then where will be the HOLE? Of the two pieces each will have a notch in it; but no HOLE will remain.

A SHADE	}	which our etymologists unnecessarily derive from the Greek σκια , mean (something, any thing) secluded , separated , retired ; or (something) by which we are separated from the weather, the sun, &c. They are the past tense and therefore past participle of Sceadan , separare , segregare , dividere .
A SHADOW
A SHAW
A SHED

“Hantit to ryn in woddis and in SCHAWIS.”

Douglas, booke 5. p. 137.

“Quher that the happy spayman on his gyse

Pronuncit the festuale haly sacrifice,

And the fat offerandis did you call on raw

To banket amynd the derne blissit SCHAW.”—Ibid. booke 11. p. 391.

¹ Minshew derives HOLE from κοιλος, cavus. “Alludit etiam (says Skinner) αυλαξ, sulcus: αυλων, fossa seu convallis oblonga; γωλεα, latibula ferarum: πωλον, κολον, inter alia, alvus; et φωλεος, antrum.”

² Skinner has well described HOLT and HOLD, though he missed their derivation. HOLD of a ship, he says—“sic dicitur contabulatio navis infima, ubi penus navis conditur.” And HOLT—“Nemus seu arborum quarumvis densius consitarum multitudinem designat.”

LEWD } LEWD, in Anglo-Saxon Læpēð, is almost equiva-
 LAY } lent to wicked; except that it includes no agency of infernal spirits: it means misled, led astray, deluded, im- posed upon, betrayed into error. LEW'D is the past participle, and LAY is the past tense and therefore past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Læpan, prodere, tradere, To Delude, To Mislead.

LEWD, in its modern application, is confined to those who are betrayed or misled by one particular passion: it was antiently applied to the profanum vulgus at large; too often misled through ignorance.

F.—Our word MANY seems to me a strange word, and its use in our language still stranger. There is nothing like it, I believe, in the use of the equivalent words of any other languages. What is its intrinsic meaning? Is it a substantive or an adjective? What is the rule of its employment? Dr.
 Lowth is extremely puzzled with it: amongst other perplexing passages he cites the following:

“How MANY a message would he send.”

Swift, Verses on his own Death.

On which, Lowth says—“He would send MANY a message —is right: but the question How, seems to destroy the unity or collective nature of the idea: and therefore it ought to have been expressed, if the measure would have allowed of it, without the Article, in the plural number—‘how MANY mes- sages.’”

H.—The bishop mistakes in one point. “MANY a mes- sage”—is not right: except by a corrupt custom. There is a corruption here in this familiar expression; which, not being observed by Lowth, made him suppose this A to be an Arti- cle; and therefore made him attempt to arrange the use of it, as an Article, on such occasions; and to reduce it to some regularity.

“a made a finer end, and went away, and it had beene any christome child: a parted eu'n just betweene twelue and one. How now Sir Iohn (quoth I) ¹ what man? Be a good cheare: so a cryed out, God,

¹ Because the third person singular of our English verbs is usually designated by eth or th; many ignorant persons, affecting to shew a God, God, three or foure times : now I, to comfort him, bid him a should not thinke of God : I hop'd there was no neede to trouble himselfe with any such thoughts yet : so a bad me lay more clothes on his feet."—Henry V. p. 75.

So, in page 78 of the same play, Gower says to Fluellen—"Here a comes."

Sir T. More, as we have seen, writes—"Burne up, quoth a."

So we say—John a Nokes, Tom a Stiles, Thomas a Becket, &c.

In all the above passages and in similar phrases, which are common enough, a by a slovenly pronunciation, stands sometimes for He, sometimes for She, and sometimes for Of. The use of a after the word MANY is a similar corruption for Of; and has no connection whatever with the Article a, i. e. One.

Instead of this corrupt a after MANY, was formerly written Of, without the corruption :

"Yespend a great MEANY OF wordes in vayne."—Bishop Gardiner, Declaration agains Ioye, fol. 14.

"I haue spoken a MEANY OF wordes."—Ibid. fol. 24.

and innumerable other instances may be produced of the same manner of expression. As for the "collective nature of the idea;" that is confined to the word MANY. MANY is indeed a collective term, and may therefore be preceded by the article a; but Message is not a collective term. Therefore—Many a message, is not right; except by a corrupt custom. It should be—"a many of messages."

MANY, is supposed by Iye to be derived from MAN;—"ac proprie de hominum multitudine usurpatum;" and thence, according to him, transferred to other things. But MANY is superior propriety of speech, are shocked at the expression—Quoth I—as a false concord; and affectedly depart from the customary phrase, and write Quod I. But Quoth I, is strictly accurate for said I. The th in Quoth, does not designate the third person. The verb is Epēdan, and its past tense is Epōð or Quoth.

¹ [In the case of proper names, it is probably the representative of at, in like manner as, "Sym at Style, Hankyn Attribridge, John Atte-water"—Mr. Stevenson's note in Boucher's Glossary, v. AT, ATTEN, ATTE.—Ed.]

merely the past participle of Mengan,¹ miscere, To Mix, To Mingle: it means mixed, or associated (for that is the effect of mixing) subaud. company, or any uncertain and unspecified number of any things.

“And in her house she abode with such MEYNE
As tyl her honour nede was to holde.”

Troylus, boke 1. fol. 157. p. 2. col. 2.

“Nor be na wais me lyst nat to deny
That of the Grekis MENYE ane am I.” Douglas, booke 2. p. 41.

[“The commoditie doth not countervaille the discommoditie; for the inconveniencies which thereby doe arise, are MUCH MORE MANY.”—Spenser’s View of the State of Ireland, Todd’s edit. 1805, p. 367.]

Similar instances of the use of this word abound in all our antient authors.

Lowth observes that MANY is used “chiefly with the word Great before it.” I believe he was little aware of the occasion for the frequent precedence of Great before Many: little imagining that there might be—a Few MANY, as well as a Great MANY. S. Johnson had certainly no suspicion of it: for he supposes Few and Many to be opposite terms and contraries: and therefore, according to his usual method of explanation, he explains the word Few, by—“Not many.” What would have been his astonishment at the following lines? A comment of his upon the following passage, like those he has given on Shakespeare, must have been amusing.

“In nowmer war they but ane FEW MENYE, Bot thay war quyk and valyeant in melle.”

Douglas, booke 5. p. 153.

F.—Will this method of yours assist us at all in settling the famous and long-contested passage of Shakespeare in The Tempest?

“——— These our actors
(As I foretold you) were all spirits, and

¹ [“Thou bewray’dst his mother’s wantonnesse,
When she with Mars was MEYNT in ioyfulnesse.”

Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 11. st. 36.]

Are melted into ayre, into thin ayre:

And, like the baselesse fabricke of this vision,

The clowd-capt towres, the gorgeous pallaces,

The solemne temples, the great globe itselfe,

Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolue,

And, like this insubstantiall Pageant faded,

Leaue not a RACKE behind."

Tempest, p. 15. col. 1.

Many persons, you know, and those of no mean authority, instead of RACKE read WRECK. And Sir Thomas Hanmer reads TRACK: which Mr. Steevens says—"may be supported by the following passage in the first scene of Timon of Athens"—

"But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on, Leaving no TRACT behind."

H.—The ignorance and presumption of his commentators have shamefully disfigured Shakespeare's text. The first Folio, notwithstanding some few palpable misprints, requires none of their alterations. Had they understood English as well as he did, they would not have quarrelled with his language.

F.—But if RACKE is to remain, what does it mean?

"RACK (says Mr. Malone) is generally used by our ancient writers for a body of clouds sailing along; or rather, for the course of the clouds when in motion. But no instance has yet been produced, where it is used to signify a single small fleeting cloud; in which sense only it can be figuratively applied here. I incline therefore to Sir Thomas Hanmer's emendation; though I have not disturbed the text."

Dr. Johnson concurs with Malone. He says—

"RACK (Racka, Dutch. A track.) The clouds as they are driven by the wind."

Though I mention their opinions, I am not in the least swayed by their authority: for Shakespeare himself gives a flat contradiction to their imputed signification of RACK; where he says, in Hamlet,

"But as we often see against some storme,
A silence in the heauens, the RACKE stand still,
The bold windes speechlesse, and the orbe below
As hush as death."

If the RACKE may stand still; it cannot be—"the course of the clouds when in motion." Nor—"the clouds as they are driven by the wind."

Upon this passage too, in the Third Part of Henry 6.

"Dazzle mine eyes, or doe I see three sunnes ?

Three glorious sunnes, each one a perfect sunne,

Not separated with the RACKING clouds,

But seuer'd in a pale cleare-shining skye."

Upon this passage Mr. Malone quotes from Shakespeare's Sonnets,

"Anon permit the basest clouds to ride

With ugly RACK on his celestial face."

Can Mr. Malone imagine that—"ugly RACK" means here—an ugly motion that rides on the sun's face ?¹

Upon the whole, What does RACK mean? And observe, you will not satisfy my question by barely suggesting a signification; but you must shew me etymologically, how the word RACK comes to have the signification which you may attribute to it.

H.—You ask no more than what should always be done by those who undertake to explain the meaning of a doubtful word. It surely is not sufficient to produce instances of its use, from whence to conjecture a meaning; though instances

¹ ["Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Flatter the mountain tops with sovereign eye.
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly RACK on his celestial face." Shakespeare: Sonnet 33.

Now read the following passage in the First Part of Henry 4. p. 50, where the same thought is expressed in different words.

"Yet heerein will I imitate the sunne,
Who doth permit the base contagious cloudes
To smother up his beauty from the world,
That when he please againe to be himselfe,
Being wanted, he may be more wondred at,
By breaking through the foule and ugly mists
Of vapours, that did seeme to strangle him."

N B. In the Sonnet, it is—"permit the basest clouds"—and—"ugly RACK."

In the Play, it is—"permit the base contagious clouds"—and—"ugly mists of VAPOURS."] are fit to be produced, in order, by the use of the word, to justify its offered etymology.

RACK is a very common word, most happily used in The Tempest; and ought not to be displaced because the commentators know not its meaning. If such a rule for banishing words were adopted, the commentators themselves would, most of them, become speechless.

In Songs and Sonets by the Earl of Surrey and others, p. 61. we read,

“When clouds be driven, then rides the RACKE.”

By this instance also we may see that RACK does not mean the course of the clouds when in motion.

“Some time we see a clowd that’s dragonish,
A VAPOUR some time, like a beare, or lyon.
That which is now a horse, euen with a thought,
The RACKE dislimes, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water.” Antony and Cleopatra, p. 362. col. 1.

Mr. Steevens says—“The RACK dislimes, i. e. The fleeing away of the clouds destroys the picture.”

But the horse may be dislimb’d by the approach of the RACK, as well as by the fleeing away of the clouds: for RACK means nothing but Vapour; as Shakespeare, in a preceding line of this passage, terms it.

“The upper part of the scene, which was all of clouds, and made artificially to swell and ride like the RACK, began to open; and the air clearing, in the top thereof was discovered Iuno.”—Ben Jonson: Masque.

“A thousand leagues I have cut through empty air,
Far swifter than the sayling RACK that gallops
Upon the wings of angry winds.”

B. and Fletcher: Women pleas’d.

“—— Shall I stray
In the middle air, and stay
The sayling RACK?”

Ibid. Faithful Shepherdess.

“The drawin blade he profferis thare and here
Unto thai monstouris euer as thay drew nere.
And were not his expert mait Sibylla
Taucht him thay war but vode gaistis all tha
But ony bodyis, as waunderand WRACHIS waist,
He had apoun thame ruschit in grete haist.”

Douglas, booke 6. p. 173.

Upon this passage the Glossarist of Douglas says—"WRACHIS, spirits, ghosts. We once thought that it might be a typographical error for Wrathis, t and c being written the same way in the manuscript. But we thought fit not to alter it."

What a mischievous fury have commentators and editors to alter those words of their author which they do not understand! The Glossarist of Douglas did well here not to yield to his inclination.

"Na slaw cours of thy hors onweildy
Thy carte has rendrit to thy inemye,
Nor yit nane vane WRECHIS nor gaistis quent
Thy chare constrenit bakwart for to went."

Douglas booke 10. p. 339.

"Sic lik as, that thay say, in diuers placis,
The WRACHIS walkis of goistis that ar dede."

Ibid. p. 341.

"Thiddir went this WRAYCH or schade of Enee
That semyt all abasit fast to fle."

Ibid. p. 342.

"Persauyt the mornyng bla, wan and har,
Wyth cloudy gum and RAK."

Ibid. Prol. to booke 7. p. 202.

"——— The brychtnes of day
Inuoluit all with cluddis hid away.
The rane and ROIK reft from us sycht of heuin."

Ibid. booke 3. p. 74.

"As we may gyf ane similitude, wele like
Quhen, that the herd has fund the beis bike,
Closit under ane derne cauerne of stanis
And fyllit has full sone that litil wanyis
With smoik of soure and bitter REKIS stew :
The beis wythin affrayit all of new
Ouerthowrt thare hyuis and waxy tentis rynnys,
With mekil dyn and beming in thare innis,
Scharpand thare stangis for ire as thay wald ficht :
Swa here the laithly odoure rais on hicht
From the fyre blesis, dirk as ony ROIK,
That to the ruffis toppis went the smoik,
The stanis warpit in fast did rebound,
Within the wallis rais the grete brute and sound,
And up the REIK all wod went in the are."

Ibid. booke 12. p. 432.

“Quhare thir towris thou seis doun fall and sway,
And stane fra stane doun bet, and REIK upryse,
With stew, poudre, and dust mixt on this wyse.”

Douglas, booke 2. p. 59.

“Furth of his thrott, ane wondrous thing to tell,
Ane laithlie smok he yeiskis black as hell,
And all the hous inuoluit with dirk myst,
That sone the sicht vanyst, or ony wist,
And REKY nycht within an litil thraw
Gan thikkin our al the cauerne and ouer blaw,
And with the mirknes mydlit sparkis of fire.
The hie curage of Hercules lordlie sire
Mycht this no langar suffir, bot in the gap
With haisty stert amyd the fyre he lap,
And thare, as maist haboundit smokkis dirk,
With huge sope of REIK and flambis myrk,
Thare has he hynt Cacus.”

Ibid. booke 8. p. 250.

[“Through th’ tops of the high trees she did descry
A litle smoke, whose vapour thin and light
REEKING aloft uprolled to the sky.”

Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 7. st. 5.]

“You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate
As REEKE a th’ rotten fennes : whose loues I prize
As the dead carkasses of unburied men,
That do corrupt my ayre.”

Coriolanus, act 3. p. 19.

[“Thou mightst as well say, I love to walke by the Counter-gate, which is as hatefull to me as the REEKE of a lime-kill.”—Merry Wives of Windsor, p. 58. col. 1.

“A paire of REECHIE kisses.”

Hamlet, p. 271.

“REECHIE recke.”

Coriolanus, p. 10. col. 1.]

“A REEK, with us (says Mr. Ray, in his preface to North Country Words, p. viii.) signifies, not a smoak, but a Steam, arising from any liquor or moist thing heated.”

RACK means merely—That which is Reeked. And, whether written RAK, WRAICH, RECK, REIK, ROIK¹ or REEKE, is the

¹ [Ray has ROOKY, misty : and the Vocabulary of East Anglia has ROKE, a fog ; ROKY, foggy.

—————“Light thickens : and the crow Makes wing to the ROOKY wood.”—Macbeth, act iii. sc. 2.
in explaining which Mr. Forby observes, “an East Anglian ploughboy same word differently pronounced and spelled. It is merely the past tense and therefore past participle, peac or pec, of the Anglo-Saxon verb Reean, exhalare, To Reek; and is surely the most appropriate term that could be employed by Shakespeare in this passage of The Tempest; to represent to us, that the dissolution and annihilation of the globe, and all which it inherit, should be so total and compleat;—they should so “melt into ayre, into thin ayre.”—as not to leave behind them even a Vapour, a Steam, or an Exhalation, to give the slightest notice that such things had ever been.

Since you seem to be in no haste to reply upon me, I conclude that the explanation is satisfactory. And on this subject of subaudition I will, at present, exercise your patience no further; for my own begins to flag. You have now instances of my doctrine in, I suppose, about a thousand words. Their number may be easily increased. But, I trust, these are sufficient to discard that imagined operation of the mind, which has been termed Abstraction: and to prove, that what we call by that name, is merely one of the contrivances of language, for the purpose of more speedy communication.

P.—You have at least amused me, and furnished me with matter for reflection: Conviction and satisfaction are plants of slower growth. But, to convince you that you have not tired me, I beg leave to remind you, that you some time since asserted that the Winds, as well as colours, must have their denomination from some circumstances attending them; and that there must be a meaning in each of their denominations. L'Orient and L'Occident, for instance, are intelligible enough; but how is it with the other names which all our Northern languages g've to these same winds?

The EAST, the WEST, the NORTH, the SOUTH.

The French Ouest, Nord, and Sud.

The Dutch Oost, West, Noord, Zuid.

The German Ost, West, Nord, Sud.

The Danish Ost, Vest, Nord, Sud.

would have instantly removed the learned commentator's doubts whether it had any thing to do with rocks.”—Ed.]

The Swedish Oster, Wester, Norr, Soder.

The Spanish language, besides Oriente, Levante, Poniente, Occidente, Aquilon, Septentrion, and Medio dia, has likewise Este, Oeste, Nord, Sur.

What do these mean? For when the English etymologist merely refers me to the Anglo-Saxon Eaƿt, ƿeƿt, Noƿð, Suð, he only changes the written characters, and calls the same language by a different name; but he gives me no information whatever concerning their meaning: and, for any rational purpose, might as well have left me with the same words in the modern English character.

H.—Certainly. It is a trifling etymology that barely refers us to some word in another language, either the same or similar; unless the meaning of the word and cause of its imposition can be discovered by such reference. And permit me to add, that, having once obtained clearly that satisfaction, all etymological pursuit beyond it is as trifling. It is a childish curiosity, in which the understanding takes no part, and from which it can derive no advantage.

Our winds are named by their distinguishing qualities. And, for that purpose, our ancestors (who, unlike their learned descendants, knew the meaning of the words they employed in discourse) applied to them the past participles of four of their common words in their own language: viz. Yppian, ƿeran, Nyppan, and Seophan. Irasci, Macerare, Coarctare, Coquere.

EAST } The past participle of ýppian or teppian, irasci, WEST } is ýpped, ýppð, ýppt: dropping the p (which NORTH } many cannot articulate) it becomes ýt; and so
SOUTH } it is much used in the Anglo-Saxon. They who cannot pronounce r, usually supply its place by a: hence, I suppose, EAST,¹ which means angry, enraged.

¹ ["As whence the sunne 'gins his reflection, Ship-wracking stormes and direfull thunders break; . . ."]

Mucedon, p. 131.

See Dr. Warburton's note on this passage.

"Qualis frugifero quercus sublimis in agro, &c."

"At quamvis primo nutet casura sub euro, &c."—Lucan, lib. 1.
There seems but little connexion between the EAST wind and Gouse-

"The wynd Tiffonyk, that is cleped NORTH EEST, or wynd of tempest."—Dedis, ch. 27.

berry. Le-ÿpprian, Ypprian, Le-ÿpprian: Leopreð, Lopreð, Loprð, Loprt.

"GOOSEBERRY, n. s. [goose and berry, because eaten with young geese as sauce.]"—Johnson's Dictionary.

It is a corruption for Loprt berry. Loprt is a thornbush; so that it means, the berry of the thornbush. S. Johnson says "GORSE [Loprt, Saxon,] Furze; a thick prickly shrub that bears yellow flowers in winter." Skinner says "Goss or GORS; ab A.-S. Leoprt, Loprt, erica."

Le-oprt, i. e. enraged, angry. Le-ÿpprian, irritare.

"Give all present a sprig of Rosemary, hollies or GORSES."—A codicil to the last will and testament of James Cleggy, conjurer; May 25, 1751.

"—— Then I beat my tabor,
At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,
Advanc'd their eye-lids, lifted up their noses
As they smelt musick; so I charm'd their ears,
That calf-like, they my lowing follow'd, through Tooth'd briers, sharp furzes, pricking goss, and thorns,
Which enter'd their frail shins."

Tempest, Malone's edition, p. 81.

Steevens's Note.—"I know not how Shakespeare distinguished goss from furze; for what he calls furze, is called GOSS or GORSE in the mid-land counties."

Tollet's Note.—"By the latter, Shakespeare means the low sort of GORSE that only grows upon wet ground, and which is well described by the name of whins in Markham's Farewell to Husbandry. It has prickles like those on a rose tree or gooseberry."

"A troope of cavalliers searcht Mr. Needham's house: they found not him, for he hid himselfe in the GORSE, and so escaped them."—Memoirs of the Life of Colonel Hutchinson, p. 101.

"He rid along, muttering that it was to no purpose, and when he came to Saxondale GORSE, purposely lost himselfe and his forlorne hope."—Ibid. p. 207.

"The country adjoining being a dreary waste, many thousand acres together being entirely overrun with GORSE or furze."—Ibid. p. 331. note.

"They are under rights of commons, and cannot be touched without distinct acts of parliament to permit the plough to produce grass and corn, instead of GORSE and ling."—Arthur Young in a Letter to Cobbet's Political Register, Vol. 13. No. 10. March 5, 1808.]

[Lye has ȝoprt, and ȝoprt-beam, rubus. As another conjecture with regard to GOOSEBERRY, it is suggested that it may have been GROSS-BERRY (Ribes Grossularia), as distinguished from the smaller Ribes, or Currants, which in German are Johannisbeeren, whilst the Gooseberries

In the modern version,

“A tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon.”—Acts, ch. 27. v. 14.

Macbeth says, (act 4. p. 144.)

“Though you untye the windes, and let them fight Against the churches : though the YESTY waues .
Confound and swallow nauigation up :
Though bladed corne be lodg’d, and trees blown downe,
Though castles topple on their warders heads :
Though pallaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations : though the treasure
Of nature’s germaine tumble altogether
Euen till destruction sicken.”

“YESTY waves (says S. Johnson), that is foaming or frothy.”

A little matter however always makes the waves frothy. But Johnson knew what the YEAST of beer was ; (which comes indeed from the same verb) and the epithet Yesty conveyed to him no stronger idea than that of fermentation. But YESTY here is the Anglo-Saxon ȳrtig, ieȳrtig, procellosus, are Gross-(Johannis) beeren. In French Groseille, and Petit Groseille. In Kent black currants are, I am told, called Gazles.

A reference to the various designations collected by Nemnich in his Polyglotten-Lexicon der Naturgeschichte seems, however, to leave no doubt that our word GOOSEBERRY is no other than the name given to the same fruit by our Teutonic neighbours : e. g.

Germ. Krausbeere, Kräuselbeere, Gruselbeere, Grosselbeere, Graselbeere, Kreutzbeere, Krutzbeere, Christbeere, (Uva Christi, Littleton.)

Dutch, Kruisbessen, Kroesbaeye : see Kilian—Dan. & Sw. Krusbær.

Uva crispa is given as the Latin name ; and kraus, kroes, is crispus. However, the signification of the name has been so much lost sight of, that it seems to have been modified to suit the fancied reference of it to a Cross, a Cruse, a Goose, &c. The fruit is called Grozer in Scotland and the North of England : see Brockett and Nemnich. In Norfolk the A.-S. name Thepes, or Febes, is still retained.

If the relation between the Teutonic Grosselbeere, &c and the low Latin Grossularia seems very probable, still the question remains as to which is the original, whether kroes, crispus, or grossulus, a little fig. Gerarde, booke 3. ch. 22, gives the following account :—“This shrub hath no name among the old writers, who, as we deeme knew it not, or else esteemed it not ; the later writers call it in Latine, Crossularia : and oftentimes of the berries, Uva Crispa, Uva Spina, Uva Spinella, and Uva Crispina : in high Dutch Kruselbeer ; in low Dutch Stekelbessen. . . . in English, Gooseberry, Goose-berry bush, and Fea-berry bush in Cheshire, my native country.”—ED.]

stormy, enraged: which much better accords with Shakspeare's high-charged description than the wretched allusion to fermenting beer.

Pejed, Pej'd, Pejτ, or WEST, is the past participle of Pejan, macerare, To Wet.

NORTH, i. e. Nýppeð, or Nýppð, the third person singular of Nýppan, coarctare, constringere. NORD and NORR (as it is in the other European languages) is the past participle of the same verb.

“Frosts that constrain the ground, and birth deny
To flowers that in its womb expecting lie.”

Dryden: Astræa redux.

In the Anglo-Saxon Nippð or Nýppð is also the name for a prison, or any place which narroweth or closely confines a person.

SOUTH is the past tense and past participle of Seoþan coquere, To Seethe.

“Peter fyshed for hys foode, and hys fellowe Andrewe,
Some they solde and some they soth, and so they liued both.”

Vision of Pierce Ploughman, pass. 16. fol. 81. p. 2.

“Nero governed all the peoples that the violent wyne Nothus skorcyth and baketh the brennyng sandes by hys dry heate, that is to say, al the peoples in the southe.”—Boecius, fol. 230. p. 1. col. 1.

Dryden, whose practical knowledge of English was (beyond all others) exquisite and wonderful, says in his Don Sebastian, (act 2. sc. 2.)

“Here the warm planet ripens and sublimes
The well-baked beauties of the SOUTHERN climes.”

I need not notice to you that the French, SUD, and our English word SUDS, &c. is the same as Sod or Sodden.

And now, I suppose, I may conclude the subject.

CHAPTER V.

THE SAME SUBJECT CONTINUED.

F.—I STILL wish for an explanation of one word more; which, on account of its extreme importance, ought not to be omitted. What is TRUTH?

You know, when Pilate had asked the same question, he went out, and would not stay for the answer.¹ And from that time to this, no answer has been given. And from that time to this, mankind have been wrangling and tearing each other to pieces for the TRUTH,² without once considering the meaning of the word.

H.—In the gospel of John, it is as you have stated. But in the gospel of Nicodemus (which, I doubt not, had originally its full share in the conversion of the world to christianity)³ Pilate awaits the answer, and has it——“Thou sayest that I am a kynge, and to that I was borne, and for to declare to the worlde that who soo be of TROUTH wyll here my worde. Than ¹ See John, xviii. 38. “What is Truth? said jesting Pilate; and would not stay for an answer.”—Bacon's Essays.

² [“CANONICA, in philosophical history, an appellation given by Epicurus to his doctrine of logic. It was called Canonica, as consisting of a few canons or rules for directing the understanding in the pursuit and knowledge of truth. Epicurus's Canonica is represented as a very slight and insufficient logic by several of the antients, who put a great value on his ethics and physics. Laertius even assures us that the Epicureans rejected logic as a superfluous science; and Plutarch complains that Epicurus made an unskilful and preposterous use of syllogisms. But these censures seem too severe. Epicurus was not averse to the study of logic, but even gave better rules in this art than those philosophers who aimed at no glory but that of logics. He only seems to have rejected the dialects of the Stoics, as full of vain subtilties and deceits, and fitted rather for parade and disputation than real use. The stress of Epicurus's Canonica consists in his doctrine of the criteria of truth. All questions in philosophy are either concerning words or things: concerning things we seek their truth; concerning words, their signification: things are either natural or moral; and the former are either perceived by sense or by the understanding. Hence, according to Epicurus, arise three criterions of truth, viz. sense, anticipation or prænotion, and passion. The great canon or principal of Epicurus's logic is, that the senses are never deceived; and therefore that every sensation or perception of an appearance is true.”—Encyclopædia Britannica, vol. 4. p. 119.]

³ Nicodemus was the Patron Apostle of our ancestors the Anglo-Saxons and their immediate descendants: his Gospel was their favourite authority: and it was translated for their use, both into Anglo-Saxon and into old English; which translations still remain, and the latter of them was one amongst the first books printed. By Wynkyn de Worde, Anno 1511.

sayd Pylate, What is TROUTH, By thy worde there is but lytell TROUTH in the worlde. Our Lorde sayd to Pylate, Understande TROUTH how that it is judged in erth of them that dwell therin."—Nychodemus Gospell, ch. 2.

F.—Well, What say you to it?

H.—That the story is better told by John: for the answer was not worth the staying for. And yet there is something in it perhaps: for it declares that "TRUTH is judged in erth of them that dwell therin." However, this word will give us no trouble. Like the other words, TRUE is also a past participle of the verb TRĀNĀN, Tpeopan, confidere, To Think, To Believe firmly, To be thoroughly persuaded of, To Trow.

"Marke it, Nuncle.

Haue more then thou showest,

Speake lesse then thou knowest,

Lend lesse then thou owest,

Ride more then thou goest,

Learne more then thou TROWEST."—Lear, p. 288.

This past participle was antiently written TREW,¹ which is the regular past tense of TROW; as the verbs To Blow, To Crow, To Grow, To Know, To Throw, give us in the past tense, Blew, Crew, Grew, Knew, Threw.² Of which had the learned Dr. Gil been aware, he would not, in his Logonomia

¹ ["Thou minde, of yeeres and of obliuion foe,
Of what so is, guardaine and steward TREW."

Godfrey of Bulloigne, Translated by R. C. p. 21.

"A bedroll long and TREW he reckoneth."

Ibid. p. 22.

"Graunt that the heau'ns thereof giue evidence,
And as yourselfe expound, so be it TREW."—Ibid. p. 85.

"Leauing the charge of me, and of the state
To brother, whom he bare a loue so TREW."—Ibid. cant. 4. st. 40.

Roberte Whytinton, poete laureate, in his translation of Tully's Offyces, fyrst booke, writes TREWE.

"In kepynge TREWE tutche and promesse in bargaynynge."]

² [To Show—Past participle shew.

To Sow ————— sew.

To Draw ————— drew.]

Anglica, p. 64, have told us that TRU, ratus, was “verbale anomalum of I TROU, reor.”

Of this I need not give you any instances; because the word is perpetually written TREW, by all our antient authors in prose and verse, from the time of Edward the third to Edward the sixth.

TRUE, as we now write it; or TREW, as it was formerly written; means simply and merely—That which is TROW-ED.¹ And, instead of its being a rare commodity upon earth; except only in words, there is nothing but TRUTH in the world.²

That every man, in his communication with others, should speak that which he TROWETH, is of so great importance to mankind; that it ought not to surprise us, if we find the most extravagant and exaggerated praises bestowed upon TRUTH. But TRUTH supposes mankind: for whom and by whom alone the word is formed, and to whom only it is applicable.³ If no man, no TRUTH. There is therefore no such thing as eternal, immutable, everlasting TRUTH; unless mankind, such as they are at present, be also eternal, immutable, and everlasting. Two persons may contradict each other, and yet both speak TRUTH: for the TRUTH of one person may be opposite to the TRUTH of another. To speak TRUTH may be a vice as well as a virtue: for there are many occasions where it ought not to be spoken.

[“Sed incidunt sæpe tempora, cum ea quæ maxime videntur digna esse justo homine, eoque quem virum bonum dicimus, commutantur, fiuntque contraria; ut non reddere depositum, etiam nefarioso promissum facere, quæque pertinent ad veritatem et ad fidem, ea negare interdum et non servare, sit justum.”—Tully's Offices.]

¹ Mer. Casaubon derives TRUE from the Greek ἀρετης; and ἀρετης from ἀρτης, impavidus.

² [“That which is TRUE onely is, and the rest is not at all.”—Spenser's View of the State of Ireland, Todd's ed. 1805. p. 501.]

³ [“Cid ben sappiam, che la divina essenza,
In cui tutti viviamo, a nostre menti
Aià del VERO donò la conoscenza.”
Metastasio, La Morte di Catone. Ed. Parigi. tom. 10. p. 167.]

"Quantunque il simular sia le piu volte
 Ripreso, e dia di mala mente indiej;
 Si trova pur in molte cose e molte,
 Aver fatti evidenti benefiej;
 E danui, e biasmi, e morti aver gia tolte:
 Che non conversiam sempre con gli amici
 In questa, assai piu oscura che serena,
 Mortal vita; tutta d' invidia piena."

Orlando Furioso, cant. 4. st. 1.

F.—If TROWN be the single meaning of the term TRUE, I agree that these and many other consequences will follow: for there can be nothing TROWN; unless there are persons TROWING. And men may TROW differently. And there are reasons enough in this world, why every man should not always know what every other man thinks. But are the corresponding and the equivalent words in other languages resolvable in the same manner as TRUE? Does the Latin Verum also mean TROWN?

H.—It means nothing else. Res, a thing, gives us Reor, i. e. I am Thing-ed: Ve-reor, I am strongly Thinged; for Ve in Latin composition means Valde, i. e. Valide. And Verum, i. e. strongly impressed upon the mind, is the contracted participle of Vereor.¹ And hence the distinction between Vereri and Metuere in Latin: "Vereatur liber, Metuit servus." Hence also Revereor.

F.—I am Thinged! Who ever used such language before? Why, this is worse than REOR, which Quintilian (lib. 8. cap. 3.) calls a Horrid word. Reor, however, is a deponent, and means I think.

H.—And do you imagine there ever was such a thing as a deponent verb; except for the purpose of translation, or of concealing our ignorance of the original meaning of the verb? The doctrine of deponents is not for men, but for children; who, at the beginning, must learn implicitly, and not be disturbed or bewildered with a reason for every thing: which reason they would not understand, even if the teacher was always able to give it. You do not call Think a deponent. And yet it is as much a deponent as Reor. Remember, where we now say I Think, the antient expression was—Me thinketh,¹ i. e. Me Thingeth, It Thingeth me.

¹ Vossius doubts not that "Vereor est a Ve, id est Valde, et Reor." But he affirms that Verum is not "a Ve valde, et reor; quia Vera animum maxime afficiunt; sed ab ipsum, hoc est, dicere; quia quod dicitur, est; quodque est, hoc dicitur; ut hanc duo sint avverizjzovra, nempe in sermone tali, qualem esse convenit."—The meaning of the verb Est, would here have prevented his mistake.

“Where shall we sojourne till our coronation?

Where it THINKS best unto your royall selfe.”

Richard 3d. p. 186.

For observe, the terminating K or G is the only difference (and that little enough) between Think and Thing. Is not that circumstance worth some consideration here? Perhaps you will find that the common vulgar pronunciation of Nothink, instead of Nothing, is not so very absurd as our contrary fashion makes it appear.

Bishop Hooper so wrote it.

“Mens yeyes be obedient unto the Creatour, that they may se on THINK, and yet not another.”—A Declaracion of Christe. By Iohan Hoper, cap. 8.

[“Ða næfþe he nan ƿetl hƿær he ƿittan mihte, fopðanðe nan heofon nolde hine abepan, ne nan ƿice næf þe hiƿ mihte beon onƿean Godes ƿillan þe ƿepophƿe ealle ÐINC.”

“Then had he no seat where he might sit, for that no part of heaven would bear him, nor was there any kingdom that might be his against the will of God who made all THINGS.”—Ælfric. de Veteri Testamento, p. 4.]

But your question has almost betrayed me unaware into a subject prematurely; which will be more in its place, when, in some future conversation, we inquire into the nature of the Verb; and especially of the Verb Substantive (as it is called) To Be, Esse, Existere, Extare, &c. Where we must necessarily canvass the meaning of the words Thing, Essence, Substance, Being, Real, &c.² And thither I desire to refer it.

¹ [See above, p. 292, and Additional Notes.—ED.]

² Mr. Locke, in the second book of his Essay, chap. xxxii. treats of True and False ideas: and is much distressed throughout the whole

In the mean time, if you reject my explanation of TRUE; find out, if you can, some other possible meaning of the word: or content yourself, with Johnson, by saying that TRUE is—"not False." And FALSE is—"not True." For so he explains the words.

F.—Be it so. But you have not answered my original question. I asked the meaning of the abstract TRUTH: and you have attempted to explain the concrete TRUE. Is TRUTH also a participle?

H.—No. Like North (which I mentioned before, p. 604,) it is the third person singular of the Indicative TROW. It was formerly written Troweth, Trowth, Trouth, and Troth.¹ And chapter; because he had not in his mind any determinate meaning of the word TRUE.

In Section 2, he says—"Both ideas and words may be said to be true in a metaphysical sense of the word TRUTH; as all other THINGS, that any way EXIST, are said to be true; i. e. BEALLY to BE such as they EXIST."

In Section 26, he says—"Upon the whole matter, I think that our ideas, as they are considered by the mind, either in reference to the proper signification of their names, or in reference to the REALITY of THINGS, may very fitly be call'd RIGHT or WRONG ideas. But if any one had rather call them TRUE or FALSE, 'tis fit he use a liberty, which every one has, to call things by those names he thinks best."

If that excellent man had himself followed here the advice which, in the ninth chapter of his third book, Sect. 16. he gave to his disputing friends concerning the word Liquor: If he had followed his own rule, previously to writing about TRUE and FALSE ideas; and had determined what meaning he applied to TRUE, BEING, THING, REAL, RIGHT, WRONG; he could not have written the above-quoted sentences: which exceedingly distress the reader, who searches for a meaning where there is none to be found.

¹ ["For I, playing no part of no one side, but sitting downe as indifferent looker on, neither Imperiall nor French, but flat English, do purpose with TROTH to report the matter: and seyng I shall lyve under such a Prince as King Edward is, and in such a countrey as England is, (I thank God) I shall have neither neede to flatter the one side for profite, nor cause to fear the other side for displeasure. Therefore let my purpose of reportyng the TROUTH as much content you, as the meane handlyng of the matter may mislike you."—R. Ascham to John Astely, p. 6.]

it means—(aliquid, any thing, something) that which one TROWETH, i. e. thinketh, or firmly believeth.¹

F.—Here then is another source of what has been called abstract terms; or rather (as you say) another method of shortening communication by artificial substantives: for in this case one single word stands for a whole sentence. But is this frequently employed?

H.—Yes. Very frequently. So, besides North and Truth, we have GIRTH—That which Girdeth, Gird'th, Girth.

[“It would have cleft him to the GIRDING place.”—(i. e. to the GIRTH; or place which one Girdeth.)

Faerie Queens, book 4. cant. 8. st. 43.]

WARMTH—That which Warmeth.

FILTH—Whatsoever Fileth; antiently used where we now say Defileth. See before FOUL, p. 487.

“Quhat hard mischance FILIT so thy plesand face?

Or quhy se I thay fell woundis? allace.”

Douglas, booke 2. p. 48.

“Causit me behald myne owne childe slane, alace,”

And wyth hys blude FILIT the faderis face.”—Ibid. p. 57.

[“The corne is theyrs, let other thresh,

Their haudes they may not FILE.”—Shepheards Calender: July.]

“Yet speaking thus much of TROUTH as was onely in the brest of Monsieur d'Arras on the Emperour's side, or in Baron Hudeck on Duke Maurice side, with whom and with on other of his counsell he onely conferred all his purposes three yeares before he brake out with the Emperor: But I meane such a TROTH as by conference and common consent amongst all the Ambassadors and Agentes in this Court and other witty and indifferent heades beside was generally conferred and agreed upon.”—R. Ascham to John Astely, p. 6.

“That doubtfull of the TROTH, and in suspence,

The towne rose not in armes for my defence.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, Translated by R. C.
cant. 4. st. 54.]

¹ If Mr. Wollaston had first settled the meaning of the word, he would not have made TRUTH the basis of his system.

TILTH—Any manner of operation which Tilleth, i. e. lifteth, or turneth up, or raiseth the earth. See before TILT, p. 352.

“For he fonde of his owne wit
The fyrst crafte of plough TILLYNGE.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 90. p. 1. col. 2.

i. e. The craft, of lifting up the earth with a plough.

WEALTH—That which enricheth; the third person singular of Pelegian, locupletare, &c.

[“God hathe ordeyned man in this worlde, as it were the verye image of hym selfe, to the intent that he, as it were a god in erth, shuld provide for the WELTHE of al creatures.”—Bellum Erasmi: By Berthelet, 1534. p. 5. 2.]

“There as one is for his offence greuously punished, it is the WELTHY warnynge of all other.”—Ibid. p. 30. 2.]

HEALTH—That which Healeth, or maketh one to be Hale, or WHOLE. See before HALE, p. 590.

DEARTH—The third person singular of the English (from the Anglo-Saxon verb Deþian, nocere, lædere) To Dere. It means, some, or any, season, weather, or other cause, which DERETH, i. e. maketh dear, hurteth or doth mischief.

The English verb To Dere was formerly in common use.

“No deuil shal you DERE, ne fere you in your doing.”

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 8. fol. 36. p. 2.

“Shal no deuyl at his deathes daye DERE him a mite.”

Ibid. fol. 37. p. 1.

“Shal neuer deuil you DERE, ne death in soule greue.”

Ibid. pass. 18. fol. 91. p. 2.

“No dynte shal him DERE.”

Ibid. pass. 19. fol. 97. p. 1.

“Whan he was proudest in his gere,

“And thought nothyng might him DERE.”

Gower, lib. 1. fol. 18. p. 2. col. 2.

“As for that tyme I dare well swere,
None other sorowe maie me DERE.”

Ibid. fol. 23. p. 1. col. 2.

“That with his swerd, and with his spere,
He might not the serpent DERE.”

Ibid. lib. 5. fol. 103. p. 2. col. 2

“ Upon a day as he was mery
As though ther might him no thinge DERIE.”

Gower, lib. 6. fol. 135. p. 2. col. 2.

“ His good kyng so well adresseseth,
That all his fo men he represseth :
So that there maie no man hym DERE.”

Ibid. lib. 7. fol. 164. p. 1. col. 2.

“ For of knighthode thordre wolde,
That thei defende and kepe sholde
The common right, and the franchise
Of holy churche in all wise :

So that no wicked man it DERE.”—Ibid. lib. 8. fol. 19. p. 1. col. 1.

“ And ye shall both anon unto me swere
That ye shall neuer more my countre DERE
Ne make warre upon me nyght ne day.”

Knyghtes Tale, fol. 5. p. 2. col. 1.

“ And fel in speche of Telophus the king
And of Achilles for his queynte spere
For he couthe with it heale and DERE.”

Squiers Tale, fol. 25. p. 2. col. 2.

“ For though fortune may nat angel DERE,
From hye degree yet fel he for his synne.”

Monkes Tale, fol. 83. p. 2. col. 2.

“ No thyng shall DERE them ne dysease them.”—Diues and Pauper,
3d Comm. cap. 13.

“ The womans synne was lesse greuous than Adams synne and lesse DERED mankynde.”—Ibid. 6th Comm. cap. 10.

Shakespeare, in the Tempest, (act 2. sc. 1.) says,

“ We haue lost your son, &c.
The fault's your owne,
So is the DEER'ST oth' losse.”

Again, in Timon of Athens, (Act 5. sc. 3. p. 97.)

“ Our hope in him is dead : let us returne,
And straine what other meanes is left unto us
In our DEERE peril.”

[“ O thou sweete king-killer, and DEARE diuorce
Twixt naturall sunne and fire.” [“ son and sire.”]

Ibid. act 4. sc. 3.]

And in Julius Cæsar, (act 2. p. 120,)

“That I did loue thee Cæsar, O ’tis true :
 If then thy spirit looke upon us now,
 Shall it not greeue thee DEERER then thy death,
 To see thy Antony making his peace,
 Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes ?”

And, in Hamlet,

“Would I had met my DEAREST foe in heauen,
 Ere I had euer scene that day.”

Johnson and Malone, who trusted to their Latin to explain his English, for Deer and Deerest, would have us read Dire and Direst; not knowing that Depe and Depuend mean hurt and hurting, mischief and mischievous: and that their Latin Dirus is from our Anglo-Saxon Depe, which they would expunge.¹

MIRTH—That which dissipateth, viz. care, sorrow, melancholy, &c. the third person singular of the Indicative of Wynnan. See before MORROW, p. 461.

The Anglo-Saxons likewise used Wynð, Wynðe, Mors, i. e. Quod dissipat (subaud. Vitam); the third person of the same verb Wynnan,² To Mar, &c. and having itself the same meaning as Mirth; but a different application and subaudition. Hence, from Wynðe, MURDER, the French Meurtre, and the Latin Mors.

¹ “Martinius, in voce pretiosus censet Angl. DEARE affine esse το δηρον, diuturnum; quod majoris pretii sint ac pluris fiant quæ sunt durabiliora. Ita quoque B. Duyr, pretiosus, derivant a Duyren, durare.”—Junius.

“DEAR alludit Gr. Θηραιω, consector, capto, venor; quia quæ pretiosa sunt omnes captant.”—Skinner.

“DIRUS, Dei ira natus.”—Festus.

“DIRUM est triste, infestum et quasi Deorum ira missum.” Nannius. Servius says it is a Sabine word—“Sabini et Umbri, quæ nos Mala, DIRA appellant.”

Vossius and Dacier will at all events have it from the Greek Δειρος; N mutato in R.

² [“A good man is subject, like other mortals, to all the influences of natural evil; his harvest is not spared by the tempest, nor his cattle by the MURRAIN.”—Adventurer, Edit. 1797. vol. 4. No. 120. p. 124.]

GROWTH. The third person of To Grow.

BIRTH. The third person of To Bear. See before BORN, p. 356.

RUTH. The third person of To Rue. Ὁπύριαν, misereri.

SHEATH. The third person of Sceadan, segregare. See before Shade, and Shed, p. 591.

DROUGHT. A.-S. Dpuzoð. It was formerly written DRYETH, DRYTH, and DRITH.

“When ouermuch heate or DRYETH in the matrice is cause of the hynderaunce of conception.”—Byrth of Mankynde, (1540) boke 3. fol. 83. p. 1.

“They whiche be compounde, are in compounde or myxte qualities : as heate and moisture, heate and DRYTHE.”—Castel of Helth, (1541) fol. 3. p. 1.

“Hot wynes, &c. be noyfull to theym whyche be choleryke, because they be in the highest degree of heate and DRYTHE, aboue the just temperaunce of mannes body in that complexion.”—Ibid. boke 2. cap. 4. fol. 17. p. 2.

“Where great weerinesse or DRITH greueth the body, their ought the dyner to be the lesse.”—Ibid. cap. 27. fol. 41. p. 2.

DROUGHT is, that which Dryeth, the third person singular of the Indicative of Dpizan, Dpuzan, arescere.

DRY, A.-S. Dpiz, is the past participle of the same verb. As is also DRUGS, a name common to all Europe, and which means Dried (subaud. Herbs, roots, plants, &c.) When we say, that any thing is a mere DRUG; we mean Dried up, worthless.

SLOTH—That which Sloweth, or maketh one Slow, the third person of the Indicative of Slapian. See before SLOW, p. 562.

[“The Lincolneshire commanders inform’d our’s of the SLOWTH and untoward carriage of Ballard.”—Lyfe of Col. Hutchinson, p. 121.]

STRENGTH—That which Stringeth, or maketh one Strong, A.-S. ꝛtꝛenz. See before STRONG,¹ p. 393.

¹ Mer. Casaubon derives STRONG from Εστηρίγμενος.

“Videri potest (says Junius) affine Gr. στραγγισω vel στραγγιζω, torqueo, stringo.”

Skinner derives it from the Latin Strenuus a Gr. στενης, asper, acutus : he adds—“Alludit et Gr. ἰωννω, ἰωννυμι, corroboro.”

MOUTH. (ΜΑΤΓΙΦ)—That which Eateth; the third person of the Indicative of ΜΑΤΓΑΝ, Merian, edere.¹ See before MEAT, p. 550.

MOTH—The name of an insect that Eateth or "Frettleth a garment" (φρετταν, vorare). It is the same word as Mouth, differently written, pronounced, and applied.

Junius indeed says, of MOTH—"tanquam sit ex μοχθηρος. prævus; propter importunam scelestissimi insecti malitiam."

And Skinner—"Hoc credo, a μυδαα, uligine putresco."

TOOTH (ΤΑΝΓΙΦ)—That which Tuggeth; the third person singular of the Indicative of ΤΑΝΓΑΝ, Teogan, To Tug. [The Collegers at Eton are jestingly called Tugmutton.]

FAITH. A.-S. fæð—That which one covenanteth or engageth. It was formerly written FAIETH.

"Saint Paule, speaketh of them, where he writeth that the tyme shoulde come when some erring in the FAIETH, shoulde prohibite marriage."—Dr. Martin, Of Priestes unlauful Mariages, ch. 2. p. 15.

"The very profession of FAIETH, by the whiche we beleue on the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoste, of what writyng haue we this?"—Ibid. p. 20.

"In saint Gregories daies, at whose handes Englande was learned the FAIETH of Christ."—Ibid. ch. 8. p. 116.

It is the third person singular of the Indicative of Færgan, pan-gere, pagere, To Engage, To Covenant, To Contract.

SMITH—One who Smiteth, scil. with the hammer, &c.

Thus we have² Blacksmith, Whitesmith, Silversmith, Goldsmith, Coppersmith, Anchor-smith, &c.

"A softe pace he wente ouer the strete,
Unto a SMYTH men callen Dan Gerneys,

¹ Minshew and Junius derive MOUTH from Μυδαα, sermo.—[How will Mr. Tooke's derivation accord with the Gothic ΜΗΝΨS, Ger. Mund? See Grimm, ii. 283.—Ed.]

² [But the Islandic has also, (besides træsmid, a carpenter, husa smid, an architect, &c.) vefsmid, a weaver, and even lióðsmider, a poet. See Ihre, v. Smida. And in A.-S. we have pyrgsmið, a warrior, ball fabricator.—Ed.]

That in his forge SMITETH¹ plowe harneys,
He sharpeth Shares and culters beayly."

Myllers Tale, fol. 14. p. 2. col. 2.

This name was given to all who smote with the hammer. What we now call a carpenter, was also antiently called a SMITH. The French word Carpenter was not commonly used in England in the reign of Edward the third. The translation of the New Testament, which is ascribed to Wicliffe, proves to us that at that time SMITH and Carpenter were synonymous; and the latter then newly introduced into the language.

"He bigan to teche in a sinagoge, and manye heerings wondriden in his teching, seiynge, Of whennes ben alle these thingis to this man, and what is the wisdom whiche is gownn to him, and suche vertues that ben maad by hise hondis? Wher this is not a SMITH, ether a carpentere, the sone of Marie?"—Mark, ch. 6. v. 2, 3.

STEALTH—The manner by which one STEALETH.

MONTH—Moon was formerly written Mone; and MONTH was written MONETH. It means the period in which that planet Moneth, or compleateth its orbit.

"And he his trouth leyd to borowe
To come, and if that he liue maie,
Ageine within a MONETH daie." Gower, lib. 4. fol. 67. p. 1. col. 2.

"His wife unto the sea hym brought
With all hir herte, and hym besought,
That he the tyme hir wolde seyne,
Whan that he thought come ageyne,
Within, he saith, two MONETHES daie."

Ibid. lib. 5. fol. 79. p. 2. col. 1.

EARTH—That which one Ereth or Eareth, i. e. plougheth. It is the third person of the Indicative of Erian, arare, To Ere, To Eare, or To Plough.

"He that ERITH, owith to ERE in hope." 1 Corinthians, ch. 9. v. 10.

"I haue an halfe acre to ERIE by the hygh waye;
Had I ERIED thys halfe acre and sowed it after,
I would wend wyth you." Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 31. p. 1.

¹ [Some editions read SMITHED, perhaps SMITHETH †—Ed.]

“ The mans honde doth what he maie,
To helpe it forth, and make it riche :
And for thy men it delue and dicke,
And EREN it with strength of plough.”

Gower, lib. 1. fol. 26. p. 1. col. 1.

“ I haue, God wotte, a large feld to ERE,
And weked ben the oxen in the plowe.”

Knightes Tale, fol. 1. p. 1. col. 1.

“ His fiue flokkis pasturit to and fra,
Fiue bowis of ky unto his hame reparit,
And with ane hundreth plewis the land he ARIT.”

Douglas, booke 7. p. 226.

“ Taucht thame to grub the wyne, and al the art
‘To ERE, and saw the cornes, and yoik the cart.”

Ibid. booke 13. p. 475.

“ He that ERES my land, spares my teame, and giues mee leane to inne the crop.”—Alls Well that Ends Well, p. 233.

“ That power I haue, discharge, and let them goe
‘To EARE the land.”

Richard 2. p. 35.

Instead of EARTH, Douglas and some other antient authors use ERD, i. e. Ered, Er’d—That which is ploughed. The past participle of the same verb.

“ The nicht followis, and euery wery wicht
Throw out the ERD has caucht anone richt
The sound plesand slepe thame likit best.”

Douglas, booke 4. p. 118.

“ Thare speris stikkyng in the ERD did stand.”

Ibid. booke 6. p. 187.

“ Of youth thay be accustumed to be skant,
‘The ERDE with pleuch and harrowis to dant.”

Ibid. booke 9. p. 299.

“ O thou Faunus, help, help, I the pray,
And thou, Tellus, maist nobill god of ERD.”¹

Ibid. booke 12. p. 440.

MATH—A.-S. Maþeð. The third person singular of the indicative of Maþan, metere, To Mow.

¹ Where we now say EARTH, the Germans use ERDE ; which Vossius derives from the Hebrew. “ Ab Hebræo est etiam Germanicum ERD.”

As Latter Math—i. e. That which one moweth¹ later, or after the former mowing.

“Lo, now of al sic furour and effere,
The lattir Meith and terme is present here.”

Douglas, booke 13. p. 454.

BROTH—the third person of the indicative of Bripan, co-quere. That which one Bripeð. Hence the old English saying, of a man who has killed himself with drinking,—“He has fairly drunk up his Broth :”—The Italian Brodo is the past participle of the same verb. That which is Bripeð, Brod.

[BATH.

“For in her streaming blood he did EMBAY
His little hands.” Faerie Queene, booke 2. cant. 1. st. 40.]

WATH—i. e. where one Wadeth, the third person singular of Padan, To Wade; is used commonly in Lincolnshire and in the North, for a Ford.

GARTH—i. e. Girdeth; is commonly used in the same counties for a yard.

From the Hebrew also he is willing to derive Tellus. But both ERD and Tellus are of Northern origin, and mean—

ERD —That which is Er-ed .	{ Epi-ian .
	{ Ar-are .
Tell-us —That which is Till-ed .	{ Til-ian .
	{ Tol-ere .

And it is a most erroneous practice of the Latin etymologists to fly to the Hebrew for whatever they cannot find in the Greek : for the Romans were not a mixed colony of Greeks and Jews ; but of Greeks and Goths.
As the whole of the Latin language most plainly evinces.

¹ [BOOTH—i. e. That which one Bougheth or maketh with Boughs.
See the bad derivations of BOOTH by Junius, Skinner, and S. Johnson.
But it is tolerably well described by Johnson : “A house built of boards or Boughs, to be used for a short time.” It is better described by Seneca :

“Mihi crede, felix illud sæculum ante architectonus fuit. Furcæ utrimque suspensæ fulciebant casam : spissatis ramalibus, ac fronde con-gesta et in proclive disposita, decursus imbribus quamvis magnis erat.
Sub his tectis habitavere securi.”—Seneca, Epist. xc 4ta edit. Lipsii,
p. 575.]

FIFTH } In the same manner are formed the names of our SIXTH } ordinal numbers, Fifth, Sixth, Ninth, Tenth,
 NINTH } Twentieth, &c. i. e., That unit which Fiv-eth, Six-
 TENTH } eth, Nin-eth, Ten-eth, Twenty-eth, &c. or, which &c. } maketh up the number Five, Six, Nine, Ten,
Twenty, &c.

LENGTH } In the same manner are formed our words
 BREADTH } of admeasurement, Length, Breadth, Width, WIDTH } Depth, Heighth. Which are respectively the DEPTH } third persons singular, Lengeð, Brædeð,
 HEIGHT } Þadeð, Dippeð, Heapeð, of the indicatives of Lenzian, extendere; Bræðan, dilatate; Þaðan, proce- dere; Dippan, submergere; Heapan, extollere.

F.—It has been remarked indeed that Milton always wrote Heighth, as our antient authors also did; but the word is now commonly written and spoken Height; which seems to oppose your etymology.

H.—That circumstance does not disturb me in the least: for the same thing has happened to many other words. But this interferes not at all with their meaning nor with their derivation; though it makes them not quite so easily discoverable.

So it has happened to

MIGHT; which the Anglo-Saxons wrote Mægeð or Mægðe, i. e. What one MAYETH—Quantum potest aut valet aliquis. MIGHT is the third person singular of the indicative of Magan, posse, valere.

“MEATH, vox agro Linc. usitatissima, ut ubi dicimus, I give thee the MEATH of the buying, i. e. tibi optionem et plenariam potestatem pretii seu emptionis facio.”—Skinner.

LIGHT: which the Anglo-Saxons wrote Leohteð, Leohð, and Leohƿ, i. e. quod illuminat. It is the third person of the indicative of Leohƿan, illuminare.

SIGHT: which the Anglo-Saxons wrote Sið and Siðe, i. e. that faculty which SEETH. The third person singular of the indicative of Seon, videre.

This change of e for i is nothing extraordinary: for, as they wrote ƿieð or ƿið for Seeth; so they wrote ƿie for See, and ƿiene for Seen. And Gower and Chaucer wrote SIGH for SAW.

“ And tho me thought that I SIGHE
 A great stone from an hille on highe
 Fell downe of sodeine auenture.” Gower, Prol. fol. 4. p. 2. col. 1.

“ He torneth him all sodenly
 And sawe a ladie laie him by
 Of eightene wynter age,
 Whiche was the fairest of visage
 That euer in all this worlde he SIGHE.”

Ibid. lib. 1. fol. 17. p. 2. col. 2.

“ Ful fayre was Myrthe, ful longe and high,
 A fayrer man I neuer SYGH.”

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 123. p. 2. col. 2.

WEIGHT—A.-S. ƿægeð. The third person singular of the indicative of ƿægan, To Weigh.—The WEIGHT of any thing, is—That which it Weigheth.

WRIGHT: i. e. One that Worketh. The third person of the indicative of ƿýncan, operari. As Shipwright, Cartwright, Wainwright, Wheelwright: One that worketh at Ships, Carts, Waggons, Wheels.

[“ Se ælmihtiga Scippenð ge ƿƿuteloðe hine ƿýlfne ƿuph ƿa micclan ƿeopc þe he ge ƿORÐTE æt ƿƿuman.”

“ The almighty Shaper manifested himself through the great work that he WROUGHT at the beginning.”—Ælfric. de Veteri Testamento, p. 2.

“ Forðam þe hit ýr ƿƿiðe ƿolic þ̅ ƿa ge ƿORÐTAN geðLEAFTA ƿam ne beon gehƿrume þe hi geðLEOP and ge ƿORÐTE. Nær þeor ƿopulð æt ƿƿuman, ac hi ge ƿORÐTE God ƿilf.”

“ For very disorderly it were that thing created should be disobedient unto the Creator thereof. This world was not at first, but God himself made it.”—Ibid.

R. and H, the canine and the aspirate, are the two letters of the alphabet more subject to transposition than any other. So WORK—aliquid operatum—which we retain as our substantive, is the regular past tense of ƿýncan; which, by the addition of the participial termination ED, became WORKED, WORK'D, WORKT. This our ancestors, by substituting H for K or C, wrote ƿopht, and by transposition ƿpohƿ; which we now write WROUGHT, and retain both as past tense and past participle of ƿýncan, To Work.

For ƿinceð, our ancestors wrote ƿýphƿ; and, by a transposition similar to the foregoing, Þpyht; which with us becomes WRIGHT.

These words, and such as these, are not difficult to discover. Because the terminating HT, instead of TH, leads to suspicion and detection. But there are many others, such as BLOW, HARM, ALE, KNAVE, ROOM,¹ &c. which are not so readily suspected as those I have before mentioned: because, in our modern English, we have totally cast off all the letters of the discriminating termination of the third person singular of the indicative of those verbs.

Sir Walter Raleigh, in his History of the World, instead of BLOW, uses BLOWTH (the third person singular of the indicative of Blopan, florere) as the common expression of his day.

“This first age after the flood was, by ancient historians, called Golden. Ambition and covetousness being as then but green and newly grown up; the seeds and effects whereof were as yet but potential, and in the BLOWTH and bud.”

Part 1. book 1. ch. 9. sect. 3. p. 107. edit. 1677.

¹ ROOMTH (in the Anglo-Saxon Rýmðe), the third person singular of Rýman, is the favourite term of Drayton.

“When wrathful heauen the clouds so lib'rally bestow'd
The seas (then wanting ROOMTH to lay their boist'rous load)
Upon the Belgian marsh their pamper'd stomachs cast.”

Poly-olbion, song 5.

“But Rydoll, young'st and least, and for the others pride
Not finding fitting ROOMTH upon the rising side, Alone unto the West directly takes her way.” Ibid. song 6.

“Whose most renowned acts shall sounded be as long
As Britain's name is known; which spread themselves so wide
As scarcely hath for fame left any ROOMTH beside.” Ibid. song 8.

“Nor let the spacious mound of that great Mercian king
(Into a lesser ROOMTH thy burliness to bring)
Include thee.” Ibid. song 8.

“Kanutus, yet that hopes to win what he did lose,
Provokes him still to fight: and falling back where they Might field-ROOMTH find at large their ensigus to display,
Together flew again.” Ibid. song 12.

“Besides I dare thus boast, that I as far am known
As any of them all, the South their names doth sound;
The spacious North doth me: that there is scarcely found
A ROOMTH for any else, it is so fill'd with mine.” Ibid. song 26.

“This princess having beheld the child; his form and beauty, though but yet in the BLOWTH, so pierced her compassion, as she did not only preserve it, and cause it to be fostered; but commanded that it should be esteemed as her own.”—Part 1. book 2. ch. 3. sect. 3. p. 148.

HARM. Our modern word HARM was in the Anglo-Saxon Ypmð or Iepmð, i. e. Whatsoever Harmeth or Hurteth: the third person singular of the indicative of ypman, or iepman, lædere.

[“Ði alrðe of heopa YRMÐE.”—Ælfric. de Veteri Testamento, p. 12. See above, in p. 337.]

ALE, was in the Anglo-Saxon Æloð, i. e. Quod accendit, inflammat: the third person singular of the indicative of Ælan, accendere, inflammare.

Skinner was aware of the meaning of this word, though he knew not how it was derived. He says of ALE—“Posset et non absurde deduci ab A.-S. Ælan, accendere, inflammare: Quia sc. ubi generosior est (qualis maioribus nostris in usu fuit) spiritus et sanguinem copioso semper, sæpe nimio, calore perfundit.”

[CREW } Le-pæp, Le-pæpuð.—Ræpuð, Rout. Dutch, CROWD } Rot and Rotting, A.-S. Lpeað and Lpuð.
Le-pæpuð ƿæða.—R. 7. Cot. 13. “Mixta, sive undique collecta, acies.”—Lye.

“They saw before them, far as they could vew,
Full many people gathered in a CREW.”

Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 2. st. 29.

KNAVE (A.-S. Enapa) was probably Napað, i. e. Ne-hapað, Genapað; qui nihil habet: the third person singular of Nabban, i. e. Ne-haban. So Genæp, Genæpð, Næpiz, Næpza, are in the Anglo-Saxon, mendicus, egens. In the same manner Nequam is held by the Latin etymologists to mean Ne-quicquam, i. e. One who hath nothing; neither goods nor good qualities. For—“Nequam servum, non malum, sed inutilem significat.” Or, according to Festus—“Qui ne tanti quidem est, quam quod habetur minimi.”

Of the same sort the Anglo-Saxons had likewise many other abstract terms (as they are called) from others of their verbs: of which we have not in our modern language any trace left. Such as Էրնծ, the third person singular of the indicative of Էրերան: Դուծ, the third person singular of the indicative of Դուան, &c.

Chaucer indeed has used GRYTH.

“Christ said : Qui gladio percutit,
Wyth swerde shall dye.

He bad his priestes peace and GRYTH.”

Houghman's Tale, fol. 94. p. 1. col. 2.

And from Դուծ we have Doughty still remaining in the language.¹

But I think I need proceed no further in this course : and that I have already said enough, perhaps too much, to shew what sort of operation that is, which has been termed ABSTRACTION.

CHAPTER VI.

OF ADJECTIVES.

F.—You imagine then that you have thus set aside the doctrine of Abstraction.

Will it be unreasonable to ask you, What are these Adjectives and Participles by which you think you have atchieved this feat ? And first, What is an Adjective ? I dare not call

¹ [Ընծ, nocumentum, læsio, oppression ; third person singular of Ընան, opprimere.

Ըսծ, past participle of Ըծիան.

“Se Chaldea cinnic com þa to hyr eapbe nuþ þæpe ԸՍԸ and þæpe hepe lufe.”—Ælfric. de Veteri Testamento, p. 16.]

[To these may also be added, Բիւծ and բիւոծե, Ըստծ and հստոծե, Ըսքտեծ, հսքտոծե, Ըքտծ, Էքտծ, Լեգուծ.

“Ic pille ȝan on բիւոծ.” “I will go a-fishing.”—John, xxi. 3.

“On հսքտեծե քսք.” “Was in custody.”—Chron. Sax. 1101.

“Մտքսք on քքտծ.” “Gone out a plundering.”—Ib. an. 894.

The reader is referred to Grimm's account of derivations in TH ; Grammat. vol. ii. p. 245, &c.—Ed.] it Noun Adjective: for Dr. Lowth tells us, p. 41, "Adjectives are very improperly called Nouns, for they are not the names of things."

And Mr. Harris (Hermes, book 1. ch. 10.) says—"Grammarians have been led into that strange absurdity of ranging Adjectives with Nouns, and separating them from Verbs; though they are homogeneous with respect to Verbs, as both sorts denote Attributes: they are heterogeneous with respect to Nouns, as never properly denoting Substances."

You see, Harris and Lowth concur, that Adjectives are not the names of things; that they never properly denote substances. But they differ in their consequent arrangement. Lowth appoints the Adjective to a separate station by itself amongst the parts of speech; and yet expels the Participle from amongst them, though it had long figured there: whilst Harris classes Verbs, Participles, and Adjectives together under one head, viz. Attributives.¹

H.—These gentlemen differ widely from some of their ablest predecessors. Scaliger, Wilkins, Wallis, Sanctius, Scioppius, and Vossius, considerable and justly respected names, tell us far otherwise.

Scaliger, lib. 4. cap. 91. "Nihil differt concretum ab abstracto, nisi modo significationis, non significatione."

Wilkins, Part 1. ch. 3. sect. 8. "The true genuine sense of a Noun Adjective will be fixed to consist in this; that it imports this general notion, of pertaining to."

Wallis, p. 92. "Adjectivum respectivum est nihil aliud quam ipsa vox substantiva, adjective posita."

Pag. 127. "Quodlibet substantivum adjective positum degenerat in adjectivum."

¹ Harris should have called them either Attributes or Attributables. But having terminated the names of his three other classes (Substantive, Definitive, Connective) in Ive, he judged it more regular to terminate the title of this class also in Ive: having no notion whatever that all common terminations have a meaning; and probably supposing them to be (as the etymologists ignorantly term them) mere protractiones vocum: as if words were wiredrawn, and that it was a mere matter of Taste in the writer, to use indifferently either one termination or another at his pleasure.

Pag. 129. “Ex substantivis fiunt Adjectiva copiae, addita terminatione y, &c.

Sanctius, —

F.—I beg you to proceed no further with your authorities. Can you suppose that Harris and Lowth were unacquainted with them; or that they had not read much more than all which you can produce upon the subject, or probably have ever seen?

H.—I doubt it not in the least. But the health of the mind, as of the body, depends more upon the digestion than the swallow. Away then with authorities: and let us consider their reasons. They have given us but one; and that one, depending merely upon their own unfounded assertion, viz. That Adjectives are not the names of things. Let us try that.

I think you will not deny that Gold and Brass and Silk, is each of them the name of a thing, and denotes a substance. If then I say—a Gold-ring, a Brass-tube, a Silk-string: Here are the Substantives adjective posita, yet names of things, and denoting substantives.

If again I say—a Golden ring, a Brazen tube, a Silken string; do Gold and Brass and Silk, cease to be the names of things, and cease to denote substantives; because, instead of coupling them with ring, tube, and string by a hyphen thus -, I couple them to the same words by adding the termination en to each of them? Do not the Adjectives (which I have made such by the added termination) Golden, Brazen, Silken, (uttered by themselves) convey to the hearer's mind and denote the same things as Gold, Brass, and Silk? Surely the termination en takes nothing away from the substantives Gold, Brass, and Silk, to which it is united as a termination; and as surely it adds nothing to their signification, but this single circumstance, viz. that Gold, Brass, and Silk, are designated, by this termination en, to be joined to some other substantive. And we shall find hereafter that en and the equivalent adjective terminations ed and ig (our modern y) convey all three, by their own intrinsic meaning, that designation and nothing else; for they mean Give, Add, Join. And this single added circumstance of “pertaining to,” is (as Wilkins truly tells us) the only difference between a substantive and an adjective; between Gold and Golden, &c.

So the Adjective Wooden and Woolen convey precisely the same ideas, are the names of the same things, denote the same substance; as the substantives Wood and Wool: and the terminating en only puts them in a condition to be joined to some other substantives; or rather, gives us notice to expect some other substantives to which they are to be joined. And this is the whole mystery of simple Adjectives. (We speak not here of compounds, ful, ous, ly, &c.)

An Adjective is the name of a thing which is directed to be joined to some other name of a thing. And the substantive and adjective so joined, are frequently convertible, without the smallest change of meaning: as we may say—a perverse nature, or, a natural perversity.

F.—Mr. Harris is short enough upon this subject; but you are shorter. He declares it “no way difficult” to understand the nature of a Participle: and “easy” to understand the nature of an Adjective. But to get at them you must, according to him, travel to them through the Verb.

He says, (p. 184.)—“The nature of Verbs being understood, that of Participles is no way difficult. Every complete Verb is expressive of an Attribute; of Time; and of an Assertion. Now if we take away the Assertion, and thus destroy the Verb, there will remain the Attribute, and the Time, which make the essence of the Participle. Thus take away the Assertion from the Verb Γραψι, Writeth, and there remains the Participle Γραφων, Writing; which (without the Assertion) denotes the same Attribute and the same Time.”

Again, (p. 186.)—“The nature of Verbs and Participles being understood, that of Adjectives becomes easy. A Verb implies both an Attribute, and Time, and an Assertion. A Participle implies only an Attribute and Time. And an Adjective only implies an Attribute.”

H.—Harris’s method of understanding easily the nature of Participles and Adjectives, resembles very much that of the Wag who undertook to teach the sons of Crispin how to make a shoe and a slipper easily in a minute. But he was more successful than Harris: for he had something to cut away, the boot. Whereas Harris has absolutely nothing to be so served. For the Verb does not denote any Time: nor does it imply any Assertion. No single word can. Till one single thing can be found to be a couple, one single word cannot make an Assertion or an Ad-firmation: for there is joining in that operation; and there can be no junction of one thing.

F.—Is not the Latin Ibo an assertion?

H.—Yes indeed is it, and in three letters. But those three letters contain three words; two Verbs and a Pronoun.

All those common terminations, in any language, of which all Nouns or Verbs in that language equally partake (under the notion of declension or conjugation) are themselves separate words with distinct meanings: which are therefore added to the different nouns or verbs, because those additional meanings are intended to be added occasionally to all those nouns or verbs. These terminations are all explicable, and ought all to be explained; or there will be no end of such fantastical writers as this Mr. Harris, who takes fustian for philosophy.

In the Greek verb I-εἶναι, (from the antient Εἶ or the modern Εἶμι;) in the Latin verb I-re; and in the English verb To-Hie, or to Hi, (A.-S. Hiȝan;) the Infinitive terminations εἶναι and re make no more part of the Greek and Latin verbs than the Infinitive prefix To makes a part of the English verb Hie or Hi. The pure and simple verbs, without any suffix or prefix, are in the Greek I (or Εἶ) in the Latin I; and in the English Hie or Hi. These verbs, you see, are the same, with the same meaning, in the three languages; and differ only by our aspirate.

In the Greek βουλ-ομαι or (as antiently) βουλ-εω or βουλω, βουλ only is the verb; and ομαι or εω, is a common removeable suffix, with a separate meaning of its own. So in the Latin Vol-o, Vol is the verb; and o a common removeable suffix, with a separate meaning. And the meaning of Εἶ in the one, and O in the other, I take to be Εγώ, Ego: for I perfectly concur with Dr. Gregory Sharpe, and others, that the personal pronouns are contained in the Greek and Latin terminations of the three persons of their verbs. Our old English Ich or Ig (which we now pronounce I) is not far removed from Ego.

Where we now use Will, our old English verb was Wol; which is the pure verb without prefix or suffix.

Thus then will this Assertion Ibo stand in the three languages: inverting only our common order of speech,—Ich Wol Hie or Hi, to suit that of the Greek and Latin;

English	.	.	.	Hi	Wol	Ich
Latin	.	.	.	I	Vol	O
Greek	.	.	.	I	Βουλ	εω.

They who have noticed that where we employ a w, the Latin employs a v; and where the Latin employs a v, the Greek uses a β (as $\Delta\alpha\beta\iota\delta$, Βισσισσιανος , &c.); will see at once, that Wol, Vol, Boul, are one and the same word. And the progress to Ibo is not very circuitous nor unnatural. It is Iboul, Ibou, Ibo. The termination Bo (for $\text{Βουλ}\epsilon\omega$) may therefore well be applied to denote the future time of the Latin verbs; since its meaning is I Woll (or Will). So it is, Amaboul, Amabou, Amabo, &c.¹

But let us, if you please, confine ourselves at present to Mr. Harris. He says—"Take away the Assertion from the verb

¹ When Varchi undertook to shew that the Italian language had more Tenses than the Greek and Latin; Castelvetro objected that the Italian had no Future Tense, as the Latin had.—"Conciossiacosachè la lingua nostra manchi d' un Tempo principale, cioè è del futuro, nol potendo significare con una voce semplice: ma convenendo che lo significhi con una composta; cioè è con lo 'nfito del verbo e col presente del verbo Ho: come Amare Ho, Amare Hai, Amare Ha, &c.

Castelvetro accounts very properly for the Italian future Tense Amerò, Amerai, Amera, (and so he might for Sarò, &c. i. e. Essere ho, &c.) But it seems to me extraordinary that he should have supposed it possible that the Latin, or any other language, could, by the simple verb alone, signify the additional circumstances of Manner, Time, &c., without additional sounds or words to signify the added circumstances: and that he should imagine that the distinguishing terminations in any language were not also added words; but that they sprouted out from the verb as from their parent stock. If it were so, how would he account for the very different fruit borne by the same plant, in the same soil, at different times? Antiently the Romans said Audi-bo: then Audi-am: now Udir-ò, i. e.

Audi(re) Volo	I will to hear.
Audi(re) Amo	I desire to hear.
Udir(e) Ho	I have to hear.

Γραφῆ, Writeth, and there remains the Participle Γραφῶν, Writing.”—This is too clumsy to deserve the name of legerdemain. Take away η and eth from Γραφῆ and Writeth, and there remain only Γραφ and Writ, which are indeed the pure verbs: and a man must be perfectly blind not to see that they are all which remain, until Harris whips in the other terminations ων and ing. But let us wilfully shut our eyes, and pass over this clumsy trick of his: how will he now destroy the Participle, as he before destroyed the Verb; and so get on to his Adjective? He cannot. He does not even attempt it. Nor can he ever arrive at an Adjective through a Verb.

In Γραφ and Writ there is neither Assertion nor Time. And if there had been, as Harris supposed, an Assertion implied by those words; it must, by his own doctrine, have been implied by the terminations η and eth: for by removing η and eth, he says, he takes away the Assertion and thereby destroys the Verb.

Again, if in Γραφῶν and Writing there had been any denotation of Time; it must have been in the terminations ων and ing. By the taking away of which terminations, he would, if he could (by following his former process), have destroyed the Participle and arrived at an Adjective, without any denotation of Time. But here his process failed him: and he has given us no Adjective, by destroying the Participles Γραφῶν and Writing.

F.—Though there can be no Assertion without a verb; I am not, with Mr. Harris, ready to contend that there can be an Assertion by the Verb alone. But I have always hitherto believed, and still continue to believe, that Time is denoted both by Verbs and Participles.

H.—If you are satisfied concerning the Adjective, I will willingly proceed with you to an examination of the latter point. If not, continue in your present belief; that we may not confound our subjects.

F.—You have always expressed a high opinion of Richard Johnson; and, in what you condemn, Lowth has only followed his directions.

R. Johnson says—“It had been better in the enumeration of the Parts of Speech to have made the Substantive and the Adjective two distinct parts of speech; and to have comprehended the Participle under the Adjective. For the Substantive and the Adjective are two very different parts of speech." And again—"The question is, whether the Adjective be a Noun, or Name of a thing; that is, whether it be equally so with the Substantive. Now I suppose nobody will say the Adjective is equally, or as much the Name of a Thing, as the Substantive. The Substantive represents All that is essential to the nature of the thing: as Homo, or Man, represents Animal rationale, or A rational living creature. But Bonus, Good, represents only an accidental quality: which, though morally necessary is not naturally so, but merely accidental. So that though a Man may be called Good, and therefore Good, in some sense, may be said to be his name; yet it is not equally or as much his name, as Man. This last representing all that is essential to his nature; the other only what is accidental."

Ben Jonson, whom you likewise esteem, followed the opinion of Frischlinus; that the distinction between substantive and adjective arises from the latter's being common to three genders.—"For a substantive is a Noun of one only gender, or (at the most) of two. And an Adjective is a Noun of three genders, being always infinite."

And some Grammarians have said that an Adjective only connotes, and means nothing by itself.

"Nel modo che l'Accidente s'appoggia alla Sustanza, l'Aggiuntivo s'appoggia al Sustantivo."—"E come l'Accidente non può star senza la Sustanza, così (gli Aggiuntivi) non possono star nell' orazione senza un Sustantivo: e standovi, non vi starebbon a proposito; perchè non significherebbon Niente."—Buonmattei.

H.—The opinion of Frischlinus is sufficiently confuted by Vossius.¹ And, notwithstanding R. Johnson's confident assertion that nobody would say so, I maintain that the Adjective is equally and altogether as much the Name of a Thing, as the Noun substantive. And so say I of ALL words whatever. For that is not a word which is not the name of a thing. Every word, being a sound significant, must be a sign; and, if a sign, the Name, of a Thing. But a Noun substantive is the Name of a thing—and nothing more. And indeed so says Vossius—“Nec rectius Substantivum definitur—Quod aliquid per se significat.—Nam omnis vox ex instituto significans, aliquid significat per se.”—De Analog. lib. 1. cap. 6.

¹ De Analogia, lib. 1. cap. 6.

I mean not to withdraw any portion of the respect which I have always declared for R. Johnson, B. Jonson, or Buonmattei. But it does not follow that I should be compelled jurare in verba upon every thing they have advanced. They were Grammarians, not Philosophers. Were I to compose in Latin, I certainly should not venture to use an uncommon supine or a compared participial, without first consulting R. Johnson: but for the philosophy of language I cannot consider him as an authority. How strangely does he here impose upon himself with his example of Good Man: concluding, because Good does not signify the same thing which Man signifies, that therefore Good signifies nothing, i. e. is not the name of any thing. So, if he had reversed his instance and chosen this—Human Goodness:—He must, by the same kind of reasoning, have concluded that Goodness was, but that Human was not the Name of a thing. Still more absurd will this appear, if, instead of Human, we employ Wallis's Adjective and say—Man's Goodness: for then (if Wallis is right in regard to the genitive) this reasoning will prove that—Man's—is not the name of a thing.

But, to return to R. Johnson's instance of Good Man.

“The substantive Man (he says) represents all that is essential to the nature of the thing; but the adjective Good represents only an Accidental quality.” Which, when well considered, amounts to no more than this: That the substantive Man represents all that is signified by the term Man; but that the adjective Good does not represent any idea that is signified by the term Man. And this is very true. But whoever will reflect a moment, will see that each of these words, both Good and Man, represents equally all that is essential to the nature of the thing of which Good and Man is respectively the sign. Good indeed does not represent (i. e.

is not the sign of) any idea signified by the term Man, nor was it intended; any more than the term Man represents (i. e. is the sign of) any idea signified by the term Good. But Good represents all the ideas signified by the term Goodness. And all the difference between a substantive (as Goodness) and its corresponding adjective (Good) is; that, by some small difference of termination, we are enabled when we employ the sign of an idea, to communicate at the same time to the hearer, that such a sign is then meant to be added to another sign in such a manner as that the two signs together may answer the purpose of one complex term. This contrivance is merely an Abbreviation in the sorts of words to supply the want of an Abbreviation in Terms. For instance—A Holy Man. Here is a difference of termination in one sign—Holiness—to shew us that it is to be joined to another sign—Man: and that these two together are to serve the purpose of one complex term. In this last instance, our language enables us to exchange them both for one complex term, (which we cannot do with Good Man), and, instead of a Holy Man, to say a Saint.

In some cases our language is so deficient as not to enable us to use either of these methods, when we want to express a certain collection of ideas together; and we then have recourse sometimes to Prepositions, and sometimes to another expedient: If we speak, we do it by joining the terms close in pronunciation: if we write, we do it by using a mark of junction, thus -, Which mark is not a word nor a letter, because it is not the sign of a sound; but is itself, what a word should be, the immediate sign of an idea; with this difference, that it is conveyed to the eye only, not to the ear. Thus Sea-weed, Ivory-wand, Shell-fish, River-god, Weather-board, Hail-storm, Country-house, Family-quarrel, &c.

For these collections of ideas our language does not furnish us either with a complex term, or with any change of termination to Sea, Ivory, Shell, River, Weather, Hail, Country, Family, &c. by which to communicate to the hearer our intention of joining those terms to some other term.

That an Adjective therefore cannot (as the Grammarians express it) "stand by itself, but must be joined to some other noun;" does not proceed from any difference in the nature of the idea or of the thing of which the Adjective is the sign: but from hence, that having added to the sign of an idea that change of termination which, by agreement or common acceptance, signifies that it is to be joined to some other sign, the hearer or reader expects that other sign which the adjective termination announces. For the adjective termination of the sign sufficiently informs him, that the sign, when thus adjectived, is not to be used by itself or to stand alone; but is to be joined to some other term.¹

Yet we very well know by the Adjective alone, as well as by the Substantive alone, of what idea or collection of ideas the term mentioned (whether Adjective or Substantive) is the sign: though we do not know, till it is mentioned, to what other sign the Adjective sign is to be added.

It is therefore well called Noun Adjective: for it is the Name of a thing, which may coalesce with another Name of a thing.

But if indeed it were true that Adjectives were not the names of things; there could be no Attribution by Adjectives: for you cannot attribute Nothing. How much more comprehensive would any term be by the attribution to it of Nothing? Adjectives, therefore, as well as Substantives, must equally denote Substances: and Substance is attributed to Substance by the adjective contrivance of language.

F.—Not so. You forget the distinction which Scaliger makes between Substance and Essence.

“Substantiæ appellatione abusi sunt pro Essentia: sicuti Græci nomine οὐσιας, in prædicamento. Namque οὐσια etiam

¹ Though most languages are contented to give a distinguishing termination only to the added sign; in the Persian language the sign which is to receive the addition of another sign to it, has a distinguishing termination to inform the reader when it is to receive an addition. So that in the Persian language there are Substantives which cannot stand alone, but must be joined to some other word in the same sentence. But I hope it is not necessary to travel so far as to Persia, to convince our grammarians of the impropriety of making its inability to stand alone in a sentence, the distinguishing mark of an Adjective; if they will be pleased only to recollect, that no Substantive, in any of its oblique cases, can stand alone any more than the Adjective. And this latter circumstance might perhaps incline Wallis to call our Genitive, an Adjective: for Man's cannot stand alone, any more than Human.

convenit rebus extra prædicamenta, ut Deo. At Substantia neque extra prædicamenta, neque in omnibus: sed in iis tantum quæ substant Accidentibus."

It is not therefore necessary that Adjectives should denote Substances, or else that there would be nothing attributed by their means.

H.—Well. I care not whether you call it Substance or Essence or Accident, that is attributed. Something must be attributed, and therefore denoted by every Adjective. And Essence, Substance, and Accident, are all likewise denoted by Substantives—by grammatical substantives at least. For, pray, what is Scaliger's own consequence from the words you have quoted?—That Whiteness is not a Substantive, but Nomen essentiale. By which reasoning, you see, the far greater part of grammatical substantives are at once discarded, and become Accidentalia, or philosophical Adjectives. But that is not all the mischief: for the same kind of reasoning will likewise make a great number of the most common grammatical Adjectives become philosophical Substantives, as denoting Substances. For both Substances and Essences (if you chuse to have those terms, those ignes fatuos) are equally and indifferently denoted sometimes by grammatical substantives and sometimes by grammatical adjectives.

And this difficulty has at all times puzzled all the grammarians who have attempted to account for the parts of speech by the single difference of the Things or Ideas of which the different sorts of words were supposed to be the signs. And though every one who has made the attempt, has found it miscarry in his hands; still each has pursued the beaten track, and employed his time and pains to establish a Criterion which, in the conclusion, each has uniformly abandoned. And they all come at last to such paltry jargon as this of the authors of the Encyclopédie—"Ce sont des Noms substantifs par Imitation." They must equally be obliged to acknowledge that substantial Adjectives are also des Noms adjectifs par Imitation. Thus essential terms are grammatical substantives only by imitation: and substantial terms are grammatical adjectives only by imitation: and unfortunately this does not happen only now and then, like an exception to a general rule; but this perplexing imitation is so universally practised, that there is not any Accident whatever which has not a grammatical substantive for its sign, when it is not attributed: nor is there any Substance whatever which may not have a grammatical Adjective for its sign, when there is occasion to attribute it. They are therefore forced to give up at last every philosophical difference between the parts of speech, which they had at first laid down as the cause of the distinction; and are obliged to allow that the same words (without any alteration in their meaning) are sometimes of one part of speech and sometimes of another.—“Ces mots sont pris tantôt adjectivement, tantôt substantivement. Cela dépend de leur service. Qualifient-ils? Ils sont Adjectifs. Désignent-ils des Individus? Ils sont donc Substantifs.”

Cela dépend de leur service!—Does it so? In the name of Common sense then and Common patience, why have you troubled us with a heap of stuff upon which it does not depend? But however neither is this altogether true. Cela ne dépend pas de leur service. The same word is not sometimes an Adjective and sometimes a Substantive. But it is true that some languages have such defects, that, for want of an adjective distinction to some of their terms, they are forced to attribute the term itself without any adherent intimation of its attribution. Which defect (viz. the want of an adjective termination) was, I suppose, originally the case with all terms in the rude state of all languages: and this defect still continues most in the most imperfect and unimproved languages. The want of an adjective termination to the signs of ideas, is more easily borne in languages where the added sign is closely joined to the sign which it is intended to accompany. But, without an adjective termination, all transposition would be excluded: and therefore the transposed languages are never so deficient in this respect, as the others. In English, instead of adjectiving our own substantives, we have, borrowed, in immense numbers, adjectived signs from other languages; without borrowing the unadjectived signs of those same ideas: because our authors frequently found they had occasion for the former, but not for the latter. And, not understanding the nature of language, or the nature of the very benefit they were receiving; they did not, as they might and should have done, improve their own language by the same contrivance within itself: but borrowed from other languages abbreviations ready made to their hands.

Thus they have incorporated into the English—for

The Substantives, The foreign Adjectives.

Child . .	Infant, Infantine.
Boy . .	Puerile.
Man . .	{ Virile, Human, Masculine, Male.
Woman . .	{ Female, Feminine, Effeminate.
Mind . .	{ Mental, Magnanimous, Pusillanimous, Unanimous.
Birth . .	Natal, Native.
Life . .	{ Vital, Vivacious, Vivid, Amphibious.
Body . .	Corporal, Corporeal.
Flesh . .	Carnal, Carnivorous.
Blood . .	Sanguine, Sanguinary.
Skin . .	Cutaneous.
Heart . .	Cordial, Cardiac.
Marrow . .	Medullary.
Womb . .	Uterine.
Bowels . .	Visceral.
Navel . .	Umbilical.
Lungs . .	Pulmonary.
Side . .	Lateral, Collateral.
Head . .	{ Capital, Chief, Cephalic.
Elbow . .	Cubital.
Nose . .	Nasal.
Hair . .	Capillary.
Eye . .	Ocular.
Sight . .	{ Visual, Perspicuous, Conspicuous, Optic.
Smell . .	Olfactory.
Eyebrow . .	Supercilious.
Tear . .	Lachrymal.
Ear . .	Auricular.
Hearing . .	Auditory.
Mouth . .	Oral.

The Substantives, The foreign Adjectives.

Speech . .	{ Loquacious, Garrulous, Eloquent.
Tooth . .	Dental.
Lip . .	Labial.
Throat . .	Guttural, Jugular.
Spittle . .	Salival.
Breast . .	Pectoral.
Bosom . .	Gremial, Sinuous.
Shoulder . .	Humeral.
Hand . .	{ Manual, Dexterous, Sinister, Sinistrous.
Taste . .	Insidious.
Word . .	Verbal, Verbose.
Thought . .	Pensive.
Finger . .	Digital.
Groin . .	Inguinal.
Thigh . .	Femoral.
Leg . .	Crural, Isosceles.
Foot . .	Pedal.
Death . .	Mortal.
Carcass . .	Cadaverous.
Father . .	Paternal.
Mother . .	Maternal.
Brother . .	Fraternal.
Husband . .	Marital.
Wife . .	Uxorious.
Whore . .	Meretricious.
Guardian . .	Tutelar, Tutelary.
Rival . .	Emulous.
Foe . .	Hostile, Inimical.
King . .	Regal, Royal.
Folk . .	Vulgar.
Shepherd . .	Pastoral.
Priest . .	{ Sacerdotal, Presbyterian.
Being . .	Essential.
Thing . .	Real.

The Substantives,	The foreign Adjectives.	The Substantives,	The foreign Adjectives.
Kind . . .	{ General, Generic, Con- genial.	Spring . . .	Vernal.
Dog . . .	Canine.	Summer . . .	Estival.
Cat . . .	Feline.	Beginning . . .	Initial.
Calf . . .	Vituline.	End . . .	Final, Infinite.
Cow . . .	Vaccine.	House . . .	Domestic.
Lion . . .	Leonine.	Kitchen . . .	Culinary.
Eagle . . .	Aquiline.	Field . . .	Agrestio, Agrarian.
Horse . . .	Equestrian.	Wall . . .	Mural.
Whale . . .	Cetaceous.	Hinge . . .	Cardinal.
Worm . . .	Vermicular.	Country . . .	Rural, Rustic.
World . . .	Mundane.	Town . . .	Oppidan.
Earth . . .	Terrestrial.	Grape . . .	Uveous.
Sea . . .	Marine, Maritime.	Glass . . .	Vitreous.
Water . . .	Aqueous, Aquatic.	Seed . . .	Seminal.
Ice . . .	Glacial.	Root . . .	Radical.
Fire . . .	Igneous.	Money . . .	Pecuniary.
Wood . . .	Sylvan, Savage.	Egg . . .	Oval.
Heaven . . .	Celestial.	Milk . . .	Lacteal.
Island . . .	Insular.	Meal . . .	Farinaceous.
Shore . . .	Littoral.	Shell . . .	Testaceous.
Room . . .	Local.	Ring . . .	Annular.
Boundary . . .	Conterminous.	Ship . . .	Naval, Nautical.
Light . . .	Lucid, Luminous.	Pitch . . .	Bituminous.
Ground . . .	Humble.	Mixture {	Miscellaneous, Prom- cuons.
Way . . .	{ Devious, Obvious, Im- pervious, Trivial.	Flock . . .	Gregarious, Egregious.
Sun . . .	Solar.	Health . . .	{ Salutary, Salubrious Insane.
Moon . . .	Lunar, Sublunary.	Disease . . .	Morbid.
Star . . .	Astral, Sideral, Stellar.	Hatred . . .	Odious.
Year . . .	{ Annual, Perennial, Biennial, Anniver- sary.	Love . . .	Amorous, Amatory.
Time . . .	{ Temporal, Temporary, Chronical.	Fear . . .	Timorous, Timid.
Day . . .	{ Diurnal, Hodiernal, Meridian, Epheme- ral.	Treachery . . .	Insidious.
Sunday . . .	Dominical.	Belief . . .	Credulous.
Holiday . . .	Festive, Festival.	Will . . .	{ Voluntary, Spontan- ous.
Night . . .	Nocturnal, Equinoctial.	Sorrow . . .	Trist.
Week . . .	Hebdomadal.	Grief . . .	Dolorous.
Winter . . .	Brumal.	Pride . . .	{ Superb, Haughty, Fa- tuous.
		Flattery . . .	Adulatory.
		Faith . . .	Fiducial.
		Lust . . .	Libidinous.

The Substantives, The foreign Adjectives.

Disgrace	. Ignominious.
Sleep	. . Soporiferous.
Reason	. Rational.
Revenge	. Vindictive.
Strength	. Robust.
Age	. . Primæval.
Want	. . Indigent.
Blame	. . Culpable.
Plenty	. . Copious.
Sweat	. . Sudorific.
Hurt	. . Noxious.
Advice	. . Monitory.
Law	. . Legal, Loyal.
Threat	. . Minatory.
Danger	. . Perilous.
Theft	. . Furtive.
Thanks	. . Gratuitous.
Help	. . Auxiliary.
Gain	. . Lucrative.
Hire	. { Mercenary, Stipen- diary.
Burthen	. . Onerous.
Tax	. . Fiscal.
Step	. . Gradual.

The Substantives, The foreign Adjectives.

Leap	. . Desultory.
Treaty	. . Federal.
Trifle	. . Nugatory.
Noise	. . Obstreperous.
Rule	. . Regular.
Point	. . Punctual.
Sale	. . Venal.
Wound	. . Vulnerary.
Marriage	{ Conjugal, Nuptial, Connubial.
War	. . Martial, Military.
West	. . Occidental.
East	. . Oriental.
Alone	. . Sole, Solitary.
Two	. . Second.
Vessel	. . Vascular.
Church	. . Ecclesiastical.
Parish	. . Parochial.
People	{ Popular, Populous, Public, Epidemical, Endemial.
Alms	. . Eleemosynary. ¹
&c.	. . &c.

The adoption of such words as these, was indeed a benefit and an improvement of our language; which however would have been much better and more properly obtained by adjectiving our own words. For, as the matter now stands, when a poor foreigner has learned all the names of things in the English tongue, he must go to other languages for a multitude

¹ With the Christian religion were very early introduced to our ancestors the Greek words, Church, Parish, People, Alms; which they corrupted and used as substantives, a long time before they wanted them in an adjectived state. When the latter time arrived, they were incapable of adjectiving these words themselves, and were therefore forced to seek them in the original language. Hence the Adjectives are not so corrupt as the Substantives. And hence the strange appearance of Eleemosynary, a word of seven syllables, as the Adjective of the monosyllable Alms; which itself became such by successive corruptions of Ελεημοσυνη, long before its Adjective was required: having successively exhibited itself as Almosine, Almosie, Almose, Almes, and finally Alms: whilst in the French language it appeared as Almosina, Almosne, Aumosne, Aumône.

of the adjectived names of the same things. And even an unlearned native can never understand the meaning of one quarter of that which is called his native tongue.

F.—You have not all this while taken any notice of the account given of the Adjective by Messrs. de Port Royal. And I wonder at it the more; because I know they have always been especial favourites of yours.

H.—They likewise make Substance and Accident the foundation of the difference between Substantive and Adjective: and that, I think, I have already confuted.

F.—True. But they acknowledge that this distinction is not observed in languages at present. They only affirm that it was originally the cause of the difference.¹ But they say, that, after this had been done by the first Framers of language, Men did not stop there, but proceeded further; and signified both Substance and Accident indifferently (as we see all languages now do) either by Substantives or Adjectives; sometimes by the one and sometimes by the other.

H.—If this distinction between Substance and Accident does not cause the difference between our Substantives and Adjectives, why is it now proposed to us as such?

F.—Aye, But this was originally the cause.

H.—Was it indeed? Pray, When? Where? In the remains of what rude language is any trace of this to be found? I assert hardily, in none. I maintain that it was not originally, or at any time, the cause of the difference between Substantive and Adjective in any language. But they say, men did not stop there ; but proceeded further. Proceeded ! To do what ? Why, to do directly the contrary. Can this be called Proceeding ? What a wretched abuse of words is this ; and what gross shifting ; in order to appear to give a solution of what they did not understand ! However, by this proceeding, you see we must abandon totally their first Criterion. For it now turns out, that Adjectives are indifferently the signs both of Substantives and Accidents : and Substantives are indifferently the signs both of Accidents and Substances. So that we are now just where we were, without any Criterion at all : for the progress has destroyed the Criterion. The original cause of the distinction and the progress of it, operate together like the signs plus and minus, leaving nothing to our quotient of knowledge.

¹ “Les objets de nos pensées sont ou les choses, ce qu'on appelle ordinairement Substance; ou la manière des choses, ce qu'on appelle Accident. Et il y a cette différence entre les choses ou les Substances, et la manière des choses ou des Accidents; que les Substances subsistent par elles-mêmes, au lieu que les Accidents ne sont que par les Substances. C'est ce qui a fait la principale différence entre les mots qui signifient les objets des pensées. Car ceux qui signifient les Substances ont été appelés Noms Substantifs; et ceux qui signifient les Accidents, en marquant le sujet auquel ces accidents conviennent, Noms Adjectifs. Voilà la première Origine des noms Substantifs et Adjectifs. Mais on n'en est pas demeuré là: et il se trouve qu'on ne s'est pas tant arrêté à la signification, qu'à la manière de signifier. Car, parceque la Substance est ce qui subsiste par soi-même, on a appelé Noms Substantifs tous ceux qui subsistent par eux-mêmes dans le discours: encore même qu'ils signifient des Accidents. Et au contraire, on a appelé Adjectifs ceux-mêmes qui signifient des Substances, lorsque par leur manière de signifier ils doivent être joints à d'autres noms dans le discours.”

However, let that pass. It is only so much time thrown away in appearing learned. Come, Let us now, if you please, have some Criterion which they will stand by. What now do they lay down as the real difference between an Adjective and a Substantive ?

F.—The real remaining difference, according to them, is, that a Substantive has but one signification :¹ it is the sign of that which it signifies, i. e. that which you understand by it ; and no more. But an Adjective has two significations : It is not only the sign of that which you understand by it, and which they call its distinct signification ; but it is also the sign of something which you do not, and never can understand by it alone : and this last they call its confused signification.

H.—Confused ! You understand them, I suppose, to mean, like Mr. Harris, an obscure signification.

F.—Yes, an obscure signification. But you must remember that, though this signification is confused, it is the most direct.² And that the distinct signification is the most indirect.

¹ “ Ce qui fait qu'un Nom ne peut subsister par soi-même, est, quand outre sa signification distincte, il en a encore une confuse ; qu'on peut appeller Connotation. Cette connotation fait l'Adjectif.”

² “ Il ne faut pas conclure que les Adjectifs signifient plus directement la forme que le sujet ; comme si la signification la plus distincte

II.—So then it appears at last, that the distinguishing Criterion of an Adjective is this obscure signification: for a clear, distinct signification the Adjective has in common with the Substantive.—“Blanc signifie la Blancheur d’une manière aussi distincte que le mot même de Blancheur.”

Now is it necessary here, in order to shew the absurdity of this account, to repeat again that an obscure (i. e. an unknown signification) is not any signification? Besides, there is a gross mistake made between an adjected and an adjective word: that is, between a word laid close to another word, and a word which may lye close to another word. Let me ask you, How is it with any Adjective taken by itself? Till it is joined to some other word, can you possibly discover what you call its confused meaning? Blanc has its distinct meaning when mentioned by itself; and it is then an Adjective. But what you call its confused meaning can never appear till it is adjected: and is then shewn only and altogether by the word to which it is adjected. For, if it were otherwise, it would follow, that the same word White must be, at the same time, the sign of Horse and House and Man, and every thing else to which the Adjective White may at any time be added. And, what is still more, the Substantives themselves would at once be stripped of their rank and definition, of being the signs of ideas; and would become the mere lights to make visible the confused and obscure signification of the Adjectives.

But surely I need say no more concerning the Adjective: or take up your time with combating its signification in recto and in obliquo.

As little notice do the dull Modificatives of Buffier¹ deserve;

Étoit aussi la plus directe. Car, au contraire, il est certain qu’ils signifient le sujet directement, et comme parlent les grammairiens, In Recto, quoique plus confusement: et qu’ils ne signifient la forme qu’indirectement, et comme ils parlent encore, In Obliquo, quoique plus distinctement. Ainsi, Blanc, candidus, signifie directement ce qui a de la Blancheur, habens candorem; mais d’une manière fort confuse ne marquant en particulier aucune des choses qui peuvent avoir de la blancheur. Et il ne signifie qu’indirectement la blancheur; mais d’une manière aussi distincte que le mot même de Blancheur, candor.”

¹ “Ils sont dits Noms Adjectifs, quand les objets sont considérés comme revêtus de quelques qualités; parce qu’ils ajoutent une qualité or the gay Lacqueys of the pleasant Abbé Girard: who, after providing his Substantive with Running Footmen to announce his approach (in the Article) could do no less for a word of such importance than furnish him, when occasion offered, with a numerous train in livery to support the eclat of his appearance.¹

If, in what I have said of the Adjective, I have expressed myself clearly and satisfactorily; you will easily observe that Adjectives, though convenient abbreviations, are not necessary to language; and are therefore not ranked by me amongst the Parts of Speech. And perhaps you will perceive in the misapprehension of this useful and simple contrivance of à l'objet. Mais, au fond, l'objet n'est bien désigné que par les Noms Substantifs, qui par cet endroit, sont proprement les seuls Noms. Au fond, les Adjectifs sont de vrais Modificatifs des noms; mais nous les regardons ici comme des noms, en tant qu'ils représentent moins une qualité ou circonstance de l'objet, que l'objet même en tant que revêtu de cette qualité ou circonstance.

“C'est une sorte de subtilité que nous indiquons pour prévenir celles qu'on pourroit nous objecter. N'omettons pas une réflexion importante: savoir, qu'un Nom Adjectif devient souvent Substantif. En effet, sa nature étant d'exprimer la qualité d'un objet, si cette qualité est le sujet même dont on parle, alors selon notre principe générale ce sera un Nom Substantif.

“On demande, si le nom de Roi est Substantif ou Adjectif? Il est l'un et l'autre selon l'emploi qu'on en fait.

“Au reste, tous les noms qui, d'eux-mêmes sont Adjectifs, ne sont pas censés tels dans l'usage commun de la grammaire; qui dépend en ce point, comme en une infinité d'autres, d'un usage arbitraire. Car elle n'appelle ordinairement Adjectifs, que ceux qui sans changer, ou sans presque changer d'inflexions et de terminaison, se joignent indifféremment à des noms substantifs de divers genres; c'est à dire à des noms qui reçoivent avant eux la particule Le, ou la particule La, &c.

“Au contraire les mots Roi, Magistrat, &c. ne sont jamais censés Adjectifs dans l'usage de la grammaire; quoiqu'ils le soient en effet très souvent.”

¹ “Les Adjectifs ne sont destinés qu'à un service subalterne, consistant à qualifier les dénominations. Ils sont du cortège des Substantifs, en portent les Livrées, et servent à leurs décorations. Voilà pourquoi on leur a donné le nom d'Adjectifs, qu'annonce un personnage de la suite d'un autre. Cependant quoique placés dès leur origine dans l'état de dépendance et de soumission, ils ne laissent pas que d'être par leurs couleurs et par leur magnificence une des plus brillantes parties de la parole, un champ fertile pour la poésie, une ressource délicate pour les grands orateurs, et le point capital des mediocres.”

language, one of the foundations of those heaps of false philosophy and obscure (because mistaken) metaphysic, with which we have been bewildered. You will soon know what to do with all the technical impertinence about Qualities, Accidents, Substances, Substrata, Essence, the adjunct Natures of things, &c. &c. and will, I doubt not, cheerfully proceed with me, in some future conversation, to “a very different sort of Logic and Critick than what we have been hitherto acquainted with.” Of which, a knowledge of the nature of language and of the meaning of words, is a necessary forerunner.

F.—That must be seen hereafter. But, if this be the case with Adjectives, whence arise the different sorts of terminations to different Adjectives; when one sort of termination would have answered the purpose of attribution? Why have we Adjectives ending in ly, ous, ful, some, les, ish, &c.? For you have taught me that terminations are not capriciously or fortuitously employed; though you will not allow them to be often the original and mere productions of art.

H.—Adjectives with such terminations are, in truth, all compound words: the termination being originally a word added to those other words, of which it now seems merely the termination; though it still retains its original and distinct signification. These terminations will afford sufficient matter for entertainment to etymologists, which is not necessary for our present investigation. They are now more numerous in our language than they were formerly: because our authors have not been contented only to supply our defects by borrowing Adjectives which we wanted in our language: but they have likewise borrowed and incorporated many adjective terminations which we did not want, being before in possession of correspondent terminations of our own, which answered the same purpose with those which they have unnecessarily adopted. So that we have now in some words a choice of different terminations by which to express one and the same idea: such as, Bountiful and Bounteous, Beautiful and Beauteous, Joyful and Joyous, &c.¹ Which choice is indeed of advantage to the variety and harmony of the language, but is unphilosophical and unnecessary.

¹ [“PLAGUE-FULL venomy.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, cant. 4. st. 7. Translated by R. C. 1594.

F.—In the course of our conversation, besides noticing the “Eyed and praysd Armida past the while Through the DESIREFULL troupes.”

Godfrey of Bulloigne, cant. 4. st. 29. Translated by R. C. 1594.

“But none of these, how ever sweet they beene,
Mote please his fancie, nor him cause t’ abide :
His CHOICEFULL sense with every change doth flit,
No common things may please a wavering wit.”

Spenser’s Muirpotmos, st. 20.

“Love wont to be schoolmaster of my skill,
And the DEVICEFULL matter of my song.”

Spenser, Teares of the Muses.

“The honest man that heard him thus complaine,
Was griev’d as he had felt part of his paine ;
And, well dispos’d him some reliefe to showe,
Askt if in husbandrie he ought did knowe,
To plough, to plant, to reap, to rake, to sowe,
To hedge, to ditch, to thrash, to thetch, to mowe ;
Or to what labour els he was prepar’d ?
For husbands life is LABOUROUS and hard.”

Spenser, Mother Hubberds Tale.

“The ape was STRYFULL and ambitious.”

Ibid.

“And daylie doth her CHANGEFULL counsels bend
To make new matter fit for tragedies.”

Spenser, Daphnaida.

“Who all the while, with greedie LISTFULL eares,
Did stand astonisht at his curious skill.”

Spenser, Colin Clouts come home again.

“Whose grace was great, and bounty most REWARDFULL.”

Ibid.

“Ye TRADEFULL merchants, that, with weary toyle,
Do seeke most pretious things to make your gain.”

Spenser, sonnet 15.

“And with the brightnesse of her beautie cleare,
The ravisht hearts of GAZEFULL men might reare
To admiration.”

Spenser, Hymne in honour of beautie.

“There be other sorts of cryes also used among the Irish, which savour greatly of the Scythian barbarisme, as their lamentations at their buryals, with DISPAIRFULL outcryes, and immoderate waylings.”—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

“If his body were neglected, it is like that his languishing soule, being disquieted by his DISEASEFULL body, would utterly refuse and loath all spirituall comfort.”—Ibid.

“Mischiefful” frequently used, as well as “Mischievous,” in Bellum Erasmi, by Berthelet, 1534.]

defect of our own antient language, from a paucity of Adjectives ; you have been pleased (I know not on what foundation) to suppose that the want of an adjective termination was originally the case with all terms in the rude state of all languages. But this is only your supposition in order to support your own theory. Does there, from all antiquity, remain a single instance, or even the mention or suspicion of an instance of any language altogether without Adjectives ?

H.—Though nothing of the kind should remain, it will not in the least affect my explanation nor weaken my reasoning.

F.—But, if there were such an instance ; or even any traditional mention made of such a circumstance ; it would very much strengthen your argument in my opinion, and more readily induce my assent.

H.—I suppose you are not so obstinately attached to Antiquity, but that a modern instance would answer the purpose as well.

F.—Any instance of the fact from sufficient authority.

H.—Then I believe I can suit you.—Doctor Jonathan Edwards, D.D., Pastor of a church in New-haven, in “Observations on the language of the MUHHEKANEW Indians, communicated to the Connecticut Society of Arts and Sciences, published at the request of the Society, and printed by Josiah Meigs, 1788,” gives us the following account:—

“When I was but six years of age, my father removed with his family to Stockbridge, which at that time was inhabited by Indians almost solely. The Indians being the nearest neighbours, I constantly associated with them ; their boys were my daily school-mates and play-fellows. Out of my father’s house, I seldom heard any language spoken beside the Indian. By these means I acquired the knowledge of that language, and a great facility in speaking it : it became more familiar to me than my mother-tongue. I knew the names of some things in Indian, which I did not know in English : even all my thoughts ran in Indian ; and though the true pronunciation of the language is extremely difficult to all but themselves, they acknowledged that I had acquired it perfectly ; which, as they said, never had been acquired before by any Angle-American.”

After this account of himself, he proceeds,

“The language which is now the subject of Observation, is that of the Muhhekaneew, or Stockbridge Indians. They, as well as the tribe at New London, are by the Anglo-Americans called Mohegans. This language is spoken by all the Indians throughout New England. Every tribe as that of Stockbridge, of Farmington, of New London, &c., has a different dialect; but the language is radically the same. Mr. Elliot’s translation of the Bible is in a particular dialect of this language. This language appears to be much more extensive than any other language in North America. The languages of the Delawares in Pennsylvania; of the Penobscots, bordering on Nova Scotia; of the Indians of St. Francis, in Canada; of the Shawanese, on the Ohio; and of the Chippewaus, at the westward of Lake Huron; are all radically the same with the Mohegan. The same is said concerning the languages of the Ottowans, Nanticooks, Munsees, Menomonees, Messisaugas, Saukies, Ottagaumies, Killistinoes, Nipegons, Algonkins, Winnebagoes, &c. That the languages of the several tribes in New England, of the Delawares, and of Mr. Elliot’s Bible, are radically the same with the Mohegan, I assert from my own knowledge.”

Having thus given an account of himself, and of his knowledge of the language; of the extensiveness of this language; and of a translation of a Bible into this language; he proceeds (in page 10) to inform us, that

“The Mohegans have no Adjectives in all their language. Although it may at first seem not only singular and curious, but impossible, that a language should exist without Adjectives, yet it is an indubitable fact.”

CHAPTER VII.

OF PARTICIPLES.

P.—LET us proceed, if you please, to the PARTICIPLE; which, you know, is so named because—“partem capit a Nomine, partem a Verbo.”—“Ortum a Verbo,” says Scaliger, “traxit secum tempora et significationem, adjunxitque generi et casibus.”—“Ut igitur Mulus,” says Vossius, “asini et equæ, unde generatur, participat indolem; ita hujus classis omnia et nominis et verbi participant naturam: unde, et merito, Participia nominantur.”

I have a strong curiosity to know how you will dispose of this Mule, (this tertium quid,) in English; where the Participle has neither Cases nor Gender; and which (if I understood you rightly some time since) you have stripped also of Time. We certainly cannot say that it is, in English,—“Pars orationis cum tempore et Casu.” or,—“Vox variabilis per Casus, significans rem cum tempore.” Indeed since, by your account, it takes nothing from the Verb, any more than from the Noun; its present name ought to be relinquished by us: for at all events it cannot be a PARTICIPLE in English. This however will not much trouble you: for, though Scaliger declares the PARTICIPLE to exist in language “necessitate quadam ac vi naturæ,” you, by denying it a place amongst the Parts of speech, have decided that it is not a necessary word, and perhaps imagine that we may do as well without it.

H.—I fear you have mistaken me. I did not mean to deny the adsignification of Time to ALL the Participles; though I continue to withhold it from that which is called the Participle Present.

F.—All the Participles! Why, we have but Two in our language—The Present and the Past.

H.—We had formerly but two. But so great is the convenience and importance of this useful Abbreviation, that our authors have borrowed from other languages, and incorporated with our own, Four other Participles of equal value. We are obliged to our old translators for these new Participles. I wish they had understood what they were doing at the time: and had been taught by their wants the nature of the advantages which the learned languages had over ours. They would then perhaps have adopted the contrivance itself into our own language, instead of contenting themselves with taking individually the terms which they found they could not translate. But they proceeded in the same manner with these new Participles, as with the new Adjectives I before mentioned to you: they did not abbreviate their own language in imitation of the others; but took from other languages their abbreviations ready made. And thus again the foreigner, after having learned all our English verbs, must again have recourse to other languages, in order to understand the meaning of many of our Participles.

I cannot however much blame my countrymen for the method they pursued, because the very nations who enjoyed these advantages over us, were not themselves aware of the nature of what they possessed: at least so it appears by all the accounts which they have left us of the nature of Speech; and by their distribution and definitions of the parts of which it is composed: and their posterity (the modern Greeks and the Italians) have been punished for the ignorance or carelessness of their ancestors, by the loss of great part of these advantages: which I suppose they would not have lost, had they known what they were.

As for the term PARTICIPLE, I should very willingly get rid of it: for it never was the proper denomination of this sort of word. And this improper title, I believe, led the way to its faulty definition: and both together have caused the obstinate and still unsettled disputes concerning it; and have prevented the improvement of language, in this particular, generally through the world.

The elder Stoics called this word—" Modum Verbi casualem." And in my opinion they called it well: except only that, instead of Casualem, they should have said Adjectivum; for the circumstance of its having Cases was only a consequence of its Adjection. But this small error of theirs cannot be wondered at in them, who, judging from their own transposed language, had no notion of a Noun, much less of an Adjective of any kind, without Cases.

I desire therefore, instead of PARTICIPLE, to be permitted to call this word generally a Verb adjective. And I call it by this new name, because I think it will make more easily intelligible what I conceive to be its office and nature.

This kind of word, of which we now speak, is a very useful

Abbreviation: for we have the same occasion to adjective the VERB as we have to adjective the NOUN. And, by means of a distinguishing termination, not only the simple Verb itself, but every Mood, and every Tense of the verb, may be made adjective, as well as the Noun. And accordingly some languages have adjectived more, and some languages have adjectived fewer of these Moods and Tenses.

And here I must observe that the Moods and Tenses themselves are merely Abbreviations: I mean that they are nothing more than the circumstances of Manner and Time, added to the Verb in some languages by distinguishing terminations.

When it is considered that our language has made but small progress, compared either with the Greek or with the Latin (or some other languages) even in this Modal and Temporal abbreviation: (for we are forced to perform the greatest part of it by what are called Auxiliaries, i. e. separate words signifying the added circumstances;) when this is considered, it will not be wondered at, that the English, of itself, could not proceed to the next abbreviating step, viz. of adjectiving those first Abbreviations of Mood and Tense, which our language had not: and that it has therefore been obliged to borrow many of the advantages of this kind which it now enjoys, either mediately or immediately from those two first-mentioned languages. And when it is considered, that the nature of these advantages was never well understood, or at least not delivered down to us, even by those who enjoyed them; it will rather be matter of wonder that we have adopted into our language so many, than that we have not taken all.

This sort of word is therefore by no means the same with a Noun adjective (as Sanctius, Perizonius and others after them have asserted). But it is a Verb adjective. And yet what Perizonius says, is true—"Certe omnia quæ de Nomine adjectivo affirmantur, habet Participium." This is true. The Participle has all that the Noun adjective has: and for the same reason, viz. for the purpose of Adjection. But it has likewise something more than the Noun adjective has: because the Verb has something more than the Noun. And that something more, is not (as Perizonius proceeds to assert) only the adsignification of Time. For every Verb has a signification of its own, distinct from Manner and Time. And language has as much occasion to adjective the distinct signification of the Verb, and to adjective also the Mood, as it has to adjective the Time. And it has therefore accordingly adjectived all three; —the distinct signification of the simple Verb; and the Verb with its Moods; and the Verb with its Tenses. I shall at present notice only Six of these Verb adjectives which we now employ in English: viz. The simple Verb itself adjective; two Adjective Tenses and three Adjective Moods.

Bear patiently with my new terms. I use them only by compulsion. I am chiefly anxious that my opinion may be clearly understood: and that my errors (if they are such) may plainly appear without any obscurity or ambiguity of expression: by which means even my errors may be useful.

We had formerly in English only the simple Verb Adjective: and the Past Tense Adjective. In addition to these two, we have now the convenience of four others. Which I must call,

The Potential Mood Active, Adjective;

The Potential Mood Passive, Adjective;

The Official Mood Passive, Adjective;

And The Future Tense Active, Adjective.

Still have patience with me; and I trust, I shall finally make myself clearly understood.

And first for our simple Verb Adjective. It was formerly known in our language by the termination -and. It is now known by the termination -ing.

As the Noun Adjective always signifies ALL that the unadjectived Noun signifies, and no more, (except the circumstance of adjection;) so must the Verb Adjective signify ALL that the unadjectived Verb signifies, and no more, (except the circumstance of adjection.)—But it has been usual to suppose that with the Indicative Mood (as it is called) is conjoined also the signification of the Present Time, and therefore to call it the Indicative Mood Present Tense. And if it were so, then indeed the word we are now considering, besides the signification of the Verb, must likewise adsignify some Manner and the Present Time: for it would then be the Present Tense Adjective, as well as the Indicative Mood Adjective. But I deny it to be either. I deny that the Present Time (or any Time) or any Manner, is signified by that which is called (improperly) the Indicative Mood Present Tense. And therefore its proper name is merely the Verb—Indicative, if you please: i. e. Indicative merely of being a Verb.

And in this opinion (viz. that there is no adsignification of Manner or Time in that which is called the Indicative Mood: and no adsignification of Time in that which is called the Present Participle) I am neither new nor singular: for Sanctius both asserted and proved it by numerous instances in the Latin. Such as,

"Et absui proficiscens in Græciam."

Cic.

"Sed postquam amans accessit pretium pollicens."

Terent.

"Utro ad eam venies indicans te amare."

Ibid.

"Tum apri inter se dimicant indurantes attritu arborum costas."

Plin.

"Turnum fugientem hæc terra videbit."

Virg.

In the same manner we say,

"The sun rises every day in the year."

"Justice is at all times Mercy."

"Truth is always one and the same from the beginning of the world to the end of it."

Neither Time nor Manner is signified by the Indicative in these sentences.

Again,—

"The rising sun always gladdens the earth."

"Do justice, justice being at all times Mercy."

"My argument is of no age nor country, truth being always the same, from the beginning of the world to the end of it."

In rising and being (though called Present Participles) there is evidently here no adsignification of Time.

Scaliger saw plainly the same. He says—"Modus non fuit necessarius: unus enim tantum exigitur ob veritatem, Indicativus. Cæteri autem ob commoditatem potius."

And even Perizonius and others who maintain a contrary opinion, are compelled to acknowledge, that—"Indicativus adhibetur ad indicandam simpliciter rem ipsam."

"Horum autem participiorum magis promiscuus aliquando est usus; tum quia nomina sunt, et sæpe adhibentur sine ullo temporis respectu aut designatione : quando scil. ejus distinctio non requiritur."

"Hæc ipsa autem res, h. e. adsignificatio temporis, ne quis præcipuam putet, sæpissime reperitur neglecta, immo plane extincta."

"Animadvertendum est, uno in commate sæpe diversa notari tempora, atque adeo Præsens vere Participium posse accedere omnibus omnino periodis, in quibus etiam de præterita et futura re agitur. QUIA"—(Having by compulsion admitted the fact, now come the shallow and shuffling pretences) "QUIA in præterita illa re, quum gesta est, Præsens Fuit: et in futura, item Præsens Erit."

"Recurrendum denique ad illud etiam,—Præsens haberi pro extremo Præteriti temporis puncto, et primo Futuri."

"Advenientes dicuntur, non illi tantum qui in itinere sunt, sed et qui jam pervenerunt in locum ad quem tendebant, et speciem advenientis adhuc retinent."

Præsens—quia præsens Fuit, et præsens Erit!

Præsens—extremum præteriti punctum, et primum futuri!

Advenientes—qui pervenerunt!

These shabby evasions are themselves sufficient argument against those who use them. A common termination (i. e. a coalesced word), like every other word, must always convey the same distinct meaning; and can only then be properly used, quando Distinctio requiritur. What sort of word would that be, which, (used too with propriety,) sometimes had a meaning, and sometimes had not a meaning, and sometimes a different meaning?

Thus stands the whole matter. Case, Gender, Number, are no parts of the NOUN. But as these same circumstances frequently accompany the Noun, these circumstances are signified by other words expressive of these circumstances: and in some languages these words by their perpetual use have coalesced with the Noun; their separate signification has been lost sight of, (except in their proper application;) and these words have been considered as mere artificial terminations of the NOUN.

So, Mood, Tense, Number, Person, are no parts of the VERB. But these same circumstances frequently accompanying the Verb, are then signified by other words expressive of these circumstances: and again, in some languages, these latter words, by their perpetual recurrence, have coalesced with the Verb; their separate signification has been lost sight of, (except in their proper application;) and these words have been considered as mere artificial terminations of the Verb.

The proper application of these coalesced words, or terminations, to Nouns, has been called Declension: and to Verbs, has been called Conjugation. And perhaps this arrangement and these denominations may have greatly contributed to withdraw us from a proper consideration of this matter: for we are all very apt to rest satisfied with a name, and to inquire no further.

And thus have I given you my opinion concerning what is called the Present Participle.¹ Which I think improperly so called; because I take it to be merely the simple Verb adjectived, without any adsignification of Manner or Time.

F.—Now then let us proceed to the Past Participle, which you chuse to call the Past Tense Adjective.

H.—As far as relates to what is called the Indicative Mood, and consequently to its Adjective, the Participle Present; you have seen that, so far, Sanctius and I have travelled in perfect accord together. But here again I must get out at Hounslow. I cannot proceed with him to the exclusion of the other Moods and Tenses: for, in Latin, they have distinct terminations, and in English, termination and auxiliaries, signifying the circumstances of Manner and Time. Nor, consequently, can I consent to exclude the other Participles, which are indeed merely those Moods and Tenses, adjectived; and do truly therefore adsignify Manner and Time. The Manner being adjectived as well as the Time, (i. e. the Mood as well as the Tense;) and both for the same reason, and with the same convenience and advantage. In our own language these Manners and Times are usually (but not always) signified by words distinct from the Verb, which we call auxiliaries. In some other languages they are signified also by words, different indeed from the Verb, but which have coalesced with the Verb, and are now considered merely as terminations; equally auxiliary however with our uncoalescing words, and used for the same purpose.

¹ [See Additional Notes.]

I hold then that we may and do adjective the simple Verb without adsignification of Manner or Time: that we may and do adjective the Verb in conjunction with an expressed Time: and that we may and do adjective the Verb in conjunction with an expressed Manner. I hold that all these are greatly and equally convenient for the abbreviating of speech: and that the language which has more of these conveniences does so far forth excel the language which has fewer.

The Past Participle, or the Past Tense Adjective, our language has long enjoyed: and it is obtained (as we also adjective the Noun) by adding En or Ed to the Past Tense of the verb. The Latin makes an Adjective of the Past Tense (as it also makes an Adjective of the Noun) merely by adding its Article os. η. ov. to the third person of the Past Tense.

Amavit, Amavitus, Amavtus, Amatus.

Docuit, Docuitus, Docitus, Doctus.

Legit, Legitus, Legtus, Lectus.

Audivit, Audivitus, Audivtus, Auditus.

And that this Past Participle is merely the Past Tense Adjective; that it has merely the same meaning as the Past Tense, and no other; is most evident in English: because, in the same manner as we often throw one Noun substantive to another Noun substantive, without any change of termination to shew that it is so intended to be thrown; we are likewise accustomed to use the Past Tense itself without any change of termination, instead of this Past Participle: and the Past Tense so used, answers the purpose equally with the Participle, and conveys the same meaning.

Dr. Lowth, who was much better acquainted with Greek and Latin than with English, and had a perfectly elegant Greek and Latin taste, finds great fault with this our English custom; calls it confusion, absurdity, and a very gross corruption; pronounces it altogether barbarous, and wholly inexcusable; and complains that it—"is too much authorized by the example of some of our best writers." He then gives instances of this inexcusable barbarism, from Shakespeare, Milton, Dryden,¹ Clarendon, Atterbury, Prior, Swift, Addison, Misson,

¹ ["For who can shew me, since they first were WRIT,
They e'er converted one hard-hearted Wit?"

Dryden, Prol. to The Rival Ladies.

Bolingbroke, Pope, and Gay. And if he had been pleased to go further back than Shakespeare, he might also have given instances of the same from every writer in the English tongue.¹ It is the idiom of the language. He is therefore

"Had there been choice, what would I not have CHOSE?"

Dryden, Rival Ladies, act. 4. sc. 3.

"I made a sacred and a solemn vow
To offer up the prisoners that were TOOK."

Dryden, Indian Queen, act 2. sc. 1.

"Let me then share your griefs, that in your fate
Would have TOOK part."

Ibid. act 2. sc. 1.

"—— In one moment this new guest
Has DROVE me out from this false woman's breast."

Ibid. act 3. sc. 1.

"Part of which poem was WRIT by me."—Connection of the Indian Emperor to the Indian Queen.

"For life and death are things indifferent;
Each to be CHOSE, as either brings content."

Dryden, Indian Emperor, act 2. sc. 1.

"You might howe'er have TOOK a fairer way." Ibid. act 3. sc. 2.

"His mind is SHOOK." Ibid. act 4. sc. 1.

"High trees are SHOOK, because they dare the winds."

Dryden, The Maiden Queen, act 2. sc. 5.

"Peace, peace, thou should'st for ever hold thy tongue;
For it has SPOKE too much for all thy life." Ibid. act 5. sc. 1.

"Courage, my friend, and rather praise we heaven,
That it has CHOSE two such as you and me."

Dryden, Amboyna, act 5. sc. 1.

"Guilt and distraction could not have SHOOK him more."

Dryden, Edipus, act 4. sc. 1.

"As well thou may'st advise a tortur'd wretch,
All mangled o'er from head to foot with wounds,
And his bones BROKE, to wait a better day." Ibid. act 4. sc. 1.]

¹["All the moderns who have WROTE upon this subject."—Dr. Taylor, Elements of Civil Law, 1755. p. 10.

"Were WROTE originally in Latin."—Ibid. p. 22.

"Providence, which has WOVE us into this texture."—Ibid. p. 84.

"The mistakes upon this head have AROSE from hence." Ibid. p. 152.

"Tullius, being CHOSE king by the suffrage of the people."

Ibid. p. 206.

"The ancient statuary has been thought to have AROSE from this figure."—Ibid. p. 459.

"I have SPOKE to it in my Commentary upon the Sandwich Marble."
—Ibid. p. 467.

undoubtedly in an error, when he says that—"This abuse has been long growing upon us, and is continually making further incroachments." For, on the contrary, the custom has greatly decreased: and as the Greek and Latin languages have become more familiar to Englishmen, and more general; our language has continually proceeded more and more to bend and incline to the rules and customs of those languages. And we have greatly benefited by those languages; and have improved our own language, by borrowing from them a more abbreviated and compact method of speech. And had our early or later authors known the nature of the benefits we were receiving; we might have benefited much more extensively.

However we shall be much to blame, if, with Dr. Lowth, we miss the advantage which our less cultivated language affords us by its defects: for by those very defects it will assist us much to discover the nature of human speech, by a comparison of our own language with more cultivated languages. And this it does eminently in the present instances of the Past Participle and the Noun Adjective. For, since we can and do use our Noun itself unaltered, and our Past Tense itself unaltered, for the same purpose and with the same meaning, as the Greek and Latin use their Adjective and their Participle; it is manifest that their Adjective and Participle are merely their Noun and Past Tense, Adjectived.

"Budæus in particular has WROTE upon it very largely."—Dr. Taylor, Elements of Civil Law, 1755, p. 490.

"I find one Lucullus, whose life is wrote by Plutarch."—Ibid. p. 512.

"We are assured, that the following words were not WROTE in his time."—Ibid. p. 555.]

[Our older writers, who are admirable for their rhythm and cadence, availed themselves of this latitude, in giving harmony to their language: thus, in the same chapter,

- 1 Kings, viii. 13.—"I have surely BUILT thee a house to dwell in."
 27.—"how much less this house that I have BUILDED."
 43.—"this house which I have BUILDED is called by thy name."
 44.—"toward the house that I have BUILT for thy name."—Ed.]

CHAPTER VIII.

THE SAME SUBJECT CONTINUED.

F.—WELL. Now for your four Abbreviations: which, you say, we have adopted from those other languages.

H.—That which I call the Potential Passive Adjective is that which our antient writers first adopted; and which we have since taken in the greatest abundance: not led to it by any reasoning, or by any knowledge of the nature of the words; but by their great practical convenience and usefulness. I mean such words as the following, whose common termination has one common meaning.

Admissible	Immutable	Intolerable
Affable	Incorrigible	Tractable
Ineffable	Incredible	Formidable
Inaccessible	Culpable	Fusible
Amiable	Despicable	Heritable
Arable	Indivisible	Impregnable
Audible	Indubitable	Indefatigable
Cognizable	Eligible	Indefeisible
Incombustible	Inexplicable	Indelible
Incompatible	Infallible	Inadmissible
Contemptible	Feasible	Inevitable
Inexorable	Inflexible	Immiscible
Inexpugnable	Noble	Inimitable
Insatiable	Palpable	Vendible
Inscrutable	Penetrable	Visible
Intelligible	Imperceptible	Vulnerable,
Interminable	Impracticable	&c.
Investigable	Implacable
Invincible	Plausible	As well as the con-
Irrefragable	Pliable	tracted
Irremissible	Portable	Missile
Irascible	Possible	Docile
Laudable	Probable	Ductile
Legible	Sensible	Projectile
Liabile	Soluble	Frail
Malleable	Tangible	Facile,
Incommensurable	Tenable	&c.

These words, and such as these, our early authors could not possibly translate into English, but by a periphrasis. They therefore took the words themselves as they found them: and the same practice, for the same reason, being followed by their successors; the frequent repetition of these words has at length naturalized them in our language. But they who first introduced these words, thought it necessary to explain them to their readers: and accordingly we find in your manuscript New Testament, which (whoever was the Translator) I suppose to have been written about the reign of Edward the third;¹ in that manuscript we find an explanation accompanying the words of this sort which are used in it. And this circumstance sufficiently informs us, that the adoption was at that time but newly introduced.

“I do thankis to God up on the UNENARRABLE, or, that may not be told, gifte of hym.”—2 Corinthies, cap. 9.

“Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.”—Modern Version, ver. 15.

“Whom whanne ye han not seyn ye louen, in to whom also now ye not seyng bileuen, forsoth ye bileuyng shulen haue ioye with outeforth in gladnesse UNENARRABLE, that may not be teld out.”—1 Petir, cap. 1.

“Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye reioice with joy unspeakable.”—Modern Version, ver. 8.

“From hennesforth brithren, Whateuer thingis ben sothe, whateuer thingis chaist, whateuer thingis iust, whateuer thingis holi, whateuer thingis AMYABLE, or, able to be louyd.”—Philippensis, cap. 4.

“Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely.”—Modern Version, ver. 8.

“The whiche is not maid up the lawe of fleshly maundement: but up vertu of lyf INSOLIBLE, or, that may not be undon.”—Ebrewis, cap. 7.

“Who is made not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life.”—Modern Version, ver. 16.

¹ I suppose it to be about this date; amongst other reasons, because it retains the Anglo-Saxon Theta, the ambiguous 3, and the 1 without a point over it. But I am not sufficiently conversant with Manuscripts to say when the use of these characters ceased.

“Forsothe wisdom that is fro abone, first sotheli it is chast, aftirwarde pesible, mylde, SWADIBLE, that is, esi for to trete and to be tretid.” James, cap. 3.

“But the wisdom that is from above, is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be intreated.”—Modern Version, ver. 17.

Gower, in his Conf. Amant. (written, as he informs us, in the sixteenth year of Richard the second) has taken very little advantage of this then newly introduced abbreviation. He uses only six of these words, viz. Credible, Excusable, Impossible, Incurable, Invisible, Noble; and one, made by himself, I believe, in imitation, Chaceable.

“She toke hir all to venerie,
In foreste and in wilderness,
For there was all hir besinesse
By daie, and eke by nightes tide,
With arowes brode under the side,
And bow in honde, of whiche she slough
And toke all that hir lyst enough
Of beastes whiche ben CHACEABLE.”

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 90. p. 2. col 1.

Chaucer uses many more of these words than Gower did; but in nothing like such quantities as have been since employed in our language.

F.—I understand you then to say that the words in our language with the termination BLE, are merely the Potential Passive Adjective: and that we have adopted this termination from the Latin, for the purpose of abbreviation. But the Latin Grammarians had no such notion of this termination. They have assigned no separate office, nor station, nor title, to this kind of word. They have not ranked it even amongst their participles. They call these words merely Verbalia in Bilis: which title barely informs us, that they have indeed something or other to do with the verbs; but what that something is, they have not told us. Indeed they are so uncertain concerning the relation which these words bear to the verb; that most of the grammarians, Vossius, Perizonius, Goclenius, and others, tell us, that these Verbalia in Bilis signify sometimes passively and sometimes actively. And I am sure we use great numbers of words with this termination in English, which do not appear to signify either actively or passively.

Vossius says—"Hujusmodi verbalia sæpius exponuntur passivè, interdum et activè."

Perizonius—"Porro sunt et alia unius formæ vocabula, duplicem tamen, tum activam, tum passivam habentia significationem; veluti Adjectiva in Bilis exeuntia. De quorum passiva significatione nullum est dubium. De activa, hæc exempli loco habe, &c."

And I think I could, without much trouble, furnish you with a larger catalogue of words in Ble, used in English, without a passive signification, than you have furnished of those with a passive signification.

What say you to such as these?

Abominable	Convenable	Miserable
Accordable	Culpable	Pleasurable
Agreeable	Customable	Profitable
Amicable	Delectable	Proportionable
Available	Discordable	Reasonable
Capable	Durable	Risible
Charitable	Entendable	Semblable
Colourable ¹	Favourable	Vengeable
Comfortable	Forcible	Veritable
Concordable	Honourable	&c.
Conducible	Inclinable

And the French have a multitude besides, such as secourable, &c. which we have not adopted from them.

H.—All this is very true. But what says Scaliger of these Verbals in Bilis?—"Recentiores audacter nimis jam actus significationem attribuere, idque frivolis sane argumentis. Auxere errorem pertinacia. Poetica licentia dictum est, Penetrabile activè."—De Causis, lib. 4. cap. 98.

Scaliger speaks of their frivolous arguments; but I have never yet seen any attempt at any argument whatever on the subject. They bring some examples indeed of an active use of some words in Bilis. From good authors they are very few indeed: from Virgil one word; two from Terence; one from Livy; one from Tacitus; one from Quintus Curtius; one from Valerius Maximus: they produce abundance from Plautus, who used such words as voluptabilis, ignorabilis, &c. And after the Latin language became corrupted; in its decay, we meet with heaps of them. It is in the terminations chiefly that languages become corrupted: and I suppose the corruption arises from not having settled or well understood the meaning and purpose of those terminations.

¹ ["They may have now a COLORABLE pretence to withstand such innovations."—Spenser's View of the State of Ireland, Todd's edit. 1805. p. 310.]

Had the Latin Grammarians been contented with the old Stoic definition of Modus verbi casualis, these verbals might very well have been ranked with their participles; but when they defined the participle to be a word significans cum tempore, these verbals were necessarily excluded: and to retain the participle present, as they called it, they were compelled obstinately, against all reason and evidence, to maintain that there was a signification of Time, both in the Indicative and in its Adjective the present participle; although there was no termination or word added to the Indicative of the verb, by which any Time could be signified. With equal reason might they contend, that the same word with the termination Bilis, was properly used to signify indifferently two almost opposite ideas; viz. To Feel, or, To be Felt; To Beat, or, To be Beaten: which would be just as rational, as that the same word should be purposely employed in speech, to signify equally the horse which is ridden, and the man who rides him. Words may undoubtedly, at some times and by some persons, be so abused: and too frequently they are so abused. And when any word or termination becomes generally so abused, it becomes useless; and in fact ceases to be a word: for that is not a word, whose signification is unknown. A few of these corruptions may be borne in a language, and the context of the sentence may assist the hearer to comprehend the speaker's meaning; but when the bulk of these terminations in a language becomes generally so corrupted, that language is soon broken up and lost: and, to supply the place of these corrupted words or terminations, men are forced to have recourse again to other words or terminations which may convey distinct meanings to the hearer.

Scaliger, distinguishing properly between Ilis (he should have said Bilis; for the B is important to this termination) and Ivus, instances a similar distinction and convenience in the Greek language, viz. αισθητον and αισθητικον. And this instance ought to make an Englishman blush for his countrymen; whose ignorance commonly employs the corresponding word to αισθητον, SENSIBLE, in three different meanings; although (thanks to our old translators) we have now in our language, three distinct terminations for the purpose of distinction: We have Senseful;¹—Sensitive;—Sensible;²—Sensevole;—Sensitivo;—Sensibile;—Full of Sense;—which can ¹ ["Whylest thus he talkt, the knight with greedy eare

Hong still upon his melting mouth attent:
Whose SENSEFULL words empierst his hart so neare,
That he was wrapt with double ravishment."

Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 9. st. 26.]

² ["The same statutes are so slackely penned (besides the latter of them is so UNSENSIBLY contrived, that it scarce carryeth any reason in it."—Spenser's View of the State of Ireland. Todd's edit. p. 337.]

"If acts of parliament were after the old fashion penned by such only as perfectly knew what the Common Law was before the making of any act of parliament concerning that matter, as also how far forth former statutes had provided remedy for former mischiefs and defects discovered by experience; then should very few questions in law arise, and the learned should not so often and so much perplex their heads to make atonement and peace, by construction of law, between INSENSIBLE and disagreeing words, sentences and provisoes, as they now do."—Coke, 2. Rep. Pref.

["Ah, torto si crudel non farmi, Ismene,
Quando ancora a tuoi pregi,
Quando alla tua beltà sol fra' viventi
INSENSIBIL foss' io, come potrei
Esserlo al sì costante
Generoso amor tuo?"

Metastasio, Partenope. Parte seconda. Edit.
Parigi, 1781. tom. 9. p. 374.]

["Grumio. Lend thine ear.

Curtis. Here.

Grumio. There.

[Striking him.

Curtis. This is to feel a tale, not to hear a tale.

Grumio. And therefore 'tis called a sensible tale." Tam. Shrew, iv. 1.

This play on the word shows that it had both meanings in Shakespeare's time.

"It would have been insensible and unnatural not to have done it."
—Garrick's Correspondence, Letter to Woodfall, Nov. 20, 1771. —Ed.]

feel;—which may be felt. Yet it is not very uncommon to hear persons talk of—"A Sensible man, who is very Sensible of the cold, and of any Sensible change in the weather."—

I wish this were a solitary instance in our language; but this abuse, like the corrupt influence of the crown, (in the language of parliament twenty years ago,) has increased, is increasing, and ought to be diminished. Much of this abuse in our speech we owe to the French: whom however it would be ungrateful in us to reproach with it; because I believe we owe likewise to these same French all the benefit of all these abbreviations which we have borrowed: for though it is true that they proceed originally from the Latin; yet we have them mediately through the Italian and the French. And we ought to be contented, as the French also ought with their revolution, to take the good and the bad together; especially if, as in both cases, the good preponderates beyond all comparison over the bad; and more especially still, if we may retain the benefit, and avoid the future mischief.

The words in Blé which you have opposed to me, we have taken from the French, who took them corruptly from the Italian. And it happened in this manner. Our Anglo-Saxon Full, which with the Germans is Vol, became the Italian Vole: and there was something in the sound of Vole so pleasing to an Italian ear, that many of their authors, (led by their ears and not by their understanding, without any occasion for it, deciding on its propriety by the sound and not by the signification,) added it as a termination to many of their words; not only where the signification suited, but often where it did not: and, amongst others, Cardinal Bembo in particular is much and justly ridiculed, for his very injudicious and wholesale application of this termination.¹

¹ "A fin de ne rien laisser en arriére, tant qu'il me sera possible, je leur répondray à ce en quoy ils semblent avoir quelque couleur de prétendre leur langue avoir de la gentillesse que la nostre n'en a point. Ils disent donc qu'ils ont quelques terminaisons de Noms fort plaisantes et gentiles, desquelles nous sommes déstitués. Et la principale de celles qu'ils mettent en avant, c'est des mots qui finissent en Ole: comme Pincevole, Favorevole. Je confesse que ceste terminaison est belle: mais je di qu'une chose belle perd sa grace quand on en abuse. Or qu'ainai

Hence the Italian words,

Abominevole	Convenevole	Onorevole
Accordevole	Costumevole	Piacevole
Aggradevole	Dilettevole	Profittevole
Amichevole	Discordevole	Proporzionevole
Capevole	Durevole	Ragionevole
Caritatevole	Favorevole	Ridevole
Colorevole	Forzevole	Sembievable
Colpevole	Inchinevole	Soccorevole
Concordevole	Intendevole	Valevole
Conducevole	Memorevole	Vendichevole
Confortevole	Miserevole	Veritevole, &c.

Which the French by a most slovenly pronunciation, not distinguishing between Bile and Vole, have transformed into—Abominable, Agréable, Amicable, Capable, Charitable, Comfortable, Convenable, Coupable, Delectable, Durable, Favorable, Forcible, Honorable, Miserable, Memorable, Profitable, Proportionable, Reasonable, Risible, Semblable, Valable, Vengeable, Véritable, Secourable, &c.

In this manner our own word Full, (passing through the German, the Italian, and the French,) comes back to us again under the corrupt shape of Ble: and in that shape to the great annoyance of its original owners: for it tends to confound those terminations, whose distinct application and employment are so important to the different and distinct purposes of speech.

soit que quelquesuns en abusent, il appert par la controverse qui est entre eux touchant le mot Capevole, et quelques autres. Car tous reçoivent bien Favorevole, Piacevole, Amorevole, Lauderole, Honorevole, Biasmevole, Solazzevole, et plusieurs semblables: mais quant à Capevole, et quelques autres, ils ne sont pas reçus de tous. Car aucuns disent qu'en ce mot Capevole on abuse de ceste terminaison Ole, et qu'il faut dire Capace. Or quant à Capevole je sçay bien que leur Bembo en use au premier livre du traité intitulé Le Prose. Mais on peut dire qu'il ne s'en faut pas fier à luy: pource qu'il usoit tant des mots ayans ceste terminaison qu'il s'en rendoit ridicule.

“Or est-il certain que comme Bembo usoit trop de ces mots, de sorte qu'il rendoit leur beauté ennuyeuse, et luy faisoit perdre sa grace; quelques autres aussi ont fait, et aucuns encore aujourd'hui font le mesme.”—Henry Estienne, De la précellence, &c. p. 54.

Besides these corruptions of Vole, we have many other corrupt terminations in Ble, which are blemishes in the language; and which I am persuaded would not have happened to it, had the Verbals in Bilis, their nature, their proper use, and their great advantage been previously understood. Duplum, Triplum, Humile, Tabula, Fabula, Rabula, Syllaba, Parabola, Bibulum, Quidlibet, Vestibulum, Ambulare, Dissimulare, Scribillare, Tremulare, &c. &c. Tuimelen, Grommelen, Kruimelen, Rommelen, Fommelen, Mompelen, Kabel, Bobbel, Stoppel, &c. &c. would never have been corrupted by us to—Double, Treble, Humble, Table, Fable, Rabble, Syllable, Parable, Bible, Quibble, Vestible, Amble, Dissemble, Scribble, Tremble, &c. Tumble, Grumble, Crumble, Rumble, Fumble, Mumble, Cable, Bubble, Stubble, &c. &c. But, as B. Jonson did well write the word Syllabe, and not Syllable; so we should have taken care to give to all the other words, terminations which would not have interfered with this important abbreviation. We should never have seen such monsters in our language, as Shapeable, Sizeable, Companionable, Personable,¹ Chanceable, Accustomable, Merciable, Behoveable, &c. which disgrace the writings of some otherwise very excellent authors.

F.—Do you then propose to reform these abuses?

H.—Reform! God forbid. I tremble at the very name of Reform. The Scotch and the English lawyer in conjunction, [Dundas] and [Pitt,] with both the Indies in their patronage, point to the Ecce Homo with a sneer; and insultingly bid us —“Behold the fate of a Reformer!”

No. With our eyes open to the condition of them all, you know that your friend Bosville and I have entered into a strict engagement to belong for ever to the established government, to the established church, and to the established language of

¹ [“And in her feigning fancie did pourtray
Him, such as fittest she for love could find,
Wise, warlike, PERSONABLE, courteous, and kind.”

Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 4. st. 5.]

[“More TUNEABLE than lark to shepherd’s ear.”

Mids. Night’s Dream, act 1. sc. 1.

“How can’st thou SPEAKABLE of mute?”

Par. Lost, b. 9. l. 648.—ED.

our country: because they are established. Establish what you please: Do but establish; and, whilst that establishment shall last, we shall be perfectly convinced of its propriety.

No. I shall venture no further than to explain the nature and convenience of these abbreviations. And I venture so far, only because our religious and devout [Houses of Parliament] have not yet passed an act to restrain me individually to the Liturgy (as a sort of half-sacrament) and to forbid my meddling with any words out of it.

F.—However fearful and backward you may be, or pretend to be, upon the occasion, I do not think a slow reform either dangerous or difficult or unlikely in this particular. Your principle is simple and incontestable:—One word or one termination should be used with one signification and for one purpose.¹

By the importation of Ble or Able into the language, we have gained a manifest advantage. Indeed this termination, because eminently useful, has become so familiar even to the most illiterate of our countrymen, that, by the force of analogy alone, they frequently apply it (and with perfect propriety, too, as to its signification) to words originally English. A custom however which, though useful, is not hitherto approved by authors of credit: although some of them too have sometimes given it the sanction of their example. Thus Chillingworth does not disdain to use Knowable, Understandable, Bearable, &c. Many others of our best authors have done the same. But, however great the authority which sanctions some of these applications of this termination, the practice has never been received into approved usage: which yet, I think, it might be universally, and with advantage to the language.

¹ “Unum vero imprimis observandum est: propterea quod significatorum multitudo uni eidemque voci attributa sæpius est, aut scribentium autoritate, aut prodentium curioso judicio: principem omnium significatum indagari oportere censeo; ad quem tanquam ad tesseram, signaque cæteras reducere legiones: sed propositis semper caussis, sine quibus tam stulte credimus, quam arroganter profitemur. Fuerunt autem doctissimi, multarumque literarum viri, qui propterea quod nimis multa variis observationibus comperta scivissent, multa item significatorum monstra uni eidemque voci designarunt. Quorum opera tantum abest ut commoda sit, ut maxime etiam libri adversetur inscriptioni. Nam specioso titulo de sermonis proprietate edidissent; nihil minus quam quod profitebantur, effecere: unius namque vocis una tantum sit significatio propria ac princeps: cæteræ aut communes, aut accessorix, aut etiam spurix.”—Scaliger, de caussis. lib. 13. cap. 192, 193.

I think too that we might, gently and by degrees, get rid of most of those words where the termination Ble is corruptly and improperly employed. For the word Peaceable, for instance, we have not the least occasion; Peaceful being altogether as familiar to us. Deceivable, Delectable, and Medicinal have already given way to Deceitful, Delightful, and Medicinal. Vengeful and *Forceful*¹ are perpetually used by Dryden; which will justify us for the banishment of Vengeable and Forcible. For Blasmevole and Laudevole, (Blameable and Laudable,) Drayton, without any awkwardness, uses Blameful and Praiseful.² I cannot think that Chanceful,

¹ ["He said, and from his FORCEFUL gripe at once Forth flew the quiv'ring beam."

Cowper, Iliad, vol. 1. edit. 2. p. 150.

"———And hurl'd
With no effect, though by a FORCEFUL arm."

Ibid. vol. 2. book 13. p. 29.

"Who, seeing by the sword and FORCEFUL arm
Of Peleus' son their leader slain." Ibid. book 21. p. 315.

"With its full pride of hair your head is fraught,
And keen and FORCEFUL strikes your manly thought."
Symmons, Life of Milton.]

² "Thy BLAMEFUL lines, bespotted so with sin, Mine eyes would cleanse, ere they to read begin."
Drayton, Heroical Epistles, Matilda to K. Iohn.

["No may this homely verse of many meanest,
Hope to escape his venomous despite
More than my former Writs, all were they cleanest
From BLAMEFULL blot." Spenser.

"For nothing is more BLAMEFULL to a knight
Then the reproch of pride and cruelnesse."
Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 1. st. 41.]

"Mildness would better suit with majesty,
Than rash revenge and rough severity.
O, in what safety temperance doth rest,
Obtaining harbour in a sovereign breast:
Which if so PRAISEFUL in the meanest men,
In powerful kings how glorious is it then."
Drayton, Heroical Epistles, Matilda to K. Iohn.]

Changeful,¹ Valueful, &c. would be received with much difficulty in the place of Chanceable, Changeable, Valuable, &c. Indeed, generally speaking, wherever the Italians have applied Vole with propriety to their words, we may commonly exchange Ble for Ful. I know not indeed what to do with many of those words we have received from them, where the Italians themselves applied Vole improperly. For Amichevole, however, (Amicable) we might say Friendly: for Sociable and Reasonable; Social, Rational: for Solvable and Colourable; Solvent and Apparent. But I fear there are between twenty and thirty of them, which the united efforts of all our best authors (if authors could ever be united) would not be able to get rid of in a century.

The other corruptions in Ble which you have mentioned, such as Dissemble,² Vestible, &c. we might write as they were formerly written, Dissimule, Vestibule, &c. And as for those obstinate corruptions which could not, from their constant, familiar and inveterate use, be driven from their usurped stations; the use of them should be avoided as much as possible; they would then be noticed by the meanest etymologists, and would cause no equivocation, mistake nor doubt, though they were not (as they ought to be) written with their original terminations.

H.—Take notice, I am not a partner in your proposal. The corruption of most of these words is now so inveterate, that those authors must be very hardy indeed who would risque the ridicule of the innovation: and their numbers and merit must be great to succeed in any reformation of the language: or in any other reformation in England, if Reason and Truth are the only bribes they have to offer.

¹ ["So as it should in short space yeeld a plentiful revenue to the crowne of England; which now doth but sucke and consume the treasure thereof, through those unsound plots and CHANGEFULL orders, which are dayly devised for her good, yet never effectually prosecuted or performed."—Spenser's View of the State of Ireland. Todd's edit. 1805. p. 508.]

² "The vayne and DISSYMULED sorowe that Fredegund made for the kyng."—Fabyan, parte 1. fol. 52. p. 2. col. 1.

F.—What is the termination of your Potential Active Adjective?

H.—We have two terminations in English for this purpose: which is one more than enough. And yet our language has not hitherto availed itself of this useful abbreviation so extensively as it ought to have done. It is by no means familiar or in common use, as the Potential Passive Adjective is; but is chiefly, though not intirely, confined to technical expressions.

For this double termination we are obliged both to the Greek and to the Roman language.

“Duas habuere apud Latinos, (says Scaliger) totidem apud Græcos terminationes; in Ivis, activam, in Ilis, passivam. Sic Græci αισθητικον, quod sensu præditum est; αισθητον, quod sensu percipi potest.”

We now employ both these abbreviations in English; as Sensible, Sensitive, &c. Of the former abbreviation we have already spoken.

At the dawn of learning in this country, those who became acquainted with the Latin and French authors, perceived (and especially when they came to translate them or to repeat any thing after them) a convenient short method of expression in those languages, with which their own could not furnish them. Finding therefore this peculiarity, and not knowing whence it arose; as they proceeded to be more familiar with those languages, they borrowed the whole Latin or French words in which the abbreviation they wanted was contained: instead of using their own periphrastic idiom as formerly, or forming (as they should have done) a correspondent abbreviation in words of their own language. And thus, by incorporating those words, they obtained partially (for it extended no further than the very words adopted) that sort of abbreviation to our language which it had not before.

Wilkins was well aware of the benefit of this method of speech, and proposed to give this advantage to his Philosophical Language, by the means of a Transcendental particle; though he thought it concerned chiefly the copiousness and elegancy of a language, and mentions its use in the “abbreviating of language” only as a secondary consideration. He likewise saw plainly that the manner in which instituted languages originally obtained this end, was by—"such a kind of composition as doth alter the terminations of words."—He knew too by his own experience (for he was forced to coin them) that "we have not actually such variety of words" as he wanted: and he declared it to proceed from "the defect of language." He should have said our language, and not language in general: for though it is true of our language, it is not true of the Latin nor of the Greek. For "that kind of composition which alters the terminations of words" being nothing more than the addition of a word; and the addition which the Romans and Greeks made for this purpose, being a word of their own language, whose Force was consequently known to them; they could, upon occasion, add it to any verb they pleased, and its signification would be evident to all. For, though ισχυς and Vis by frequent use and repetition were corrupted and became in composition ιχος and ivus in this abbreviation; yet the analogy which this termination would bear to the other words of the same sort, would justify the application of the same termination to any word where they might chuse to employ it. But that is not the case with us: for, as we have not obtained this abbreviation by "that kind of composition which alters the terminations of words," (i. e. by adding to one known word of our own, another known word of our own, expressive of the added circumstance;) but only by adopting some of the abbreviated words themselves from other languages, we cannot so easily supply our defects and extend the advantage: unless we go on borrowing fresh abbreviated words, ready made to our hands, from the same sources.

And this will appear plainly to any one who will please to examine our language: for we have not one single word of Anglo-Saxon origin, whose Potential Mood Active is Adjectived. Some attempts indeed have been made towards it, but without success: for Wilkins's "unwalkative," (for—one who cannot walk,) and other words of the same coinage, have never passed current amongst us.¹ And it is well for the language that they have not, and that the greater part of these new-coined words has been rejected : because the persons who coined them being commonly affected, and always ignorant of the force of the termination they employed, would very greatly have injured and confounded the language by an improper application of the termination. As Wilkins himself did, when he barbarously applied it to the Noun QUANTITY; and talked of “Quantitative pronouns,” &c. Had this word succeeded, we should soon have had Quidditative in our language too ; and then the metaphysician would have triumphed over the last remains of common sense amongst us, and would exultingly have told us, that—“Essentia est primus rerum conceptus constitutivus vel quidditativus ; cujus ope cætera, quæ de re aliqua dicuntur, demonstrari possunt.”

¹ [Mr. Richardson observes that Mr. Tooke had forgotten the word Talkative.—ED.]

All the abbreviations which we enjoy of this kind, (i. e. the Potential Active Adjective) are either borrowed from the Latin, and then they terminate in Ive ; as Purgative, Vomitivæ, Operative, &c. or they are borrowed from the Greek, and then they terminate in Ic ; as Cathartic, Emetic, Energetic, &c.

Hence we have at length (for it was not done all at once, but by slow degrees,) adopted into our language such words as the following :

From the Latin—Aperitive, Ablative, Crescive, Coercive, Consecutive, Dative, Detersive, Desiccative, Expletive, Eruptive, Genitive, Inceptive, Imperative, Intellective, Inchoative, Laxative, Lucrative, Lenitive, Negative, Nuncupative, Optative, Passive, Progressive, Prerogative, Responsive, Solutive, Sanative, Sensitive, Susceptive, Transitive, Vocative, Visive, &c. &c.¹

From the Greek—Analytic, Apologetic, Caustic, Characteristic, Cathartic, Cryptic, Critic, Cosmetic, Dialectic, Didactic, Diuretic, Despotic, Drastic, Elastic, Emetic, Energetic, Fantastic, Gymnastic, Hypothetic, Narcotic, Paralytic, Peripatetic, Periphrastic, Prognostic, Prophylactic, Plastic, Pathetic, Prophetic, Syllogistic, Styptic, Sceptic, Synthetic, Sympathetic, &c.

¹ [“I will converse with iron-witted fools
And unrespective boys.”—Rich. III. act 4. sc. 2.—ED.]

of this sort, and those where we have borrowed only the abbreviation, without taking also into our language the same unabbreviated verb: by which may appear more plainly the reason of the adoption.

F.—I see the use and convenience of this abbreviation, which resembles the former. And I perceive too that you thereby gain an explanation of some more abstract Nouns. A Critic is (some one, any one) who can discern. A Provocative, a Palliative, a Motive is (something, any thing) whatever may provoke, may palliate, may move. So an Invective, an Incentive, &c. But this explanation will not serve for a Missive, or a Relative.

H.—It will not serve for corruptions. And wherever it will not serve, we may be sure that the terminations are corruptly and improperly applied. The French have abused these terminations in a most immoderate degree; whose corruptions of this abbreviation we have but partially followed. Missive (in this use of it) is an old French corruption, adopted by Shakespeare and others,¹ and even by Dryden, who uses it for Missile (i. e. Missibile); but I think it is no longer current in English. So Imaginative and Opinionative have formerly been used by Bacon and others; but are no longer in approved use with us. Relative has indeed, within my memory, by a ridiculous affectation of false and unfounded accuracy, crept for-

¹ “Les Athéniens aians surpris des courriers du roy Philippus, ne voulurent oncques souffrir qu'on ouvrist une MISSIVE qui estoit suscrite, à la royne Olympiade sa femme.”—Amyot, Instructions pour ceulx qui manient affaires d' Estat.

Thus translated by Philemon Holland, contemporary with Shakespeare, who merely translated Amyot: for in the original, it is επιστολην επιγεγραμμενην Ολυμπιαδι. “The Athenians having surprized king Philip's posts and courriers, would never suffer one of their letters MISSIVE to be broke open which had the superscription, to Queen Olympias my wife.”

“Whiles I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came MISSIVES from the king, who all-hail'd me Thane of Cawdor.”—Macbeth, act. 1. sc. 5. p. 134.

“I wrote to you, when rioting in Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my MISSIVE out of audience.”

Anthony and Cleopatra, p. 346.

ward into improper use, to the exclusion of Relation. Certain precise gentlemen will no longer permit us to call our kindred our Relations: No, but—our Relatives. Why? What is the meaning of the termination On, and the meaning of the termination Ive, which qualifies the one, and disqualifies the other? They have both appropriate meanings: without the knowledge of which how can these gentlemen determine their proper use? If they say, they have not appropriate meanings; by what rule do they prefer the one to the other? They who do not take what they find in use, but propose a change, are bound to give a reason for it. But, I believe, they will be as little able to justify their innovation, as Sir Thomas More would have been to explain the foundation of his ridiculous distinction between NAY and NO, and between YEA and YES.¹

¹ “I woulde not here note by the way, that Tyndal here translateth NO for NAY: for it is but a trifle and mistaking of the Englishe word: sauving that ye shoulde see that he, whych in two so plain Englishe wordes, and so comen as is NAYE and NO, can not tell when he should take the tone, and when the tother, is not, for translating into Englishe, a man very mete.

“For the use of those two wordes in aunswering to a question, is this. NO aunswereth the question framed by the affirmatiue. As for ensample: If a manne should aske Tindall hymselfe—Ys an heretike mete to translate Holy Scripture into Englishe? Lo, to thys question, if he wil aunswere trew Englishe, he muste aunswere NAY, and not NO.

“But and if the question be asked hym thus lo:—Is not an heretique mete to translate Holy Scripture into English? To this question lo, if he wil aunswer true English, he must aunswere NO, and not NAY.

“And a lyke difference is there betwene these two aduerbes, YE and YES. For if the question bee framed unto Tindall by the affirmatiue in thys fashion:—If an heretique falsely translate the Newe Testament into Englishe, to make hys false heresydes seeme the worde of Godde; be hys bookes worthy to be burned? To this question, asked in thys wyse, yf he wil aunswere true Englishe, he must aunswere YE, and not YES.

“But nowe if the question be asked hym thus lo by the negative:—If an heretike falsely translate the Newe Testament into Englishe, to make hys false heresydes seme the Word of God; be not his bokes well worthy to be burned? To thys question in thys fashion framed, if he wyll aunswere trew Englishe, he may not aunswere YE, but he must aunswere YES; and say, YES mary be they, bothe the translation and the translatour, and all that wyll holde wyth them.”—Sir T. More's Workes, Confutation of Tyndale, p. 448.

But these petty fopperies will pass away of themselves, and when the whim is over, we shall all find our Relations again as safe and sound as ever.

There certainly are many other corrupt applications of Ive, and some few of Ic. But we may avoid the detail; for they are all easily curable: and, I fear, I may be thought to have already dwelt too tediously on particular words and instances.

F.—The Greek and the Latin then, it appears, have both these same abbreviations by means of terminations. And the Latin, being originally Greek, must be supposed to have received them from the Greek. Accordingly Scaliger has told us that the Greek ιχος became the Latin Ivus, by the insertion of the Æolic digamma. But he has not shewn, and I cannot discover, whence the Latin has its termination Bilis. In αισθητ-ιχος and sensit-ivus, there is sufficient similarity in the terminations to admit of Scaliger's supposition. But in αισθητ-ος and sensi-bilis, where is the similarity? Whence then had the Romans this latter termination of Bilis? Surely not from the Greek.

H.—Whatever the Latin has not from the Greek, it has from the Goth. And this runs throughout the whole of the language. I do not assert however, but I say I believe, that the termination of the Latin Potential Passive Adjective is the Anglo-Saxon or Gothic Abal, Robur. And this is also our English word ABLE; which has nothing to do with Habilis, whence our etymologists erroneously derive it: for there is no agreement whatever of signification, though there is a resemblance of sound, between Habilis and Able. And Junius upon this word says truly—"Anglos vero vocabulum ABLE non debere abnepotibus Romuli, planum statim fiet insipientibus locum Cædmonis, 12. 25. ubi Diabolo primos nostros parentes tentanti hæc verba tribuit:

"God het me. on ðýrne rið þāpan.
het ðæt ðu ðijreþ. ofæteþ æte.
cpæð ðæt ðin a b a l and cpæpþ.
and ðin mod þeþa.
mapa purþe." &c.

[Ed. Thorpe, p. 32.]

[Deus voluit me iter hoc ingredi, jussit ut fructum hunc

comederes; dixit ingenii tui impetum, et scientiam, ipsumque adeo mentis tuæ intellectum auctiorem fore," &c.]

F.—We have still two other of your abbreviations to examine. What you mean by Future Tense Adjective I can easily understand. You mean only what we are accustomed to call the Future Participle. But of your Official Mood I have no notion whatever; having never heard of any such thing before.

H.—No. Nor, if I could have found any better title for it should you have heard it now. I do not like it myself; but I am driven to it by distress. I want a term for that Mood or Manner of using the verb, by which we might couple the notion of duty with it; by which we might, at the same time and in conjunction with it, express τα δεοντα, the things which ought to be done and the things which ought not to be done. Observe, if you please, that I am not the first in calling this a Mood of the verb. The most antient Grammarians did assign such a Mood to the verb: and they termed it Modum participialem. But this term will by no means suit our language: for, having no cases, we can have no participles. The term is besides inadequate and faulty in other respects; which I forbear to mention, that we may not be involved in that fruitless and endless contention concerning Gerunds and the Participle in Dus, &c. which relates not to our language; and in which the combatants have fought by citations from different authors, and not by any arguments drawn from the nature of speech, or the use and convenience of words in the communication of our thoughts.

Indeed, for any benefit that our language has hitherto received by these two latter abbreviations, I might well have forborne to mention them. But I speak of them, not as possessing them, but as important instruments which we should have in our language, and may have if we please. We stand in great need of them; and our authors have only to reach out their hands and gather them: they are abundant enough in the Latin.

The words of this sort, which we have hitherto adopted, are barely these—LEGEND, REVEREND, DIVIDEND, PREBEND, MEMORANDUM. We can hardly be said to have adopted DEO-

DAND, MULTIPLICAND, SUBTRAHEND, and CREDENDA;¹ i. e. Which ought to be given to God, Which ought to be multiplied, Which ought to be subtracted, Which ought to be believed.

The first of these, LEGEND, which means—That which ought to be read—is, from the early misapplication of the term by impostors, now used by us as if it meant—That which ought to be laughed at. And so it is explained in our dictionaries.

How soon REVEREND—i. e. Which ought to be revered—will be in the same condition, though now with great propriety applied to our judges and our clergy. I pretend not to determine. It will depend upon themselves. But if ever a time shall arrive when, through abject servility and greediness, they become distinguished as the principal instruments of pillage and oppression; it is not the mitre and the coif, nor the cant of either of them, that will prevent REVEREND from becoming like LEGEND, a term of the utmost reproach and contempt.

DIVIDEND—That which ought to be divided—is perpetually abused: whilst each man calls the share of the DIVIDEND which he has received, his DIVIDEND; though he means to keep it all to himself.

PREBEND—Res præbenda—is now commonly applied to the person receiving it, and not to—That which ought to be afforded to him.

MEMORANDUM alone stands clear from abuse, and free from danger.—That which ought to be remembered.

F.—I perceive that we cannot, without this Official Passive Adjective, have such Substantives as a LEGEND, a DIVIDEND, a PREBEND, and a MEMORANDUM; a DEODAND, a MULTIPLICAND, a SUBTRAHEND; but, in other respects, we have a method of expressing the same thing. Do we not say—This book is to be read with attention: That man is to be revered for his integrity: The revenue is not to be divided amongst thieves: Support is to be afforded to the worthy: That circumstance is to be remembered?

II.—Yes truly, we have such a method; but we have no great reason to be proud of it: for nothing can be more awkward and ambiguous. The use of such a method of speech could only arise from our want of these three abbreviations, viz. the Potential Passive Adjective, the Official Passive Adjective, and the Future Tense Adjective: for this expression—Is to, or Is to be—is all that we have to supply the place of each of those three.¹

¹ ["Agenda, and Credenda." See Encyclopedia Britannica.]

The following passage of Boethius, lib. 1. prosa 3.

“Quod si nec Anaxagoræ fugam, nec Socratis venenum, nec Zenonis tormenta, quoniam sunt peregrina, novisti; at Canios, at Senecas, at Soranos, quorum nec pervetusta nec incelebris memoria est, scire potuisti. Quos nihil aliud in cladem detraxit, nisi quod nostris moribus instituti, studiis improborum dissimillimi videbantur. (i. e. “Their talents were of a peculiar kind and blended with a considerable alloy of eccentricity.”) Itaque nihil est quod admirare, si in hoc vitæ salo circumflantibus agitemur procellis, quibus hoc maxime propositum est, pessimis displicere. Quorum quidem tametsi est numerosus exercitus, SPERNENDUS tamen est; quoniam nullo duce regitur, sed errore tantum temere ac passim lymphante raptatur:”

is thus translated by Chaucer, fol. 222. p. 1. col. 1.

“So if thou haste not knowen the exilynge of Anaxagoras, ne the empoysoning of Socrates, ne the turmentes of Zeno, for they weren straungers, yet mightest thou haue knowen the Senecas, the Canios, and the Soranos: of whiche folke the renome is neyther ouer olde ne unsolempne. The whiche men nothyng els ne brought to the deth, but only for they were enformed of my maners, and semeden most unlyke to the studies of wicked folke. And for thy thou oughtest nat to wondren, though that I in the bitter see be driuen with tempestes blowing aboute. In the which thys is my moste purpose, that is to sayne, to displesen wicked men. Of whiche shrewes al be the hooste neuer so great, It is to dispise; for it is not gouerned with no leader of reason, but it is raushed onely by fletyngge erreure folily and lightlye.”

The following from Virgil,

“INFANDUM, regina, jubes renovare dolorem,” is thus translated by Douglas,

“—— Thy desir, lady, is Renewing of Untellybil sorow, I wys.”

This was not the bishop's fault, but the penury of the language.

¹ [See the Notes to page 266, where the passage from Boethius has been already given. See also a Note on the Anglo-Saxon Derivative or Future Infinitive, and Present Participle, subjoined to the EDITOR'S PREFACE.—ED.]

Untellybil means—What cannot be uttered. But Virgil would not say Ineffabile, when Æneas immediately proceeds to tell the tale; but he says INFANDUM,—That which ought not to be uttered: which yet, to oblige the queen, he proceeds to tell.

Dryden has endeavoured to avoid the word which the language would not permit him to translate:

“Great queen, what you command me to relate,
Renews the sad remembrance of our fate.”

In the Old Batchelor, when Nol Bluffe had been kicked, he says, (act 3. sc. 9.)

“Bluff. By heav’n, ’tis not to be put up.

Sir Jo. What, bully?

Bluff. The affront.

Sir Jo. No, agad, no more ’tis; for that’s put up already.”

Is not to be put up, or, Is not to be borne, may equally mean either Intolerabile, or Intolerandum, or Intoleraturum: That which cannot be borne, or That which ought not to be borne, or That which will not be borne hereafter. Bluff meant either Intolerabile or Intolerandum; but Sir Joseph agrees with Bluff in the sense of Intoleraturum, because the kicking was not a matter de futuro, but already past.

F.—I see it. The jest is owing to the penury of our language, which gives room for the equivocation.

But if we are so scantily provided with words of this Official Passive Adjective; we are still worse off respecting the Future Tense Adjective: for I cannot recollect a single instance of it in English, except this solitary word Future.

H.—Yes, one more; Venture or Adventure. Which, though it appears as a substantive, means merely (any thing, something, aliquid) Venturum. I am not sure that Judicature and *Legislature*¹ were not originally used in the language with propriety.

It is a reproach to the English and the French philosophers, that both their languages should still want these two most useful abbreviations. And it is the more reproachful, because the reason is obvious. We want them; because the French (whom we have copied) are without them:—and the French have them not; because the Italians, (whom the French copied,) by ignorance and carelessness, and by confounding their own terminations, had lost the benefit of these abbreviations. Surely either our arms are now long enough to reach across those languages and snatch them at once immediately from the Latin; or our sober ingenuity bold enough to form them for ourselves in our own language by a discreet and well-weighed imitation. Can any thing be more lame and awkward than our—About to be, and About to come, and About to do, &c.? Or our equivocal—Is to be, and Is to come, and Is to do, &c. for Futurus, Venturus, Facturus, &c.?

¹ [Legem ferre, or rogare, was, amongst the Romans, to propose a law. Legem sciscere, was the act of the people, i. e. to give their consent and authority to the law proposed.

A Legislator is therefore only the Proposer of laws.]

If custom and habit may, in some measure, have blinded us to the inadequacy of these expressions; we cannot avoid perceiving plainly their deformity, when we notice how our old translators first struggled to express this Future abbreviation, and to what shift they were driven.

“Generaciouns of eddris, who shewide to you to fle fro wraththe to comynge?”—Matt. cap. 3. v. 7.

“Art thou that art to comynge,¹ ether abiden we an other?”—Ibid. cap. 11. v. 3.

“And if yee wolen resceyue, he is Elie that is to comynge.”—Ibid. v. 14.

“This it was whom I seide, he that is to comynge aftir me, is maad bifore me.”—John, cap. 1. v. 15.

“Ether the world, ether lyf, ether deeth, ether thingis present, ether thingis to comynge.”—1 Corinth. cap. 3. v. 22.

“Ihesu that delyueride us fro wraththe to comynge.”—1 Thessal. cap. 1. v. 10.

“Agabus signyfiedo by the spirit, a greet hungir to comynge in al the rowndnesse of erthis.”—Dedis, cap. 11. v. 28.

¹ [This mode of expression seems to be the representative of the Anglo-Saxon Future Infinitive; thus in Matt. xi. 3. &c., for Wycliffe's “thou that art to comynge,” we have in the Saxon “þu þe to cumenne eapt :” if so, it was no shift of the translators, but an ancient form in common use.

See page 266; and the Notes subjoined to the EDITOR'S PREFACE.—ED.]

“Crist Ihesu that is to demynge the quyke and deed.”—2 Timoth. cap. 4. v. 1.

“He ordeynide a day in whiche he is to demynge the world in equyte.”—Dedis, cap. 17. v. 31.

“Bi feith he that is clepid Abraham, obeide for to go out in to a place which he was to takynge in to eritage.”—Ebrewis, cap. 11. v. 8.

“Forsothe whanne Eroude was to bringynge forth hym, in that nigt Petir was slepyng bitwixe tweyne knytis.”—Dedis, cap. 12. v. 6.

“Thei fallinge on the nek of Poul, kissiden him, sorewyng moost in the word that he seide : for thei weren no more to seyng his face, and thei ledden him to the ship.”—Ibid. cap. 20. v. 37, 38.

“Sotheli there the ship was to puttyng out the charge.”

Ibid. cap. 21. v. 3.

“Centurioun wente to the tribune and tolde to hym, seyinge, what art thou to doynge ? forsothe this man is a citeseyn romayn.”—Ibid. cap. 22. v. 26.

“Anoon thei that weren to tormentinge him, departeden away from hym.”—Ibid. v. 29.

“Sum of the Iewis gaderiden hem, and maden a vow, seiynge hem nether to etynge nether drinkynge, til thei slown Poul.”—Ibid. cap. 23. v. 12.

“I gesse me blessid at thee, whanne I am to defendynge me this day, moost thee wytyng alle thingis that ben at Iewis.”—Ibid. cap. 26. v. 2, 3.

“Drede thou nothing of these whiche thou art to suffryng : lo the deuel is to sendynge sune of you in to prisoun.”—Apocal. cap. 2. v. 10.

“The dragon stode bfore the womman that was to beringe child ; that whanne she hadde born child, he shulde deuoure hir sone.”—Ibid. cap. 12. v. 4.

The aukwardness of the above substitutions for the Future Participle (or Future Tense Adjective) will not, I believe, be disputed. I leave you to compare them with the more modern successive versions of the same passages, and I think you will find the latter equally inadequate.

Now in regard to all these which I have mentioned, and many other abbreviations which I have not yet mentioned ; our modern English authors (not being aware of what the language had gained) have been much divided in their opinions, whether we should praise or censure those who, by adopting a great number of foreign words and incorporating them into the old Anglo-Saxon language, have by degrees produced the modern English. Whilst some have called this Enriching, others have called it Deforming the original language of our ancestors: which these latter affirm to have been sufficiently adapted to composition to have expressed with equal advantage, propriety and precision, by words from its own source, all that we can now do by our foreign helps. But in their declamations (for they cannot be called arguments) on this subject, it is evident that, on both sides, they confined themselves to the consideration merely of complex terms, and never dreamed of the abbreviations in the manner of signification of words. Which latter has however been a much more abundant cause of borrowing foreign words than the former. And indeed it is true that almost all the complex terms (merely as such) which we have adopted from other languages, might be, and many of them were, better expressed in the Anglo-Saxon:—I mean, better for an Anglo-Saxon: because more intelligible to him, and more homogeneous with the rest of his language. Yet I am of opinion (but on different ground from any taken by the declaimers on either side) that those, who by thus borrowing have produced our present English speech, deserve from us, but in a very different degree, both thanks and censure. Great thanks, in that they have introduced into the English some most useful abbreviations in manner of signification; which the Anglo-Saxon, as well as all the other Northern languages, wanted: and some censure, in that they have done this incompletely, and in an improper manner. The fact certainly is, that our predecessors did not themselves know what they were doing; any more than their successors seem to have known hitherto the real importance and benefit of what has been done. And of this the Grammars and Philosophy both of antients and moderns are a sufficient proof. An oversight much to be deplored: for I am strongly persuaded (and I think I have good reason to be so) that had the Greek and Latin Grammarians known and explained the nature and intrinsic value of the riches of their own language, neither would their descendants have lost any of those advantages, nor would the languages of Europe have been at this day in the corrupt and deficient state in which we, more and less, find them. For those languages which have borrowed these abbreviations, would have avoided the partiality and patchwork, as well as the corruptions and improprieties with which they now abound; and those living languages of Europe which still want these advantages wholly, would long ere this have intirely supplied their defects.

F.—It seems to me that you rather exaggerate the importance of these abbreviations. Can it be of such mighty consequence to gain a little time in communication?

H.—Even that is important. But it rests not there. A short, close, and compact method of speech, answers the purpose of a map upon a reduced scale: it assists greatly the comprehension of our understanding: and, in general reasoning, frequently enables us, at one glance, to take in very numerous and distant important relations and conclusions, which would otherwise totally escape us. But this objection comes to me with an ill grace from you, who have expressed such frequent nausea and disgust at the any-lengthian Lord with his numerous strings, that excellent political swimmer; whose tedious reasons, you have often complained, are as “two graines of wheat hid in two bushels of chaffe.”

And here, if you please, we will conclude our discussion for the present.

F.—No. If you finish thus, you will leave me much unsatisfied; nor shall I think myself fairly treated by you.

You have told me that a Verb is (as every word also must be) a Noun; but you added, that it is also something more: and that the title of Verb was given to it, on account of that distinguishing something more than the mere Nouns convey. You have then proceeded to the simple Verb adjectived, and to the different adjectived Moods, and to the different adjectived Tenses of the verb. But you have not all the while explained to me what you mean by the naked simple Verb unadjectived. Nor have you uttered a single syllable concerning that something which the naked Verb unattended by Mood, Tense, Number, Person, and Gender, (which last also some languages add to it) signifies More or Besides the mere Noun.

What is the Verb? What is that peculiar differential circumstance which, added to the definition of a Noun, constitutes the Verb?

Is the Verb, 1. "Dictio variabilis, quæ significat actionem aut passionem."

Or, 2. "Dictio variabilis per modos."

Or, 3. "Quod adsignificat tempus sine casu."

Or, 4. "Quod agere, pati, vel esse, significat."

Or, 5. "Nota rei sub tempore."

Or, 6. "Pars orationis præcipua sine casu."

Or, 7. "An Assertion."

Or, 8. "Nihil significans, et quasi nexus et copula, ut verba alia quasi animaret."

Or, 9. "Un mot déclinable indéterminatif."

Or, 10. "Un mot qui présente à l'esprit un être indéterminé, désigné seulement par l'idée générale de l'existence sous une relation à une modification."

Or, 11. ———

H.—A truce, a truce.—I know you are not serious in laying this trash before me: for you could never yet for a moment bear a negative or a quasi in a definition. I perceive whither you would lead me; but I am not in the humour at present to discuss with you the meaning of Mr. Harris's—"Whatever a thing may Be, it must first of necessity Be, before it can possibly Be any thing ELSE." With which precious jargon he commences his account of the Verb. No, No. We will leave off here for the present. It is true that my evening is now fully come, and the night fast approaching; yet, if we shall have a tolerably lengthened twilight, we may still perhaps find time enough for a further conversation on this subject: And finally, (if the times will bear it,) to apply this system of Language to all the different systems of Metaphysical (i. e. verbal) Imposture.

APPENDIX.

A LETTER TO JOHN DUNNING, ESQ.

By MR. HORNE.

Vengono di quelle occasioni che tutto serve :
E dice il proverbio a questo proposito ;
Impare l'arte, e mettila da parte. GOLDONI.

PRINTED 1778.

DEAR SIR,

It would be worse than superfluous in me even to hint to you why none of the reasons given for over-ruling my Exception are satisfactory to my mind. But there is something very curious in the precedent of the King and Lawley, which, I am persuaded, neither those who took the Exception, nor perhaps the Judges who decided that case (though the reason they gave destroys the effect of the precedent towards me), nor the Judge who quoted it, were aware of.

As it is entirely out of the line of the profession, and its novelty may perhaps afford you some entertainment ; as it is an offering worthy your acceptance, and cannot be presented to you by any other hand, I entreat your forgiveness for laying it before you.

The precedent of that supposed omission is produced to justify a real omission in the information against me : when indeed there was no omission in the information against Lawley. But the Averment said to be omitted, was, not only substantially, but literally made.

“The exception taken was, that it was not positively averred that Crooke was indicted ; it was only laid that she sciens that Crooke had been indicted and was to be tried for forgery, did so and so.”

—“She knowing that Crooke had been indicted for forgery, did so and so.”—

That is, literally thus,

—“Crooke had been indicted for forgery,” (there is the averment literally made)—“She, knowing that, did so and so.”—

Such, Sir, is, in all cases, the unsuspected construction, not only in our own but in every language in the world, where the conjunction THAT (or some equivalent word) is employed. I speak it confidently, because I know (and, with Lord Monboddo's permission, a priori) that it must be so ; and I have likewise tried it in a great variety of languages, antient as well as modern, Asiatic as well as European.

I am very well aware, Sir, that, should I stop here, what I have now advanced would seem very puerile ; and a mere quibbling trick or play upon words ; founded upon the fortuitous similarity of sound between THAT the article or pronoun, as it is called, and THAT the conjunction : between which two, though they have the same sound, it is universally imagined that there is not any the smallest correspondence or similarity of signification. But I deny that any words change their nature in this manner, so as to belong sometimes to one part of speech and sometimes to another, from the different manner of using them. I never could perceive any such fluctuation in any word whatever : though I know it is a general charge brought erroneously against words of almost every denomination. But it is all error ; arising from the false measure which has been taken of almost every sort of words ; whilst the words themselves continue faithfully and steadily attached, each to the standard under which it was originally enlisted. As the word THAT does, which, however used and employed, and however named and classed, always retains one and the same signification. Unnoticed abbreviation in construction, and difference of position, have caused this appearance of fluctuation ; and (since the time of the elder Stoics) have misled the grammarians and philosophers of all languages both antient and modern : for in all they make the same mistake.

If I should ask any of these gentlemen, whether it is not strange and improper that we should, without any reason or necessity, employ in English the same word for two different meanings and purposes ; would he not readily acknowledge that it was wrong, and that he could see no reason for it, but many reasons against it ? Well, then is it not more strange, that this same impropriety, in this same case, should run through ALL languages ; and that they should ALL use an Article, without any reason, unnecessarily, and improperly, for this same Conjunction ; with which it has, as is pretended, no correspondence nor similarity of signification ? Yet this is certainly done in ALL languages ; as any one may easily find by inquiry. Now does not the uniformity and universality of this supposed mistake and unnecessary impropriety, (in languages which have no connexion with each other,) naturally lead us to suspect that this usage of the article may perhaps be neither mistaken nor improper ; but that the mistake may lie only with us, who do not understand it ? I will make us of the leisure, which imprisonment affords me, to examine a few Instances ; and, still keeping the same signification of the sentences, shew, by a resolution of their construction, the truth of my assertion.

EXAMPLE.

“ I wish you to believe THAT I would not wilfully hurt a fly.”

RESOLUTION.

“ I would not wilfully hurt a fly, I wish you to believe THAT ” (assertion).

EXAMPLE.

“ You say THAT the same arm which when contracted can lift——, when extended to its utmost reach will not be able to raise——: You mean THAT we should never forget our situation, and THAT we should be prudently contented to do good within our sphere, where it can have an effect: and THAT we should not be misled, even by a virtuous benevolence and public spirit, to waste ourselves in fruitless efforts beyond our power of influence.”

RESOLUTION.

“ The same arm which when contracted can lift——, when extended to its utmost reach will not be able to raise——: you say THAT. We should never forget our situation; you mean THAT. And we should be contented to do good within our own sphere, where it can have an effect; you mean THAT. And we should not be misled even by a virtuous benevolence and public spirit to waste ourselves in fruitless efforts beyond our power of influence; you mean THAT.”

EXAMPLE.

“ They who have well considered THAT kingdoms rise or fall, and THAT their inhabitants are happy or miserable, not so much from any local or accidental advantages or disadvantages; but accordingly as they are well or ill governed; may best determine how far a virtuous mind can be neutral in politics.”

RESOLUTION.

“ Kingdoms rise or fall, not so much from any local or accidental advantages or disadvantages, but accordingly as they are well or ill governed; they who have considered THAT (maxim), may best determine how far a virtuous mind can be neutral in politics. And the inhabitants of kingdoms are happy or miserable, not so much from any local or accidental advantages or disadvantages, but accordingly as they are well or ill governed; they who have considered THAT, may best determine how far a virtuous mind can be neutral in politics.”

EXAMPLE.

“ Thieves rise by night, THAT they may cut men's throats.”

RESOLUTION.

“ Thieves may cut men's throats, (for) THAT (purpose) they rise by night.”

After the same manner may all sentences be resolved, where the supposed conjunction THAT (or its equivalent) is employed : and by such resolution it will always be discovered to have merely the same force and signification, and to be in fact nothing else but an Article.

And this is not the case in English alone, where THAT is the only conjunction of the same signification which we employ in this manner ; but this same method of resolution takes place in those languages also which have different conjunctions for this same purpose : for the original of my last example (where UT is employed, and not the Latin neuter article QUOD,) will be resolved in the same manner.

“UT jugulent homines surgunt de nocte latrones.”

For though Sanctius, who struggled so hard to withdraw QUOD from amongst the conjunctions, still left UT amongst them without molestation ; yet is UT no other than the Greek article $\delta\tau\iota$, adopted for this conjunctive purpose by the Latins, and by them originally written UTI ; the o being changed into u from that propensity which both the antient Romans had and the modern Italians still have, upon many occasions, to pronounce even their own o like an u. Of which I need not produce any instances.¹ The resolution therefore of the original will be like that of the translation.

“Latrones jugulent homines ($\Delta\iota$) $\delta\tau\iota$ surgunt de nocte.”

I shall not at this time stop here to account etymologically for the different words which some other languages (for there are others beside the Latin) employ in this manner instead of their own article : though, if it were exacted from me, I believe I should not refuse the undertaking ; although it is not the easiest part of etymology : for Abbreviation and Corruption are always busiest with the words which are most frequently in use.

Perhaps it may be thought that, though this method of resolution will answer with most sentences, yet that there is one usage of the conjunction THAT which it will not explain.

I mean in such instances as this :

“ IF THAT the King
Have any way your good deserts forgot,
He bids you name your griefs.”

How are we to bring out the article THAT, when two conjunctions, as it often happens, come in this manner together ?

The truth of the matter is that IF is merely a Verb. It is merely the imperative mood of the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon verbs FIÆLAN,

¹ “ Quant à la voyelle u, pource qu'ils (les Italiens) l'aiment fort, ainsi que nous cognoissons par ces mots ufficio, ubrigato, &c. je pense bien qu'ils la respectent plus que les autres.”—Henry Estienne, de la Précellence du langage François.

Japan; and in those languages, as well as in the English formerly, this supposed conjunction was pronounced and written as the common imperative, purely ГѢ, Гѣ, Гѣ.—Thus in B. Jonson's Sad Shepherd, (which though it be

“such wool

As from mere English flocks his muse could pull,”

I agree with its author,

“is a fleece,

To match or those of Sicily or Greece,”)

it is thus written,

“My largesse

Hath lotted her to be your brother's mistress,

Гѣ she can be reclaim'd; Гѣ not, his prey.”

And accordingly our corrupted ѣ has always the signification of the present English imperative GIVE, and no other. So that the resolution of the construction in the instance I produced from Shakespeare, will be as before in the others.

“The King may have forgotten your good deserts; GIVE THAT in any way; he bids you name your griefs.”

And here, as an additional proof, we may observe, that whenever the datum, upon which any conclusion depends, is a sentence; the article THAT, if not expressed, is always understood, and may be inserted after ѣ. As in the instance I have produced above, the poet might have said

“Гѣ (THAT) she can be reclaim'd,” &c.

For the resolution is,

“She can be reclaim'd, GIVE THAT; my largesse hath lotted her to be your brother's mistress. She cannot be reclaim'd, GIVE THAT; my largesse hath lotted her to be your brother's prey.”

But the article THAT is not understood, and cannot be inserted after ѣ; where the datum is not a sentence, but some noun governed by the verb ѣ or GIVE. As—

EXAMPLE.

“How will the weather dispose of you tomorrow? ѣ fair, it will send me abroad: ѣ foul, it will keep me at home.”

Here we cannot say—“ѣ that fair, it will send me abroad: ѣ that foul, it will keep me at home.”

Because in this case the verb ѣ governs the noun: and the resolved construction is—

RESOLUTION.

“GIVE fair weather, it will send me abroad: GIVE foul weather, it will keep me at home.”

But make the datum a sentence ; as—“ IF it is fair weather, it will send me abroad : IF it is foul weather, it will keep me at home ; ”—

And then the article THAT is understood, and may be inserted after IF. As,—“ IF THAT it is fair weather, it will send me abroad : IF THAT it is foul weather, it will keep me at home.”——The resolution then being—“ It is fair weather, GIVE THAT, it will send me abroad : It is foul weather, GIVE THAT, it will keep me at home.”

And this you will find to hold universally, not only with IF, but with many other supposed conjunctions, such as unless that, though that, lest that, &c. (which are really verbs,) put in this manner before the article THAT.

We have in English another word, which (though now rather obsolete) used frequently to supply the place of IF. As,

“ AN you had an eye behind you, you might see more detraction at your heels, than fortunes before you.”

No doubt it will be asked, in this and in all similar instances, what is AN ?

I do not know that any person has ever attempted to explain it, except Dr. S. Johnson in his Dictionary. He says,—“ AN is sometimes, in old authors, a contraction of AND IF.”—Of which he gives a very unlucky instance from Shakespeare ; where both AN and IF are used in the same line ;

“ He cannot flatter, He !

An honest mind and plain ; he must speak truth !

AN they will take it,—So. IF NOT, he's plain.”

Where if AN was a contraction of AND IF ; AN and IF should rather change places.

But I can by no means agree with Johnson's account. A part of one word only, employed to show that another word is compounded with it, would indeed be a curious method of contraction : although even this account of it would serve my purpose ; but the truth will serve it better : for AN is also a verb, and may very well supply the place of IF : it being nothing else but the imperative mood of the Anglo-Saxon verb Anan, which likewise means to GIVE or to GRANT.

Nor does AN ever (as Johnson supposes) signify AS IF ; nor is it a contraction of them.

I know indeed that Johnson produces Addison's authority for it.

“ My next pretty correspondent, like Shakespeare's Lion in Pyramus and Thisbe, roars AN it were any nightingale.”

Now if Addison had so written, I should answer roundly, that he had written false English. But he never did so write. He only quoted it in mirth. And Johnson, an editor of Shakespeare, ought to have known and observed it. And then, instead of Addison's, or even Shakespeare's authority from whom the expression is borrowed; he should have quoted Bottom's, the Weaver; whose language corresponds with the character Shakespeare has given him.¹

"I will aggravate my voice so (says Bottom) that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove: I will roar you AN 'twere any nightingale."

If Johnson is satisfied with such authority as this for the different signification and propriety of English words; he will find enough of it amongst the clowns in all our comedies; and Master Bottom in particular, in this very sentence, will furnish him with many new meanings. But, I believe, Johnson will not find AN used for AS IF, either seriously or clownishly, in any other part of Addison or Shakespeare, except in this speech of Bottom, and in another of Hostess Quickly:—

"He made a finer end, and went away AN it had been any Christom child."

Now when I say that these two English words IF and AN which have been called conditional conjunctions, (and whose force and manner of signification, as well as of the other conjunctions we are directed by Mr. Locke to search after in—"the several views, postures, stands, turns, limitations, and exceptions, and several other thoughts of the mind for which we have either none or very deficient names,") when I say that they are merely the original imperatives of the verbs to GIVE or to GRANT; I would not be understood to mean that the conditional conjunctions of all other languages are likewise to be found, like IF and AN, in the original imperatives of some of their own or derived verbs meaning to GIVE. No, if that were my opinion, it would instantly be confuted by the conditionals of the Greek and Latin and Irish and many living languages. But I mean that those words which are called conditional conjunctions are to be accounted for, in ALL languages, in the same manner as I have accounted for IF and AN. Not indeed that they must all mean precisely as these two do,—GIVE and GRANT; but some word equivalent. Such as,—Be it, Suppose, Allow, Permit, Suffer, &c.

Which meaning is to be sought for from the particular etymology of each language; not from some unnamed and unknown—"turns, stands, postures, &c. of the mind."

In short, to put this matter out of doubt, I mean to discard all supposed mystery, not only about these Conditionals, but about all those words also which Mr. Harris and others distinguish from Prepositions, and call Conjunctions of sentences. I deny them to be a separate sort of words, or part of speech by themselves. For they have not a separate manner of signification: although they are not “devoid of signification.” And the particular signification of each must be sought for from amongst the other parts of speech, by the help of the particular etymology of each respective language. By such means alone can we clear away the obscurity and errors in which grammarians and philosophers have been involved by the corruption of some common words and the useful Abbreviations of Construction. And at the same time we shall get rid of that farrago of useless distinctions into Conjunctive, Adjunctive, Disjunctive, Sub-disjunctive, Copulative, Continuative, Sub-continuative, Positive, Suppositive, Causal, Collective, Effective, Approbative, Discretive, Ablative, Præsumptive, Abnegative, Compleitive, Preventive, Adversative, Concessive, Motive, Conductive, &c. &c. &c.—which explain nothing; and (as most other technical terms are abused) serve only to throw a veil over the ignorance of those who employ them.

¹ "The shallow'st thickskull of that barren sort,
A crew of patches, rude mechanicals,
'That work for bread upon Athenian stalls."

You will easily perceive, Sir, by what I have said, that I mean flatly to contradict Mr. Harris’s definition of a Conjunction; which, he says, is—“A part of speech devoid of signification itself, but so formed as to help signification by making two or more significant sentences to be one significant sentence.”

And I have the less scruple to do that; because Mr. Harris makes no scruple to contradict himself. For he afterwards acknowledges that some of them—“have a kind of obscure signification, when taken alone; and that they appear in grammar like Zoophytes in Nature, a kind of middle beings of amphibious character, which, by sharing the attributes of the higher and the lower, conduce to link the whole together.”

Now I suppose it is impossible to convey a Nothing in a more ingenious manner. How much superior is this to the oracular Saw of another learned author on language (Lord Monboddo), who amongst much other intelligence of equal importance, tells us with a very solemn face, and ascribes it to Plato, that—“Every man that opines must opine something, the subject of opinion therefore is not nothing.”¹

But Mr. Harris has the advantage of a similitude over this gentleman: and though similitudes appear with most beauty and propriety in works of imagination, they are frequently found most useful to the authors of philosophical treatises: and have often helped them out at many a dead lift, by giving them an appearance of saying something, when indeed they had nothing to say. But we may depend upon it,—Nubila mens est, hæc ubi regnant. As a proof of which, let us only examine the present instance, and see what intelligence we can draw from Mr. Harris concerning the nature of Conjunctions.

¹ “Il possède l’antiquité, comme on le peut voir par les belles remarques qu’il a faites. Sans lui nous ne saurions pas que dans la ville d’Athènes les enfans pleuroient quand on leur donnoit le fouet.—Nous devons cette découverte à sa profonde érudition.”

First, he says (and makes it a part of their definition) that they are "devoid of signification."¹ Afterwards he allows that they have "a kind of signification." "But this kind of signification is obscure," i. e. a signification unknown: something I suppose (as Chillingworth couples them) like a secret tradition, or a silent thunder; for it amounts to the same thing as a signification which does not signify: an obscure or unknown signification being no signification at all. But not contented with these inconsistencies, which to a less learned man would seem sufficient of all conscience, Mr. Harris goes further, and adds, that they are a—"kind of middle beings" (he must mean between signification and no signification); "sharing the attributes of both;" (i. e. of sig. and no sig.) and "conduce to link them both" (i. e. signification and no signification) "together."

It would have helped us a little if Mr. Harris had here told us what that middle state is, between signification and no signification! what are the attributes of no signification! and how, signification and no signification can be linked together!

Now all this may, for aught I know, be—"read and admired, as long as there is any taste for FINE WRITING in Britain."—But with such unlearned and vulgar philosophers as Mr. Locke and his disciples, who seek not taste and elegance, but truth and common sense in philosophical subjects, I believe it will never pass as a "perfect example of analysis," nor bear away the palm for "acuteness of investigation" and "perspicuity of explication."—For, (separated from the FINE WRITING,) thus is the Conjunction explained by Mr. Harris:—

—A word devoid of signification, having at the same time a kind of obscure signification; and yet having neither signification nor no signification; but a middle something, between signification and no signification, sharing the attributes both of signification and no signification; and linking signification and no signification together.

If others of a more elegant Taste for Fine Writing are able to receive either pleasure or instruction from such "truly philosophical language," I shall neither dispute with them nor envy them: but can only deplore the dulness of my own apprehension, who, notwithstanding the great authors quoted in Mr. Harris's Treatise, and the great authors who recommend it, cannot help considering this "perfect example of Analysis," as,—An improved compilation of almost all the errors which grammarians have been accumulating from the time of Aristotle down to our present days of technical and learned affectation.

¹ Observe Mr. Harris defines a word to be "a sound significant." And now he defines a Conjunction to be a word (i. e. a sound significant) devoid of signification.

I can easily suppose that in this censure which I thus unreservedly cast upon Mr. Harris, (and which I do not mean to confine to his account of the conjunctions alone, but extend to all that he has written on the subject of language,) I can easily suppose that I shall be thought, by those who know not the grounds of my censure, to have spoken too sharply. They will probably say that I still carry with me my old humour in politics, though my subject is now different ; and that, according to the hackneyed accusation, I am against authority, only because authority is against me. But, if I know any thing of myself, I can with truth declare, that Neminem libenter nominem, nisi ut laudem; sed nec peccata reprehenderem, nisi ut aliis prodessem. And so far from spurning authority, I have always upon philosophical subjects addressed myself to an inquiry into the opinions of others with all the diffidence of conscious ignorance ; and have been disposed to admit of half an argument from a great name. So that it is not my fault if I am forced to carry instead of following the lantern ; but at all events it is better than walking in total darkness.

And yet, though I believe I differ from all the accounts which have hitherto been given of language, I am not so much without authority as may be imagined. Mr. Harris himself, and all the grammarians whom he has and whom he has not quoted, are my authorities. Their own doubts, their difficulties, their dissatisfaction, their contradictions, their obscurity on all these points, are my authorities against them : for their system and their difficulties vanish together. Indeed, unless I had been repeating what others have written, it is impossible I should quote any direct authorities for my own manner of explanation. But let us hear Wilkins, whose industry deserved to have been better employed, and his perseverance better rewarded with discovery ; let us hear what he says :—

“ According to the true philosophy of speech, I cannot conceive this kind of words” (he speaks of Adverbs and Conjunctions) “ to be properly a distinct part of speech, as they are commonly called. But untill they can be distributed into their proper places, I have so far complied with the grammars of instituted languages, as to place them here together.”

Mr. Locke’s dissatisfaction with all the accounts which he had seen, is too well known to need repetition.

Sanctius rescued QUOD particularly from the number of these mysterious Conjunctions ; though he left UT amongst them.

And Servius, Scioppius, J. G. Vossius, Perizonius, and others, have displaced and explained many other supposed adverbs and conjunctions.

Skinner has accounted for IF before me, and in the same manner ; which, though so palpable, Lye confirms and compliments.

Even S. Johnson, though mistakenly, has attempted AND. And would find no difficulty with THEREFORE.

In short, there is not such a thing as a Conjunction in any language, which may not, by a skilful herald, be traced home to its own family and origin; without having recourse to contradiction and mystery, with Mr. Harris; or, with Mr. Locke, cleaving open the head of man, to give it such a birth as Minerva's from the brain of Jupiter.

After all, I do not know whether I shall be quietly permitted to call these authorities in my favour: for I must fairly acknowledge that the full stream and current sets the other way, and only some little brook or rivulet runs with me. I must confess that all the authorities which I have alleged, except Wilkins, are upon the whole against me. For, though they have explained the meaning and traced the derivation of many adverbs and conjunctions; yet, (except Sanctius in the particular instance of QUOD,—whose conjunctive use in Latin he too strenuously denies) they all acknowledge them still to be adverbs or conjunctions.

It is true, they distinguish them by the title of reperta or usurpata: but they at the same time acknowledge (indeed the very distinction itself is an acknowledgment) that there are others which are real, primigenia, nativa, pura.

But the true reason of this distinction is, because that of the origin of the greater part of them they are totally ignorant. But has any philosopher or grammarian ever yet told us what a real, original, native, pure Adverb or Conjunction is? Or which of these conjunctions of sentences are so?—Whenever that is done, in any language, I may venture to promise that I will shew those likewise to be repertas, and usurpatas, as well as the rest. I shall only add, that though Abbreviation and Corruption are always busiest with the words which are most frequently in use; yet the words most frequently used are least liable to be totally laid aside. And therefore they are often retained,—(I mean that branch of them which is most frequently used) when most of the other words (and even the other branches of these retained words) are, by various changes and accidents, quite lost to a language. HENCE the difficulty of accounting for them. And HENCE, (because only one branch of these declinable words is retained in a language,) arises the notion of their being indeclinable; and a separate sort of words, or Part of Speech by themselves. But that they are not indeclinable, is sufficiently evident by what I have already said: For Est, An, &c. certainly could not be called indeclinable, when all the other branches of those verbs, of which they are the regular Imperatives, were likewise in use. And that the words If, An, &c. (which still retain their original signification, and are used in the very same manner, and for the same purpose as formerly,) should now be called indeclinable, proceeds merely from the ignorance of those who could not account for them; and who, therefore, with Mr. Harris, were driven to say that they have neither meaning¹ nor Inflection: whilst notwithstanding they were still forced to acknowledge (either directly, or by giving them different titles of conditional, adversative, &c.) that they have a “kind of obscure meaning.”

How much more candid and ingenuous would it have been, to have owned fairly that they did not understand the nature of these Conjunctions; and, instead of wrapping it up in mystery, to have exhorted and encouraged others to a further search!²

Now, Sir, I am presumptuous enough to assert that what I have done with IF and AN, may be done universally with all the Conjunctions of all the languages in the world. I know that many persons have often been misled by a fanciful etymology; but I assert it universally not so much from my own slender acquisition of languages, as from arguments a priori: which arguments are however confirmed to me by a successful search in many other languages besides the English, in which I have traced these supposed unmeaning, indeclinable conjunctions to their source; and should not at all fear undertaking to shew clearly and satisfactorily the origin and precise meaning of each of these pretended unmeaning, indeclinable conjunctions, at least in all the dead and living languages of Europe.

But because men talk very safely of what they may do and what they might have done; and I cannot expect that others who have no suspicion of the thing, should come over to my opinion, unless I perform, at least as much as Wilkins (who had a suspicion of it) required before he would venture to differ from the grammars of instituted languages; I will distribute our English conjunctions into their proper places; and thus wilfully impose upon myself a task which I am told “no man however learned or sagacious has yet been able to perform,”³

¹ There is not, nor is it possible there should be, a word in any language, which has not a complete meaning and signification, even when taken by itself. Adjectives, prepositions, adverbs, &c. have all complete, separate meanings; not difficult to be discovered.

² This general censure would be highly unjust, if an exception of praise was not here made for Bacon, Wilkins, Locke, and S. Johnson; who are ingenuous on the subject.

³ “The particles are, among all nations, applied with so great latitude, that they are not easily reducible under any regular scheme of explication: this difficulty is not less, nor perhaps greater, in English than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with success: such at least as can be expected in a task, which no man, however learned or sagacious, has yet been able to perform.”—Preface to S. Johnson's Dictionary.

Thus then ; I say that

If	Lif	Lifan	To give
An	An	Anan	To grant
Unless	Onler	Onleran	To dismiss
Eke	Eac	Eacan	To add
Yet	Let	Letan	To get
Still	Stell	Stellan	To put
Else	Aler	Aleran	To dismiss
Tho,' or Though	Đaf. or Đafiz	{ Đafian, or Đafizan }	To allow
Büt	Bot	Botan	To Boot
Büt	Be-utan	Beon-utan	To be-out
Without	Þýpð-utan	Þeopðan-utan	To be-out
And	An-ab	Anan-ab	{ Dare Conge- riem

Verbs. of their respective

Are the Imperatives

Lest, is the Participle Lereð, of Leran, to dismiss
 Since Sið-ðan
 Since Syne
 Since Seanð-er
 Since Sið-ðe, or Sin-er
 That is the Neuter Article Đaz.

} is the Participle of Seon. To see.

These I apprehend are the only conjunctions in our language which can cause any difficulty ; and it would be impertinent in me to explain such as Be-it, Albeit, Notwithstanding, Nevertheless, Set,¹ Save, Except, Out-cept,² Out-take,³ To wit, Because, &c. which are evident at first sight.

I hope it will be acknowledged that this is coming to the point ; and is fairer than shuffling them over as all philosophers and grammarians have hitherto done ; or than repeating after others, that they are not themselves any part of languages, but only such Accessaries, as Salt is to Meat, or Water to Bread ; or that they are the mere Edging, or Sauce of language ; or that they are like the Handles to Cups, or the Plumes to Helmets, or the Binding to Books, or Harness for Horses ; or that they are Pegs, and Nails, and Nerves, and Joints, and Ligaments, and Lime and Mortar, and so forth.

¹ "Set this my work full febill be of rent."—G. Douglas.

² "I'd play hun 'gaine a knight, or a good squire, or gentleman of any other countie i' the kingdome,—Outcept Kent : for there they landed all gentlemen."—B. Jonson. Tale of a Tub.

³ "And also I resygne al my knyghtly dignitie, magesty, and crowne, wyth all the lordeshyppes, powre, and pryvileges to the foresayd kingely dygnitie and crown belonging, and al other lordshippes and possesyons to me in any maner of wyse pertaynyng, what name and condicion thei be of, out-take the landes and posses-sions for me and mine obyte purchased and broughte."—Instrument of Resignation of K. Richard II. in Fabian's Chronicle.

In which kind of pretty similies philosophers and grammarians seem to have vied with one another; and have often endeavoured to amuse their readers and cover their own ignorance, by very learnedly disputing the propriety of the similie, instead of explaining the nature of the conjunction.

I must acknowledge that I have not any authorities for the derivations which I have given of these words; and that all former etymologists are against me. But I am persuaded that all future etymologists (and perhaps some philosophers) will acknowledge their obligation to me: for these troublesome conjunctions, which have hitherto caused them so much mistaken and unsatisfactory labour, shall save them many an error and many a weary step in future.

They shall no more expose themselves by unnatural forced conceits to derive the English and all other languages from the Greek or the Hebrew, or some imaginary primæval tongue. The Conjunctions of every language shall teach them whither to direct and where to stop their inquiries: for wherever the evident meaning and origin of the conjunctions of any language can be found, there is the certain source of the whole.¹

But, I beg pardon; this is digressing from my present purpose. I have nothing to do with the learning of mere curiosity; nor must (at this time) be any further concerned with etymology, and the false philosophy received concerning language and the human understanding, than as it is connected with the point with which I began.

If you please therefore, and if your patience is not exhausted, we will return to the conjunctions I have derived: and if you think it worth the while we will examine the conjectures of other persons about them, and see whether I have not something better than their authority in my favour.

IF. AN.

IF and AN may be used mutually and indifferently to supply each other's place.

Besides having Skinner's authority for IF, I suppose that the meaning and derivation of this principal supporter of the Tripod of Truth² are so very clear and simple and universally allowed, as to need no further discourse about it.

GIF is to be found not only, as Skinner says, in Lincolnshire; but in all our old writers. G. Douglas almost always uses Gif; once or twice only he has used IF; and once he uses GEWE for Gif. Chaucer commonly uses IF ; but sometimes YEVE,¹ YEF, and YF. And it is to be observed, that in Chaucer, and other old writers, the verb to Give suffers the same variations in the manner of writing it, however used, whether conjunctively or otherwise.

¹ This is to be understood with certain limitations not necessary to be now mentioned.

² See Plutarch, Why E I was engraved upon the gates of the temple of Apollo.

“ Well ought a priest ensample for to YEVE.” Prol. to Cant. Tales.

“ Lo here the letters selid of this thing,
That I mote bere in all the haste I may ;
YEVE ye well ought unto your sonne the king,
I am your servant both by night and day.” Man of Lawes Tule.

“ This gode ensample to his shepe he YAFFE.” Prol. to Cant. Tales.

YEF is also used as well for the common imperative as for what we call the conjunction.

“ Your vertue is so grete in heven above,
That IF the list I shall well have my love,
Thy temple shall I worship evir mo,
And on thine aulter, where I ryde or go,
I woll don sacrifise, and firis bete ;
And YEF ye woll nat so my lady swete,
Then pray I you tomorrow with a spere
That Arcite do me through the herte bere :
Then reke I not, whan I have lost my life,
Though Arcite wiinnin her to his wife.
This is th' effect and ende of my prayere ;
YEF me my lady, blissful lady dere.” Chaucer, Knight's Tule.

GIN² is often used in our Northern counties and by the Scotch, as we use IF or AN : which they do with equal propriety and as little corruption : for Gin is no other than the participle Given, Gi'en, Gi'n. (As they also use Gie for Give, and Gien for Given, when they are not used conjunctively.) And hoc dato is of equal conjunctive value in a sentence with da hoc.

Even our Londoners often pronounce Give and Given in the same manner ;

As,—“ Gi' me your hand.”

“ I have Gin it him well.”

I do not know that AN has been attempted by any one, except S. Johnson : and from the judicious distinction he has made between Junius and Skinner, I am persuaded that he will himself be the first person to relinquish his own conjecture.

¹ YEVE was commonly used in England instead of Give, even so low down as in the sixteenth century. See Henry VIIIth's Will.

² “ Gin, Gif, in the old Saxon is Gif, from whence the word If is made per aphæresin literæ G. Gif from the verb Gifun, dare ; and is as much as Dato.”—Ray's North Country Words.

UNLESS.

Skinner says,—“UNLESS, nisi, præter, præterquam, q. d. one-less, i. e. uno dempto seu excepto : vel potius ab Onleran, dimittere, liberare, q. d. Hoc dimisso.”

It is extraordinary, after his judicious derivation of IF, that Skinner should be at a loss about that of UNLESS : especially as he had it in a manner before him : for Onler, dimitte, was surely more obvious and immediate than Onlered, dimisso. As for—One-less, i. e. uno dempto seu excepto, it is too poor to deserve notice.

So low down as in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, this conjunction was sometimes written oneles : for so (amongst others) Robert Horne, Bishop of Winchester, writes it in his Answere to Fekenhàm touchinge the othe of the supremacy :—

“I coulde not choose, ONELES I woulde shewe myselfe overmuch unkiude unto my native countrey, but take penne in hande, and shape him a ful and plaine answeare, without any curiositie.”—Preface.

And this way of spelling it, which should rather have directed Skinner to its true etymology, might perhaps contribute to mislead him to the childish conjecture of “one-less, Uno dempto.”—But in other places it is written purely ONLES.

Thus, in the same book,

“The election of the Pope made by the clergie and people in those daies, was but a vaine thing, ONLES the Emperour or his lieutenant had confirmed the same.” Fol. 48.

“The Pope would not consecrate the elect bishop, ONLES he had first licence therto of the Emperour.” Fol. 63.

“No prince, no not the Emperour himselfe should be present in the councell with the cleargie, ONLES it were when the principall pointes of faith were treated of.” Fol. 67.

“He sweareth the Romaines, that they shall never after be present at the election of any Pope, ONLES they be compelled thereunto by the Emperour.” Fol. 71.

“Who maketh no mencion of any priest there present, as you untruely report, ONLES ye will thinke he meant the order, whan he named the faction of the Pharisees.” Fol. 111.

It is likewise sometimes written—ONLESSE and ONELESSE.

“So that none should be consecrate, ONLESSE he were commended and investured bishop of the kinge.” Fol. 59.

“And further to commaunde the newe electe Pope to forsake that dignitie unlawfully come by, ONLESSE they woulde make a reasonable satisfaction.” Fol. 73.

“That the Pope might sende into his dominions no Legate, ONLESSE the kinge should sende for him.” Fol. 76.

"What man, ONLESSE he be not well in his wittes, will say that," &c. Fol. 95.

"To exercise this kinde of jurisdiction, neither kinges nor civil magistrates may take uppon him, ONLESSE he be lawfully called there unto." Fol. 105.

"That from hencefoorth none should be Pope, ONELESSE he were created by the consent of the Emperour." Fol. 75.

"Ye cannot finde so muche as the bare title of one of them, ONELESSE it be of a bishoppe." Fol. 113.

In the same manner, Gardiner, bishop of Winchester, writes it in his "Declaration against Joye."¹

"No man commeth to me, ONLESSE my Father draweth hym." Fol. 29.

"Can any man further reply to this carpenter, ONLES a man wolde saye, that the carpenter was also after, the thefe hymselfe." Fol. 42.

"For ye fondely improve a conclusion which myght stande and be true, ONLESSE in teaching ye wyl so handel the matter, as," &c. Fol. 54.

"We cannot love God, ONLES he prepareth our harte, and geve us that grace: no more can we beleve God, ONLESSE he giveth us the gift of belefe." Fol. 64.

"In every kynde the female is commonly barren, ONLESSE it conceyvethe of the male; so is concupyscence barren and voyde of synne, ONLESSE it conceyve of man the agreymente of his free wyll." Fol. 66.

"We may not properly saye we apprehend justification by fayth, ONLESSE we wolde call the promisse of God," &c. Fol. 68.

"Such other pevishe words as men be encombred to heare, ONLES they wolde make Goddes worde, the matter of the Devylles strife." Fol. 88.

"Who can wake out of synne, WITHOUT God call him, and ONLESSE God hath given eares to heare this voyce of God? How is any man, beyng lame with synne, able to take up his couche and walke, ONLESSE God sayeth," &c. Fol. 95.²

¹ In the same manner Barnes (on the occasion of whose death Gardiner wrote this Declaration) writes it in his Supplication to K. Henry VIII.

"I shall come to the councell, when soever I bee called, ONLES I be lawfully let." p. 195.

² So in the Trial of Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, 1413.

"It was not possible for them to make whole Christes cote without seme ONLESSE certeyn great men were brought out of the way."

So in the Whetstone of Witte.

"I see moure menne to acknowledge the benefit of nomber, then I can espie willyng to studie, to attain the benefites of it. Many praise it, but fewe dooe greatly practise it, ONLESSE it bec for the vulgare practice concernyng merchaundes trade."—The Whetstone of Witte, by Robert Recorde, Phisician; 1557. (If himself say true, the first author concerning Arithmetic in English: "The first venturer in these darke matters." Preface.)

I have here given you all the instances where this conjunction is used in these two small tracts I have quoted, which I suppose are something more than sufficient for my purpose; unless you had as much leisure to read as I have to write.

I do not remember to have ever met with Onler used in the Anglo-Saxon as we use Unless; (though I have no doubt that it was so used in discourse;) but, instead of it, they frequently employ nȳmðe or nemðe: (which is evidently the imperative nȳm or nem of nȳman or neman, to which is subjoined ðe, i. e. that.) And—Nȳmðe, Take away that,—may very well supply the place of—Onler (ðe expressed or understood) Dismiss that.

LES,¹ the imperative of Leran, (which has the same meaning as Onleran,) is likewise used sometimes by old writers instead of Unless. As,

“And thus I am constrenit, als nere as I may,

To hald his verse, and go nane uthir way.

LES sum historie, subtell worde, or ryme,

Causis me mak degressioun sum tyme.” G. Douglas, Preface.

You will please to observe that all the languages which have a correspondent conjunction to Unless, as well as the manner in which its place is supplied by the languages which have not a correspondent conjunction to it, all strongly justify my derivation.

Though it certainly is not worth the while, I am tempted here to observe the gross mistake Mr. Harris has made in the force of this word, which he calls an “adequate preventive.” His example is,—“Troy will be taken, UNLESS the Palladium be preserved.”—“That is, (says Mr. Harris,) This alone is sufficient to preserve it.”—According to the oracle, so indeed it might be; but the word UNLESS has no such force.

Let us try another instance.

“England will be enslaved, UNLESS the House of Commons continue a part of the legislature.”

Now I ask,—Is this alone sufficient to preserve it? We who live in these times know but too well that this very House may be made the instrument of a tyranny as odious and (perhaps) more lasting than that of the Stuarts. I am afraid Mr. Harris’s adequate preventive, UNLESS, will not save us. For though it is most cruel and unnatural, yet we know by woful experience that the kid may be seethed in the mother’s milk, which Providence appointed for its nourishment; and the “Yet is it not accepted as a like flatte, ONLES it bec referred to some other square number.”—Whetstone of Witte, p. 54.

¹ It is the same imperative at the end of those words which are called adjectives, such as hopeless, motionless, &c. i. e. dismiss hope, dismiss motion, &c.

liberties of this country be destroyed by that very part of the legislature which was most especially appointed for their security.

E K E.

Junius says,—"EAK, etiam. Goth. Ληκ A.-S. Eac. Al. Auch. D. Og. B. Ook. Viderentur esse ex inverso και, sed rectius petas ex proxime sequenti Ληκλ (Isl. Auka) A.-S. Eacan. ecan. ican. Al. Auchon. D. Oga. B. Oecken. Eacan vero, vel Auchon, sunt ab αυξεν vel αεξεν, addere, adjicere, augere."

Skinner says,—“EKE, ab A.-S. Eac, Leac. Belg. Oock. Teut. Auch. Fr. Th. Ouch. D. Oc. Etiam."

Skinner then proceeds to the verb,

“To EKE, ab A.-S. Eacan. Leican. Iecan, augere, adjicere. Fr. Jun. suo more, deflectit a Gr. αυξεν. Mallem ab Eac, iterum, quod vide: Quod enim augetur, secundum partes suas quasi iteratur et de novo fit.”

In this place Skinner does not seem to enjoy his usual superiority of judgement over Junius: and it is very strange that he should chuse here to derive the verb Eacan from the conjunction Eac, (that is, from its own imperative,) rather than the conjunction (that is, the imperative) from the verb. His judgement was more awake when he derived IF or GIF from Līfan; and not Līfan from Līf: which yet, according to his present method, he should have done.

YET. STILL.

I put the conjunctions YET and STILL here together; because (like If and An) they may be used mutually for each other without any alteration in the meaning of the sentences: a circumstance which (though not so obviously as in these sentences) happens likewise to some other of the conjunctions; and which is not unworthy of consideration.

According to my derivation of them both, this mutual interchange will not seem at all extraordinary: For YET (which is nothing but the imperative Let or Lýt, of Letan or Lýtan, obtinere), and STILL (which is only the imperative Stell or Steall, of Stellan or Steallian, ponere), may very well supply each other's place, and be indifferently used for the same purpose.

But I will repeat to you the derivations which others have given, and leave you to determine between us.

Mer. Casaubon says,—“Eti, adhuc, YET.” Junius says,—“YET, adhuc, A.-S. ȝýt. Cymræis etwa, etto, significat adhuc, etiam, iterum: ex iri vel avθic.”

Skinner says,—“YET, ab A.-S. Let, Leta, adhuc, modo. Teut. Jetzt, jam, mox.”

Skinner says,—“STILL, assidue, indefinenter, incessanter. Nescio an ab A.-S. Till, addito tantum sibilo : vel a nostro, et credo etiam, A.-S. as, ut, sicut, (licet apud Somnerum non occurrat,) et eodem Til, usque. q. d. Usque, eodem modo."

ELSE.

This word ELSE, formerly written Alles, Alys, Alyse, Elles, Ellus, Ellis, Els, and now Else; is, as I have said, no other than Aler or Alyr, the imperative of Aleran or Alyran, dimittere.

Mr. Warton, in his History of English Poetry, vol. i. (without any authority, and in spite of the context, which evidently demands ELSE and will not admit of ALSO) has explained ALLES in the following passage by ALSO.

"The Soudan ther he satte in halle;
He sent his messagers faste withalle,
To hire fader the kyng.
And sayde, how so hit ever bifalle,
That mayde he wolde clothe in palle
And spousen hire with his ryng.
And ALLES I swere withouten fayle
I schull hire winnen in pleyn battayle
With mony an heih lordyng," &c. Ed. 8vo. vol. ii. p. 24.

The meaning of which is evidently,—“Give me your daughter, ELSE I will take her by force.”

It would have been nonsense to say,—“Give me your daughter, ALSO I will take her by force.”

I quote this passage, not for the sake of censuring Mr. Warton, but to give you one of the most recent instances, as I suppose, of ALLES used for ELSE in English.

Junius says,—“ELSE, aliter, alias, alioqui. A.-S. Eller. Al. Alles. D. Ellers.”

Skinner says,—“ELSE ab A.-S. Eller, alias, alioquin. Minshew et Dr. Th. H. putant esse contractum a Lat. alias, vel Gr. αλλως; nec sine verisimilitudine.”

S. Johnson says,—“ELSE, pronoun, (Eller Saxon) other; one besides. It is applied both to persons and things.” He says again—“ELSE, adverb. 1. Otherwise. 2. Besides; except that mentioned.”

THOUGH.

THO' or THOUGH (or, as our country-folks more purely pronounce it, THAF, THAUF, and THOF; and the Scotch who retain in their pronunciation the guttural termination,) is the imperative Ðaf or Ðafiz of the verb Ðafian or Ðafizan,¹ concedere, permittere, assentire, consentire.

¹ It is remarkable, that as there were originally two ways of writing the verb, with the aspirate G or without it; so there still continue the two same different ways of

And Daȝ becomes Thoug and Though (and Thoch, as G. Douglas and other Scotch authors write it) by a transition of the same sort, and at least as easy, as that of Hawk from hafuc.

I reckon it not a small confirmation of this etymology, that antiently they often used Algife, Algyff, Allgyf, and Algive, instead of ALTHOUGH.
As,

“With hevȝ chere, with dolorous hart and mynd,
Eche man may sorrow in his inward thought
Thys Lords death, whose pere is hard to fynd
ALLGYF Englonde and Fraunce were thorow saught.” Skelton.

Skinner says,—“THOUGH, ab A.-S. Deah. Belg. Doch. Belg. and Teut. Doch, tamen, etsi, quamvis.”

Though this word is called a conjunctive of sentences, it is constantly used, (especially by children, and in low discourse,) not only between, but at the end of sentences. As,

“Pro. Why do you maintain your poet’s quarrel so with velvet and good clothes? We have seen him in indifferent good clothes ere now himself.”

“Boy. And may again. But his clothes shall never be the best thing about him, THOUGH. He will have somewhat beside, either of humane letters or severe honesty, shall speak him a man, though he went naked.”

What sentences are here connected by the prior THOUGH?

BUT.

It was this word, BUT, which Mr. Locke had chiefly in view, when he spoke of conjunctions as marking some “stands, turns, limitations, and exceptions of the mind.” And it was the corrupt use of this one word (BUT) in modern English, for two words (BOT and BUT) originally (in the Anglo-Saxon) very different in signification, though (by repeated abbreviation and corruption) approaching in sound, which chiefly misled him.

“BUT (says Mr. Locke) is a particle, none more familiar in our language; and he that says it is a discretive conjunction, and that it answers sed in Latin, or mais in French,¹ thinks he has sufficiently explained it. But it seems to me to intimate several relations the mind gives to the several propositions or parts of them, which it joins by this monosyllable.

writing the remaining part of this same verb Tho, or Though, with the aspirate G or without it.

¹ It does not answer to sed in Latin, or mais in French; except only when it is used for BOT. Nor will any one word in any language answer to our English BUT: because a similar corruption in the same instance has not happened in any other language.

“ First,—‘ BUT to say no more :’

“ Here it intimates a stop of the mind, in the course it was going, before it came to the end of it.

“ Secondly,—‘ I saw BUT two plants :’

“ Here it shows, that the mind limits the sense to what is expressed, with a negation of all other.

“ Thirdly,—‘ You pray ; BUT it is not that God would bring you to the true religion :’

“ Fourthly,—‘ BUT that he would confirm you in your own.’

“ The first of these BUTS intimates a supposition in the mind of something otherwise than it should be : the latter shews, that the mind makes a direct opposition between that and what goes before it.

“ Fifthly,—‘ All animals have sense, BUT a dog is an animal.’

“ Here it signifies little more, but that the latter proposition is joined to the former, as the minor of a syllogism.

“ To these, I doubt not, might be added a great many other significations of this particle, if it were my business to examine it in its full latitude, and consider it in all the places it is to be found ; which if one should do, I doubt whether in all those manners it is made use of, it would deserve the title of discretive which grammarians give to it.

“ But I intend not¹ here a full explication of this sort of signs. The instances I have given in this one, may give occasion to reflect upon their use and force in language, and lead us into the contemplation of several actions of our minds in discoursing, which it has found a way to intimate to others by these particles, some whereof constantly, and others in certain constructions, have the sense of a whole sentence contained in them.”

Now all these difficulties are very easily to be removed without any effort of the understanding : and for that very reason I do not much wonder that Mr. Locke missed the explanation : for he dug too deep for it. But that the etymologists (who only just turn up the surface) should miss it, does indeed astonish me. It seems to me impossible that any man who reads only the most common of our old English authors should fail to observe it.

Gawin Douglas, notwithstanding he frequently confounds the two words and uses them improperly, does yet (without being himself

¹ “ Essentiam finemque conjunctionum satis apte explicatum puto : nunc earum originem materiamque videamus. Neque vero Sigillatim percurrere omnes in Animo est.—J. C. Scaliger.

The constant excuse of them all, whether grammatists, grammarians, or philosophers ; though they dare not hazard the assertion, yet they would all have us understand that they can do it ; but non in animo est. And it has never been done aware of the distinction, and from the mere force of customary speech,) abound with so many instances and so contrasted, as to awaken, one should think, the most inattentive reader.

“BOT thy werke shall endure in laude and glorie,
But spot or falt condigne eterne memorie.”

Preface.

“BOT gif this ilk statew standis here wrocht,
War with zour handis into the cietie brocht,
Than schew he that the peopil of Asia
But ony obstakill in fell battel suld ga.”

Book 2.

“This chance is not BUT Goddis willis went,
Nor is it not leful thyng, quod sche,
Fra hyne Creusa thou turs away with the ;
Nor the hie Governoure of the hevin above is
Will suffer it so to be, BOT the behuff is
From hens to wend full fer into exile,
And over the braid sey sayl furth mony a myle,
Or thou cum to the land Hisperia,
Quhare with soft coursis Tybris of Lidia
Rynnys throw the riche feildis of pepill stout ;
Thare is gret substance ordenit the BUT dout.”

Book 2.

“—— BOT gif the Fatis, BUT pleid,
At my plesure suffer it me life to leid.”

Book 4.

“BOT seu Apollo clepit Gryneus,
Grete Italie to seik commandis us,
To Italie eik Oraclis of Licia
Admonist us BUT mare delay to ga.”

Book 4.

“Thou wyth thir harmes overchargit me also,
Quhen I fell fyrst into this rage, quod sche,
BOT so to do my teris constrenyt the.
Was it not lefull, alace, BUT cumpany,
To me BUT cryme allane in chalmer to ly.”

Book 4.

“The tothir answered, nouthir for drede nor boist,
The luf of wourschip nor honoure went away is,
BOT certainly the dasit blude now on dayis
Waxis dolf and dull throw myne unweildy age,
The cald body has mynyst my curage :
BOT war I now as umquhile it has bene,
Zing as zone wantoun woistare so strang thay wene,
Ze had I now sic zoutheid, traistis me,
But ony price I suld all reddy be.”

Book 5.

“The prince Eneas than seand this dout,
No langar suffir wald sic wraith procede,
Nor feirs Entellus mude thus rage and sprede ;
BOT of the bargane maid end, BUT delay.”

Book 5.

- “ In nowmer war thay BUT ane few menze, Bot thay war quyk, and valzeant in melle.” Book 5.
- “ Blyn not, blyn not, thou grete Troian Enee,
Of thy bedis nor prayeris, quod sche ;
For BOT thou do, thir grete durris, BUT dred,
And grislie zettis sall never warp on bred.” Book 6.
- “ How grete apperance is in him, BUT dout,
Till be of proues, and ane vailzeant knycht :
Bot ane black sop of myst als dirk as nycht
Wyth drery schaddow bylappis his hede.” Book 6.
- “ Bot sen that Virgil standis BUT compare.” Prol. to Book 9.
- “ Quhiddir gif the Goddis, or sum spretis silly
Movis in our myndis this ardent thochtful fire,
Or gif that every mannis schrewit desyre
Be as his God and Genius in that place,
I wat never how it standis, BOT this lang space
My mynd movis to me, here as I stand,
Batel or some grete thyng to tak on hand :
I knaw not to quhat purpois it is drest,
Bot be na way may I tak eis nor rest.
Behaldis thou not so surelie BUT affray
Zone Rutulianis haldis thaym glaid and gay ?” Book 9.
- “ Bot lo, as thay thus wounderit in effray,
This ilk Nisus, wourthin proude and gay,
And baldare of his chance sa with him gone,
Ane uthir takill assayit he anone :
And with ane sound smate Tagus BUT remede.” Book 9.
- “ ——— Bot the tothir BUT sere, Bure at him mychtely wyth ane lang spere.” Book 10.
- “ Bot the Troiane Baroun unabasitilie
Na wourdis preisis to render him agane ;
Bot at his fa let fle ane dart or flane
That hit Lucagus, quilk fra he felt the dynt,
The schaft hinging into his scheild, BUT stynt,
Bad drive his hors and chare al fordwert streicht.” Book 10.
- “ Bot quhat awalis bargane or strang melle
Syne zeild the to thy fa, BUT ony quhy.” Prol. to Book 11.
- “ Than of his speich so wounderit war thay
Kepit thare silence, and wist not what to say,
Bot athir towart uthir turnis BUT mare,
And can behald his fallow in ane stare.” Book 11.
- “ Bot now I se that zoung man haist BUT fale,
To mache in feild wyth fatis inequale.” Book 12.

“Quhare sone foregadderit all the Troyane army
And thyck about hym flokkand can BUT baid,
Bot nowthir scheild nor wappinis down thay laid.” Book 12.

The glossarist of Douglas contents himself with explaining BOT by BUT.

The glossarist to Urry's edition of Chaucer says,—BOT for BUT is “a form of speech frequently used in Chaucer to denote the greater certainty of a thing.”—This is a most inexcusable assertion: for, I believe, the place cited in the Glossary is the only instance (in this edition of Chaucer) where BOT is used; and there is not the smallest shadow of reason for forming even a conjecture in favour of this unsatisfactory assertion: unsatisfactory, even if the fact had been so; because it contains no explanation; for why should BOT denote greater certainty?

And here it may be proper to observe, that Gawin Douglas's language (where BOT is very frequently found), though written about a century after, must yet be esteemed more antient than Chaucer's: even as at this day the present English speech in Scotland is, in many respects, more antient than that spoken in England so far back as the reign of Queen Elizabeth.¹ So Mer. Casaubon, (de Vet. Ling. Ang.) says of his time,—“Scotica lingua Anglicâ hodiernâ purior.”—Where, by purior, he means nearer to the Anglo-Saxon.

So G. Hickes, in his Anglo-Saxon Grammar (chap. 3.) says,—“Scoti in multis Saxonizantes.”

But to return to Mr. Locke, whom (as B. Jonson says of Shakespeare) “I reverence on this side of idolatry;” in the five instances which he has given for five different meanings of the word BUT, there are indeed only two different meanings:² nor could he, as he imagined he could, have added any other significations of this particle, but what are to be found in BOT and BUT as I have explained them.³

¹ This will not seem at all extraordinary if you reason directly contrary to Lord Monboddo on this subject; by doing which you will generally be right as well in this as in almost every thing else which he has advanced.

² “You must answer, that she was brought very near the fire, and as good as thrown in; or else that she was provoked to it by a divine inspiration. BUT, BUT that another divine inspiration moved the beholders to believe that she did therein a noble act, this act of hers might have been calumniated,” &c.—Donne's Biathanatos, part 2. distinct. 5. sect. 8.

In the above passage, which is exceedingly awkward, BUT is used in both its meanings close to each other: and the impropriety of the corruption appears therefore in its most offensive point of view. A careful author would avoid this, by placing these two BUTS at a distance from each other in the sentence, or by changing one of them for some other equivalent word. Whereas had the corruption not taken place, he might without any inelegance (in this respect) have kept the construction of the sentence as it now stands: for nothing would have offended us, had it run thus,—“Bot, butan that another divine inspiration moved the beholders,” &c.

³ S. Johnson, in his Dictionary, has numbered up eighteen different significations (as he imagines) of BUT: which however are all reducible to Bot, and Be-utan.

BUT, in the first, third, fourth, and fifth instances, is corruptly put for BOT, the imperative of Botan :

In the second instance only it is put for Bute, or Butan, or Be-utan.¹

In the first instance,—“To say no more,” is a mere parenthesis : and Mr. Locke has unwarily attributed to BUT, the meaning contained in the parenthesis : for suppose the instance had been this,—“BUT, to proceed.” Or this,—“BUT, to go fairly thro’ this matter.” Or this,—“BUT, not to stop.”

Does BUT in any of these instances intimate a stop of the mind in the course it was going? The truth is, that BUT itself is the furthest of any word in the language from “intimating a stop.” On the contrary it always intimates something MORE,² something to follow : (as indeed it does in this very instance of Mr. Locke’s ; though we know not what that something is, because the sentence is not completed.) And therefore whenever any one in discourse finishes his words with BUT, the question always follows—BUT what?—

So that Shakespeare speaks most truly as well as poetically, when he gives an account of BUT, very different from this of Mr. Locke :

“Mess. Madam, he’s well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mess. And friends with Cæsar.

Cleo. Thou’rt an honest man.

Mess. Cæsar and he are greater friends than ever.

Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me.

Mess. BUT—YET—Madam,—

Cleo. I do not like BUT—YET.—It does allay
The good precedent. Fie upon BUT,—YET.—
BUT—YET—is as a jaylour, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor.” Anthony and Cleopatra, act 2. sc. 5.

¹ “I saw BUT two plants.”

Not or Ne is here left out and understood, which used formerly to be always inserted, as it frequently is still.

So Chaucer—“I ne usurpe not to have founden this werke of my labour or of myne engin. I n’ame BUT a leude compilatour of the laboure of old astrologiens, and have it translated in myn Englishe. And with this swerde shall I sleene envy.”—Introduction to Conclusions of the Astrolabia.

We should now say—“I am but a leude compilatour,” &c.

² In the French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch, and several other dead and living languages, the very word MORE is used for this conjunction BUT.

The French language anciently used mais not only as they now do for the conjunction mais, but also as they now use plus.

Y puis je mais?

Je n’en puis mais, are still in use among the vulgar people ; in both which expressions it means more. So Henri Estienne uses it:—

“Sont si bien accoustumez à ceste syncope, ou plustost apocope, qu’ils en font quelquesfois autant aux dissyllables, qui n’en peuvent mais.”—H. E. de la Précellenes du Langage François, p. 18.

“Mais vient de magis (j’entens mais pour d’avantage).” Ibid. p. 131.

where you may observe that YET (though used elegantly here, to mark more strongly the hesitation of the speaker,) is merely superfluous to the sense; as it is always when used after BUT: for either BUT or YET alone (and especially BUT) has the very same effect, and will always be found to allay equally the Good, or the Bad,¹ precedent; by something *more*² that follows. For Butan means—to boot,³ i. e. to superadd,⁴ to supply, to substitute, to compensate with, to remedy with, to make amends with, to add something MORE in order to make up a deficiency in something else.

So likewise in the third and fourth instances (taken from Chillingworth).⁵ Mr. Locke has attributed to BUT, a meaning which can only be collected from the words which follow it.

¹ “Speed. Item, she hath more hairs than wit, and more faults than hairs, BUT more wealth than faults.

Laun. Stop there. She was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that article. Rehearse that once more.

Speed. Item, she hath more hair than wit.

Laun. What's next?

Speed. And more faults than hairs.

Laun. That's monstrous! Oh that that were out!

Speed. BUT more wealth than faults

Laun. Why that word makes the faults gracious.”

Here the word BUT allays the bad precedent; for which, without any shifting of its own intrinsic signification, it is as well qualified as to allay the good.

² So Tasso,—

“Am.—Oh, che mi dici?

Silvia m'attende, ignuda, e sola? Tir. Sola,

Se non quanto v'è Dafne, ch'è per noi.

Am. Ignuda ella m'aspetta? Tir. Ignuda: MA—

Am. Oimè, che MA? Tu taci; tu m'uccidi.” Aminta, att. 2. sc. 3.

where the difference of the construction in the English and the Italian is worth observing; and the reason evident, why in the question consequent to the conjunction, what is placed after the one, but before the other.

Boot what?	{	What more?
But what?		Che Ma ?

³ S. Johnson, and others, have mistaken the expression—To Boot—(which still remains in our language) for a substantive; which is indeed the infinitive of the same verb of which the conjunction is the imperative.

⁴ “Perhaps it may be thought improper for me to address you on this subject. BUT a moment, my Lords, and it will evidently appear that you are equally blameable for an omission of duty here also.”

This may be supposed an abbreviation of construction, for “BUT indulge me with a moment, my Lords, and it will,” &c.; but there is no occasion for such a supposition.

⁵ Knott had said,—“How can it be in us a fundamental error to say, the Scripture alone is not judge of controversies, seeing (notwithstanding this our belief) we use for interpreting of Scripture, all the means which they prescribe; as prayer, conferring of places, consulting the originals,” &c.

To which Chillingworth replies,

“You pray, BUT it is not that God would bring you to the true religion, BUT that he would confirm you in your own. You confer places, BUT it is that you may confirm, or colour over with plausible disguises your erroneous doctrines; not that you may judge of them, and forsake them, if there be reason for it. You consult the originals, BUT you regard them not when they make against your doctrine or translation.”

But Mr. Locke says,—“If it were his business to examine it (but) in its full latitude:”—and that he—“intends not here a full explication of this sort of sigus.”—And yet he adds, that—“the instances he has given in this one (BUT) may lead us into the contemplation of several actions of our minds in discoursing which it has found a way to intimate to others by these particles.” And these, it must be remembered, are actions, or, as he before termed them, thoughts of our minds, for which, he has said, we have “either none or very deficient names.”

Now if it had been so, (which in truth it is not,) it was surely, for that reason, most especially the business of an Essay on Human Understanding to examine these sigus in their full latitude; and to give a full explication of them. Instead of which, neither here, nor elsewhere, has Mr. Locke given any explication whatever.

Though I have said much, I shall also omit much which might be added in support of this double etymology of BUT: nor should I have dwelt so long upon it but in compliment to Mr. Locke; whose opinions in any matter are not slightly to be rejected, nor can they be modestly controverted without very strong arguments.

None of the etymologists have been aware of this corrupt use of one word for two.¹

In all these places, but (i. e. not, or as we now pronounce that verb, Boos) only directs something to be added or supplied in order to make up some deficiency in Knott's expressions of “prayer, conferring of places,” &c. And so far indeed as an omission of something is improper, but (by ordering its insertion) may be said to “intimate a supposition in the mind of the speaker of something otherwise than it should be.” But that intimation is only, as you see, by consequence; and not by the intrinsic signification of the word but.

¹ Nor have etymologists been any more aware of the meaning or true derivation of the words corresponding with but in other languages. Vossius derives the Latin conjunction at from atq; and ast from at, “inserto q.” (But how or why it happens to be inserted, he does not say.) Now to what purpose is such sort of etymology? suppose it was derived from this doubtful word atq,—what intelligence does this give us? Why not as well stop at the Latin word at, as at the Greek word atq? Is it not such sort of trifling etymology (for I will not give even that name to what is said by Scaliger and Nunnesius concerning ast) which has brought all etymological inquiry into disgrace?

Vossius is indeed a great authority; but, when he has nothing to justify an useless conjecture but a similarity of sound, we ought not to be afraid of opposing an appearance of reason to him.

It is contrary to the customary progress of corruption in words to derive ast from at. Words do not gain, but lose letters in their progress: nor has unaccountable accident any share in their corruption; there is always a good reason to be given for every change they receive: and, by a good reason, I do not mean those cabalistical words, Metathesis, Epenthesis, &c., by which etymologists work such miracles; but at least a probable or anatomical reason for those not arbitrary operations.

Adst, Adst, Ast, At.

I am not at all afraid of being ridiculed for the above derivation, by any one who will give himself the trouble to trace the words (corresponding with But) of any language to their source: though they should not all be quite so obvious as the French Mais, the Italian Ma, the Spanish Mas, or the Dutch Maar.

Minshew, keeping only one half of our modern BUT in contemplation, has sought for its derivation in the Latin imperative Putā.

Junius confines his explanation to the other half; which he calls its "primariam significationem."

And Skinner, willing to embrace them both, found no better method to reconcile two contradictory meanings, than to say hardily that the transition from one¹ to the other² was—"LEVI FLEXU!"

Junius says—"BUT, Chaucero T. C. V. 194. bis positum pro Sine. Primus locus est in summo columnæ—'BUT temperaunce in tene.'—Alter est in columnæ medio;

'This golden carte with firy bemes bright
Four yoked stedes, full different of hew,
But baite or tiring through the spheres drew.'

ubi, tamen perperam, primo BOUT pro BUT reposueram: quod iterum delevi, cum (sub finem ejusdem poematis) incidissem in hunc locum;

'But mete or drinke she dressed her to lie
In a darke corner of the hous alone.'

atque adeo exinde quoque observare cœpi frequentissimam esse hanc particulæ acceptionem. In Æneide quoque Scoticâ passim occurrunt,—'BUT spot or falt.' 3. 58.—'BUT ony indigence.' 4. 20.—'BUT sentence or ingyne.' 5. 41.—'principall poet BUT pere.' 9. 19.—atque ita porro. BUT videtur dictum quasi Be-ut, pro quo Angli dicunt WITHOUT: unde quoque, hujus derivationis intuitu, præsens hujus particulæ acceptio videbitur ostendere hanc esse primariam ejus significationem."

The extreme carelessness and ignorance of Junius, in this article, is wonderful and beneath a comment.

Skinner says,—“BUT, ut ubi dicimus—None BUT he;—ab A.-S. Bute, Butan, præter, nisi, sine: Hinc, LEVI FLEXU, postea cœpit, loco antiqui Anglo-Saxonici Ac, Sed, designare. Bute autem et Butan tandem deflecti possunt a præp. be, circa, vel beon, esse, et ute vel utan, foris."

WITHOUT.

But (as distinguished from Bot) and WITHOUT have both exactly the same meaning; that is, in modern English, neither more nor less than Be-out.

And they were both originally used indifferently either as conjunctions or prepositions. But later writers, having adopted the false notions and distinctions of language maintained by the Greek and Latin grammarians, have successively endeavoured to make the English language

¹ Id est, a direction to leave out something.

² Id est, a direction to superadd something.

conform more and more to the same rules. Accordingly WITHOUT, in approved modern speech, is now entirely confined to the office of a Preposition;¹ and BUT is generally (though not always) used as a Conjunction. In the same manner as Nisi and Sine in Latin are distributed; which do both likewise mean exactly the same, with no other difference than that, in the former the negation precedes, and in the other it follows the verb.

Skinner only says,—“WITHOUT, ab A.-S. wiðutan, extra.”

S. Johnson makes it a preposition, an adverb, and a conjunction; and under the head of a Conjunction, says,—“WITHOUT, Conjunct. Unless, if not; except.—Not in use.”

Its true derivation and meaning are the same as those of BUT (from Butan).

It is nothing but the imperative þýpð-utan, from the Anglo-Saxon and Gothic verb þeopðan, VALIKÞAN; which in the Anglo-Saxon language is incorporated with the verb Beon, esse.

AND.

M. Casaubon supposes AND to be derived from the Greek ετα, postea.

Skinner says—“Nescio an a Lat. addere, q. d. Add; interjecta per epenthesin N, ut in render, a reddendo.”

Lye supposes it to be derived from the Greek ετι, adhuc, præterea, etiam, quinetiam, insuper.

I have already given the derivation, which, I believe, will alone stand examination.

I shall only remark here, how easily men take upon trust, how willingly they are satisfied with, and how confidently they repeat after others, false explanations of what they do not understand.—Conjunctions, it seems, are to have their denomination and definition from the use to which they are applied: per accidens, essentiam. Prepositions connect words; but—“the Conjunction connects or joins together sentences; so as out of two to make one sentence. Thus—‘You AND I, AND Peter, rode to London,’ is one sentence made up of three,” &c.

Well! So far matters seem to go on very smoothly. It is,
“You rode, I rode, Peter rode.”

But let us now change the instance, and try some others which are full as common, though not altogether so convenient.

¹ It is however used as a conjunction by Lord Mansfield, in Horne's Trial, p. 56. “It cannot be read, without the Attorney-General consents to it.”

And yet, if this reverend Earl's authority may be safely quoted for any thing, it must be for words. It is so unsound in matter of law, that it is frequently rejected even by himself.

Two AND Two are Four.

A B and B C and C D form a triangle.

John AND Jane are a handsome couple.

Does A B form a triangle, B C form a triangle? &c.—Is John a couple? Is Jane a couple?—Are two, four?

If the definition of a conjunction is adhered to, I am afraid that AND, in such instances, will appear to be no more a conjunction (that is, a connector of sentences) than Though, in the instance I have given under that word; or than But, in Mr. Locke's second instance; or than Else, when called by S. Johnson a Pronoun; or than Since, when used for Sithence, or for Sine. In short I am afraid that the grammarians will scarcely have an entire conjunction left: for I apprehend that there is not one of those words which they call conjunctions, which is not sometimes used (and that very properly) without connecting sentences.

LEST.

Junius only says—"LEST, least, minimus. v. little." Under Least, he says—"LEAST, lest, minimus. Contractum est ex ελαχιστος, v. little, parvus." And under Little, to which he refers us, there is nothing to the purpose.

Skinner says—"LEST, ab A.-S. Lær, minus, q. d. quo minus hoc fiat."

S. Johnson says—"LEST, Conj. (from the adjective Least) That not."

This last deduction is a curious one indeed; and it would puzzle as sagacious a reasoner as S. Johnson to supply the middle steps to his conclusion from Least (which always however means some,) to "That not" (which means none at all). It seems as if, when he wrote this, he had already in his mind a presentiment of some future occasion in which such reasoning would be convenient. As thus,—“The mother country, the seat of government, must necessarily enjoy the greatest share of dignity, power, rights, and privileges: an united or associated kingdom must have in some degree a smaller share; and their colonies the least share;”—That is (according to S. Johnson)¹ None of any kind.

It has been proposed by no small authority (Wallis followed by Lowth) to alter the spelling of LEST to Least; and vice versa. “Multi,” says Wallis, “pro Lest scribunt Least (ut distinguatur a conjunctione Lest, ne, ut non;) verum omnino contra analogiam grammaticæ. Mallem ego adjectivum lest, conjunctionem least scribere.”

“The superlative Least,” says Lowth, “ought rather to be written

¹ Johnson's merit ought not to be denied to him; but his Dictionary is the most imperfect and faulty, and the least valuable of any of his productions; and that share of merit which it possesses makes it by so much the more hurtful. I rejoice however that, though the least valuable, he found it the most profitable: for I could never read his Preface without shedding a tear.

without the A: as Dr. Wallis hath long ago observed. The Conjunction of the same sound might be written with the A, for distinction."

S. Johnson judiciously dissents from this proposal, but for no other reason, but because he thinks,—“the profit is not worth the change.”

Now though they all concur in the same etymology, I will venture to affirm that Lest, for Lesel, (as blest for blessed, &c.) is nothing else but the participle past of Leran, dimittere; and, with the article That (either expressed or understood) means no more than Hoc dimisso or Quo dimisso.

And, if this explanation and etymology of LEST is right, (of which I have not the smallest doubt,) it furnishes one caution more to learned critics, not to innovate rashly: Lest, whilst they attempt to amend a language, as they imagine, in one trifling respect, they mar it in others of more importance; and, by their corrupt alterations and amendments, confirm error, and make the truth more difficult to be discovered by those who come after.

Mr. Locke says, and it is agreed on all sides, that—“it is in the right use of these (Particles) that more particularly consists the clearness and beauty of a good stile,” and that “these words, which are not truly by themselves the names of any ideas, are of constant and indispensable use in language; and do much contribute to men’s well expressing themselves.”

Now this, I am persuaded, would never have been said, had these particles been understood: for it proceeds from nothing but the difficulty of giving any rule or direction concerning their use: and that difficulty arises from a mistaken supposition that they are not “by themselves, the names of any ideas,” and in that case indeed I do not see how any rational rules concerning their use could possibly be given. But I flatter myself that henceforward, the true force and nature of these words being clearly understood, the proper use of them will be so evident that any rule concerning their use will be totally unnecessary: as it would be thought absurd to inform any one that when he means to direct an addition, he should not use a word which directs to take away.

I am induced to mention this in this place, from the very improper manner in which LEST (more than any other conjunction) is often used by our best authors: those who are most conversant with the learned languages being most likely to make the mistake.—“You make use of such indirect and crooked arts as these to blast my reputation, and to possess men’s minds with disaffection to my person; LEST peradventure, they might with some indifference hear reason from me.”—Chillingworth’s Preface to the Author of Charity maintained, &c.

Here LEST is well used,—“ You make use of these arts : ”—Why ? The reason follows,—Lereb that, i. e. Hoc dimisso,—“ men might hear reason from me.”—Therefore,—you use these arts.

Instances of the improper use of LEST may be found in almost every author that ever wrote in our language ; because none of them have been aware of the true meaning of the word ; and have been misled by supposing it to be perfectly correspondent to some conjunctions in other languages, which it is not.

Thus Ascham, in his Scholemaster, says,—“ If a yong jentleman will venture himselfe into the companie of ruffians, it is over great a jeopardie, LEST their facions, maners, thoughts, taulke, and deedes will verie sone be over like.”

Any tolerable judge of English will immediately perceive something awkward and improper in this sentence ; though he cannot tell why. Yet the reason will be very plain to him, when he knows the meaning of these unmeaning particles (as they have been called) : for he will then see at once that LEST has no business in the sentence ; there being nothing dimisso, in consequence of which something else would follow ; and that, if he would employ LEST, the sentence must be arranged otherwise :

As,—“ Let not a young gentleman venture, &c. LEST his manners, thoughts,” &c.

SINCE.

SINCE is a very corrupt abbreviation ; confounding together different words and different combinations of words : and is therefore in modern English improperly made (like BUT) to serve purposes which no one word in any other language can answer ; because the same accidental corruptions, arising from similarity of sound, have not happened in the correspondent words of any other language.

Where we now employ SINCE, was formerly (according to its respective signification) used,

Sometimes,

1. Seoððan, Sioððan, Seððan, Siððan, Siððen, Sithen, Sithence, Sithens, Sithnes, Sithns :

Sometimes,

2. Sýne, Sine, Sene, Sen, Syn, Sin :

Sometimes,

3. Seand, Seeing, Seeing-that, Seeing-as, Sens, Sense, Sence :

Sometimes,

4. Siððe, Sið, Sithe, Sith, Seen-that, Seen-as, Sens, Sense, Sence.

Accordingly SINCE, in modern English, is used four ways. Two, as a preposition, connecting (or rather affecting) words : and Two, as a conjunction, affecting sentences.

When used as a preposition, it has always the signification either of the past participle Seen joined to thence, (that is, seen and thence forward;)—Or else it has the signification of the past participle Seen only.

When used as a conjunction, it has sometimes the signification of the present participle Seeing or Seeing-that; and sometimes the signification of the past participle Seen or Seen-that.

As a preposition,

1. SINCE (for Siððan, Sithence, or Seen and thence forward); as,

"Such a system of government as the present, has not been ventured on by any king SINCE the expulsion of James the Second."

2. SINCE (for Syne, Scene, or Seen); as,

"Did George the Third reign before or SINCE that example?"

As a conjunction;

3. SINCE (for Seand, Seeing, Seeing-as, or Seeing-that); as,

"If I should labour for any other satisfaction but that of my own mind, it would be an effect of phrenzy in me, not of hope; SINCE it is not truth, but opinion, that can travel the world without a passport."

4. SINCE (for Siððe, Sith, Seen-as, or Seen-that); as,

"SINCE death in the end takes from all, whatsoever fortune or force takes from any one; it were a foolish madness in the shipwreck of worldly things, where all sinks but the sorrow, to save that."

Junius says,—SINCE that time, Exinde. Contractum est ex Angl. Sith thence, q. d. sero post: ut Sith illud originem traxerit ex illo SEIÐN, Sero; quod habet Arg. Cod."

Skinner says,—"SINCE, a Teut. Sint, Belg. Sind, Post, postea, postquam. Doct. Th. H. putat deflexum a nostro Sithence. Non absurdum etiam esset declinare a Lat. Exhinc, E et H abjectis, et X facilima mutatione in S transeunte." Again he says,—"SITH ab A.-S. Siððan, Syððan. Belg. Seyd, Sint, Post, post illa, postea."

After the explanation I have given, I suppose it unnecessary to point out the particular errors of the above derivations.

Sithence and Si'h, though now obsolete, continued in good use down even to the time of the Stuarts.

Hooker in his writings uses Sithence, Sith, Seeing, and Since. The two former he always properly distinguishes; using Sithence for the true import of the Anglo-Saxon Siððan, and Sith for the true import of the Anglo-Saxon Siððe. Which is the more extraordinary, because authors of the first credit had very long before Hooker's time, confounded them together; and thereby led the way for the present indiscriminate and corrupt use of SINCE in all the four cases mentioned.

Seeing Hooker uses sometimes, perhaps, (for it will admit a doubt) improperly. And Since, (according to the corrupt custom which has now universally prevailed in the language,) he uses indifferently either for Sithence, Seen, Seeing, or Sith.

THAT.

There is something so very singular in the use of this Conjunction, as it is called, that one should think it would alone, if attended to, have been sufficient to lead the Grammarians to a knowledge of most of the other conjunctions, as well as of itself.—The use I mean is, that the conjunction THAT generally makes a part of, and keeps company with most of the other conjunctions.—If that, An that, Unless that, Though that, But that, Without that, Lest that, Since that, Save that, Except that, &c. is the construction of most of the sentences where any of those conjunctions are used.

Is it not an obvious question then, to ask, why this conjunction alone should be so peculiarly distinguished from all the rest of the same family? And why this alone should be able to connect itself with, and indeed be usually necessary to almost all the others? So necessary, that even when it is compounded with another conjunction, and drawn into it so as to become one word, (as it is with sith and since,) we are still forced to employ again this necessary index, in order to precede and so point out the sentence which is to be affected by the other conjunction?

Be, in the Anglo-Saxon, meaning THAT, it will easily be perceived that sith (which is no other than the Anglo-Saxon riððe) includes That. But when SINCE is (as I here consider it) a corruption for seeing-as and seen-as, I may be asked; how does it then include THAT?—In short, what is AS? For we can gather no more from the etymologists concerning it, than that it is derived either from ως or from ALS:¹ but still this explains nothing: for what ως is, or ALS, remains likewise a secret.

The truth is, that AS is also an Article; and (however and whenever used in English) means the same as It, or That, or Which. In the German, where it still evidently retains its original signification and use, (as So also does) it is written Es.

It does not come from Als; any more than Though, and Be-it, and If (or Gif), &c., come from Although, and Albeit, and Algif, &c.—For Als, in our old English, is a contraction of Al and Es or As: and this Al (which in comparisons used to be very properly employed before the first es or as, but was not employed before the second) we now, in modern English, suppress. As we have also done in numberless other instances, where All, though not improper, is not necessary. Thus,

¹ Junius says,—“as, ut, sicut, Græcis est ως.” Skinner, whom S. Johnson follows, says—“as a Teut. Als, sicut, eliso, scil. propter euphoniā, intermedio L.”

"She glides away under the foamy seas,
As swift as darts or feather'd arrows fly."

That is,

"She glides away (with) THAT swiftness, (with) WHICH feather'd arrows fly."
When in old English it is written,

"She ———
Glides away under the fomy seas,
Als swift as ganze or fedderit arrow fleis ;"

Then it means,

"With ALL THAT swiftness, with WHICH, &c."

And now I hope I may for this time take my leave of Etymology ; for which I confess myself to be but very slenderly qualified. Nor should I have even sought for those derivations which I have given, if reflection had not first directed me where to seek, and convinced me that I was sure easily to find them. Nor, having found them in one language only, should I have relied on that particular instance alone on which to build a general conclusion of the proof in fact. But I am confirmed in my opinion by having found the same method of explanation successful in many other languages ; and as I have before said, I know, a priori, that it must be so in all languages.

After what I have said, you will see plainly why so many of the conjunctions may be used almost indifferently (or with a very little turn of expression) for each other. And without my entering into the particular minutiae in the use of each, you will easily account for the slight differences in the turn of expression, arising from different customary abbreviations of construction.

I will only give you one instance, and leave it with you for your entertainment : from which you will draw a variety of arguments and conclusions.

"And soft he sighed, LEST men might him hear.
And soft he sighed, ELSE men might him hear.
UNLESS he sighed soft, men might him hear.
BUT that he sighed soft, men might him hear.
WITHOUT he sighed soft, men might him hear.
SAVE that he sighed soft, men might him hear.
EXCEPT he sighed soft, men might him hear.
OUT-CERT he sighed soft, men might him hear.
OUT-TAKE he sighed soft, men might him hear.
IF that he sigh'd not soft, men might him hear.
AND as he sigh'd not soft, men might him hear.
SET that he sigh'd not soft, men might him hear."

According to this account which I have given of the Conjunctions, (and which may also be given of the Prepositions,) Lord Monboddo will appear extremely unfortunate in the particular care he has taken (part 2. book i. c. 15.) to make an exception from the general rule he lays down (of the Verb's being the parent word of the whole language), and to caution the candid reader from imputing to him an opinion that the Conjunctions were intended by him to be included in his rule ; or had any connexion whatever with Verbs.

“ This so copious derivation from the Verb in Greek, naturally leads one (says he) to suspect that it is the Parent word of the whole language : and indeed I believe that to be the fact. For I do not know that it can be certainly shewn that there is any word that is undoubtedly a Primitive, which is not a Verb ; I mean a verb in the stricter sense and common acceptation of the word.—By this the candid reader will not understand that I mean to say that prepositions, conjunctions, and such like words, which are rather the pegs and nails that fasten the several parts of the language together, than the language itself, are derived from Verbs, or are derivatives of any kind.”

Indeed, in my opinion, he is not less unfortunate in his Rule than in his Exception. They are both equally unfounded : and yet as well founded as almost every other position which he has laid down in his two first volumes. The whole of which is perfectly worthy of that profound politician and philosopher, who (vol. i. p. 243.) esteems that to be the most perfect form, and, as he calls it, “ the last stage of civil society,” where Government leaves nothing to the free-will of individuals, but interferes with the domestic, private lives of the citizens, and the education of their children ! Such would in truth be the last stage of civil society, in the sense of the lady in the comedy, whose lover having offered—“ to give her the last proof of love, and marry her ;”—she aptly replied—“ the last indeed : for there's an end of loving.”

But what shall we say to the bitter irony with which Mr. Harris treats the moderns in the concluding note to his doctrine of Conjunctions ? Where he says,—“ It is somewhat surprising that the politest and most elegant of the Attic writers, and Plato above all the rest, should have their works filled with particles of all kinds, and with conjunctions in particular : while in the modern polite works, as well of ourselves as of our neighbours, scarce such a word as a particle or conjunction is to be found. Is it that where there is connection in the meaning, there must be words had to connect ; but that where the connection is little or none, such connectives are of little use ? That houses of cards, without cement, may well answer their end, but not those houses where one would chuse to dwell ? Is this the cause ? Or have we attained an elegance to the antients unknown ?

‘ Venimus ad summam Fortunæ,’” &c.

I say, that a little more reflection and a great deal less reading, a little more attention to common sense¹ and less blind prejudice for his Greek commentators, would have made him a much better grammarian, if not perhaps a philosopher.—What a strange language is this to come from a man, who at the same time supposes these particles and conjunctions to be words without meaning ! It should seem by this insolent pleasantry that Mr. Harris reckons it the perfection of composition and discourse to use a great many words without meaning ! If so, perhaps Slender's language would meet with this learned gentleman's approbation :—

“I keep but three men and a boy yet till my mother be dead ; But what though yet I live a poor gentleman born.”

Now here is cement enough in proportion to the building. It is plain however that Shakespeare (a much better philosopher, by the bye, than most of those who have written philosophical treatises) was of a very different opinion in this matter from Mr. Harris. He thought the best way to make his zany talk unconnectedly and nonsensically, was to give him a quantity of these beautiful words without meaning, which are such favourites with Mr. Harris.

I shall be told, that this may be raillery perhaps, but that it is neither reasoning nor authority : that this instance does not affect Mr. Harris : for that all cement is no more fit to make a firm building than no cement at all : that Slender's discourse might have been made equally as unconnected without any particles, as with so many together : and that it is the proper mixture of particles and other words which Mr. Harris would recommend ; and that he only censures the moderns for being too sparing of particles.—To which I answer, that reasoning disdains to be employed about such affected airs of superiority and pretended elegance. But he shall have authority, if he pleases, his favourite authority ; an antient, a Greek, and one too writing professedly on Plato's opinions, and in defence of Plato ; and which, if Mr. Harris had not forgotten, I am persuaded he would not have contradicted. He says,—“Il n'y a ny beste, ny instrument, ny armeure, ny autre chose quelle qu'elle soit au monde, qui par ablation ou privation d'une siene propre partie, soit plus belle, plus active, ne plus douce que paravant elle n'estoit, là où l'oraison bien souvent, en estans les Conjonctions toutes ostées, a une force et efficace plus affectueuse, plus active, et plus emouvante. C'est pourquoy ceulx qui escrivent des figures de rétorique louent et prisent grandement celle qu'ils appellent déliée : là où ceulx

¹ The author would by no means be thought to allude to the common sense of Doctors Oswald, Reid, and Beattie ; which appears to him to be sheer nonsense.

cy qui sont trop religieux et qui s'assubjettissent trop aux règles de la grammaire, sans oser oster une seule conjonction de la commune façon de parler, en sont à bon droit blasmez et repris, comme faisans un stile énervé, sans aucune pointe d'affection, et qui lasse et donne peine à ouir."¹

And I hope this authority (for I will offer no argument to a writer of his cast) will satisfy the—"true taste and judgement in writing" of Lord Monboddo; who with equal affectation and vanity has followed Mr. Harris in this particular; and who, though incapable of writing a sentence of common English, really imagines that there is something captivating in his stile, and has gratefully informed us to whose assistance we owe the obligation.

If these two gentlemen, whom I have last mentioned, should be capable of receiving any mortification from the censure of one who professes himself an admirer of the—"vulgar and unlearned" Mr. Locke, I will give them the consolation of acknowledging that a real grammarian and philosopher, J. C. Scaliger, has even exceeded them in this mistake concerning the Particles: for he not only maintains the same doctrine which they have adopted; but even attempts to give reasons a priori, why it is and must be so.

If the generous and grateful (not candid) reader should think that I have treated them with too much asperity, to him I owe some justification. Let him recollect, then, the manner in which these gentlemen and the *Common Sense Doctors*² have treated the 'vulgar, unlearned, and atheistical' Mr. Locke (for such are the imputations they cast upon that benefactor to his country); and let him condemn me, if he can.

And thus, Sir, have I finished what I at first proposed; namely, to prove that in the information against Lawley there was not the smallest literal omission. In the elucidation of this I have been compelled to enter into a minute disquisition of some mistaken words, which ignorance would otherwise have employed in order to render a very plain position ridiculous. I shall not however expect to escape ridicule; for so very disgusting is this kind of inquiry to the generality, that I have often thought it was for mankind a lucky mistake (for it was a mistake) which Mr. Locke made when he called his book, an Essay on Human Understanding. For some part of the inestimable benefit of that book has, merely on account of its title, reached to many thousands more than, I fear, it would have done, had he called it (what it is merely) a grammatical Essay, or a Treatise on Words or on Language. The human Mind, or the human Understanding, appears to be a grand and noble theme ; and all men, even the most insufficient, conceive That to be a proper object of their contemplation ; whilst inquiries into the nature of Language (through which alone they can obtain any knowledge beyond the beasts) are fallen into such extreme disrepute and contempt, that even those who “neither have the accent of Christian, pagan, or man,” nor can speak so many words together with as much propriety as Balaam’s Ass did, do yet imagine Words to be infinitely beneath the concern of their exalted understandings ! Let these gentlemen enjoy their laugh. I shall however be very well satisfied if I do not meet with your disapprobation : and I have endeavoured studiously to secure myself from that, by avoiding to offend you with any the smallest compliment from the beginning to the end of this letter. It is not any to declare myself, with the greatest personal affection and esteem, your most obedient and obliged humble servant,

¹ Though the sound of the Greck would be more pleasing to Mr. Harris, I quote the Bishop of Auxerre's translation; because I have not the original with me in prison. At the same time it gives me an opportunity to remind their Lordships the Bishops of our days, of the language which that virtuous Prelate held to a Sovereign of France; that, instead of being ready on all occasions to vote for blood and slavery, they may, from that example, learn a little more of their duty to their country and mankind.

² [Oswald, Reid, and Beattie. See p. 151, note.²—Ed.]

JOHN HORNE.

King’s-Bench Prison,
April 21, 1778.

INDEX.

ABAL, 675.
Abbaiare, Ital., 357.
Abbaubare, Lat. 357.
Abboyer, Fr., 357.
Abject, 325.
Ablative, 672.
Ablaze, 270.
Able, 675.
Aboard, 236, 270.
Abode, 372.
Abominable, 661.
Abominevole, Ital., 665.
Above, 247.
About, 241, xxii.
Abroad, 271.
Abstract, 322.
Abstruse, 325.
Abuse, 325.
Accent, 316.
Access, 323.
Accident, 313, 315.
Accordable, 661.
Accordevole, Ital., 665.
Accustomable, 666.
Acquest, 323.
Across, 236.
Act, 313.
Ad, Lat., 195.
Adays, 271.
Addle, 554.
Adept, 316.
Adieu, 263.
Admissible, 658.
Adown, 244, xxiv.
Adrift, 252.
Adulatory, 638.
Adult, 316.
Advent, 322.
Adventure, 679.
Adverse, 323.
Adversus, Lat., 226.
Advocate, 325.
Ælan, 623.
Affable, 658.
Affannare, Ital., 347.
Affano, Ital., 347.
Afix, 325.
Afflux, 325.
Affuera, Span., 178.
Afire, 272.

Afoot, 268.
After, 243.
Against, 231, xx.
Agast, 253.
Aggradevole, Ital., 665.
Aghast, 253.
Ago, 254.
Agon, 254.
Agone, 254.
Agrarian, 638.
Agreeable, 661.
Agrestic, 638.
Ague, 253.
Æblan, 555.
Ail, 554.
Αισθητικον, 663, 670, 675.
Αισθητον, 663, 670, 675.
A-jar, On-char, 442, 445.
Albeit, 70.
Ale, 622, 623.
Alert, 318.
Alerte, Fr., 319.
Algate, 94.
Algif, 719.
A l'herte, Fr., 319.
Alive, 272.
Allegiance, 322.
All' erta, Ital., 318.
Alles, 95.
Alley, 322.
Alliance, 322.
Ally, 322.
Alms, 639.
Aloft, 273.
Alone, 290.
Along, 231. Along of, xx.
Aloδ, 623.
Als, 148, 719.
Amabo, Lat., 629.
Amatory, 638.
Amatus, Lat., 655.
Amble, 666.
Ambulare, Lat., 666.
Amerδ, Ital., 629.
Amiable, 658.
Amicable, 661.
Amichevole, Ital. 665, 669.
Amid, 231.
Amidst, 231.
Among, 226, xx.

Amongst, 226.
Amorevole, Ital., 665.
Amorous, 638.
Amphibious, 637.
Amyable, 659.
An, 53, 70, 78, 81, et seqq.;
 690, 698.
Analytic, 672.
Anca, Ital. & Span., 571.
And, 70, 117, 714.
Anew, 273.
Angel, 313, 315.
An-honge, 228.
An if, 82.
Anights, 272.
Anima, Lat., 315.
Animus, Lat., 315.
Anniversary, 638.
Annual, 638.
Annular, 638.
Anon, 292.
Aperitive, 672.
Apologetic, 672.
Apostle, 313, 322.
Appetite, 326.
Applause, 326.
Apposite, 319.
Appulse, 322.
Apt, 316.
Aquatic, 638.
Aqueduct, 321.
Aqueous, 638.
Aquiline, 638.
Aquilon, Span., 601.
Arable, 658.
Arare, Lat., 529.
Aringa, Ital., 507.
Armée, Fr., 322.
Army, 322.
Around, 236.
Arow, 274.
Aroynt, 482.
Array, 470.
As, 147.
Aside, 236, 270.
Askant, 259.
Askew, 259.
Asleep, 274.
Aspect, 324.
Assailant, 322.

Assault, 322.
 Assent, 325.
 Asseth, 276.
 Assignee, 326.
 Assize, 325.
 Assizes, 325.
 Ast, Lat., 113.
 Astound, 260.
 Astraba, Lat., 590.
 Astral, 638.
 Astray, 258.
 Astride, 236.
 Asunder, 257.
 Aswoon, 259.
 At, Lat. 113.
 Ate, 373.
 Athree, 290.
 Athwart, 256.
 Atom, 322.
 A ounce, 288.
 Attie, attan, 291, 593.
 Attulter, Fr., 352.
 Attribute, 313.
 Atwist, 259.
 Atwo, 290.
 Audiam, Lat., 629.
 Audible, 658.
 Audibo, Lat., 629.
 Auditory, 657.
 Auditus, 655.
 Aught, 274.
 Aumduc, Fr., 639.
 Aura, Lat., 530.
 Auricular, 637.
 Auxiliary, 639.
 Avacciare, Ital., 573.
 Avaccio, Ital., 573.
 Available, 661.
 Avant, Fr., 187.
 Avanti, Ital., 187.
 Avast, 573.
 Avec, Fr., 173.
 Avenue, 322.
 Averse, 323.
 Awake, 574.
 Award, 223.
 Awhile, 274.
 Awry, 259.
 Aye, 294.

Bacan, 354.
 Bacon, 354.
 Bad, 357.
 Bait, 390.
 Ballad, 323.
 Ballast, 449.
 Ballate, Ital., 323.
 Ballet, 323.
 Ban, 357.
 Band, 389.
 Bandetto, 318.
 Bandite, 318.

Banditti, 318.
 Bane, 357.
 To Bar, 435.
 Bar, 435.
 Barbarity, 436.
 Barbarous, 436.
 Barbican, 436.
 Bargain, 435.
 Barge, 435.
 Bark, 435.
 Barken, 435.
 Barmekin, 436.
 Barn, 435.
 Baron, 436.
 Barren, 354.
 Barrier, 435.
 Barrow, 436.
 Batch, 435.
 Batful, 390.
 Bath, 619.
 Battel, 390.
 Bay, 357, 464.
 Bead, 502.
 Bearable, 667.
 Bearn, 356.
 Because, 72.
 Bed, Bebbian, 584.
 Bedstead, 240.
 Before, 220.
 Begon, 373, 374.
 Behind, 220.
 Behoveable, 666.
 Being that, 73.
 Be it, 70.
 Belike, 268.
 Belong, 234, xx.
 Below, 220.
 Be-lycan, 449.
 Beneath, 220.
 Benefit, 321.
 Benna, Lat., 463.
 Bent, 352.
 Beopgan, Byngan, 435.
 Beopp, 357.
 Bergauf, Germ., xxviii.
 Beshrew, 459.
 Beside, 220.
 Besides, 220.
 Between, 220.
 Betwixt, 220.
 Beyond, 222.
 Biasmevole, Ital., 665, 668.
 Bible, 666.
 Biblum, Lat., 666.
 Biddan, 502.
 Biennat, 638.
 Binn, 462.
 Bird, 564.
 Birth, 615.
 Bit, 394.
 Bituminous, 638.
 Bivouac, 573.

Blameable, 668.
 Blameful, 668.
 Blast, 450.
 Blaze, 450.
 Blind, Bhnnan, 334.
 Bliss, 540.
 Blith, 540.
 Block, 449.
 Blot, 447.
 Blow, 622.
 Blowth, 622.
 Blunt, 430.
 Boar, 359.
 Board, 364, 564.
 Boar, 357.
 Bobbel, Dutch, 666.
 Bod, 373, 374.
 Bold, 394.
 Bolt, 394.
 Bond, 375, 376, 389.
 Booth, 619.
 Bote, 373, 376.
 Borth, 438.
 Borhs-older, 436.
 Born, 356.
 Borough, 437.
 Borowe, 436.
 Borwe, 457.
 Bot, 70, 100.
 Bote, 373, 376.
 Bove, 247.
 Bough, 464.
 Bowdysan, 628.
 Bound, 389.
 Bow, 464.
 Bracca, Lat., 490.
 Brachium, 490.
 Brack, 489.
 Braide, 336.
 Brand, 327.
 Brand-new, 294.
 Brandy, 422.
 Brat, 565.
 Brawn, 358, 359, 364.
 Breach, 489.
 Bread, 334, 416.
 Breadth, 620.
 Break, 488.
 Breech, 488.
 Breeches, 66, 488.
 Breed, 465.
 Bren, 422.
 Brid, 564.
 Bride, 565.
 Bridegroom, 499.
 Brin, 498.
 Briser, Fr., 522.
 To Brit, 522.
 Broach, 488.
 Broad, 364, 564.
 Brodo, Ital., 619.
 Bronze, 423.
 Bronzo, Ital., 423.

Brood, 565.
 Brook, 488.
 Broth, 619.
 Brown, 422.
 Bruckner, 82, xi.
 Bruise, 522.
 Bruit, 522.
 Brunal, 638.
 Brun, Fr., 422.
 Bruno, Ital., 422.
 Brunt, 422, 423.
 Bubble, 666.
 Buildings, 394.
 Buildings, 394.
 Bundle, 390.
 Burgess, 436.
 Burgh, 436.
 Burial, 436.
 Burrow, 436.
 Busy, 532.
 But, 70, 100, 175, 705.
 Buxom, 464.
 By, 218.
 Byan, Bosh, Beah, 464.
 Bylan, 394.

Ca, Ital., 163.
 Cable, 666.
 Calaverous, 637.
 Cage, 586.
 Cage, Fr., 586.
 Caiare, Lat., 586.
 Calero, Ital., 484.
 Callidus, Lat., 484.
 Canine, 638.
 Cant, 316.
 Cantata, 316.
 Canto, 316.
 Cantus, Lat., 389.
 Capable, 661. [665.
 Capevole, Capace, Ital.,
 Capillary, 637.
 Capital, 637.
 Car, 442, 443.
 Car, Fr., 209.
 Carbo, Lat., 442, 444.
 Cardiac, 637.
 Cardinal, 442, 638.
 Cardo, Lat., 442, 444.
 Caritatevole, Ital., 665.
 Carnal, 637.
 Carnivorous, 637.
 Carpenter, 617.
 Carrus, Lat., 442.
 Cart, 443.
 Case, 315.
 Cassandra, 82, 126, xi.
 Cast, 400.
 Cathartic, 672.
 Caustic, 672.
 Celestial, 638.
 Cetaceous, 638.

Chaceable, 660.
 Chair, 442.
 Chair-man, 442.
 Chaloir, Fr., 484.
 Chance, 313, 315.
 Chanceable, 666, 669.
 Chanceful, 668.
 Changeable, 669.
 Changeful, 669.
 Chap, 451, 546.
 Chapman, 546.
 Chaps, 451.
 Char, 442, 445.
 Characteristic, 672.
 Charcoal, 442.
 Chare, 442.
 Chariot, 442.
 Charioteer, 442.
 Charitable, 661.
 Char-woman, 442.
 Chaunt, 316.
 Cheap, 546.
 Chewr, 442.
 Chez, Fr., 160, xxv.
 Chezé, Fr., 162.
 Chief, 637.
 Chier, Fr., 397.
 Chill, 554.
 Chode, 371.
 Choico, 455.
 Chop, 546.
 To Chop, 546.
 Chronical, 638.
 Church, 314.
 Churn, 357.
 Chur-worm, 449.
 Circuit, 325.
 Circumspect, 324.
 Clack, 501.
 Clause, 320.
 Cleft, 348.
 Click, 501.
 Cliff, 348.
 Clift, 348.
 Cling, 376, xxi.
 Clock, 501.
 Clomb, 371.
 Clonge, 373, 376.
 Close, 320.
 Closet, 320.
 Cloud, 447.
 Clough, 432.
 Clout, 432.
 Clouted, 433.
 Clutch, 570.
 Clutches, 570.
 Codardo, Ital., 333.
 Coercive, 672.
 Cognizable, 658.
 Cold, 552.
 Collateral, 637.
 Collect, 323.

Colorevole, Ital., 665.
 Colourable, 661, 669.
 Colpevole, Ital., 665.
 Combat, 326.
 Comfortable, 661.
 Committee, 321.
 Common Sense, 151.
 Compact, 326.
 Companionable, 666.
 Composite, 319.
 Compost, 319.
 Compromise, 321.
 Comrade, 322.
 Conceit, 325.
 Concise, 325.
 Concordable, 661.
 Concordevole, Ital., 665.
 Concourse, 325.
 Concubine, 411.
 Concubine, 411.
 Condacevole, Ital., 665.
 Conductible, 661.
 Conduct, 321.
 Conduit, 321.
 Conflict, 326.
 Confluent Words, ■■■
 Conflux, 325.
 Comfortable, Fr., 665.
 Confortevole, Ital., 665.
 Congenial, 638.
 Conjugal, 639.
 Connubial, 639.
 Conquest, 323.
 Conscript, 325.
 Consecutive, 672.
 Consent, 325.
 Conspicuous, 637.
 Constraint, 323.
 Contact, 325.
 Contemptible, 658.
 Content, 324.
 Contents, 324.
 Conterminous, 638.
 Context, 325.
 Continent, 324.
 Contract, 322.
 Contrite, 325.
 Convenable, 661.
 Convenevole, Ital., 665.
 Convent, 322.
 Couverse, 323.
 Convert, 323.
 Convict, 325.
 Cool, 552.
 Copious, 639.
 Cordial, 637.
 Corporal, 637.
 Corporeal, 637.
 Correct, 324.
 Cosmetic, 672.
 Costumevole, Ital., 665.
 Couard, Fr., 333.
 Counterfeit, 321.

Counterview, 323.
 Course, 325.
 Covenant, 323.
 Coward, 332.
 Cras, Lat., 460.
 Craven, 353.
 Credence, 326.
 Credenda, 677.
 Credible, 680.
 Credit, 326.
 Credulous, 638.
 Crescere, Lat., 539.
 Crescive, 672.
 Crew, 623.
 Crisp, 542.
 Crispere, Lat., 539.
 Critic, 672.
 Crowd, 623.
 Crucifix, 325.
 Crum, 534.
 Cramble, 666.
 Crural, 637.
 To Crush, 589.
 Cryptic, 672.
 Cubital, 637.
 Cuckold, 316.
 To Cucol, 316.
 Cud, 331.
 Culinary, 638.
 Culpable, 639, 658, 661.
 Culprit, 322.
 Curare, Lat., 539.
 Curse, 360.
 Customable, 661.
 Cutaneous, 637.
 Ljpan, 442.
 Dabehick, 542.
 Dain, 555.
 Damnare, Lat., 539.
 Dastard, 332.
 Date, 317.
 Dative, 672.
 Dawn, 356, 442.
 Day, 442.
 Deal, Delan, 494.
 Dear, 612.
 Dearth, 612.
 Debate, 326.
 Debt, 313, 317.
 Decay, 315.
 Deceit, 325.
 Deceitful, 668.
 Deceivable, 668.
 Decem, Lat., 455.
 Déchurer, Fr., 429.
 Decree, 306, 325.
 Deed, 542.
 Deep, 542.
 Default, 324.
 Defeat, 321.
 Defect, 321.

To Defile, 487, 611.
 Definita, 325.
 Degree, 325.
 Deive, 454.
 Deive, 459.
 Delectable, 661, 668.
 Delegate, 325.
 Delere, 529.
 Delightful, 668.
 Dell, 494.
 Demise, 321.
 Demur, 324.
 Demman, 556.
 Denken, Danken, Germ.,
 292, xxxi.
 Dental, 637.
 Doodand, 676, 677.
 Deposit, 319.
 Dépôt, Fr., 319.
 Depth, 620.
 To Dere, 612.
 Derelict, 324.
 Derrière, Fr., 187.
 Desert, 313, 350.
 Desiccative, 672.
 Despicable, 658.
 Despotie, 672.
 Destinée, Fr., 314.
 Destiny, 313, 314.
 Destituto, 325.
 Desultory, 639.
 Detersive, 672.
 Detinue, 324.
 Devious, 638.
 Devout, 324.
 Dew, Deapian, 416.
 Dexterous, 637.
 Dialectic, 672.
 Didactic, 672.
 Dies, Lat., 530.
 Digital, 637.
 Dike, Dicun, 535.
 Dilettevole, Ital., 665.
 Dim, 535.
 Din, 533.
 Ding Dong, 525.
 Dint, 533.
 Dip, Dippan, 246, 542.
 Direct, 324.
 Diritto, Ital., 304.
 Dirus, Lat., 530, 514.
 Discordable, 661.
 Discordevole, 665.
 Discourse, 325.
 Discreet, 325.
 Dispute, 326.
 Dissemble, 666, 696.
 Dissent, 325.
 Dissimulare, Lat., 666.
 Dissimule, 669.
 Dissymuled, 669.
 Distinct, 325.

District, 323.
 Disuse, 325.
 To Dit, Dytan, 447.
 Ditch, 535.
 Ditto, 317.
 Ditty, 318.
 Diuretic, 672.
 Diurnal, 638.
 Dive, 246, 542.
 Divers, 323.
 Diverse, 323.
 Dividend, 677.
 Do, 193.
 Docile, 658.
 Doctus, Lat., 655.
 Doie, 494.
 Dollar, 497.
 Dolorous, 638.
 Dolt, 556.
 Domestic, 636.
 Dominical, 638.
 Doom, 565.
 Dot, 447.
 Dotard, 463.
 Dotterel, 463.
 Double, 666.
 Dough, 416.
 Doughty, 624.
 Doule, 494.
 Dowle, 494.
 Down, 244, xxiv.
 Drab, 414.
 Drad, 373.
 Drain, 469.
 Draatic, 672.
 Draught, 352.
 Drift, 349.
 Dripping, 395.
 Dritto, Ital., 304.
 Droit, Fr., 304.
 Drone, 469.
 Dronk, 373, 377.
 Drop, 373, 395.
 Dross, 476.
 Droughth, 615.
 Drove, 372.
 Dudge, 558.
 Drug, 615.
 Drugs, 615.
 Drum, 450.
 Drunk, 391.
 Dry, 469.
 Duct, 321.
 Ductile, 658.
 Due, 317.
 Dull, 556.
 Dumb, 555.
 Dumbkalle, Swed., 532.
 Dun, 533.
 Dung, Dytan, 524.
 Duplex, Lat., 313.

- Duplum, Lat., 666.
 Durable, 661.
 Durevole, Ital., 665.
 During, 236.
 Dux, Lat., 312.
 Dpinan, Dwine (Dwindle), 456.
 Dyche, 535.
 Dybenian, 463.
 Dyke, 535.

 Earth, 617.
 East, 600.
 Ecart, Fr., 429.
 Ecclesiastical, 639.
 Echelon, Fr., 483.
 Ecot, Fr., 396.
 Ecume, Fr., 534.
 Edict, 306, 318.
 Effect, 321.
 Effeminate, 637.
 Egregious, 638.
 Egress, 325.
 Eke, 91.
 Eke, 70, 92, 703.
 Elastic, 672.
 Eld, 450.
 Elect, 323.
 Eleemosynary, 639.
 Eligible, 658.
 Eloquent, 637.
 Else, 70, 95, 133, 136, 704.
 Emetic, 672.
 Emot, Swed., 231.
 Emulous, 637.
 Endemial, 639.
 Energetic, 672.
 Enough, 260.
 Entendable, 661.
 Enterprize, 322.
 Entry, 322.
 Ephemeral, 638.
 Epidemical, 639.
 Epistle, 322.
 Equestrian, 638.
 Equinoctial, 638.
 Ercta, Ital., 318.
 Erd, 618.
 Erde, Germ., 618.
 Erect, 318.
 Epian, 529.
 Erta, Ital., 318.
 Eruptive, 672.
 Escaille, Fr., 477, 483.
 Eschalotte, Fr., 477, 483.
 Escheat, 315.
 Eschelle, Fr., 477, 483.
 Escot, Fr., 396.
 Escume, Fr., 534.
 Espan, Fr., 506.
 Esquisse, Fr., 396.
 Essential, 637.

 Estage, Fr., 513.
 Este, Span., 601.
 Esteem, 336.
 Estival, 638.
 Estoc, Fr., 469.
 Estreat, 322.
 Estribo, Span., 519.
 Etage, 509, 513.
 Etourdi, Fr., 440.
 Etsi, Lat., 99.
 Eughen, 359.
 Evanouir, Fr., 346.
 Event, 322.
 Exact, 326.
 Excess, 323.
 Excise, 325.
 Excusable, 660.
 Exempt, 322.
 Exit, 325.
 Expanse, 313.
 Expence, 326.
 Expert, 324.
 Expletive, 672.
 Export, 326.
 Express, 326.
 Exquisite, 323.
 Exscript, 325.
 Extent, 323.
 Extinct, 325.
 Extract, 322.

 Fable, 666.
 Fabula, Lat., 666.
 Facile, 658.
 Fact, 313, 321.
 Facturus, 680.
 Fain, 260.
 Faint, 346, 347, 431.
 Faith, 616.
 False, 313, 324.
 Fanciful Etymologies, 66.
 Faner, Fr., 346, 431.
 Fang, 567.
 Fange, Fr., 346.
 Fango, Ital., 346.
 Fantastic, 672.
 Farewell, 263.
 Farinaceous, 638.
 Fart, Fapan, 350, 351.
 Farthing, 321.
 Fastuous, 638.
 Fat, 550.
 Fate, 313, 314.
 Fatum, Lat., 314.
 Faugh, 430.
 Fault, 313, 324.
 Fauxbourg, Fr., 178.
 Favorevole, Ital., 665.
 Favourable, 661.
 Favourite, 322.
 Fea-berry, 602.
 Feasible, 658.

 Feat, 321.
 Federal, 639.
 Feint, 347.
 Feline, 638.
 Female, 637.
 Feminine, 637.
 Femoral, 637.
 Fen, 346, 431.
 Se Fener, Fr., 346, 431.
 Fenowed, 346.
 Festival, 638.
 Festive, 638.
 Fetch, 567.
 Fiducial, 638.
 Fie, 285.
 Field, 330, 331.
 Fiend, Fian, 313, 337.
 Fifth, 620.
 Figere, Lat., 529.
 To File, 487, 611.
 Filth, 611.
 Final, 638.
 Fine, 325.
 Finger, 567.
 Finite, 325.
 Finie, Finnig, 346, xxxii.
 Fire-new, 294.
 Fiscal, 639.
 Fit, 321.
 Fixob, 624.
 Flamma, 423.
 Flavus, 423.
 Flaw, 583.
 Flong, 373, 377.
 Flood, 329.
 Flout, 487.
 Flow, 373, 378.
 Fluere, Lat., 528.
 Flux, 325.
 Foam, 564.
 Foe, 430.
 Fœdus, Lat., 530.
 Foh, 430.
 Folla, Ital., 523.
 Fommelen, Dutch, 666.
 Fond, 373, 377.
 Food, 550.
 Foothot, 269.
 For, 178 et seqq., 198 et seqq., xvii.
 Forbery, 178.
 Forbode, 373 et seqq.
 Forceful, 668.
 Forcible, 661, 668.
 Ford, 433.
 For-do, 275, xvii.
 Foreseen that, 73.
 Fore, xix.
 Forfeit, 321, xvii.
 Foris, Lat., 178.
 Form, 582.
 Forma, Lat., 582.

Formidable, 636.
 Fors, Fr., 178, 275.
 Forsbourg, Fr., 178.
 Forth, 275.
 Forzevole, Ital., 665.
 Fosse, 326.
 Foul, 487.
 Foulle, Fr., 523.
 Fowl, 564.
 Frail, 658.
 Frame, 582.
 Fraternal, 637.
 Friant, Fr., 337.
 Frid-borg, Germ., 437.
 Friend, 337.
 From, 184.
 Frost, 450.
 Fruit, 324.
 Full, 523.
 Fumble, 666.
 Fuori, Ital., 178.
 Furtive, 639.
 Fuscus, Lat., 423.
 Fusible, 658.
 Future, 679.
 Futurus, Lat., 680.
 Fyngean, 346.

Gabbia, Ital., 586.
 Gadso, 277.
 Gag, 586.
 Gage, 586.
 Gage, Fr., 586.
 Gaggia, Ital., 586.
 Gain, 519.
 Gap, 451.
 Gape, 451.
 Garden, 508.
 Garland, 508.
 Garrulous, 637.
 Garter, 508.
 Garth, 619.
 Gaud, 502.
 Gaudium, Lat., 530.
 Gaunt, 351.
 General, 638.
 Generic, 638.
 Genitive, 672.
 Genitive absolute, 265.
 Geogub, 624.
 Gestern, Germ., 522.
 Get, 521.
 Gewe, 79.
 Gewgaw, 502.
 Ghirlanda, Ital., 509.
 Giallo, Ital., 423.
 Gialne, Fr., 423.
 Giardino, Ital., 509.
 Gie, 81.
 Gien, 81.
 Gif, Gyan, 52, 78.
 Gifta, 79.

Gift, 347.
 Gin, 81.
 Giogo, Ital., 450.
 Girdle, 508.
 Girdlestead, 240.
 Girth, 508, 611.
 Gisteren, Dutch, 522.
 Glacial, 638.
 Glade, 447.
 Glasen, 358.
 Gleam, 583.
 Glode, 373, 179.
 Gloom, 583.
 Go, 254, 255.
 Gon, 254.
 Gone, 254.
 Gonna, Ital., 544.
 Good, 357.
 Gooseberry, 602, 603.
 Gorse, 602.
 Gove, 373, 378.
 Gown, 563.
 Gradual, 639.
 Graduate, 325.
 Graff, 586.
 Graft, 586.
 Grapple, 539.
 Grass, 360, 585.
 Gratuitous, 639.
 Grave, 586.
 Green, 423.
 Gregarious, 638.
 Gremial, 637.
 Grey, 423.
 Grim, 534.
 Grimgribber, 38, vi.
 Grip, Grippen, 539.
 Grist, 582.
 Grommelen, Dutch, 666.
 Groom, 499.
 Groove, 586.
 Grossebeers, Germ., 603.
 Grot, 586.
 Grotta, Ital., 587.
 Grotto, 586.
 Grove, 586.
 Growth, 615.
 Grub, 558.
 Grudge, 558.
 Grum, 534.
 Grumble, 666.
 Grunnire, Lat., 529.
 Gryth, 624.
 Guarantee, 436.
 Guaranty, 436.
 Guard, 436.
 Gude, 357.
 Guile, 548.
 Guille, Fr., 548.
 Guilt, 548.
 Guirlande, Fr., 509.
 Gull, 548.

Gun, 534.
 Guttural, 637.
 Gymnastic, 672.
 Habere, Lat., 528.
 Habilis, Lat., 675.
 Habnah, 267.
 Hafe, 417.
 Hæpneð, Hæpneðe 624.
 Hagen, 353, 417.
 Haft, 349.
 Hale, 587.
 Hall, 587.
 Les Halles, Fr., 530.
 Halt, 263.
 Hanche, Fr., 571.
 Hand, 566.
 Handle, 566.
 Handsel, 507.
 Hangan, 571.
 Hank, 570.
 Harangue, 507.
 Hard, 373.
 Harlot, 410.
 Harm, 622, 626.
 Hat, 367.
 Hauberg, Fr., 436.
 Hauberk, 436.
 Haven, 367.
 Haughty, 638.
 Haunch, 570.
 Head, 323, 367.
 To Heal, 589.
 Health, 612.
 Hears, 548.
 Heat, 551.
 Heaven, 313, 353, 367.
 Hebdomadal, 638.
 Heel, 587.
 Heft, 349, 367.
 Height, 620.
 Hell, 313, 587.
 Help, 543.
 Hendere, Lat., 523.
 Herd, 476.
 Heritable, 658.
 Hæpneð, 624. [530.
 Hesternus, Lat., 519, 522,
 Het, 340.
 To He, 628.
 Hight, 342.
 Hidden, 541.
 Hilding, 541.
 Hil, 587.
 Hilt, 350.
 Him list, Him ought, xxxi.
 Hinge, 570.
 Hint, 566.
 Hit, 339 et seqq.
HALKS, Hlaf, Hlaropb, Hlafrog, 417, 418.

- Diertan, 449.
 Diban, 447.
 Hoar, 554.
 Hoard, 476.
 Hodiernal, 638.
 Hold, 587.
 Hole, 587.
 Holt, 587.
 Home, 563.
 Homestead, 239.
 Hone, 563.
 Honorevole, Ital., 665.
 Honourable, 661.
 Hood, 367.
 Hoof, 367.
 Hore, 409.
 Hormis, Fr., 179.
 Hors, Fr., 178.
 Horsley, 215.
 Horse, 514.
 Hostile, 637.
 Hot, 551.
 Hovel, 367.
 Howl, 497.
 Hove, Howve, 367.
 Hügel, Germ., 587.
 Huñ, 367.
 Hail, 587.
 Human, 637.
 Humble, 638, 666.
 Humeral, 637.
 Humile, Lat., 666.
 Hunger, 533.
 Huncaſ, Hunnoſe, 624.
 Hurdle, 476.
 Hurst, 548.
 Hurt, 533.
 Husband, 389.
 Huſe, 624.
 Hynſ, 624.
 Hypothetic, 672.
 Ibland, Swed., 229.
 Iblandt, Dan., 229.
 Ibo, Lat., 628.
 Idle, 554.
 Iesus, 628.
 If, 52, 70, 78, 688, x.
 If case, 74.
 Iggaſ, 624.
 Igneous, 658.
 Ignominious, 639.
 Ignorabilis, Lat., 662.
 Ill, 554.
 Illicit, 325.
 Imaginative, 673.
 Imellem, Dan., 229.
 Immense, 326.
 Immiscible, 658.
 Immutable, 658.
 Imod, Dan., 231.
 Imp, 536.
 Imperative, 672.
 Imperceptible, 658.
 Impersonal verbs, 292, 559, xxx.
 Impervious, 638.
 Implacable, 658.
 Import, 326.
 Impossible, 660.
 Impost, 319.
 Impracticable, 658.
 Impregnable, 658.
 Impress, 326.
 Improve, 86.
 Impulse, 322.
 In, 250.
 Ing, 651, Add. Notes.
 Inaccessible, 658.
 Inadmissible, 658.
 In case, 72, 79.
 Incense, 313.
 Incentive, 673.
 Inceptive, 672.
 Inchinevole, Ital., 665.
 Inchoative, 672.
 Incident, 315.
 Inclinal, 661.
 Incognito, 322.
 Incombustible, 658.
 Incommensurable, 658.
 Incompatible, 658.
 Incurable, 660.
 Indefatigable, 658.
 Indefeisible, 658.
 Indelible, 658.
 Index, 312.
 Indigent, 639.
 Indivisible, 658.
 Indubitable, 658.
 Ineffable, 658.
 Inevitable, 658.
 Inexorable, 658.
 Inexplicable, 658.
 Inexpugnable, 658.
 Infalible, 658.
 Infandum, Lat., 678.
 Infant, 637.
 Infantine, 637.
 Infinite, 325, 638.
 Instinctive future, 192, 266, 678, 680, xxix.
 Inflexible, 658.
 Influx, 325.
 Inforth, 276.
 Ingress, 325.
 Inguinal, 637.
 Inhabit, 338, 339.
 Inimical, 637.
 Inimitable, 658.
 Initial, 638.
 Innocence, 313, 315.
 Inquest, 323.
 Insane, 638.
 Insatiable, 658.
 Inscrutable, 658.
 Insect, 322.
 Insensible, 663.
 Insidious, 638.
 Insipid, 637.
 Insoluble, 659.
 Instead, 239.
 Instinct, 325.
 Institute, 306, 325.
 Insular, 638.
 Insult, 322.
 Insurgent, 324.
 Intellect, 323.
 Intellectual, 672.
 Intelligible, 658.
 Intendevoile, Ital., 665.
 Intense, 323.
 Intent, 323.
 Interconſe, 325.
 Interdict, 318.
 Intermunable, 658.
 Interview, 323.
 Intolerable, Lat., 679.
 Intolerable, 658.
 Intolerandum, Lat., 679.
 Intoleratum, Lat., 679.
 Intricate, 325.
 Intrigue, 325.
 Invective, 673.
 Inverse, 323.
 Investigable, 658.
 Invincible, 658.
 Invinible, 660.
 To lawheel, 546.
 Irasci, Lat., 529.
 Irascible, 658.
 Ire, Lat., 528, 628.
 Irrefragable, 658.
 Irremissible, 658.
 Isocorica, 637.
 Issue, 325.
 Is to, 678.
 Is to be, 678, 680.
 It, 339, 342, 343, 345.
 To Jar, 442.
 Jardin, Fr., 509.
 Janne, Fr., 423.
 Jef, xi.
 Jegens, Dutch, 231.
 Join, 172, 180.
 Joint, 347.
 Jubilee, 326.
 Judex, Lat., 312.
 Judicature, 679.
 Jugular, 637.
 Jugum, Lat., 450, 530.
 Junto, 322.
 Jurat, 322.

Jury, 322.
Jus, Lat., 303, 304.
Just, 303, 314.

Kabel, Dutch, 666.
Keele, 552.
Keg, 586.
Kerse, not worth a, 360.
Key, 586.
Knave, 622, 623.
To Knead, 542.
Knee, 492.
Kneil, 455.
Knight, 407.
Knoll, 455.
Knot, 407.
Knowable, 667.
Knuckle, 492.
Kruimelen, Dutch, 666.

Labial, 637.
Laccio, Ital., 570.
Lace, 567.
Lachrymal, 637.
Lacteal, 638.
Lady, 418, 421.
Lapse, 325.
Laqueus, Lat., 569.
Lascher, Fr., 324.
Lasciare, Ital., 324.
Lash, 323.
Last, 449.
Latch, 567.
Latchet, 567.
Lateral, 637.
Latter math, 619.
Laudable, 658, 669.
Laudevole, Ital., 668, x.
Laugh, 503.
Laus, Lat., 530.
Law, 306, 310.
Lawsuit, 323.
Laxative, 672.
Lay, 592.
Least, 141, et seqq.
Leaven, 353.
Lectus, Lat., 655.
Left, 307.
Legacy, 325.
Legal, 639.
Legate, 325.
Legend, 676, 677.
Legible, 658.
Legislature, 679.
Lembos, Lat., 636.
Length, 620.
Lentive, 672.
Leopine, 638.
Ler, 89, 90, 120.
Less, 90, 91, 141, 142.
Lest, 70, 119, 141, et seqq.

Lester, Fr., 449.
Levante, Span., 601.
Levee, 322.
Levy, 322.
Lewd, 592.
Lew-warm, 551.
Lex, Lat., 306, 307.
Liable, 658.
Libidinous, 638.
Licet, Lat., 100.
Lid, 447.
Lief, 261.
Liege, 322.
Liever, 261.
Lievest, 261.
Lift, 419, 420.
Light, 620.
Like, 31.
Limb, 535.
Limbo, 535.
Limbus, Lat., 536.
Lin, 334.
Ling, xxi.
Littoral, 638.
Lo, 264.
Load, 423.
Loaf, 416, 417.
Loan, 564.
Local, 638.
Lock, 449.
Loft, 419.
Lofty, 419.
Log, 423.
Long, 291, 427, 584, ix.
To Long, 235.
Longus, Lat., 530, 584.
Loos, Laus, 530, 531.
Loose, 492.
Loquacious, 637.
Lord, 415.
Lore, 563.
Los, Fr., 531.
Lose, 492.
Loss, 492.
Lot, 313, 447.
Lot-tellers, 540.
Loud, 329.
Low, 561.
Lown, 561.
Lowl, 561.
Loyal, 639.
Lucid, 638.
Luck, 313, 567.
Luerative, 639, 672.
Luke-warm, 551.
Lumen, Lat., 583.
Luminous, 638.
Lunar, 638.
Lust, 524.
Ly, 252.

Ma, Ital., 110, 111, 113.

Maar, Dutch, 113.
Mad, 559.
Magnanimous, 637.
Mainprize, 322.
Maia, Fr., 110, 113.
Male, 637.
Malleable, 658.
Malt, 352, 353.
Mandate, 306.
Manifesto, 322.
Manual, 637.
Manns, Lat., 304.
Manuscript, 325.
Many, 592, et seqq.
Marine, 638.
Marital, 637.
Maritime, 638.
Martial, 639.
Mas, Span., 110, 113.
Masculine, 637.
Maternal, 637.
Math, 618.
Matto, Ital., 559.
Maybe, 267.
Mayhap, 267.
Mead, 583.
Meat, 550.
Meath, 620.
Medio dia, Span., 601.
Mediciable, 668.
Medicinal, 668.
Meilley, 229.
Medullary, 637.
Meiere, Lat., 528.
Melleu, Dan., 229.
Memorable, Fr., 665.
Memorandum, 677.
Memorevole, Ital., 665.
Mental, 637.
Mentecatto, Ital., 533.
Mercenary, 639.
Merciable, 666.
Moretricious, 637.
Meretrix, Lat., 409.
Meridian, 638.
Merit, 313, 324.
Me seemeth, xxxi.
Mesa, 550.
Messo, Ital., 550.
Mete, 559.
Methinks, 292, 609, xxx.
Meta, Fr., 550.
Mourte, Fr., 614.
Mezzotinto, Ital., 322.
Might, 620.
Milch, 550.
Military, 639.
Milk, 550.
Minatory, 639.
Mingera, Lat., 527.
Mint, 456.
Minute, 321.

Minute, 321.
 Mirth, 614.
 Miscellaneous, 638.
 Miscere, Lat., 528.
 Miscreant, 326.
 Miserable, 661.
 Miscrevole, Ital., 665.
 Missibile, 673.
 Missile, 658, 673.
 Missive, 673.
 Mist, 539.
 Misuse, 325.
 To Mix, 527, 528.
 Mixen, 527.
 Mod, Dan., 231.
 Moiening, 160, 236.
 Molere, 529.
 Mompelen, Dutch, 666.
 Moneta, Lat., 456.
 Money, 456.
 Monitory, 639.
 Monster, 322.
 Month, 617.
 Morbid, 638.
 Morceau, Fr., 390.
 More, 110, 111, 277.
 Morn, 459.
 Morning, 459.
 Morrow, 459.
 Mors, Lat., 530, 614.
 Morsel, 322, 390.
 Mortal, 637.
 Mortgagee, 326.
 Мортъ, Мортѣ, 614.
 Most, 277.
 Mostra, Ital., 322.
 Moth, 616.
 Motive, 673.
 Mott, 373.
 Moucher, Fr., 395, 560.
 Mould, 352, 353.
 Mouth, 616.
 Mow, 279.
 Moyennant, Fr., 160, 236.
 Much, 277.
 Muck, 527.
 Mulcere, Lat., 528.
 Mulgere, Lat., 529.
 Multiplicand, 677.
 Mumble, 666.
 Mundane, 638.
 Mural, 638.
 Murther, 614.
 Muster, 322.

 Narcotic, 672.
 Narrow, 506.
 Nasal, 637.
 Natal, 637.
 Native, 637.
 Naval, 638.
 Nautical, 638.

Nay, 294, 674.
 Near, 239, 506.
 Neath, 220, 221.
 Necare, Lat., 528.
 Neck, 492.
 Nectere, Lat., 529.
 Need, 542.
 Needs, 265.
 Needle, 542.
 Negative, 672.
 Neglect, 323.
 Nemže, 89.
 Nemut, Lat., 89.
 Nequam, Lat., 623.
 Nesh, 554.
 Nest, 585.
 Net, 407.
 Nether, 220, 221.
 Nethermost, 220.
 Nevertheless, 71, 280.
 Next, 239.
 Nicchia, Ital., 493.
 Nicchio, Ital., 493.
 Nice, 554.
 Niche, Fr., 493.
 Niche, 493.
 Nick, 493.
 Nigh, 239.
 Night-rail, 475.
 Ninth, 620.
 Nisi, Lat., 91, 99, 115, 134.
 No, 295, 674.
 Noble, 658, 660.
 Nock, 493.
 Nocturnal, 638.
 Nod, 450, 492.
 Nodus, Lat., 530.
 Non cale, Ital., 484.
 Nonchalance, Fr., 484.
 Nondescript, 325.
 Nonsense, 325.
 Nook, 493.
 Noonsted, 240.
 Noord, Dutch, 600.
 Nord, Fr., 600.
 Nord, Germ., 600.
 Nord, Dan., 600.
 Nord, Span., 601.
 Norr, Swed., 601.
 North, 600.
 Not, 295.
 Notch, 493.
 Notwithstanding, 71.
 Noxious, 639.
 Nubes, Lat., 449.
 Nugatory, 639.
 Numb, 532.
 Numscull, 532, 533.
 Nuncupative, 672.
 Nupta, Lat., 449.
 Nuptial, 639.
 Nýmže, 89.

Oak, Ican, 450.
 Object, 325.
 Obstreperous, 639.
 Obvious, 638.
 Occident, Fr., 600.
 Occidental, 639.
 Occidente, Span., 601.
 Ocular, 637.
 Oculus, Lat., 530.
 Odd, 328.
 Odds and Ends, 328.
 Ode, 389.
 Odious, 638.
 Oeste, Span., 601.
 Of, 198.
 Of dune, 347, xxiv.
 Offal, 550.
 Old, 450, 451.
 Olfactory, 637.
 Once, 288, 289.
 Onerous, 639.
 Only, 290, 291.
 Onorevole, Ital., 665.
 Oost, Dutch, 600.
 Ope, 451.
 Open, 451.
 Operative, 672.
 Opinionative, 673.
 Oppidan, 638.
 Opposite, 236, 319.
 Optative, 672.
 Optic, 637.
 Oral, 637.
 Orient, Fr., 600.
 Oriental, 639.
 Oriente, Span., 601.
 Orts, 550, 551.
 Ost, Germ., 600.
 Ost, Dan., 600.
 Oster, Swed., 601.
 Ouest, Fr., 600.
 Ought, 274.
 Oui, Fr., 294.
 Outcept, 237.
 Outforth, 276.
 Outtake, 237.
 Outtaken, 237.
 Oval, 638.
 Oven, 367.
 Over, 247.
 Owl, 497.
 Oyes, 295.

 Pack, 574.
 Pact, 326.
 Page, 574.
 Page, Fr., 581.
 Pageant, 574.
 Pageantry, 574.
 Paggio, Ital., 581.
 Pain, 519.
 Palliative, 673.

- Palpable, 658.
 Poultry, 319.
 Par, Fr., 180.
 Parable, 666.
 Parabola, Lat., 666.
 Paralytic, 672.
 Parochial, 639.
 Participle present, Addit. Note.
 Passive, 672.
 Pastoral, 637.
 Patch, 571.
 Patchery, 574.
 Paternal, 637.
 Path, 584.
 Pathetic, 672.
 Pause, 319.
 Peace, 326.
 Peaceable, 668.
 Peaceful, 668.
 Pease, peasen, 360.
 Peccare, Lat., 529.
 Pectoral, 637.
 Pecuniary, 638.
 Pedal, 637.
 Pending, 236.
 Penetrabile, Lat., 661.
 Penetrable, 658.
 Penn, 463.
 Pensive, 637.
 Per, Lat. and Ital., 180.
 Peradventure, 267.
 Percase, 267.
 Perchance, 267.
 Perennial, 638.
 Perfect, 321.
 Perhaps, 267.
 Perilous, 639.
 Peripatetic, 672.
 Periphrastic, 672.
 Perquisite, 323.
 Personable, 666.
 Perspicuous, 637.
 Perverse, 323.
 Peterc, Lat., 529.
 Pfinning, Germ., 346.
 Piacevole, Ital., 665.
 To Pick, 451.
 La Picote, Fr., 452.
 Picoté, Fr., 452.
 Piddle, 501.
 Pin, 462.
 Pipkin, Pippin, 67.
 Piquer, Fr., 452.
 Pish, 574.
 Pit, 452.
 Plastic, 672.
 Plausible, 658.
 Plea, 326.
 Pleasurable, 661.
 Pledge, 395.
 Pliable, 653.
 Plot, 395.
 Plough, 552.
 Ploughshare, 429.
 To Ply, 552.
 Plume, 315.
 Pock, 451.
 Point, 322.
 Poise, 324.
 Poke, 451.
 Polite, 326.
 Poltroon, 319.
 Pond, 462.
 Poniente, Span., 601.
 Pool, 501.
 Popular, 639.
 Populous, 639.
 Por, Span., 180.
 Pore, 322.
 Pore, 409.
 Portable, 658.
 Portent, 323.
 Portrait, 322.
 Pose, 72.
 Possible, 658.
 Post, 319.
 Postscript, 325.
 Pot, 452.
 Potscars, 429.
 Potshreda, 429.
 Pound, 462.
 Pox, 451.
 Praiseful, 668.
 Frasinus, Lat., 423.
 Prebend, 676, 677.
 Precedent, 323.
 Preccept, 309, 325.
 Precinct, 323.
 Precise, 325.
 Prefect, 321.
 Prefix, 325.
 Premises, 321.
 Prepositions, xix.
 Prerogative, 672.
 Presbyterian, 637.
 Prescript, 325.
 Press, 326.
 Pretext, 325.
 Price, 322.
 Primæval, 639.
 Prithce, 266.
 Private, 326.
 Privy, 326.
 Prize, 322.
 Probable, 658.
 Probare, Lat., 529.
 Process, 323.
 Produce, 321.
 Product, 321.
 Profit, 321.
 Profitable, 661.
 Profittevole, Ital., 665.
 Prognostic, 672.
 Progress, 325.
 Progressive, 672.
 Project, 325.
 Projectile, 658.
 Promiscuous, 638.
 Promise, 321.
 Prompt, 322.
 Proof, 565.
 Prophetic, 672.
 Prophylactic, 672.
 Proportionable, 661.
 Proportionevole, Ital., 665.
 Proscript, 325.
 Prospect, 324.
 Prostitute, 325, 411.
 Proud, 560.
 Providence, 313, 315.
 Proviso, 322.
 Provocative, 672.
 Prudence, 313, 315.
 Pshaw, 574.
 voye, 315.
 Public, 639.
 Puddle, 501.
 Puerile, 637.
 Pulmonary, 637.
 Pulse, 322.
 Pump, 534.
 Punctual, 639.
 Pungere, Lat., 529.
 Pumre, Lat., 529.
 Punk, 414.
 Punto, 322.
 Purgative, 672.
 Pursuit, 323.
 Purview, 323.
 Pusillanimous, 637.
 Put case, 72.
 Pynban, 463.
 Quadrant, 326.
 Quag, 585.
 Qual, 586.
 Qualis, Lat., 566.
 Quamlibet, Lat., 100.
 Quamvis, Lat., 100.
 Quantitative, 672.
 Quantumvis, Lat., 100.
 Qua re, Lat., 209.
 Quassare, Lat., 529.
 Quatere, Lat., 529.
 Quay, 586.
 Quest, 323.
 Quibble, 666.
 Quick, 540.
 Quickly, 285.
 Quid, 332.
 Quidditative, 672.
 Quiddativus, Lat., 672.
 Quidlibet, Lat., 666.
 Quilt, 351.
 Qnit, 524.

- Quite, 324.
 Quittance, 324.
 Quod, Lat., 47.
 Quoth, 593.

 Rabble, 666.
 Rabula, Lat., 666.
 Rack, 507, 546, 595.
 Racka, Dutch, 595.
 Racke, 595.
 Raddle, 493.
 Radical, 638.
 Raft, 432.
 Ragamuffin, 575.
 Ragionevole, Ital., 665.
 Raide, 475.
 Rail, 470.
 Railen, 476.
 Railing, 476.
 Rails, 470.
 Rain, 519.
 Reasonable, Fr., 665.
 Rake, 507.
 Ralla, Lat., 475.
 Rapere, Lat., 529.
 Rate, 322.
 Rath, 281.
 Rather, 281.
 Rathest, 281.
 Rational, 639.
 Ray, 470.
 Real, 637.
 Rear, 187.
 Reasonable, 661, 663.
 Receipt, 325.
 Recess, 323.
 Recluse, 320.
 Recompence, 326.
 To Recover, 590.
 Recourse, 325.
 Rectum, Lat., 304.
 Reflux, 325.
 Regal, 637.
 Regard, 22, et seqq.
 Regilla, Lat., 473.
 Rego, Lat., 305.
 Regress, 325.
 Regular, 639.
 Relapse, 323.
 Relations, 674.
 Relative, 673, 674.
 Relict, 324.
 Relique, 324.
 Remise, 381.
 Remnant, 326.
 Remorse, 322.
 Rent, 313, 352.
 Reor, Lat., 608, 609.
 Repast, 326.
 Report, 326.
 Repose, 319.
 Reprieve, 322.
 Reprise, 322.

 Reproof, 565.
 Repulse, 322.
 Repute, 326.
 Request, 323.
 Requisite, 323.
 Res, Lat., 609.
 Rescript, 325.
 Residue, 326.
 Respect, 324.
 Response, 324.
 Responsive, 672.
 Restraint, 322.
 Result, 322.
 Retail, 566.
 Retinuc, 324.
 Retreat, 322.
 Retrospect, 324.
 Revenue, 322.
 Reverend, 676, 677.
 Revereor, Lat., 608.
 Reverse, 323.
 Review, 323.
 Reward, 222, 223.
 Rex, Lat., 312.
 Rhime, 542.
 Ricco, Ital., 507.
 Rich, 507.
 Richardson, 179, 234, 587.
 Riche, 507.
 Riches, 507.
 Richesse, 507.
 Richezza, Ital., 507.
 Rick, 507.
 Riddle, 258, 493.
 Ridevole, Ital., 665.
 Riffraff, 432.
 Rift, 347.
 To Rig, 472.
 A Rig, 470, 476.
 Rigel, Rigel, 470, 476.
 Rigger, 476.
 Rigger, 470, 476.
 Right, 302, et seqq.; 314.
 Rigvie, 476.
 Rillen, 476.
 Rilling, 476.
 Rim, 497.
 Ripe, 542.
 Risible, 661.
 Ritto, Ital., 304.
 Road, 372.
 Roadstead, 240.
 Roast, 325.
 Robust, 639.
 Roche, Fr., 470.
 Rochet, 470.
 Rock, 470.
 Rocket, 470.
 Rogue, 470.
 Roky, Rooky, 599.
 Rommelen, Dutch, 666.
 Rong, 373, 379.
 Roof, 665.

 Room, 497, 498, 632.
 Roomth, 622.
 Ros, Lat., 630.
 Rosen, 358.
 Rough, 432.
 Round, 236.
 Rove, 373, 380.
 Royal, 637.
 Roynous, 432.
 Ruck, 470.
 Rug, 470.
 Rumble, 666.
 Rural, 638.
 Rustic, 638.
 Ruth, 615.

 Sacerdotal, 637.
 Safe, 560, 561.
 Sagitta, Lat., 396, 407.
 Saint, 313, 315.
 Sale, 507.
 Salival, 637.
 Salubrious, 638.
 Salutary, 638.
 Sanative, 672.
 Sanguinary, 637.
 Sanguine, 637.
 Sans, 176, et seqq.
 Sarò, Ital., 629.
 Saute, 322.
 Savage, 638.
 Save, 237.
 Saw, 566.
 Scaglia, Ital., 477, 483.
 Scala, Lat., 477, 483.
 Scald, 477, 483.
 Scale, 477, 483.
 Scales, 461.
 Scall, 482, 483.
 Scalogna, Ital., 477, 483.
 Scar, 424.
 Scarce, Scarse, 285, 286.
 Scardale, 429.
 Scates, 396.
 Sceptic, 672.
 Secarra, Ital., 429.
 Schal, Germ., 483.
 Schallau, Dutch, 484.
 Scheet, Dutch, 396, 406.
 Schelling, Dutch, 483.
 Schets, Dutch, 396, 406.
 Schiatta, Ital., 396.
 Schiera, Ital., 429.
 Schiuma, Ital., 534.
 Schizzo, Ital., 396.
 Schultens, 129.
 Sciarra, Ital., 429.
 Scilicet, Lat., 267.
 Score, 424.
 Scot, 396.
 Scotto, 396.
 Scout, 396, 404, 405.
 Scowl, 477.

Scrap, 550.
 Scribble, 666.
 Scribblare, Lat., 666.
 Script, 325.
 Scull, 477.
 Scum, 534.
 Seftan, 477.
 Second, 639.
 Secourable, Fr., 661, 665.
 Secret, 325.
 Sect, 322.
 Seldom, 396.
 Select, 323.
 Sembievole, Ital., 665.
 Semblable, 661, 665.
 Seminal, 638.
 Se non, Ital., 91.
 Sens, Fr 144.
 Sense, 325.
 Senseful, 663.
 Sensevole, Ital., 663.
 Sensible, Lat., 663.
 Sensible, 658, 663.
 Sensitive, 663, 672.
 Sensitivo, Ital., 663.
 Sensitivus, Lat., 675.
 Senza, Ital., 177.
 Sepulture, Lat., 440.
 Septentrion, Span., 601.
 Sequi, Lat., 528.
 Serpens, Lat., 533.
 Set, 71, 72.
 Set case, 72, 74.
 Shade, 591.
 Shadow, 591.
 Shaft, 137.
 Shale, 477.
 Shape, 404, 405.
 Shapeable, 666.
 Shard, 424.
 Shard-bone, 420.
 Share, 424.
 Sharebone, 429.
 Sharp, 507.
 Shaw, 591.
 Sheaf, 136, 137.
 Sheath, 615.
 Shed, 591.
 Sheen, 547.
 Sheer, 424.
 Sheers, 429.
 Sheet, 396.
 Shell, 477.
 Sherd, 330, 424.
 Shillen, 483.
 Shilling, 477, 482, 483.
 Ship, 484, 485.
 Shire, 424.
 Shirt, 424.
 Shit, 396.
 Shite, 396.
 Shitten, 396.
 Shittle, 396.

Shoal, 477.
 Shock, 564, 565.
 Shoe, Scian, 407.
 Shone, 573.
 Shoot, 396.
 Shop, 484.
 Shore, 424.
 Shorn, 424.
 Short, 424.
 Shot, 396.
 Shotten, 396.
 Shoulder, 477.
 Shout, 396.
 Shower, 424.
 Shred, 330, 424.
 Shrew, 457.
 Shrewd, 457.
 Shrift, 349.
 Shronk, 373, 380.
 Shroud, 485.
 Shrove, 372.
 Shrowds, 485.
 Shrub, 459.
 Shut, 396.
 Shuttle, 396.
 Shuttlecork, 396.
 Si, Lat., Ital., Fr., 99, 294.
 Sideral, 638.
 Sight, 620.
 Silveren, 358.
 Simplex, Lat., 312.
 Sin, Span., 178.
 Since, 70, 144, et seqq., 717.
 Sine, Lat., 99, 115, 178.
 Sinister, 637.
 Sinistrous, 637.
 Sing, Span., 91.
 Si non, Fr., 91.
 Sinnons, 637.
 Sip, 407.
 Sith, 144, et seqq.
 Sithence, 145, 146.
 Sixth, 620.
 Sizeable, 666.
SKAAGR, 484.
 Skellyis, Scot., 484.
 Sketch, 396.
 Skill, 477.
 Skirt, 424.
 Skit, 396, 401, 407.
 Skuttish, 396, 406.
 Skool, 482.
 Slack, 506.
 Slate, 477.
 Slect, 554.
 Sleeve, 584.
 Sleeveless, 584.
 Slip, 408.
 Slit, 408.
 Slode, 373, 381, 382.
 Slong, 373, 382.

Slop, 408.
 Slope, 408.
 Slot, 408.
 Sloth, 615.
 Slouch, 562.
 Sloven, 562.
 Slough, 562.
 Slow, 562.
 Slog, 562.
 Sluice, 320.
 Slut, 562.
 Smear, 547.
 Smith, 616, 617.
 Smoke, 459.
 Smooth, 558.
 Smag, 560.
 Smut, 533.
 Snack, 535.
 Snail, 533.
 Snake, 533.
 To Snite, 395, 560.
 Snoot, 395.
 Snout, 395.
 Snow, 491.
 Snuff, 534.
 Saug, 533.
 So, 147, 566.
 Soccorevole, Ital., 663.
 Sociable, 669.
 Social, 669.
 Soder, Swed., 601.
 Solar, 638.
 Solazzevole, Ital., 663.
 Sole, 639.
 Solitary, 639.
 Solvable, 669.
 Soluble, 658.
 Solvent, 669.
 Solutive, 672.
 Somerset, 322.
 Sonder, Germ., 178.
 Song, 373, 380, 389.
 Sonk, 373, 381.
 Sop, 407.
 Soporiferous, 639.
 Sore, 457.
 Sorrow, 457.
 Sorry, 457.
 Soup, 407.
 Sour, 457.
 South, 600.
 Span, 293, 505, 506.
 Spanna, Ital., 506.
 Spanna, Germ., 506.
 Spannum, Lat., 506.
 Speakable, 666.
 Speech, 567.
 Spernendus, Lat., 678.
 Spick, 293.
 Spirare, Lat., 315, 528.
 Spirit, 313, 315.
 Spoil, 542.
 Spolium, Lat., 530.

Spon, 373, 382.
 Spontaneous, 638.
 Spot, 395.
 Spouse, 324.
 Spout, 395.
 Sprong, 373, 382, 383.
 Sprout, 487.
 Spuere, Lat., 528.
 Spurt, 487.
 Sputare, Lat., 528.
 Stack, 509.
 Stag, 509.
 Stage, 509.
 Stairs, 509.
 Stake, 466.
 Stalk, 509.
 Stark, 286, 287.
 Start, 440.
 Statute, 306, 325.
 Stavesacre, xxii.
 Stay, 509.
 Stead, 239, 240.
 Steak, 466.
 Stealth, 617.
 Stellar, 638.
 Stench, 535.
 Stepmother, 241.
 Stern, 354, 355, 440.
 Stia, Ital., 518.
 Stick, 383, 384, 466.
 Stiff, 540.
 Stigma, 327.
 Stile, 278.
 Still, 70, 93, 703.
 Sting, 384.
 Stipendiary, 639.
 Sitr, 440.
 Stirrup, 509.
 Stitch, 466.
 Stitch-fallen, 469.
 Stoccata, Ital., 469.
 Stocco, Ital., 469.
 Stock, 373, 383, 384, 466.
 Stocken, 467.
 Stocking, 466, 467.
 Stocks, 466, 467.
 Stoke, 373, 383.
 Stonen, 358.
 Stong, 373, 384.
 Stonk, 373, 384.
 Stoppel, Dutch, 666.
 Store, 440.
 Storm, 442.
 Story, 509.
 Stour, 440.
 Straightways, xxviii.
 Strain, 519.
 Strait, 323.
 Strawberry, 258.
 Strawen, 359.
 Stray, 258.
 Street, 323.

Streights, 323.
 Strength, 615.
 Strepa, Lat., 519.
 Strict, 323.
 Stride, 519.
 Strind, 521.
 Strine, 521.
 Stroke, 373, 384, 391.
 Strong, 393.
 Strumpet, 415.
 Stubble, 666.
 Stuc, Fr., 469.
 Stucco, 466, 469.
 Stuck, 466.
 Stultus, Lat., 530.
 Stum, 524.
 Stunt, 532.
 Sturdy, 440.
 Sturt, 440.
 Sty, 509.
 Styptic, 672.
 Suadere, Lat., 529.
 Subject, 325.
 Sublunary, 638.
 Substance, 313, 315.
 Substitute, 325.
 Subtense, 323.
 Subtrahend, 677.
 Success, 323.
 Succinct, 323.
 Such, 566.
 Sud, Fr., 600.
 Sud, Germ., 600.
 Sud, Dan., 600.
 Sudorific, 639.
 Suds, 604.
 Sugere, Lat., 528.
 Suit, 323.
 Suite, 323.
 Sup, 407.
 Superb, 638.
 Supercilious, 637.
 Superfluous, 325.
 Supple, 332.
 Supplex, Lat., 312, 332.
 Suppliant, 332.
 Support, 326.
 Suppose, 97, et seqq.
 Sur, Span, 601.
 Surfeit, 321.
 Surmise, 321.
 Surprise, 322.
 Survey, 323.
 Susceptive, 672.
 Suspense, 324.
 Sute, 323.
 Swadible, 660.
 Swom, 373, 385.
 Swong, 373, 386.
 Swonk, 373, 386.
 Swoon, 501.
 Swoop, 500.

Swop, 500.
 Syllaba, Lat., 666.
 Syllaba, Fr., 666.
 Syllable, 666.
 Syllogistic, 672.
 Sylvan, 638.
 Sympathetic, 672.
 Synthetic, 672.
 Sympetran, 469.
 Table, 666.
 Tabula, Lat., 666.
 Tacit, 325.
 Tact, 325.
 Tag, 433.
 Taille, Fr., 434.
 Talley, 427.
 Taint, 325.
 Tale, 566.
 Talis, Lat., 566.
 Tall, 434.
 Tally, 324, 428.
 Tangere, Lat., 529.
 Tangible, 638.
 To Tarre, 505.
 Tart, 505.
 Tatterdemalion, 575.
 Tellus, Lat., 618, 619.
 Témoin, Fr., 160.
 Temporal, 638.
 Temporary, 638.
 Ten, 452.
 Tenable, 658.
 Tenet, 324.
 Tent, 323.
 Tenth, 620.
 Terrestrial, 638.
 Testaceous, 638.
 Text, 325.
 Thack, 567.
 That, 41, et seqq.; 70, 146, et seqq.; 343, 685, et
seqq.; 719, et seqq.
 Thatch, 567.
 Peah-hwæðe, xvi.
 The, 345.
 Theft, 349.
 Thenken, Fr. Th. xxxi.
 Thick, 540.
 Thicket, 540.
 Thigh, 540.
 Thin, 458.
 Thing, 609.
 To Think, 609, xxxii.
 This, 344.
 Pohre, puhre, xxxii.
 Thong, 456.
 Though, 70, 96, 97, 704,
 705, xv.
 Thrice, 286.
 Thrift, 349.
 To Thring, 373, 391.

Throng, 391.
 Through, 180.
 Thunken, Fr. Th. xxxii.
 Tight, 350.
 Till, 189, 197.
 Tilt, 352.
 Tilth, 612.
 Timid, 638.
 Timorous, 638.
 Tina, Lat., 454.
 To, 188, 189.
 To Tine, 452.
 Tint, 325.
 To Tire, 526.
 Toast, 325.
 Todd, 410.
 Toil, 434.
 Tollere, Lat., 529.
 Toll, 434.
 Tome, 322.
 Tool, 434.
 To Beringe, 681.
 To Bringynge forth, 681.
 To Comynge, 680.
 To Cumenne, 680.
 To Defendynge, 681.
 To Demyng, 681.
 To Doyng, 681.
 To Drinkynge, 681.
 To-geaner, 231.
 To Etyng, 681.
 To Puttyng, 681.
 To Sendynge, 681.
 To Seyng, 681.
 To Suffryng, 681.
 To Takyng, 681.
 To Tormentinge, 681.
 To-wit, 72, 73, 266.
 To-pitanne, 266.
 Toord, 525.
 Tooth, 616.
 Tort, Fr., 366.
 Torto, Ital., 366.
 Town, 452.
 Trace, 322.
 Track, 322.
 Tract, 322.
 Tractable, 658.
 Trade, 584.
 Traject, 325.
 Trait, 322.
 Transcript, 325.
 Transit, 325.
 Transitive, 672.
 Transport, 326.
 Transverse, 323.
 Traverse, 323.
 Treat, 322.
 Treaty, 322.
 Treble, 666.
 Treen, 358.
 Treenen, 358.

Tremble, 666.
 Tremulare, Ital., 666.
 Tresves, Trève, Fr., 523.
 Trew, 607.
 Tribulare, Lat., 488.
 Tribute, 313.
 Trice, 292.
 Trim, 535.
 Triplum, Lat., 666.
 Trist, 638.
 Trite, 325.
 Trivial, 638.
 Triumph, 450.
 Troad, Trode, 584.
 Trouble, 488.
 To Trow, 606.
 Truce, 523.
 True, 313, 606.
 Trull, 412.
 Trumpery, 581.
 Trump, Trumpet, 450.
 Truth, 604, et seqq., xxxvii.
 Tuimelen, Dutch, 666.
 Tumble, 666.
 Tun, 452.
 Tuneable, 666.
 Tunnel, 453.
 Turd, 525.
 Tutelar, 637.
 Tutelary, 637.
 Tutor, Lat., 223.
 Tutus, Lat., 223.
 Twentieth, 620.
 Twice, 288.
 Twist, 351.
 To Tyne, 452.

Udirò, Ital., 629.
 Umbilical, 637.
 Unanimous, 637.
 Unawares, xxviii.
 Under, 221.
 Understandable, 667.
 Unenarrable, 659.
 Universe, 323.
 Unlace, 88.
 Unless, 70, 84, et seqq.;
 700, et seqq.
 Unrespective, 672.
 Untellybil, 678, 679.
 Unter, Germ., inter, 222.
 Unwalkative, 671.
 Up, 247.
 Uphap, 267.
 Upon, 247, vii.
 Usbergo, Ital., 436.
 Use, 325.
 Ut, 688.
 Ut, Lat., 49, 50, 64.
 Uterine, 637.
 Uveous, 638.
 Uxorious, 637.

Vaccine, 638.
 Vadere, Lat., 528.
 Vadum, Lat., 433.
 Valable, Fr., 665.
 Valet, 410.
 Valevole, Ital., 665.
 Vallum, Lat., 504.
 Valuable, 669.
 Value, 317.
 Valueful, 669.
 Van, 187.
 Vanesco, Lat., 346.
 Vanus, Lat., 346.
 Varlet, 410.
 Vascular, 639.
 Vastare, Lat., 528.
 Venal, 639.
 Vendible, 658.
 Vendichevole, Ital., 665.
 Vengeable, 661, 668.
 Vengeful, 668.
 Venture, 679.
 Venturum, Lat., 680.
 Venue, 322.
 Verbal, 637.
 Verbose, 637.
 Verdict, 318.
 Vereor, Lat., 608.
 Vergeeven, Flem., xix.
 Veritable, 661.
 Veritevole, Ital., 665.
 Vermicular, 638.
 Vernal, 638.
 Vers, Fr., 226.
 Verse, 323.
 Versien, Veursien, Flem.,
 xix.
 Verso, Ital., 226.
 Versus, Lat., 226.
 Verum, Lat., 608.
 Very, 288.
 Vest, Dan., 600.
 Vestible, 666, 669.
 Vestibule, 669.
 Vestibulum, Lat., 666.
 Videlicet, Lat., 267.
 View, 323.
 Vindex, Lat., 312.
 Vindictive, 639.
 Vinewed, 346, xxxiii.
 Vinny, 346, 431, xxxiii.
 Viridis, Lat., 423.
 Virile, 637.
 Visceral, 637.
 Visible, 658.
 Visit, 325.
 Visive, 672.
 Vista, Ital., 322.
 Visual, 637.
 Vital, 637.
 Vitreous, 638.
 Vituline, 638.

Vivacious, 637.
 Vivid, 637.
 Vocative, 672.
 Volo, Lat., 628.
 Volvere, Lat., 528.
 Voluntary, 638.
 Voluptabilis, Lat., 662.
 Vomitive, 672.
 Von, Germ., 187.
 Vote, 324.
 Vow, 324.
 Vû, Fr., 145.
 Vulgar, 637.
 Vulnerable, 658.
 Vulnerary, 639.

Wages, 586.
 Wake, 571.
 Wakefield, G., 403.
 Wall, 504, 505.
 Walrus, 514.
 Wan, 433, 434.
 Wand, 433, 434.
 Wane, 433, 434.
 Want, 351.
 War, 436, 438.
 Ward, 222, 436.
 Warm, 551, 552.
 Warmth, 611.
 Warp, 504.
 Warrant, 436.
 Warranty, 436.
 Warren, 436.
 Warrior, 436.
 Watch, 571, 572.
 Wath, 619.
 Weak, 543.
 Wealth, 612.
 Pecan, 573.
 West, 349, 565.
 Weight, 621.
 Welkin, 544, 545.
 Well, 543.

Wench, 411.
 Went, 584, 585.
 West, 600.
 West, Dutch, 600.
 West, Germ., 600.
 Wester, Swed., 601.
 Wharf, 504.
 Wheel, 544.
 While, 197, 544, xxviii.
 Whilom, xxviii.
 Whinid, 338, 345, xxxiii.
 White, 423.
 Whole, 587.
 Whore, 409.
 Wicked, 540.
 Width, 620.
 Þig-ymrð, 616.
 Wild, 329.
 Wile, 548.
 To Wit, 72, 73, 266.
 Witch, 540.
 With, 172, et seqq.
 Within, 116.
 Withinforth, 276.
 Without, 70, 115, 116, 172,
 174, et seqq.; 713, 714.
 Withoutforth, 276.
 Wizen, 540.
 Woll, 373, 386, 629.
 Wond, 373, 386.
 Woof, 433, 565.
 Work, 621.
 Worth, 116.
 Wot, 373, 387.
 Wrath, 493.
 Wrath, 493.
 Wreath, 493.
 Wreck, 546, 595.
 Wrench, 535.
 Wrest, 582.
 Wretch, 546.
 Wretched, 546.
 To Wrie, 470.

Þriðan, 470.
 Wright, 621.
 To Wrine, 470.
 Wrist, 582.
 Writ, 406. [338.
 Wrong, 314, 365, 373, 387,
 Wroot, 447.
 Wroth, 493.
 Wrought, 621.
 Wry, 493.
 Xæpic, 178.
 Yard, 446, 508.
 Yardwand, 446.
 Yare, 446.
 Yarn, 357.
 Yea, 294, 295, 674.
 Yeast, 603, 604.
 Yef, 79.
 Yell, 497.
 Yellow, 423.
 Yes, 294, 295, 674.
 Yester, 522.
 Yesterday, 519, 521, 522.
 Yestereven, 521.
 Yesternight, 521.
 Yestersun, 521.
 Yesty, yrtig, 603, 604.
 Yet, 70, 93, 703.
 Yeve, 79, 80.
 Yf, 79.
 Ygo, 254.
 Ymbutan, xxii.
 Ymell, 226.
 Yoke, 450.
 Yold, 373, 388.
 Youngling, xx.
 Yprian, 601.
 Ywis, xxix.
 Zonder, Dutch, 178.
 Zu, 195.
 Zuid, Dutch, 600.

Bonde, Husband, Buan, Gebund land, Bondage, Bowne, Boor, Bower, Bypig, Bury; xxxiii. Loose, Lose, xxxvi. Church, xxxviii.

ADDENDA.

Page 360, add 5th line from bottom, "asked an alms." Acts iii. 3.

Page ix.—Editor's Notes. [Judges of the Court of King's Bench.] To Lord Chief Justice Denman and his Brethren we have been indebted, during the present year, 1839, for the preservation of one of the most important of our rights. It having been contended, on the part of the Crown, that a writ of Habeas Corpus could not be granted, except on motion during term;—the Court overruled the objection with these words from Lord Denman, which well deserve to be had in remembrance:—"It seems to me that we should be tampering with that great remedy of the subject, the writ of habeas corpus, if we did not say that there are precedents abundant to justify the practice now objected to."

Page xxiii.—[Ymb þa runnan utan.] The placing of the Preposition after the Noun, according to the idiom of our language, gives a peculiar force of expression and propriety of cadence. Mr. Fox, in a well-known toast, is said always to have upheld the old reading, "all the world over." So, "To search the city through;" "To sail the world around;" "Having run through his fortune, he ran himself through;" "Half seas (rær gen. sing.) over." Mr. Grimm, under the head Suffigerte adverbia, vol. iii. p. 159, gives several analogous German idioms, as "die nacht über;" "von kindauf." So "from youth up," Luke xviii. 21.

With regard to the references to Mr. Grimm's work in the present Edition, I would say, that I have made them rather in order to direct the attention of students to that ample storehouse of Teutonic philology, than from having myself been able to explore it. To the vast collection of the facts and phænomena of all the cognate dialects which he has drawn from the records of successive ages, recourse must be had by those who would contribute to the further elucidation of the history of the English language.

Nov. 20, 1839.

IN THE FIRST EDITION, THE FOLLOWING NOTE ACCOMPANIED THE ERRATA:—

"The Blanks in many of the pages I must here place amongst the Errors of the printer: for the words which should supply those Blanks, were as fair, as true, as honest and as legal, as any other part of the book; and by them I should be very willing to stand or fall. He has printed for me thirty years, and never before hesitated at any word which I employed."*

* The Printer was Mr. Deodatus Bye, then at the head of a long-established Printing-office in St. John's Square, Clerkenwell. Mr. Johnson, the publisher, whose memory is held in deserved regard by all who knew him, though he had not long before suffered most severely from one of those malignant persecutions which characterized the administration of Pitt, endeavoured to overcome the fears of Mr. Bye, but in vain; he was therefore allowed by Mr. Tooke to omit any words which he thought hazardous.—See also Dedication to Part II.

THE END.

M'CORQUODALE AND CO., PRINTERS, LONDON—WORKS, NEWTON.

